To the moste puissaunt prince, and our moste redoubted soueraigne Lord Edward the sixthe, by the Grace of God King of Englande, Fraunce, and Irelande, defendour of the faith, and on yearth next and immediatly vnder God, of the Churches of Englande and Irelande the supreme head, your moste humble, louyng, and obedient subiecte, Nicolas Udal wisheth al grace and peace from God, with long and thesame moste prosperous Reigne ouer vs, in all honour, health, and condigne felicitie.

MOste noble and moste worthie Soueraigne, it myght in me so vaile and simple a persone appeare no small presumption to write vnto your Emperiall Maiestie, were not the cause of our publique gratulacions so iust and so greate, that no manne, what euer he bee, hauyng occasion to wryte, maye thynke hymselfe voyde of crymes, if he shoulde omytte to declare and testifie the vnestimable comforte and ioye, whiche your vniuersall moste louyng and obedient subiectes, daily more and more doe take of your Maiesties singuler good procedinges and most excellent towardnesse. For where, by ỹ space of many yeres vntil it pleased the goodnesse of God to sende you vnto vs, the earneste prayers of all Englande was that we might haue a Prynce: and after the tyme of your nattuitie, whan God had so gracyously heard our peticions, we ekfsons prayed that ye myght haue grace to folowe the godly steppes and proceadynges of your moste noble father: euerye man seeth nowe in your Maiestee suche towardenes of vertue and godly zele, that we haue conceyued no lesse then an vndoubted hope ỹ ye wyll (by Goddes gouernaunce) ferre passe your saied father, to whom our daily wysshinges and prayers thought it enough to haue you eguall. We all see in your highnesse suche liuely sparkes of vertue and Chrystian regiment toward, that we cannot but thynke Englande the moste fortunate Royalme that euer was, to whome God hath geuen suche a kyng, as in his minority of tendre babehood, learneth to haue mynde on his function, and to consider whose mynistre he is. If Royalmes (after the saiyng of Plato) are than and neuer els in blissed state, whan eyther Philosophiers, that is to saye, suche as knowe and loue God, doe reigne ouer thesame, or els the kynges geue themselues to philosophie, that is to saye, to the due knowledge of God, to the discipline of vertue, and to the vpright execution of their office towardes all people: howe happye are we Englishmen of suche a kyng, in whose childehood appereth as perfect grace, vertue, godly zele, desire of literature, grauitie, prudence, iustice, & magnanimitie, as hath heretofore been found in kinges of most mature age, of ful discrecion, of auncient reigne, and of passing high estimacion? But suche is the goodnesse of God, that to a people eagerly hongreyng and thyrsting his iustice, earnestly seekyng the wayes of his trueth, tendrely embracyng his moste holy woorde, readily acceptyng the grace of his ghospel, wyllyngly conformyng themselfes to the sincere doctryne of his commaundementes, he forgeateth not to geue a sapient kyng and gouernour. And that God hath of a singuler fauoure and mercye towardes this Royalme of Englande sente youre grace to reigne ouer vs, ỹ thyng selfe by the whole processe doeth declare: the summe whereof I shal in a shoꝛt discourse no moꝛe but briefly touche & passe ouer, leste I might seme rather to haue sought an occasiõ in the waye of flatery to extolle you and youꝛ progenie, then as this present cause enfoꝛceth me, to geue due testimonie of the trueth. In dede youꝛ singular excellẽcie in al kindes of pꝛincely towardenesse is such, ỹ no place, no tyme, no cause, no booke, no person either in publique audience oꝛ els in pꝛiuate coũpaignie maketh any mencion of youꝛ Maiestie, but he thynketh hymselfe euen of a beray conscience boũd to powdꝛe the same vỽ manyfold pꝛaises of youꝛ incõparable vertues & giftes of grace. All which pꝛayses & magnifying though they bee in dede muche inferiour to youꝛ moste wooꝛthye desertes hytherto, yet youꝛ maiestie muste take and repute, not as a matter of insolencie by youꝛ moste louyng and faithful subiectes minisꝛed vnto you, but rather as a thyng wꝛought in them by the instincte of god, to admonishe you of the Regal estate that he hath cõlled you vnto: not as a pꝛouocatiõ of woꝛdelye gloꝛifyng in youꝛ selfe, but as an instrumente of admonicion to continue you in remembꝛaunce of thankes geuing, and of discharging youꝛe office: not as the baites of flatery meaning to fede youꝛ Maiestie in any conceipte of pꝛyde, but rather as a glasse wherein to beholde youꝛ selfe what ye are, and how ye ought to continue: not as the pleasaunt tickeling oꝛ clawyng of adulacion, but rather as a caucion that ye doo nothing in all youꝛ life whereby ye maye bee founde oꝛ thought vnwooꝛthie the laude that is geuẽ you: and finally, not as a nourishmente of any humain vanitie, but rather as a spur of exhoꝛtacion, not onely to beware that ye goe not backe, ne degenerate, oꝛ decline from the godly trade of religiõ, of vertue, of litterature, of pꝛudẽce, of benignitie, of iustice, of pꝛincely regiment that ye are nowe entred into: but also that ye pꝛocede as ye haue begoonne, and still goe foꝛwarde encreasyng in all godlinesse, that youꝛ pꝛocedynges and consummacion maie bee aunswerable to youꝛ moste pꝛincely and Chꝛistian begynnynges. Neyther is there any subiect of youꝛs woꝛthie life, whiche would to any other ende oꝛ purpose, attempt to magnifye you in thys tendꝛe age, but in hope, that if ye bee not alreadye come to the perfection pꝛopounded vnto you, ye wyll labour and contende (as age maye suffre,) to growe and reache vnto it. Foꝛ if Philip of Macedonie, being an ethnike and a pagane kyng, whan he was tatled at and muche euil spoken of by the Atheniens, toke therof an occasiõ well to reigne & gouerne his people, all eagyng himselfe to bee enfoꝛced and cõstreigned therũto, ỹ he might pꝛoue his enemyes vntrue men of their repoꝛtes: howe muche moꝛe necessitie of well doyng is incumbent to youꝛ highnesse, that ye maye in tyme comyng, verifie the pꝛaises and cõmendacions, whiche the publyque consent of the woꝛlde dooeth nowe attribute vnto you? Howebeit we youꝛ moste feythfull louyng subiectes dooe nothyng doubte, but that God beeyng the geuer of all good gyftes, the father of all mercie, and the God of all coumfoꝛte, who of his infinite goodnesse hath pꝛouided you to reigne ouer vs, wyll also in suche wyse directe all youꝛ wayes, that he wyll euydentely declare hymselfe by his eternall wysedome, and by his counsayll inscrutable, to haue purposely oꝛdeyned and appoynted you to dooe high thynges, whome he hath by his myghtifull arme so woondꝛefully sent. Foꝛ where youꝛ moste noble father of famous memoꝛie kyng Henry the eyght beeyng

otherwyse by al tokens of natural constitucion, a man hable and also likely to haue chyldren, had alreadye by the twoo most faire blossomes and most freshe floures of the worlde, the lady Maries Grace, & the lady Elizabethes Grace, your Maiesties moste noble and moste dere sistures: yet liuyng, declared himselfe apte to be verye fruicteful of procreacion: yet had he continued eight and twentie yeres kyng of this Royalme, ere he had any sonne in lawfull matrimonie begotten, to whome he myght leaue the succession of this his Emperiall croune and sceptre. In the meane tyme kyng Henry as a moste vigilaunt pastour ceaseth not with perpetuall trauayll to procure for the commodities and wealth of Englande, he ceaseth not by moste politique and moste holsome lawes to prouide for the establishyng of Englande in peace and tranquilitie. And because by the diligent readyng and meditacion of holy Scriptures, he founde and obserued the true blissynges of God, and the fountayne of al grace and prosperitie to procede of the knowleage of God, and the due obseruacion of his lawes, lyke a moste christian Prince and a true defendour of the fayth, he conuerted and employed al his studie and cogitacions to the redresse of such abuses in relygion, as by the moste corrupte doctrine of the Romishe papacye had by degrees crepte into Christes churche, and preuailyng throughe continuaunce of yeres, were nowe so confirmed and established throughout all parties of Christendome, that the Romishe Nabugodonozor held vs in forer subiection, then euer was Israell holden in the captiuitie of olde Babilon, and so should we haue stil continued, had it not pleased almightie God of his botomlesse mercie, to reise vp a Christian Cyrus your moste puissaunt father, to restore vs agayne to our freedome in Christes bloud. For the Romishe Nabugodonozor had by wrestyng and peruertyng the holy scriptures of God to the establyshyng and maintenaunce of his vsurped supremitie clymed so high: that he was not nowe content to sitte in the chaire of Moses, but had moste blasphemously exalted hymselfe aboue all that is called God, that is to say, had made Goddes woorde frustrate, that his moste corrupte and moste pestilente doctrine myght take place. He had by his deuilishe inuencions caste such a foggie miste of ignoraunce ouer Goddes moste holy Bible, he had with his Phariseicall interpretacions in suche wyse polluted the sinceritie of Christes doctrine, he had so infected the clere fountayne of Goddes woorde with the suddes of humayne traditions, and the dregges of vayn ceremonies, he had by meane of papisticall trumperie so peruerted the vnderstanding of holy scriptures, he had so defaced the puritie of the faith with the beggerly patched cloke of superstitious woorkes not commaunded by Goddes lawe, he had so perplexed the grace of the ghospell with the false feigned merites and woorkes of supererogacion, he had so mangled the Christian profession with mo then an hundred foondry sectes of counterfaicte clopstreers of Antichristes owne generacion, liuing like idle lotterers and verye dranes, and vnder the pretence of religion deuouryng the common weales that woulde mayntayn theim, he had so oppressed the true religion and wurshyppyng of God wyth pilgremages to dead stockes and stones of mannes handie woorke, with transferryng the honoure whiche was due to God alone, vnto Sainctes and to feigned miracles, wyth other kyndes of idolatry innumerable, and wyth a purgatorye of materiall fyer, and (to make some ende of speakyng in a matter of it selfe infinite,) he had so clene subuerted al good and godly conuersacion and doctrine: that Satan had no more power of the worlde whan Christe came downe to yearth for to redeme mankynde, then religion was nowe brought oute of frame by the tyrannye of the Romyshe Babilon, nor God and hys soonne Jesus Christe any where lesse founde, than whan he was moste buisily named and spoken of in pulpites. Beeyng vnder the title and name of Christe, the moste eagre aduersarye of Christe and his ghospell, he toyned hymselfe to the Philistines, and beyng their Goliah more nere sixtene then sixe cubites high, neither feared, ne shamed to shewe hymselfe in playne battayl of defiaunce, ne spared to open hys blasphemous mouthe, ne to drawe hys tyrannous sweorde, ne to shake his huige murderyng speare, agaynst the true Israelites of Christes little selie flocke, and moste presumpteously to braggue agaynst all that euer woulde profesſe the syncere and vprycht doctrine of Gods woorde, tyll it pleased God to reyse vp vnto vs an Englishe Dauyd your moste noble father, who without anye armoure or weapon of yron and steele, without any harnesse of mannes makyng, without displeighing any banners in araye of humaine battaile, shoulde out of the slyng of his Regall auctoritie, cast the corner stone of Goddes woorde, whiche lyghtyng vpon the forhead of the sayd Goliah, felled his papacie stone dead, & crushed it to poudre, neuer to be hable any more to nope or to face Englyshe Israel. Our sayd Dauid kyng Henry the eyght had learned by the boke of Deuteronomie (in whiche booke the feithfull seruaūt of God Moyses charged that whomsoeuer Israel shoulde make kyng ouer them, thesame from the tyme that he wer sette in his Regall throne, should all the dayes of his lyfe haue continuall meditacion, and should styll reade therin, to the entente he myght learne to feare the Lorde his God, for to kepe all the woordes of hys lawe, and his ordinaunces for to dooe theim, and that he should not turne from the commaundementes eyther to the ryght hand or to the left, that bothe he and his children myght prolong their dayes in his kyngdome:) he hadde (I saie) learned in the same booke, on the one syde the blessynges of god promysed to all suche prynces as on theyr owne parties woulde for the lone and feare of god walke vprycht ly in the execucion of the sayde commaundementes, and woulde partly by theyr good exaumple prouoke theyr subiectes to dooe the same, and partly by due execucion of iustice make them ashamed and also afeard to swerue or declyne from the lorde their god: and on the other syde the terrible maledictions and plagues of gods wrathe, threatned to all suche as neglected the vprycht obseruyng of all his preceptes and wayes. He loued the goodnesse of God, and feared his stroke, he sawe religion to bee ferre out of fraine, he sawe some parte of his moste earnest trauailes and endeuour to sette Englande in moste quiet and blissefull state, to fayl of condigne effecte through defaulte of reformacion in matters of religion. He saw & found by experience of his owne manyfolde moste prineely enterpryses, the onely cause why Christian Royalmes are plagued wyth warres, derthes, famyns, pestilences, & other mortall extremyties, to come of Gods indignacion, because the worlde was so ferre gone astraigh from Christe, that nothyng was nowe wearied so odious or detestable as his holy woorde, nothyng reputed so blasphemous, as Christes holy ghospell, nothyng so lyght estemed as Christes blood and passion. He sawe the onely waye to Goddes fauour to bee the embracyng of his holy Scriptures, the drounyng wherof had enforced God to power his indignacion vpon the Christian worlde. He sawe and well per-

cepued that God of his mercie was wylling to ceasse his wrath and vengeaunce, if the Christian people woulde returne to hym. He percepued God to offre his grace vnto the worlde by openyng their yes, if leauyng theyr errour and ignoraunce thei woulde embrace the clere lyght of the ghospell. He sawe moreouer that his moste louyng subiectes of Englande, (whome his godly exaumple had prouoked to tendre and seke the glorye of God) dyd nowe houngre and thirste the righteousnesse of God, and the knowleage of his woorde. He playnly sawe that no waye there was to a reformacion, but by this onely meane, yf the autoritie and vsurped supremitie of the See of Rome wer extirped, abolished, and clene extincte. For he sawe his countremen the Englishe Israelites to bee holden in suche extreme bondage wythin the Romishe Egypte, that there was no hope of deliueraunce, but by the onely power and myghtifull arme of God reysyng vp some Moses that woulde in the face of that same moste cruell Pharao require that Israell myght bee freely leat goe. The huige seuenfold headed dragon was to the simple inferiour people, suche an obstacle, that they myght not come to Christe, and to all Christen princes suche a terrour, that they durste not. This dragon besydes the monstreous hissing of his curses and excommunicacions, and besides the contagious infeccion of idolatry and superstition, wherewith he had by his whelpes the cancarde papistes so adblasted the worlde, that he had enwrapped and drowned all Christendome in blindnesse and errour: he hadde also a mortall styng in his taill, wherewyth he ceassed not by all kyndes of deathes and tormentes, to destruye and mourdre as manye as woulde once open theyr lyppes agaynste his moste detestable and moste blasphemous abominacions. This dragon ceassed not continually to persecute the woman clothed in the sunne, that is to saye, Christes dere spouse the churche of England, but as a rampyng and rorying lyon, he stoode euer ready watchyng that he myghte deuoure her chyldren the Christian flocke, whiche she nowe groned to bryng foorth to Christe, had not the Englishe Michael kyng Henry the eight taken in hande to fight agaynst the sayde dragon, and been strengthened of God wyth hys Aungelles the lordes, and godlye prelates, to caste the sayde dragon that olde serpente and his Aungels oute of Englande.

This was the great harlotte that sitteth vpon manye waters, wyth whome the kynges of the yearthe haue committed fornicacion, and the inhabiters of the yearthe been made dronken wyth the wyne of her fornicacion: the woman sittyng vpon the rosecoulored and tenhorned beaste full of names of blasphemye, she sitting arated in purple and rosecolour, and decked with golde, precious stones, perles, and in her hande a cuppe of golde full of abhominacions and filthines of her fornicacion, and in her forehead a name of great misterie written, great Babylon the mother of whoredome and abhominacions of the yearth: and the same whore dronken with the bloude of Saynctes, and with the bloude of wytnesses of Jesus. Thys was the huyge monstre Hydra, (to whome the poetes attribute seuen heades, some eyghte, and some an hundred heades) whome alwell king John of Englande, as also soondrie other Cristen princes had attempted to vanquishe, but as soone as they had cutte of one heade, three other heades grewe vp for it, so that euerye wounde that was geuen him was a more confirmacion and encrease of his strength, vntyll our Hercules kyng Henrye the eyghte percepuyng that no power, no puissaunce, no weapon was hable to confounde hym sauyng onelye the consumyng fyer of Goddes woorde, prouided the Byble to bee sette forth in the Englishe tounge, and to bee sette vp in euerye churche, where it myght bee read of of his people. Long time endured this conflycte betwene our Englyshe Hercules and the Romishe Hydra ere he could bee destruied, so fast grewe vp a moze numbze of serpentine heades, whan any one was cut of. Foz besydes the manyfolde moste monstruous heades, of Idolatrye, Pylgremages, superstitions, countrefaicte religions, and innumerable abuses mo, whiche kyng Henry had to cutte of, his whelpes the indurate generation of papistes deuised all meanes possible to kepe hys auctozitie styll in Englande, ne lefte any engin vnattempted to staigh and lette the abolishyng of hys vsurped power, abusyng the simple people wyth all kyndes of deluslon and iuggleyng of countrefaicte myzacles, of feigned visions, of lyyng in traunces, of rapcions euen vnto the thyrde heauen, of sophistycall learning, of holy contestacions, of subtily inuented pzopheces, of bolde comminacions and thzeateninges, of voices auouched to haue come from heauen, of peruertyng the sence of scripture to maintеine his power, of wzytyng bookes in derogacyon of the kynges pzoceedynges.

And to the ende there shoulde not lacke any kinde of wickedenesse that the saied Hydza and his adherentes, moonkes, fryers, and other cloystrers were hable to weorke, he founde meanes besydes many other stozmes of fozrayne warres and conspiracies, to ferre to abuse the credulitie of the simple ignozaunte people, that he bzought theim halfe in a detestacion and hatered of Gods woorde, and seduced theim to aduenture with a lytle blaste of sedicion, to distourbe the cogitacions of suche a noble and a good kyng, beeyng than moste earnestelye yea (I maye saye) onely sette in studyng foz the establishemente and continuacion of peace and tranquilitie in this Royalme foz euer. All whiche terrours coulde not appalle kyng Henryes moste stoute courage, but that he wente thorough with the refozmacion, whiche the spirite of God so wzought in hys harte and conscience, that he sawe it to bee necessarie, and hymselfe to bee chosen of God, to bee the instrumente therof.

All this whyle Englande thoughe not yet bzay wyllyngly ne vniuersally receyuyng the grace of the ghospell offreed vnto vs, together wyth the moste heauenly iewell and treasure of Goddes holy scripture, in the mother language: yet neuertheleſſe (as oure partyes and moſte bounden dueties were) tenderlye consideryng the moste vigilaunte care and studie, and moste earneste trauayle of oure moste gracious soueraigne employed foz our behoufe, and daily bestowed in foztifyng all partes of the Royalme agaynst the malicious assaultes and conspiracies of the saied Romishe Hydza, oz any other enemies by his pzocuremente: Englande (I saye) ceassed not with continuall pzayer to beseche the goodnesse of almyghtye God, to rewarde the godlye mynde and doopnge of our kyng nowe wearyng oute hys bodye in trauayllyng foz vs, and spendyng his lyfe in pzocurыng foz our wealth and safegarde, wyth a soonne, to whome, whan he shoulde departe hence to heauen, he myght safely committe and leaue his croune, with the gouernaunce of vs his moste dere beloued subiectes: Thus did all Englande by the space of many yeres perſiſte in continuall pzayer: but almyghtie God wyllyng to shewe foz what persones he reserueth hys blyssynges, as soone as we had throughe better instruccyons conformed our selues to the expulsyng of the Romyshe Antichzyste, to the gladde

enbzacyng of hys woozde, and to the receyuyng of his ghospell in all partyes: immediately heard our lamentable petitions, and sent your most noble mother Quene Jane of famous memozie, whom (as it maie be thoughte) hys pzouydence and consailles vnscrutable had purposely ozdeyned, pzepaired, & caused to be bozne foz none other office, but that she myght bee moste dere wife to suche a kyng, and mother to suche a Pzynce. Foz as soone as she had in moste lawful matrymonye bzought foozth your grace, she departed this wozlde: as thoughe she should haue sated: I haue dooen the office þ I was bozne foz. nowe fare ye well. The treasshe floure of my pure virginitie, I haue moste safely committed to my moste dere spouse kyng Henry foz to kepe, and to you his moste feithfull louyng subiectes, I leaue behynde me my onely soonne, the iewell that ye haue so long desired, so soze longed foz, and so often craued of God. As lõg as ye shal tendze his welfare, ye shall satisfye my desyze, whome I bzoughte foozthe foz that purpose. If it maye please God to sende hym longe lyfe, I haue the full fruicte of my trauaylle, I haue my deathe abundauntely recompensed, and my coume emong you euen to my mynde supplyed. I haue nowe no moze to dooe on yearth. If I haue demerited any loue oz thanke at your handes, bestowe it wholly on my soonne, whan I am gone from you. Thus departed the moste vertuous ladye Quene Jane, whose deathe we haue the lesse cause to lamente, because that by hope we are assured, that she is gone from peyne to ioye, from care to reste, frõ sozowe to blisse, frõ this trãsitozie wozld to immoztalitie. We haue cause to suppose that God foz the exceadyng great loue and fauoure that he beareth towardes Englande, whan she had bzoughte foozthe to the wozlde suche a soonne, tooke her awaye immediately of purpose to rewarde her wyth a croune eternall, foz whome all tempozall and wozldely rewardes were incomparably ouer basse, ne any yearthly croune sufficient: so that to lamente her, is rather to enuye her felicitie and blisse. And she beeyng nowe in heauen with her moste desired ioye Christe, inuiteth and requireth vs that our beneuolente loue and affection, whiche muste haue been deuided betwene you and her, maye bee wholy transferred and bestowed on your highnesse, whome to bzyng foozthe she was not onely well contented, but also muche desyzous to dye. So that we are all double bounde to loue youre Maiestie, fyzste because youre moste dere mother was taken from vs ere she myght receyue any fruicte of our grate and thankfull hertes foz bzyngyng foozth to her coũtrey suche a soonne, and than muche moze, because that in your moste Royall persone is reposed al the wozldly ioye, coumfozte, hope, and expectacion bothe of vs that are nowe liuyng (whom I truste your Grace shall surutue,) and also of our posteritie. Neyther can I iustely affyrme her to be dead, that hath leafte behynde her suche fruicte of her bodye, whome to bzyng foozth (I dare auouche) she though her death so well bestowed, that in case she myght returne to lyfe again, and be in her fozmer state of mayde & Quene, she would readily paryshe & couenaũt with God, on thesame pzyce to bzyng foozth your Grace vnto her countrey. And so greate was the ioye and gladnesse of Englande in the natiuitie of your highnesse, that the veray pzouidence of God thought it necessarie to temper our immoderate mirth & reioysing with the death of your most vertuous mother (foz neuer was þ decease of any Quene in England moze lamẽted) lest we myght haue ben so inebziate with our vnestimable felicitie, þ thesame might haue made vs pzoud, and percase haue bzought vs in suche flaterye of our selues, þ we would haue

forgotten, or perchaunce not acknowelaged no nor espied you to bee sente vnto vs aswell by the most mightie and most woondrefull power of Goddes hand, as also of his exceadyng mercie, and fauoure towardes Englande. He myghte haue taken her away ere she had cum to the bearing or conceiuing of you in her wombe, if he had not specially loued and tendred our good king Henry and vs. It was in his hande and pleasure to haue taken you bothe (whiche thynge god forbydde) if he had not by leauing the better of the twoo with vs, been willing bothe manyfestelye to declare his almyghtifull power ioyned wyth hys moste gracious mercie and tendre compassion towardes England, and also to bridle the insolencie, which by hauyng you both still wyth vs (suche is mannes fraitie, and readinesse to swerue) he paraduenture forsawe, would haue growen in vs. God in takyng awaye her at your birthe did plainlye ministre vnto vs, both an earnest warnyng, and also a iust prouocacion of vncessaunt prayng for the life and prosperous continuaunce of your Grace being of nature and by the condicion of your birth, mortal as your mother was. The birth of your Maiestie was the more swete, because it was so long wished for, so long loked for, and so long craued ere it came. A great benefite is myche the sweter that it is not obteyned without great and long suit. The pleasure of a good turne is much diminished whan it is at the fyrst obteyned. The desirefulnesse of our myndes myche augmenteth and encreseth our pleasure. The admirtion also and (as who shoulde saye) the sawcyng of pleasures with some kind of misfortune either afore going or in the middes adtempered, graceth altogether, and maketh it the more acceptable. Honey is waloweish and ouercasteth the stomake, if it be plenteously taken by it selfe alone: but if wyth vinegre it be made eagredoulce, than is it not onely delectable and pleasaunt of relice, but also comfortatiue and holsome too. The deathe of the moste vertuous lady and moste woorthie Quene Jane your mother, beyng ioyned with your birth, made such a temperature of sorowe and ioye together, that bothe our mournyng whiche otherwyse shoulde scarce haue founde anye ende, was soone mitigated: and also our moste tendre delite of enioying your Maiestie, much the more encreased. We had so long groned, we hadde so long cryed to God for a Prynce: that excepte he hadde in the moste desired birthe of the same, aspersed the deathe of your mooste dere Mother: we shoulde by our immoderate felicitee haue tempted, and prouoked hym to take you bothe from vs. It was hys goodnesse that woulde not suffre vs to fall. For muche sooner and sorer doeth immoderate ioye drounde mannes reason, then immoderate doloure. Thus than (as I haue sayd) as soone as we willingly applyed our selfes aswell to ỹ exiling of al papistrie, as also to thembracing of the woorde of God, he immediately fulfylled and satisfyed our desyres by sending your Grace vnto vs after a woondreful sorte: as if he shoulde in playn wordes haue saide: Now that ye haue gladly receiued my word, ye shal haue that whiche ye cannot but of my gyfte obteyne, that is to wete, a Prynce, and wyth him al worldely coumforte, ioye and securitie that ye maye wel perceiue both ỹ nothyng is impossible to God, & also that if ye abyde in me, and my woordes abyde in you, aske what ye wyll, and it shalbee dooen for you. Whan I saye, the woorde of God, ỹ law, the preceptes, or ỹ cõmaundemẽtes of God, I mene not fantastical dreames of mãnes inuenciõ (for these thinges are nothing lesse thẽ ỹ woorde of God) but I mene the true & liuely woorde of God conteyned in holy scriptures: I mene his holy gospel & testament, purely & sincerely taken without the venomous corrupcion of the fylthie dregges, or of the ſoure leauen of any the aboue reherſed peſtilencies, accordyng as your moſte noble father our late ſouereaigne lorde kyng Henry the eight with vneſtimable care, ſtudye, and trauayll, mynded and laboured to haue it ſette forth, & to be daily preached and taught to hys people without any declynyng eyther to the ryght hande or to the left. Whiche thyng if he could not ſo throughly accompliſhe as his moſte earneſte hertes deſyre was, I truſte ỹ almyghtie god, who hath prouided and ſent vs your highneſſe a moſte worthye ſoonne to ſucceede ſuche a worthye father, wyl by his eſpecial grace illumine your herte to procede in the way of trueth whiche your father hath opened vnto you, & wyl geue you grace al thinges to perfecte whiche your father moſte godly begāne to your handes. And although to maynteine, vpholde, & conſerue ỹ kyng Henry prepayred and hath nowe lefte to your gouernaunce, is of it ſelf ſo muche matter of immortall honour & renoume, ỹ it wer enough for any kyng to dooe: yet hath God prouided ỹ ye ſhall not haue cauſe to ſaie as Alexāder the great conquerour, whan he conſidered the great & manyfold actes of his father Phylip kyng of Macedonie, ſaid: My father wil leaue nothing for me to doe. For god of a verate pitye that he had on kyng Henries vncomparable & the ſame vnceaſſaūt trauayles for the publique behouf & welth of Englande long yeres ſuſteined, tooke hym awaie from this troubleous worlde as ſoone as he had prepaired your Grace in a readineſſe by due ſucceſſiō of inheritaūce to receyue at his hādes ỹ kepture & croune of his royalmes & dominions. God by a ſpecial diſpēſaciō breake of ỹ courſe of his like ere al thinges wer brought to a ful perfectiō, becauſe he would declare hymſelfe to haue appoynted your Maieſtie, not to lyue altogether in a careleſſe ſupinitie, but in a perpetual exercyſe of al princely vertues, ỹ ye might conſūmate & finiſhe ſuche regall enterpryſes as he begoonne, partely in other worldly affaires, & eſpecially cōcernyng ỹ redreſſe of abuſes in matters of religiō. Kyng Hēry was the Moſes whō God elected ſtouthy to deliuer vs out of the hādes of ỹ Romiſhe Pharao, & to conueigh vs through the read ſea of the wauerynge iudgemētes of mē, & the troubleous ſourges of ỹ popiſhe generaciō ſwelling & rageyng agaynſt him, and through the wildreneſſe of beyng lefte alone deſtitute of ỹ aſſiſtēce or coumfort of other Chriſtē princes, whiche in this ſo noble and ſo godly an enterpryſe might laudably haue ſette in foote w̄ him, & through this wildrenes to cōducte vs as ferre as ỹ lāde of Moab: but ye are the Joſue, whom god hath appoynted to bryng vs into the lande of promiſſiō, flowyng and rēnyng wyth milke and honey, & to ſette vs Engliſhe men in the lande of Canaan which is the ſincere knoweleage & the free exercyſe of Goddes moſte holy worde. He was the Moſes, who by goddes ordeinaunce & diſpenſation wrote the booke of Deuteronomie, whā he cauſed the holy Bible to bee turned into Engliſhe, & laied it in the tabernacle, whā he cōmaūded the ſame to bee laied in al & ſingular the churches throughout his Royalmes & dominiōs: chargeyng the Leuites, ỹ is, the Byſhops, Paſtours, & Curates, in the time of the free yere, ỹ is, at al due & conuēnient ſeaſons, to read and declare it vnto al ỹ people gathered together, both mē, women & chyldren, yea & the ſtraungiers ỹ were in any his cities, ỹ they might heare, learne, and feare their lorde God. But where ſome of the prieſtes ỹ ſōnes of Leui, had now in theſe laſt yeres through their tugleyng, theyr falſe packyng, and their playn ſorcerie bewitched kyng Henry with a wrong perſuaſion, & had ſo craftily coūpaced and conueighed the

matter, ỹ vnder the pretence & coulour of religion, they kept the worde of God frō the eyes and eares of the people, beatyng his moste faythfull louyng subiectes frō the knowleage therof, wyth a mortal whyppe made of sixe deadly knotted chordes, & in the meane tyme kept the booke of the lawe hiddē, vntyll they had so ferre obscured, derkened, & oppressed ỹ worde, ỹ all thynges were replete with errour and insyncerytie: it now euidently appereth your Maiestie to be the faythfull Iosias, in whose tyme the booke of ỹ law is found out in the house of the Lorde, & by your moste godly intunctions read in the hearyng of all your people, and a couenaunt made with the Lord ỹ they shal walke after the Lord, & shal kepe his commaūdementes w̄ al their hertes & al their soules, wherunto all your people moste willyngly dooeth consent by glad receyuyng of all suche good order & reformacion as by your Maiesties moste godly direccion is mynistred vnto them. Your most noble father was the Dauid, who of a good hert & zele entended, yea & made mocō to build an house for the Lordes name: but we all trust your highnes to be the Salomon, whō god hath appointed and by special dispensacion elected to build & finisshe an house for him for euer, by restoryng & establishyng the true Christian religion. Which thyng ỹ your Maiestie maye haue the grace & spirite to doe, ye lacke not the perpetual wyshinges and prayers of al your most louyng and obedient subiectes. The world seyng these your moste princely begynnynges in this your tendre yeres of chyldehood, is confirmed in a sure hope and expectacion ỹ your Maiestie wil in proces of time growe to bee in this behalfe a veray Phenix emong Christian princes, & a mirrour and spectacle vnto them all. And certes your Maiestie is in muche other case thē other kinges of England before your tyme haue been. For where (the frowardnes of fortune beyng syche, that moste parte of thynges lyke as they are throughe her aide and fauoure easie to bee achiued, so the same throughe her malignaunt wickedenes are more easie to be lost again) it deserueth no lesse but rather more glorie wel to kepe and maintein thynges wel gottē, thē to acquyre more to it: some of your moste worthie progenitours haue had a readye pathway to renoume, and haue had but an easie trauail to succede & folow ỹ prince nexte afore goyng in the laudable exaūple of politique regimente, of worthye enterpryses, of Marciall prowesse, of noble but yet common actes of chiefalrie, of notable and famous enterprises, but yet enclosed within the coumpace of mannes reache. But your grace succeadyng Henry the eight, shall not be hable to satisfie nor aunswere the earneste expectacion of the worlde, onlesse ye doe excell. Nothing maie serue your grace but singularitie. Ye haue in his exaumple suche a marke set vp vnto you, as without the sweat and labours of Hercules (of whō the Poetes feigne, ỹ he bore vp and stayghed heauen self w̄ his shoulders) ye shall not be hable to clyme vnto. Ye must surmount and passe a kyng whiche was in his tyme peerlesse, & a matter of publique admiracion to the vniuersall world. And suche are your begynnynges alreadye, aswell in Marciall chiefalrye, as also in politique ordinaunce of ciuile lawes at home, aswell in destroyng the image of Baall, and rootyng vp of al Idolatry, as also in settyng a ferther good order for matters of religion: that it wil not suffice if ye bee but egual to him. King Hēry the eight besides his felicitie & luckie fortune in al his most Regal enterprises aswel by marcial chiefalrie as also i politike gouernaūce, besides his manyfold cōquestes and victories in Fraūce, Scotlande, Irelande, & els where, besides his vnestimable high trioūphes, voiages, and actes dooen

He was a continual welling fountayne of eloquence, a veray rare ſpectacle of humanitie, of ciuilytie oꝛ good nourture an abſolute pꝛeſidente, a ſpeciall paterne of clemencie and moderacion, a woꝛthie exaumple of regal iuſtice, a botomleſſe ſpꝛing of largeſſe and benignitie. He was in al the honeſt artes and facultyes pꝛofoſidely ſeen, in al liberal diſciplines equall with ỹ chiefeſt, in no kynd of litterature vnexpert. He was to ỹ woꝛld an oꝛnamente, to his countrey a treaſoure, to his frendes a coumfoꝛte, to his foes a terroure, to his faithful and louing ſubiectes a tendꝛe father, to innocentes a ſure pꝛotectour, to wylfull malefactours a ſharp ſcourge, to his common weale and good people a quiet hauen and ancoꝛe of ſafegarde, to the diſtourbers of the ſame a cocke of extermination, in hainous and intolerable crymes agaynſt the publique weale a ſeuere iudge, in the lyke offences committed agaynſt hymſelf a readye poꝛte & refuge of mercie, except to ſuche as woulde perſiſte vncoꝛrigible. A man he was in al giftes of nature, of foꝛtune, & of grace, pierelesſ, & (ſhoꝛtly to bꝛeake of in a matter of it ſelfe infinite,) a man aboue al pꝛaiſes. session of the twayn. Neither is there in this behalfe on our parties, your Maiestees moste beneuolent & faithfull louing subiectes, any lesse hope to be conceyued of you for that ỹ is to come, then we doe already fele iope and coumforte of that we see present. For suche excellent begynnynges beyng ferthered by the publique and daily prayers of al your faythfull & true herted subiectes, cannot but haue stil better and better degrees of continuaunce and encreace, especially hauyng suche noble and sapient Counsaillours as it hath pleased God to prouide for you, and to geue you in this your tendre babehood. For that all suche well doo̅ynges in young kynges, and by reason therof prosperous successe in all thynges, procedeth of faithfull and godly Counsaillours: it maie euidently appeare by the notable exaumples of the twoo younge kinges of Israell Manasses and Iosias. Whoso wyll peruse the bookes of the kynges, shall fynde that from the begynnyng of Achabs reygne vntill the tyme of good kyng Ezechias, true holinesse, religion, tyght knowleage of God, yea and the verave mynde to worshyp or seke Goddes glorye, lay as a thyng oppressed, reiected, buryed, and vttrely extyncte, and in stede of Godlinesse reigned al iniquitie: in lieu of true knowlage, all was possessed with ignorauunce and errour: in place of true worshyppyng of God, so ferre preuayled Idolatrye and contempte of Goddes lawes, that Israell passed the Gentyles not onely in theyr owne gentylitie of worshypping Baal and many false Goddes, but also in al other kyndes of theyr moste detestable abhominacions. The crafty and subtile inuegling of Baals prestes, and of the false prophetes for the aduauncyng of their owne lucre and estimacion, had vnder the coulour and pretence of holynesse, and of religion, by litle and litle so allured, enueigled, coniured, and bewitched the prynces: ỹ they were vtterly blynded and seduced to condescende to the wicked and couetous inuencions of the prestes. They perswaded the Princes to theyr waies by policies, they bestowed all theyr cũning clergie, & worke mãshyp of peincted eloquence, vntyll they had peruerted them and drawen them clene a straygh from all the wayes of the Lorde theyr true God, well knowyng that the people, some for loue, some for feare, and some through exaũple, woulde without any buisinesse folowe the trace and ledyng of theyr king & gouernour. They made the kynges & rewlers sure on theyr syde, well wetyng that the subiectes, some for obedience sake of theyr owne accorde would, and the rest by their cruell diuises myght by tyranny be enforced to drawe after theyr Princes line. Whereof the auncient prouerbe sayeth, that euery kyng is to his royalme and subiectes eyther a singuler precious benefite, or els a very pernicious destruccion, because ỹ suche as euery kyng is, suche wil his people bee. Wherfore lyke as a werte or a wolle standyng in a bodyes face is a more blemysshe, a greatter deformitee, & a worse disgracing, then if it stode in some priue place of the body, where eyther the prouidẽce of nature hideth it, or mãnes own reuerẽce and good prouision doeth kepe it secrete: so is a vyce or any ciuil qualytie a more fault & greatter dishonour in a Prince, then in an other priuate persone, because that euery his saying, doyng, yea & euery his looke & gesture, is taken vp as a publique exaumple and paterne for all hys subiectes to folowe: so that the kynges of Israel could not be ciuill, but to the verie pernycious ensaumple and corruption of al theyr sely people. But at length came good kyng Ezechias, of whom the Scripture in his due commendacion testifieth, that he did that pleased the Lorde in al thyng, lyke to his forefather and progenitour Dauyd.

Hys

His well doynges he begoonne with the redresse of religion, and the extirpyng of idolatry vp by the rote. For whyle idolatry reigned, nothing could he doe ꝑ myght be pleasyng to God. Fyrst of all therefore he put awaye the hil alters, & brake the images & cutte downe ꝑ groues, and all to brake the brasen serpente that Moyses had made. (For vnto those dayes ꝑ chyldren of Israel dyd burne sacrifice vnto it.) He trusted in the Lorde God of Israel, he claue to the Lorde Nume. xxi.
and departed not from hym, but kepte his commaundementes, and the Lorde was with hym, so that he prospered in all thynges whiche he tooke in hande. &c.
Thus, duryng ꝑ time of his reygne by ꝑ space of twēty nine yeres, he renewed religion & restored the lawe of God to his perfection: he reduced his people to the trade of holy and vpryght conuersacion in the syght of God, of walkyng in the commaundementes of the Lorde, detesting al Idolatrye & abhorryng al suche abomynacions as myght iustely prouoke his wrathe & vengeaunce. All this whyle the subtyl & crafty false prophetes and prestes of Baall dissembled & played mum, they folowed the necessitee of the time, and for feare of the iron rodde, did as the worlde vnder suche a kyng required. But as soone as good kyng Ezechias was once dead, leauyng behynde hyme his sonne Manasse, a chylde of twelue yeres olde to reygne by succession ouer Israel in his stede, than the false prophetes and prestes of Baall thought it a fitte and proppre tyme to shewe themselues in theyr owne colours. As soone as by his death a gappe was opened to theyr false iugleyng, to theyr crafty practyse, to their wyly dryftes, and theyr subtyle conueyghaunce, they agen shewed theyr affections as they were. They leat not slyppe theyr occasion ꝑ reduce Israell to the former trade of dooyng sacrifice to the Idolles whiche they had learned in the tyme of wicked Achab, wherby theyr lucre and aduauntage badde a long season come in thicke, and vnder Ezechias vnderlye decaied, in whose dayes they wer of force compelled to haue the lawe of God in honour, and the same onely to vse and to reache to the people. In sterte priuely they styll cōtinued most detestable & most pernicyous fauourers, mayntayners and worckers of Idolatrye, though they had for the tyme through hypocrisy and for feare of punishemente interrupted thesame. But ꝑ youth of Manasse beyng a babe easyer to be inticed allured and trayned to the lustes of sensualitie, through flatteryng persuasions, and beeyng destitute of faythfull and godly counsaylours that might and woulde protect his tender chyldehood, and bryng hym vp in the knowledge of God, in the way of his preceptes, was for the sayde false Prophetes, and rouetous prestes of Baall a mete praye. Hym therefore they enueygled w many swete woordes of flatterye (doubte ye not) with many woordes of coumforte, with muche circumstaunce of glorious peincted eloquence, with allegeyng of many politique consideracions, with many ciuyll respectes of ꝑ state of the worlde ꝑ than was, with many gaie and solemne promises of innumerable and thesame right high commodities that shoulde thereby ensue to him and his common weale, with many assured warauntises of welth, peace and tranquilitie, if he would vse their counsayl in folowyng the wayes of wyse Achab, beyng (as they alleaged) a noble Prynce, and a polityque wise man in folowing ꝑ trade of his forefathers, & not of such a newefound teade of learnyng and religion as Ezechias had lately inuented & brought vp in Israel, to the great troublyng & disquieting of himself, the grieuous annoiasice and veracion of his subiectes, and the extreme perill of his cōmon weale. For Almanazar king of Assyria had in the dates of Ezechias come vp agaynst Samaria, and besieged it, and woonne it, and had carried awaye Israel into Assyria: and after him Sennacherib kyng of Assyria had cõe vp agaynst all ỹ strong cities of Juda, & had take them: albeit God by his power deliuered Ezechias & his people & Cities, & the Aũgel of the Lorde slewe of the proud blasphemous braggyng Assirias, an hũdred fowre score & fiue thousand at a clappe. By these meanes ỹ false prophetes & wicked priestes of Baall coũpate and weigh young Manasse though he succeded his owne father beyng so good & so godly a kyng as ỹ expresse testimonie of holy scripture cõmendeth vn to these woordes, that after hym was none lyke hym emong all the kynges of Juda, neyther were there any suche before him: yet ỹ not withstãding by ỹ sugermouthed false prophetes, & by the couetous priestes of Baall through defaulte of good & godly Counsayllours, whome (doubte ye not but this wicked rable founde meanes to wring out of fauour, & to remoue awaye from the kynges iiii. kyng. xxi. presence) he was so coumpaced, weyghed, persuaded, woonne, bewytched, peruerted & so foore seduced: ỹ (as the scripture recordeth), he did euil in the syght of the Lorde euen after the abominacyons of the heathen. For he went & buylt the hill altares, whiche Ezechias his father had destroied, & he reared vp alters for Baall, & made groues (as dyd Achab kyng of Israell) and worshipped all the hoste of heaue and serued them. And he builte alters in the house of the Lorde, of whiche the Lorde had sayd: In Hierusalem will I putte my name. And he buylte altres for all the hoste of heauen: euen in twoo Courtes of the Lorde. And he offered his soonnes in fyre, and gaue hede vnto witchecrafte and sorcery, and mayntayned wesyers with spirites, and tellers of fortunes: and wroughte much wickednesse in ỹ syght of the Lorde to angre hym. And he put an ymage of a groue that he had made, euen in the Temple, of whyche the Lord had saide to Dauid & Salomon his sonne: In this house and in Hierusalem, whiche I haue chose out of all the tribes of Israell, will I putte my name for euer. And Manasse led them out of the waye, to doode more wickedlye then dyd the hethen people, whome the Lorde destroyed from before the chyldren of Israell, and he wrought more wyckedly then all the Amorytes, whiche were before hym, did: and made Juda also to synne with his Idolles and shed innocent bloude exceedyng muche euen tyl he replenished Hierusalem from corner to corner wyth the bloude of the true Prophetes, and of as many as myght be founde to be the true worshyppers of God and sincere kepers of ỹ lawe. After so wicked a father, (who reigned fiftye fyue yeres in Hierusalem) succeded as wicked a sonne Amon, beyng twẽty twoo iiii. kyng. xxi. yeres old whan he begoõne to reigne. And he lykewyse dyd euill in ỹ syght of ỹ Lord, as his father Manasse had doen, and walked in all the waye ỹ his father walked in, & serued ỹ Idolles that hys father serued, & worshypped them. And he forsooke the Lorde God of his fathers, and walked not in the waye of the Lord. &c. Whan Amõ was deceassed, his soõne Josias was in his stede made iiii. kyng. xxi. kyng, and was but eight yeres olde whan he was enoynted kyng. And where he reigned thyrtie one yeres, and begonne to reigne so young: yet (as the scripture plainelye mencyoneth) he did that whiche is right in the sight of the Lorde, and walked in all the wayes of Dauid his forefather, and boughed neither to the ryghte hande ne to the lefte, vndoubtedlye throughe the spectall grace of God, and the helpe of good Gouernours, who well consyderynge and ponderynge the vngodlye lyke and dooynges of Manasse, coulde not of theyr fydelytye fynde in theyr hertes to suffre suche an innocent babe in lyke sort to be seduced and abused as Manasse had had been, both to his owne perdicion, and also to the vttre desolacion of Ie- iiii. kin. xxi.

rusalem and Juda: For beholde (sayd the Lorde) because Manasse king of Juda, hath done suche abhominacyons. &c. I will bryng suche euyls vpon Hierusalem and Juda, that whoso heareth of it, bothe his eares shall tinkle:
and I wil wipe out Hierusalem, as a man wipeth a dish, and whan he hath iiii king.
wiped it, turneth it vpsyde downe. &c. And to Josias thus aunswereth the xxii.
Lorde by the prophetisse in the fowerth of the Kynges: Because thine herte did melte, and because thou hast humbled thy selfe before me the lorde whan thou hearedst what I spake against this place. &c. Beholde therfore I wil receiue thee vnto thy fathers, and thou shalt be put into thy graue in peace, and thine iyes shal not see al the euils whiche I will bring vpon this place. They were both of them young kinges, and immediate successours, the one to Ezechias who had extirped idolatrie by the roote, and the other to a worshipper of false Gods, & otherwise also a very wicked man: And yet Manasse through peruerse enticers fel from God to all naughtines, and Josias beeyng younger of age then he, did by the helpe of faythefull and godly Counsaylours, apply himselfe to all goodnes, and thereby prospered. These twoo very notable exaumples, moste gracious Soueraygne, I haue some what the more at large proponned and set forthe to your Maiestie: partely that ye may marke and consider what fruicte and rewarde shall of your godly dooynges redounde to youreselfe, youre people, youre Royalmes and dominyons, yea and to youre posteritie also for your sake: and partely to declare vnto youre hygthnesse, that nexte to the speciall gifte of Gods grace, to be of your owne good disposicion plyaunt, flexible, and much enclined to vertue: the chiefe and principall portion of all suche good happe is to bee ascribed to the discrete gouernaunce, the sapient direccion, the vertuous trayning, the vpright guydyng, the godly aduer-tisementes, the holesome admonicions, and the vncorrupt education in vertue and litterature ministred vnto a yong king by faithful and woorthy Counsayl-lours. Which thing forasmuch as it so is, how happy & blysfed is your Maiestie of gods owne hande, who hath prouyded your Grace of suche noble and woorthy Counsaylours in this time of your minoritie: and how much are we your most faithful louing subiectes bound to laude, praise and magnifie his moste holy name, for that in this so daungerous a tyme he hathe so mercifully & graciously prouided for vs, whose welth and safegard in this worlde must wholly and onely depende of your godly education & vertuous trainyng, or our extreme confusion of the contrarye? And certes this your innocent babehood and tendre minoritie, is the verate time, in which it may euidently be tried what persons dooe faithfully tendre your welth, your honour, and your godly procedinges. They are aboue all precious Jewelles and aboue all worldely treasoures to bee estemed, loued, regarded, thanked, and folowed of your Maiestie, whiche in thys your mynoritie shewe themselues faithfull, earnest, diligent and careful, not onely as touching the safe-garde and preseruacion of your most Royall persone, but also concernyng your minde in this your tendre youngth to be furnished with literature, with the due knowlege of God, & with such disciplines as many confirme you in all princely vertues for your honour, welth and renoume, whan God shall make you a manne of yeres and stature, as your moste noble and moste honourable Counsaylours doe their true and diligent endeuour to make you a manne in maniers and learning. Wherein like as Philip king of Macedonie at the birth of his sonne Alexandre the great, alleged himselfe for two causes principally to reioyce, the one because he had now a sone borne to succede him in his croune & sceptre, & the other because the same was borne in the time of so noble a Clerke as Aristotle was, to whome the tuicyon, gouernaunce, and instruccion of Alexandre, might be committed, so did your most noble father, and so doe al we your most benevolent subiectes yet sutreioice, that your hap was to be borne hauing two such worthy vncles to serue and assist you, and especially such an one as your most dere vncle Edward Duke of Somerset is, to whome aswel the gouernaunce and vertuous institucion and training of your most Royal person, as also the protecyon of all your Roialmes and dominions and of al vs your most feithfull louing subiectes during the time of this your minority, might be safly committed. Of whose fidelitie now a long season aswel in king Henries time as sence the beginning of your Maiesties most noble and victorious Reigne throughly tried, and the same aswel in peace as also in soondry warres approued, neither at home only, but also both in fraunce & Scotland more then once or twise declared: of whose dexteritie aswell in marcial feactes as also in ciuile affaires, and in ordring of the common weale: of whose fortunate and luckie spede in al his worthy enterpryses: of whose happye and prosperous successe in all thinges that he taketh in hande: of whose passyng great clemencye & moderacyon towardes all people in euerye behalf: of whose prudence in all ciuill matiers: of whose feithful and vigilaunte administration vnder your Maiestie in your common weale: of whose indifferencie in al causes of iustice to be ministred to your people: of whose most vpright integrity not onely in ciuil counsayles, but also in matiers of religion for the worde of God purely & sincerely to be set forth to Gods glory, and to the welth and honour of your Emperial croune and dignitie, though no manne is hable to say ouermuch: yet wil I rather absteyne to say that I coulde and iustly might doe, then I will fill his eares with the troumpe of his owne particular prayses, whiche I knowe hym to bee nothyng desirous ne willing to heare. Onely I shall pray almyghtie God (as al England and your other dominions with publique and the same vnceassaunt prayers doe) so preserue and kepe him, vntil such time as your Maiestie being growen to full manstate and absolute discrecion, may reward him with condigne thankes for his long and the same most feithful and diligent seruice, and the same thing also to doe vnto al the other your moste noble and godly Counsaylours. For the blissfull state that your Maiestie endeuoureth and daily trauayleth with their assent & consent to set this your Empiere in, enforceth as many as loue either you or God, daily to breake out into this acclamacion: O happy king, of suche worthy Counsailours, and o happy Counsailours of such a toward king. Neither doe we your most benevolent subiectes any thing doubte, but that your Maiesties godly beginninges so prosperously and earnestly to set forth Gods worde and glory, shal daily more and more occasyon al Christian kinges & princes not onely to spoyle the Romishe Egipt by resuming euery one his owne most due & rightful title of supreme head within his own Royalmes & dominions, & by abolishing ỹ vsurped primacie of the papacie of Rome with al the Antichristian tradicions issuing from the same, but also in publishing

the pure and ſincere woꝛde of God to theyꝛ peoples and ſubiectes euery one. And than is it not to be doubted, but that Chriſtian loue, peace, vnitie, and concoꝛde, whiche hath long and many yeres thꝛough the malicious pꝛactiſing of the See of Rome been exiled & vaniſhed from al partes of Chriſtendome, ſhall vniuerſally in a momente returne agayne to the great glozy of God, to the quieting of the woꝛlde, to the benefite of all Chriſten common weales, and to the confuſion & diſcoumfeightyng alwell of the Turkes, as alſo of al other the enemies of God and good people. And within your Maieſties Royalmes and dominions it is in the meane time nothing to be miſtrusted, but that by your moſt gracious pꝛouiſion, ſuch knowlage of Gods woꝛde ſhal grow, that your people ſhal be to al others a perfect enſaumple of all godly conuerſacyon and behaueour. And where Ezechias and Joſias mayntayned true religion and the bꝛight wurſhipping of God, but either foꝛ his owne time & no lenger, I truſt your Grace ſhal confirme & eſtabliſh it foꝛ euer in the hertes and bowels of all youre moſt tendꝛe louing ſubiectes. Wherũto certes there cannot be any ſo ready oꝛ ſure a way, as by publiſhing the holy ſcripture & goſpel of Chriſt & by eſtabliſſing the vſe therof thꝛough moſt holeſome oꝛdeinaũces, ſtatutes, lawes, iniunctions, ſincere pꝛeachers, moſt godly omelies, and expoſicions, in the vulgare toung. And in this behalfe, if common wꝛiters in trifling pꝛofane matiers do with much high ſuit make meanes to obteine and vſe the fauourable acceptacion of Pꝛinces, vnder whoſe name, title, & pꝛotection any ſuch woꝛke may be the moꝛe commended and the better habled vnto the readers: how much are we al bound to your highnes, who of your own mere good zele and of your own accoꝛde, doe willingly ſet foꝛth in the Engliſh toung ſuche fruitfull bookes wherby all your people may bee edified in religion. Emong which verely I knowe not any one booke, whome foꝛ this purpoſe of bꝛiefly, pithily, ſincerely, and familiarely expounding the new teſtament, I may iuſtly compare, oꝛ at leſte wiſe pꝛeferre to thys pꝛeſente Paraphꝛaſe of Eraſmus, whiche lyke as the moſte vertuous ladie Quene Katerine late wife of your moſte noble father, and now of your tyghte derebeloued vncle Syꝛ thomas Seimour knight, Loꝛde Seimour of Sudley, and high admyꝛall of your Seaes, did tyght graciouſly pꝛocure to be tranſlated into our vulgare toung, ſo your Maieſtie moꝛe graciouſly hath by your moſt godly iniunctiõs willed to be read, vſed, and ſtudied by euery curate and pꝛieſte to the vndoubted edifying alwell of them, as of all other that with a delyꝛe to knowe God, ſhall eyther reade oꝛ heare the ſame. Foꝛ as a wynnower powreth the chaffe from the coꝛne, and the boulter tryeth out the bꝛanne from the mele: ſo hath Eraſmus ſcoured out of all the Doctours and commentaries vpon Scrypture, the dꝛegges which thꝛough the faute of the times oꝛ places, in whiche thoſe wꝛiters liued, had ſettled it ſelfe amonge the pure & fine ſubſtaunce: he hath tried out the refuſe that cleued in any the woꝛkes of ſuche as wꝛote whan the doctrine began by patchyng & clokyng to decline to inſynceritie: the traſhe and baggage ſtuffe that thꝛough papiſticall traditions had founde a waye to creepe in, this man hath ſifted out frõ the right doctrine: ſo that alwel in al other his moſt clerkely wꝛytinges, as alſo moſt ſpecyally in theſe his Paraphꝛaſes vpon the newe teſtament ſo auncientely wꝛyten as cannot be emended, he bꝛingeth in and bꝛiefly compꝛiſeth the pith of all the myndes and meninges of all the good Doctours of ꝑ churche, that euer wrote. In iustificacion of feith, in honouring God onely, in repentaunce & puritie of a Christen mans life, in detesting of imagery and corrupte honouring of Saincts, in opening and defacing the tranny, the blasphemie, Hipocrisie, the ambicion, the vsurpacion of the See of Rome, in noting the abuses of al the abhominable sectes and rables of counterfeicte religions & idle cloisters, in bewailing the iugling sleightes and fine practise of poperie, in choice of meates, in esteming the differēce of daies, in manifesting of vaine ceremonies vnder the coulour and pretence of holynesse crept into Christes churche, in reprehending pilgrimages with al circūstances of ydolatrie and superstition, in describing of a Princes office, in teachyng obedyence of the people towardes their rulers and Gouernours, in declaring of a pastours duetie, in shewing the parte of an Euāgelical preacher, and what or how his doctrine ought to be out of the Scriptures, in blasing the Antichristiā decrees of poperie vnder the name of trādicions & constitucios of our mother church, in decising the right difference betwene the spirite and the lettre, and finally in al other poinctes or articles of our religion, hauing now of late yeres ben in controuersie, Erasmus like as he is no where ouer vehement, so is he euery where both sincere and ful. Neither doeth any writer more wittily, more earnestly, more aptly, more finely, more substauncially, more piththily, or more playnely describe & peyncte out the vsurped estate, preeminence, and pompe of the bishope of Rome, then he doth: aswel in all other places where iust occasion offereth it selfe, as also directely (though vnder a preaty couloure) in the eleuenth chapitur of the Euangelist Marke. Erasmus ferthermore is wonderful in comparing of figures of the olde testamente, in applying of allegories, in declaring of parables, in discussing of doubtful questions, in serching and explicating of profound misteries, wherin he euidently declareth himselfe, that he was a man of an excellent witte, of much study, of exquisite learning, of profounde knowelage, of an exact iudgemente, of notable diligence, of woorthy & famous industrie, of singular peinefulnes, of an incomparable memorie, & of an vnestimable zele towardes ꝑ setting furth of Christes most holy gospel. And yet doth he with such prudence and semely circūspection so teper his stile, that his very enemies (as he cannot lacke enemies enough whosoeuer wil be an opener & teller of ꝑ trueth in matters of religiō, he cānot lacke enuie of Satans brode, whosoeuer wil endeuour himselfe to ferther the knowlage of Gods word, he cannot lacke neither priue backebiting nor yet open reproche to slaundre him, to bring him out of credit, to deface him, to trede him vnder foote, whosoeuer wil be diligent to help bring the gospel to light, he shal not auoide to be opely burdened with false crimes whereby he may be vtterly diffamed, whosoeuer wil trauaile to manifest the glory of Christes bloud: he shal haue enough to write & speake against him, whosoeuer wil attempt to discouer the iugling castes & practise of poperie:) his very enemies (I say, that hated him because they hated the veritie, could neuer yet finde how to geue him any foile, or how to take thaduantage of any such holde against him, whereby to confound his doctrine. Nouertheles whan I do in my mind make a comparison of you three together, Erasmus in writing this Paraphrase, Quene Katerine in procuring ꝑ same to be turned into English, and your highnes in publishing the same by your godly

iniunctions to bee had in vse throughout all parties of thys Royalme, me seemeth I do wel note Erasmus to haue doen the lest act of the three. For Erasmus fact did helpe onely such as are sene in latin: the Quenes goodnesse extendeth to the help of the vnlearned also which haue more nede of helping forewarde: and your Maiesties benefit it is, that maketh so precious a treasour cõmon to as many as may take profit or fruict thereby. And in dede no Christian Prince there is, to whome the tuition, protection, & stablishing of any such bookes or weorkes, as concerne the pure setting forth of Christ and his gospel, doeth so aptely or so duely appertaine, as to your most excellent Maiestie, to whome by a most iust and right deuolucion, and discente of inheritaunce of the crounes of England, Fraunce, and Ireland, the title also of Defẽdour of the feith, doth most nerely, most peculiately, most specially, and most directly belong. Now as touching the translatours of such bookes as this, although I haue at this present the lesse to say, because I my selfe haue in a small porcion of this weorke filled one rowme of some other man that might haue ben hable to do it better then I haue doen: yet can I not but wish that emong so many your Maiesties moste cumple & bountyous exhibitions, & so many other godly actes to be doen as are daily brought & offred to the gracious directiõ of your highnes, of your most dere vncle being Gouernour of your Royal person during thys time of your minoritie, & vnder your Maiestie our protectour, and of the other your most honourable Cõsaillours this thing also might be referred to your consideracions, how necessarie a thing it were, that some hable, worthy and mete persons for doing such publique benefite to the cõmon weale as translating of good weorkes, and writing of Cronicles, might by some good prouision and meanes haue some condigne sustentaciõn in the same. For what Royalme almost (Englãd excepted) hath not al ỳ good authours that euer wrote trãslated into the mother tong, whereby the people are made prudent and expert men in the tract of all affaires, either touching any discipline or els any ciuile matiers. And in Germany, what good weorke of diuinitie is there, which they haue not in their own lãguage to the vnestimable edifying of the people in ỳ due knowlage of God. For what hath ben or is in any common weale the foundacion of spreading abrode the knowlage of Goddes woorde, but onely the setting forth of the Bible with other good and godly tractises for the declaracion of the same. What thing hath ỳ whelpes of ỳ Romish Antichrist so fiercely alwates barked against, as at the translating of Scripture and other bookes cõcerning maters of religion into the vulgare tong for the vse of ỳ people. What any one thing is there, against the whiche there hath in all Christen Royalmes (as long as it might preuayle) been either forer decrees, lawes, or inhibicions ordeined, or more terrible execution of all kindes of tormentes and deathes inuented, deuised and put in vre, then againste the setters foorthe of bookes concernyng religyon. What one thing hath papistry in all countreyes more eagrely conspired, more subtelly coumpaced, or more earnestly practised to oppresse: then the coming foorth of Scripture and other diuine weorkes in the vulgare tong, whereof the rude multitude might gather knowlage. Against what thing hath there in these laste yeres, vntill Christ (like fier being hidden vnder wood) would nedes mounte vp and appere abrode maugre ỳ head of the Romish Pharao & al his tiranny, against what thyng (I say) hath there been eyther more sorer thunderboltes shot, of deprauing, of accursing, of slaundering, of defacing, of condemning, and of burning: then against bookes of scripture matters, trãslated or writen in the mother lãguage, & against the auctours of the same? Until the Bible & other good tractises for ꝑ explanaciõ of ꝑ same wer in Christian regions turned & set forth in the vulgare languages: what kind of idolatry, supersticiõ, poperie, errour, ignorance, or counterfeict religion, did not reigne? As long as the candel light of the gospel was kepte hidden vnder the bushell: what king, what Prince, what countrey, what people did not the blind popish guides lede (as one that is blindfolde may be led) till both fel in the pit? But whan and wherseuer it hath pleased God by his special mercy, grace, & prouidẽce to shew open the light of the gospel and true doctrine: there hath at once all popish troumperie euen of it selfe vanished away, as a mist is dispersed with the heate of the sonne, as smoke is consumed in the ayer, as duste is blowen and scattered abrode with a puffe of winde, as the nyght geueth place to the bright day, and as darkenes vanisheth at the clere light of the sũne. Contrariewise where the worde of God can not yet geat any entrie to take place, ne the bookes of holy Scripture obtein to be published to the people, what eye doth not see, and what Christian hert doth not lament and blede, to consider in what blindnes, superstition, errour, vnquietnes of conscięce and trouble of minde, the sely people doe liue? It is therfore no smal benefite that suche persons do to a common weale, which are willingly trauailers in this kind of writing. For as for newe bookes of trifleing vanities and prophane argumentes we nede none, there are daily so many writen: but to haue such workes made common to the publique vse of ꝑ vnlearned multitude, as are the principal best, & haue ben written by noble Clerkes of vndoubted learning, knowlage, and godlines, therin consisteth such a publique benefite, as (if I should not now be suspected & demed to hunt for my selfe) is in mine estimacion, worthy publique thankes and regarde. For (as Erasmus in his third booke of Apothegmes, aswel by a sapient aunswer of Socrates, as also by two other preatie stories, the one of Leonicenus and thother of William Warham late Archbishop of Canterbury doeth declare) muche more good, and a much greater benefit to a common weale doeth such an one, as translateth or compoleth any fruictful booke or traictise, which by going abrode throughout a whole Royalme may profit all pastours, curates studentes, & al people vniuersally: then any man is hable to do by preaching teaching, or geuing instructions to one cõpany alone, or in one place or countrey & no mo, though he should neuer so rightly, neuer so diligẽtly, or neuer so cũningly doe the same. Now besides that such a translatour trauaileth not to hys owen priuate commoditie, but to the behouse & publique vse of his countrey: besides that the thing is such as must so throughly occupte and possesse the doer, and must haue him so attent to apply that same exercise onely, that he may not during that season take in hande any other trade of busines whereby to purchase his liuing: besides that the thing cannot be doen without bestowing of long time, great watchyng, muche peines, diligente studye, no small charges aswell of meate, drinke, and bookes, as also of other necessaries, the labour selfe is of it selfe a more peinful and a more tedyous thyng, then for a manne to wryte or prosecute any argumente of hys owne inuen-

cion. A man hath hys owne inuencion readie at his owne pleaſure without lettes or ſtoppes to make ſuche diſcourſe as his argument requireth: but a tranſlatour muſt of force in maner at euery other worde ſtaigh, and ſuſpend both his cogitacio and his penne to looke vpon his autour, ſo that he might in egual time make thryſe ſo muche, as he cā be hable to tranſlate. But whether of both a man ſhal apply hymſelf to doe, he can in the meane while dooe nothing els, he cannot duryng the ſeaſon beſtow himſelfe on any other occupatiō for his liuing, & his neceſſities & alſo charges in the meane time neuertheleſſe dooe growe aſwel as other mennes. Wherof it cometh to paſſe, that a noumbre of ſuche as would be right willing and diligent to dooe good in the commō weale with this kinde of ſeruice: yet through defaulte of neceſſarie maintenaunce, cannot: and certain that hath both liuing & vacaunt time enough, for as muche as they ſee the paines of this traule ſo great, the hyre nothing at al, and the capciouſnes of ſome maligners againſt the trueth, ſo readie to depraue the diligent laboure of ſtudious writers: are for the moſte parte of thē better contented (according to the accuſtomed prouerbe) to plaie for naught then to worke for naught. And by this meanes lye almoſte all good bookes hidden from the people, & al diſciplines vnknowen. But thus hauing vnder the gracious ſufferaunce & correction of your Maieſtie ſhewed my poore opinion, I ſurceſſe any ferther to traict of this mater, leſte I myght ſeme to ſpeake as myne owne frende, whiche in dede I do not, in ſo muche that hauyng your Maieſties benigne fauoure therunto, I mind and entende no leſſe, then al my life enduring either in wryting or tranſlating, to employe my ſimple talente, according to the portion whiche it hathe pleaſed almightie god to meaſure vnto me: Albeit in this preſent worke, nothing it is that I doo or iuſtely maye take vnto me as mine acte, ſauing the tranſlacion of the paraphraſe vpon Luke, and the digeſting and placing of the text throughout all the ghoſpelles, and the actes (except the ghoſpel of Marke) to thentent the vnlearned readers maye perceyue where & how the proceſſe & circūſtaunce of the paraphraſe anſwereth to ỹ texte, & how it ioineth therwith. Which my rude & groſſe doyng, if it may pleaſe your highneſſe for the reſpecte of my good wil and honeſt zele to pardone (for as for thanke I confeſſe my ſelfe to haue worthily deſerued none for ſo rude a thing:) your Maieſtyes benigne & gracious fauour ſhall be vnto me ſuche an encouraging & ſpurre towardes ferther induſtrie: that emōg the riche iewelles of other better learned mennes ſtudies, who haue aboūdaunce of treaſoures to cōferre & beſtowe to the publique edifyng of the ignoraunt people, I ſhall at no time be ſlacke euen of my penurie and ſcarcitie to bring my poore ferthing alſo, & to caſt it into the cōmon boxe of helpyng the ignoraūt multytude towardes more knowelage of god. For truly there is none ſo good, ſo ſure, ne ſo ready a waye to plante the knowelage of God in mennes hertes, to engraue in mē true loue & obedience towardes their Princes and rewlers, to rote vp idolatrie & ſuperſticiō out of mēnes ſtomakes, to bring the people in ỹ good mind to deteſt & abhorre al kinde of naughtines, to bring al folkes to a perfect ſecuritie of cōſcience in Chriſtes bloud, to reduce the people to an vpright trade of Chriſtian religion: as to fede their gredie houngre and thirſt of Chriſtes righteouſnes, with the Bible, with ſuche godly omilies, and with this paraphraſe and other like bokes of wholſom doctrine, as your Maieſties zele and deuocio towardes god hath already moued you to do. For of this yong and grene foundacion being yet very newly laied, thus much good edifying hath already growen in all persons consciences: that blasphemie, periurie, mourdre, theefte, whoordome, making of affraies, and other abhominacions are more detested, then they were in the blinde worlde very late yeres gone: which is a token, that Christ beginneth to dwel emog vs. For as Christ groweth, so shal vice weare away. And by egual degrees shal the loue of vertue and the hatered of vice grow in our hertes. A great mayny that haue hated matrimony, and yet haue not hated fornicacion, incest, and aduoutry, begin now to abhorre and manifestly to flee these and other like pestilences, and to exercise the contraries. Which thing if some persones shal percase deny, and affirme to be otherwise, truely in mine opinion it is not so, but because it is in so great a numbre emended, looke where suche corrupcion stil remayneth, there doeth it better and more notably appere, as straunge thinges are commonly more wondred at. For al good and godly folke doe now wondre, that, Gods worde being spred abrode & being now almoste in euery bodies hand and mouth so common, there should be any creature in whome any of the enormities afore mencioned shoulde reigne. But by Goddes grace and your Maiesties most holsome prouision it is to be hoped, that through this salue of Goddes woorde, and other deuoute werkes for declaracion of the same sette foorthe to the people, if any shepe eyther be scabby, or els doe yet ren astraygh: the same shall by the right leding of the head belleweather theire Prince, and by the whystle and voyce of their good Pastours, be reduced to suche a concorde & vnifformitie, that they wil full and whole goe the streight pathway of Christes doctrine, vntil (according to his promisse) there shal of vs al be but one folde, and one shepeheard, as your most excellent Maiestie by setting forth suche bookes as may edify your people of all states and degrees in the knowlage of goddes woorde & in innocencie of life doth labour to haue it. Whiche your godly purpose and desire (if I may with your gracious pardone saye myne opinyon) I verayly suppose that no creature is of suche wicked herte to hinder, except if any such there be, (whiche thing God of his great mercy and grace forbid) that would not with his good wil haue your highnesse so wel to prosper, flourish, and growe, as to the honoure and glory of God, to the coumfort and reioysing of all your wel willers, to the terrour and drede of all your foes, and to the welth and honoure of all your Royalmes and dominions (God be thanked) ye nowe dooe. And doubt you not moste excellent Souerayngne, but that so long as your Maiestie by the aduise and assistence of your sayde most dere vncle and the other your moste honourable Counsailours, shall tendrely seke and setforth Gods glory, framing and trayning your people to walke in his preceptes: so long wil God prosper you in all affaires, who can no more be false of his promisse, then he can ceasse to bee God. If ye reade the fifth chapitur of Josue, and the fifth chapitur of Judith, (beysides many places mo aswell in the bookes of the kinges, as also in other bookes of the Scriptures) ye shal plainly finde how meruelously God protected, saued, prospered, and preserued the people of Israel, so long as they walked in his preceptes truely & sincerely wurshipping him and keping his lawes, againste all the force and vyolence of all their enemies, were they neuer so innumerable, neuer so puissaunt, neuer so well appoynted for battayl, nor neuer ſo fierce. In the fifth chapitur of Iudith emong other notable teſtimonies of Gods tendrenes ouer Iſrael, and by their example ouer al ſuch as truely ſerue him, it is conteined, that whan worde came to Holofernes, Prince and Captain general of the warre of the Aſſirians vnder the king Nabugodonozor, how the children of Iſrael prepared themſelues, to make reſiſtence againſt him and his armie Royal, and he demaunded many queſtions of the Princes of Moab & of the Captaines of Ammon concerning the power of the Iſraelites: Achior the Captaine of all the Ammonites, whan he had in a long proceſſe declared vnto Holofernes how wonderfully Iſrael, whan they truly ſerued god, had euermore from tyme to tyme been preſerued, and had preuayled againſte all their enemies, and contrarie wyſe howe God had alwayes plagued them whanſoeuer they fell from hym to worſhippe falſe Goddes: thus doeth he conclude and knitte vp his oracion. Therefore my lorde (ſayth he) make diligent inquiſicion: If this people haue doen wickednes in the ſight of their God, than lette vs goe vppe againſt them. For doubtleſſe their God will deliuer them into thy handes, and ſubdue them vnto thy power. But yf this people haue not diſpleaſed their God, we ſhall not be hable to withſtand them. For their God will defend them, and ſo ſhal we be a ſhame to al the worlde. &c. Iherfore with all tendrenes of herte, beſeche almighty God that this your godly purpoſe of ſetting forth the worde & glory of god, (wherunto his moſte holy ſpirite, firſt moued your moſt noble father, and hath now more ſtrongly and effectually wrought theſame in your Maieſtie,) may neuer ſlacke. And than I nothing doubt, but that, according to the moſt earneſt and the lame vnceaſſaunt prayers, not onely of all vs your moſt feithful louing ſubiectes, but alſo of all other good and godly people, he ſhal in al thinges moſt proſperously continue your moſt noble and moſt gracious Reigne ouer vs, pouring and heaping into you, as into a veſſel of ſingular prerogatiue peculiarely choſen, the right & true adminiſtracion of his lawes and of your common weale, which by hys ſpecial grace he gaue vnto Moſes and vnto Joſue: the like teſtimony of feithfulnes, and of being a manne choſen after his owne hert, which he gaue vnto king Dauid: the ſingular gift of wiſedome richeſſe, magnificence, and renoume, wherwith he notably aboue al others endewed king Salomon: the fortunate and proſperous ſucceſſe in battayl (if neceſſitie of war muſt come vnto you) that he ſente vnto Abia: no leſſe integritie and purenes of liuing ioyned with effectual taking away of ſuperſticion, then the ſcripture reporteth of good king Aſa: the ſame grace to ſet your people in good order, and to conſtytute echewhere within youre Royalmes and dominions, prudent, vpright, and diſcrete Magiſtrates to miniſter iuſtice, and to haue God with you in al affaires therfore, as we reade of noble king Joſophat: the like proſperitie and continuaunce of moſt victorious reigning that God ſent vnto Joathan king of Iſrael: the like addicion of yeres to your natural tyme, that Ezechias had: and finally the luckie and proſperous olde age, which God gaue vnto Abraham, with ſemblable happe for propagacion of ſede for your ſucceſſion by ſuche a noble Sara as may be a condigne ſpouſe to be coupled with ſo noble a King. Wherunto al true Engliſhe heartes that ſhall fortune to reade or heare theſe preſentes I doubte not wil with one voyce ſaye. Amen.

The preface
To the lentle christian reader

Nicolas Udal wisheth health, grace, and peace in God the father, and in hys sonne Jesus Christ our saluiour

Thou hast here, good Christiã reader, the paraphrase of Erasmus vpon ỹ gospel, that is to say, a treasour & in manier a ful library of all good diuinitie bookes. For whatsoeuer thing any of the auncient doctours of the church left behind him, whatsoeuer in any catholike writer is conteined, whatsoeuer any notable good expositoure hath sette foorthe for the sincere & playne declaracion of the new testament: the pith and substance therof hath this man with a clerkely iudgment compendiously and briefly, as it were in a summe, couched together in this one worke. Neither was there euer any worke so easy to be vnderstãded of the reader, which hath more cunning shewed in it, as by his owne annotacions vpon his trãslacion of the new testament it may euidently appere, in which annotacions he approueth & declareth himselfe with such diligent obseruacion and marking to haue perused al libraries, al writers, al bookes: as very few studentes dooe vse to reade and labour any one autour in any one particuler facultie or discipline. Accepte this autour therfore, deuout reader, and with glad wil embrace so profitable a meane & instrumẽt, wherby thou maist (without any ferther trauail then onely reading marking, & bearing it away,) so easily attain to the clere vnderstanding of ỹ gospel. Reade it with a pure & a charitable hert & with a single ye void of al maner parcialitie of affection or of enuy: & thou shalt espy therin such edifying, as may be mete for thy state of knowlage & aptitude or capacitie, what euer it be. For like as in ỹ most holy & blissed testamẽt there is both pappe for yoũglinges in the feith & in the knowlage of Gods worde, and also sounde meate for such as are wel entred & hable to broke higher thinges: euen so in this auctour, are al thinges aptly tempered to enduce & traine the grosse & the rude multitude aswel of Curates & teachers, as also of other priuate readers: to fede ỹ weake with such doctrine as they are hable to receiue: to sharpen and make eagre such as are hungrie of ferther knowlage: & to minister vnto the learned or eloquẽt teachers, matier sufficiẽt wheron to groũd much profoũd & the same right Christiã doctrine. Accept it willingly & rendre thãkes first to God, who of his infinite mercy & grace hath in these our daies set such a numbre of suche good writers (and emong them Erasmus as one of the chiefe and principal) not onely to geue clere light, but also to open a way vnto the pure & perfect knowlage of Gods worde: and than to your moste excellent Soueraine good king Edward the sixte, who emong the other his most princely and most Christian actes, doeth so soone and so effectually begyn, first with the promoting of Gods worde and glory, being the fountain and ground of al good successe, welth, and prosperitie: and thirdly to Quene Katerine by whose good meanes and procurement this present worke hath been by soondry mennes labours turned into our vulgare toung, wherby the kinges Maiestie, (whose principal desire & trauail is to doe all thinges possible possible, wherby his most tederly beloued subiectes knowlage may be furthered, their conscience staighed in a sincere doctrine of Christ, with a perfect framing & confirming of the same in a good conuersation of life,) might by hauing so notable a good matter in redinesse, be the better occasioned to put forth so fruitful an exposicion of the gospel. For a paraphrase is a plain setting forth of a text or sentence more at large, with such circumstaunce of moe and other wordes, as may make the sentence open, cleare, plaine, & familiar, whiche otherwise should perchaunce seme bare, vnfruitful, harde, straunge rough, obscure, & derke to be vnderstanded of any that were either vnlearned or but meanly entred. And what is this, but a kinde of exposicō, yea and that of the most profitable and effectual sorte? How muche therefore art thou bound deuout christian reader, (and especially ye preistes, and Curates that either haue not ben brought vp in studie of letters & of diuinitie, or els haue not such store of bookes, as may be sufficiēt for maintening of your studies) how much are al ye bound (I say) vnto the kinges moste excellent Maiestie and his most honorable & worthy Counsaillours, who of a speciall regarde and cōsideracion of the ignoraūce & defaute of litteratute (which hath reigned in most part of ỹ Clergie of England aswel to ỹ great detriment, harme and decay of religion in the christian flockes to their spiritual charge cōmitted, as also to their owne intolerable peril and daungier, whan at the generall day of accoumpt and audite to be made at the throne of God, it shall bee required at their handes how and what they haue taught to the ignoraunt multitude, for whose solles (as touching their institucion in the feith & in the lawes of God) they must answer before a rightful iudge, whome no mā shal be hable to corrupt, beguile, deceiue, or escape) haue by their most good policie founde a meanes, how both ye and all the people may with a great dele lesse time, study, labour, yea & also charges, then were wonte to be bestowed in playing at tables, boules, cardes, & other vnlawful games, haue in a few leaues a whole library of good doctrine, both for the priuate edifying of euery one particularely, and also for the instruccion & teaching of eche other in common. Whatsoeuer ignoraunt person is desirous of knowlage, & can be contēted to learn: whosoeuer is not of an hert so indurate but ỹ he can abide such good bookes, as may further Christes doctrine, whosoeuer is not of an extreme malignaunt stomake against the due setting forth of Gods worde: whosoeuer is not such an enemie to ỹ glory of God, that he enuieth the benefit of Christes bloud vnto England: whosoeuer is not eyther of such blindnesse that he cannot see the trueth, or of such peruerse & froward malice that he wil not, or of such canard obstinacie that he wil against the spirite and against his conscience wilfully withstand & resist al good thinges which may induce men to the knowlage of God: whosoeuer doth not hate the light of ỹ gospel: whosoeuer is in his herte a fauourer of the trueth, and of the kinges Maiesties most godly procedinges, hath no lesse cause but to enbrace Erasmus, whose doctrine the most & best parte of al Christiā Royalmes & vniuersities hath euermore allowed & iudged to be consonaūt to the truth, & also is bound with immortal thankes to pray for the kinges most excellēt Maiestie, for this his most gracious setting forth & publishing this present worke to the vse of such as haue nede therof. And where the sayd Erasmus for otherwise then a great nūber of ỹ scholastical sorte, & other vnlettred expositours

of these last blind seasons, hath written these his paraphrases in as ornate a stile as he hath the most parte of hys other volumes: is not (as some barbarous bloundrers haue for safegard & defence of their owne poore honesties alleged) a thing vnseming for bookes of holy scripture matters. For diuinitie, like as it loueth no cloking, but loueth to be simple and playn, so doth it not refuse eloquẽce, if the same come without iniurie or violacion of ỹ truth: For who writeth more ornately then the Greke diuines, Basilius, Gregorius Naziãzene, Theophilactus, Chrisostome: or who in laten more elegauntly than Lactanctus, Hierome, and diuers others. Albeit in this English paraphrase the translatours haue of purpose studied rather to write a plain stile, then to vse their elegãcie of speche, partely because there cãnot in al pointes be expressed in the English tong the grace that is in the laten, much lesse (of my self I speake) the pleasauntnesse that is in the stile of Erasmus, a man of moste excellent learnyng and exquisite eloquence in this kinde (thoughe in dede not altogether a Ciceronian, but yet feact, pleasaunt, swete, elegaunt, & sensible) & partely because there was a special regarde to be had to the rude and vnlettred people, who perchaunce through default of attayning to the high stile, should also therby haue been defrauded of the profit and fruicte of vnderstanding the sence, which thing that they might doe, was the onely pourpose why it was first translated, and now by the kinges most excellent Maiestie willed to be read. For as for the learned are hable enough to helpe themselfes without any translacions at al. Neither are these translacions to be depraued, because some reader would perhaps otherwise haue turned sõe thinges then he shal here rede it. For no two enterpreters there bee, that in translating out of any one tong into an other, would agree in al pointes of stile or enditing, as (best for this purpose) it may appere by the auncient fathers of the Churche, whose allegacions of places of holy Scripture, moste commonly varie in wordes, & agree not but in sense. And the same interpreter that would haue translated some part hereof better thẽ it now is, would in some other poinctes perchaunce haue doen it worse. Therefore euerie mã ientilly take and interprete an others labours, & beare with his infirmitie, if not in consideracion of his studie & trauail, yet at leste wise for respect of his good zele & godly entente to ferther knowlage. If it come to the handes of suche as can and wil without disdeigne or arrogancie take his penne and emend any thing that his good and vncorrupt iudgement shal see mete to be corrected: I suppose that beside the reward of God, & the publique thankes of his countrey, he shal also priuatly deserue and receiue immortal thãkes of the translatours, whose desire is to haue it wel. Neither do I suppose any to be of such mind that he would disdeigne or be greued to see his thing bettered, as in this great worke some thinges are in dede here & there otherwise penned, then the firste translatours wrote it. For hys is a common worke of building, to the which are hired many sondry men of occupacion: and in case some man be making a doore, a windoore, or a frame: though an other of the same occupacion put his hande to the bettering and perfecting of it, yet is not the so dooyng any displeasure, nor cause of grutche to the other: but rather a beautifyng of his dooing, & a cause of rendring thankes to the partie that of good wille and zele without presumpcion, did put hys helping hande to a good purpose. And semblеably in this commõ worke of

the gospels vineyarde (for asmuch as euery labourer hath his ye directed to the onely marke of setting forthe the glory of God, and hys moste holy worde,) no man meaneth any rebuke or derogation to his felow, whan he emendeth something that was to be reformed or altered: but rather seeth to craue the like help of the other agayn in his owne doinges, because it is euident that any man can ferther see, and can be a more indifferent iudge in an other manneg doinges, then he can be in his owne. Geuing therfore firste laude, prayse, and thankes to God for all his giftes, and than to our moste excellent king Edwarde the sixth for so gracious accepting, fauouring, and maintening honest and godly studies: leat euery man employ his good talentes that God hath geuen him, to the publique vse of seruing and profiting his countrey, & to the common edifying eche of other in Iesus Christe our Lorde: to whom together with the father and with the holy ghoste, be all honour laude, and glorye worlde without ende. Amen

To the moste vertuous Ladie

Quene Katerine, late wife to the moste noble, and moste victorious king, Henry the eight of most famous memorie, Nicolas Udal your moste humble seruaunt wisheth health, grace, and consolacion in our Lorde Jesus Christe euerlastyng.

WHere your excellent highnesse, moste gracious Quene Katerine, sence the time of your firste calling to the estate and dignitie of espousal & mariage with the moste noble prince that euer reigned, kyng Henry the eight, hath neuer ceassed by all possible meanes that in you might lie, to minde, to auaunce, and to encrease the publique commoditie and benefit of this common weale of Englande: I finde on euery side so great, and the same so worthy matier of gratulacion, and thankes geuyng vnto God, that I cannot tell on whose parte fyrste to commence and begynne the same: whether on your owne behalfe, whome God of his goodnesse did for your singuler and the same most notable vertues, without any your expectacion or hope, soodainly putte in kyng Henries mynde to chose, call, and auaunce to the dignitie and estate of a Quene: or on kyng Henries partie, whose good happe it was, so aptly to choose suche an one as shoulde afterwarde bee a feithfull and continuall coadiutrice vnto hym, in all hys moste deuoute and godly procedinges concernyng the knoweleage of God and his woorde to bee sette forth to the people: or els for Englandes cause, to whose publique benefite and edifying in true religyon, all these your vncessaunte peynes and trauayles doe finally redounde. Leauyng therefore the prosecucion of so large a mattier as neither my slender witte can wel contrue, nor my rude penne is hable to wielde: I shall at thys presente onely thanke God in you, & you in God, for causyng these Paraphrases of Desiderius Erasmus of Roterodame vpon the newe testament to be translated into Englishe, for the vse and commoditie of such people, as with an earnest zeale, and with deuout study, doe houngre and thirst the simple and playne knowlage of Goddes worde: not for contencious bableing, but for innocent liuing: not to be curious searchers of the high misteries, but to be feithfull executours and doers of Goddes biddinges: not to bee troubleous talkers of the Byble, but syncere folowers of Goddes preceptes therein conteined: not to bee vnreuerent reasoners in holy scripture, for vain setting out of their peincted sheathe: but to bee humble and lowly worckers of Goddes glorie: not to bee curyous dysputers in the ghospell for the defence and maynte-naunce of theyr inordinate lustes and carnall lybertie, but to bee vpryghte walkers in holy conuersacyon of lyfe in the rule of the ghospell prescrybed. Which kinde of doctrine, forasmuch as no one writer hath laboured in all poyncte and behalfes more vncorruptely or more playnely to ministre vnto the symple reader, then thys authour by a perpetuall dyscourse and continuacion of the texte doeth: your highnes vndoubtedly in procuring the same to be to be turned into Englisshe, hath not onely after a moste godly sorte bestowed your charges: but also hath in the thing selfe doen vnto the commen weale a benefit by so many degrees surmountyng and passing any other act of your great largesse and benignitie, as the soule is better then the body, as spirituall edifying is aboue temporal supportacion, as goostly foode and coumforte exceedeth corporall relefe or cherishing, and as heauenly treasours excell all worldely giftes or richesse. And in that your highnesse for the more spedy expedicion of your moste godly purpose to bring Goddes woorde to the more light, and to the more clere vnderstanding, distributed this woorke by portions to sondry translatours, to thentent it might al at once be finished, ne the deuout Englisshe readers any long time defrauded of so fruitful and so profitable a woorke: ye haue therein, moste gracious Ladie, right well declared both how much ye tendre Goddes honour, and also how earnestly ye minde the benefit of your countrey. Whiche your countrey, what they are not able in facte with condigne thankes to requite, dooe and euer will, (as they are moste bounden) supply with perpetuall commending your highnes to God in prayer, wh che I thinke to be the onely rewarde ye looke for or desire. As touching the translacions (because they are of soondry persones doinges) though there appeare in them some diuersitie of style and endicting: yet is there in the whole woorke no contrarietie of doctrine. Though euery translatour folow his owne veyne in turning the Laten into Englisshe: yet doeth none willingly swerue or dissente from the minde and sence of his autoure. Albeit some goe more nere to the wordes of the lettre, and some vse the libertie of translating at large, not so precisely binding themselues to the streight interpretacion of euery woorde and sillable, (so the sence be kept:) yet dooe they all agree (euery one as his veyne leadeth him) in faithfully rendring the sence of their booke. So that if any persones there be either of such high conceipte and opinion of themselues that they can like no mannes doinges but their owne, or els of such vnmetlenesse that they wil not well interprete simple mennes doynges, whiche themselues can for the moste parte sooner finde faulte withal then emende, or els of such morositie and waywardnes that their stomakes cannot beare with any other mannes labours, be they neuer so honestly entended or bestowed: such are in this behalfe rather to be contemned and left to their insolent disdeignefulnes, then either to be pacified or aunswered vnto. The parties of deuout readers are, with immortall thankes to receiue and take the fruicion of honest and godly studies: the office of learned men is, without deprauing or derogacyon of other mens diligence, & without any arrogancie on their owne behalfes, to employ their good talentes to the publique behouse of their countrey, and to the furtheraunce of godly knowleage: the office of euery studious and diligent writer is, to haue his eye directed to the publique vtilitie onely, and than to thinke his vpright wel doinges a sufficiente price & rewarde of themselues, and so without respect of any worldely rewarde or thanke, to referre the fruite and successe of his labours to God the mocioner, the authour, and the worker of all goodnes. As touching Erasmus and the doctrine that his bookes dooe sowe, although I haue before this time somewhat sayd aswel in my preface vnto your highnes before the paraphrase vpon the ghospel of Luke, as elswhere: yet can I not omitte thus muche to say in hys defence, that in case a-

nye persons bee enemies to Erasmus writing, it procedeth more of their envie, of their vnquietnes of minde, and of their hatered against the light and grace of the ghospel clerely now arisyng and plenteously spreading it selfe abrode, then of any faute or tust deserte in Erasmus. Whoso wincheth and kiketh at the gospel, in dede cannot but spurne at Erasmus, who hath with incomparable study & trauail shewed himselfe a diligent labourer in Christes vineyard. And truely whomesoeuer I perceiue to be an eagre aduersarie to Erasmus writinges, I (as my poore iudgemente leadeth me) cannot but suppose the same to be an indurate enemy to the gospel, which Erasmus doeth according to the measure and portion of his talente feithfully labour to sette forth and promote. But lyke as whan manus is in a feure, or with any other greuous infirmitie distempered, the better that the drynke is, the wurse it taisteth in his mouth: so whan the herte is corrupt with malice and hatred of Gods trueth, the better that the doctrine is, the more it offendeth. Sore iyes cannot abide the bryghtenesse of the sunne, nor a corrupte hearte the clere veritie of Gods woorde. Persons indurate are the woorse for reading of holy scripture: neyther dooe they of any thing take more occasion of slaundre and offence of conscience, then they doee of holy scrypture, whereby their conscience shoulde be edified. Some there be of suche malicious hardnesse of herte, that they can abide neither booke, ne teaching, ne reading, ne any thing els, that may helpe or emende the ignorant peoples knowlege. And suche, because they wouldе lette and stoppe Goddes glory, depraue all good thinges, and pronounce them to be naught. But suche are in this behalfe not to bee passed on, ne to be hearde. For as a body corrupted with yll humours or diseases, the more and better that it is nourished with good meates and drinkes, the wurse it is: so a cankarde stomake and a wicked hert, the more holesome doctrine that is ministred vnto it, the more it is indurate, the more doeth it enuie the publique vtilitie vnto men, and the more dooeth it striue, and wrastle against the veritie. Pharao was neuer more eagre in persecuting the people of God, the whan he was by dayly plagues and miracles most of all prouoked to conuerte. The Pharisees neuer more furiously, swelled, ensourged, or raged against Christ, then whan he alleaged holy scripture vnto them, or brought against them the testimony of theyr owne lawe which they coulde not deny. The scripture of God is all good and godly, yet like as the same to the good spirite is a sure porte of tranquillitie and peace, so is it to the wicked conscience a stumbling blocke, and a stone of offence. Out of one and the same floure the Bee gathereth honey, and the spider sucketh venome: so great diuersitie of operacion there is in good and euill natures. And the common faulte that malignaunt persones doe allege against the publishing of Goddes woorde in the mother tongue, and against the setting foorth of holesome and godly exposicions vpon the same, is, that suche bookes cause sedicion against the doctrine, and than lay their facte to the doctrines charge. This hath euermore hitherto ben the practise and conueighaunce not only of the Romish Pharisaical sorte, but also of the auncient enemies of Goddes trueth, euen from the beginning. Neither haue this malicious generacyon euer as yet vsed any other way or couloure to defacе the trueth, to let the good proceding of Gods worde, or to stiere and prouoke the indygnacyon of Princes and Magistrates agaynste the publishyng, or agaynſt the true preachers and teachers therof: but onely by allegeyng that it wyll moue ſedition and teache errour: where in dede Goddes woorde is (as ye would ſaye (a perfecte touchestone whereby to fynde out and to trye ſuche cancard ſtomakes, as would fain rebelle & moue ſedition, and would gladly haue it ſo to bee. For otherwyſe a great wonder it were, and a verie ſtraunge thing, if the woord of God, or this paraphraſe, or any other lyke godly expoſition of the ghoſpell (whiche is in ſenſe none other but the doctrine of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles) ſhould corrupt the readers or teache errour, or moue ſedition. God and his moſte holy woorde is altogether peace, vnitie, concorde, and perfecte charitie. Goddes woorde teacheth none other doctrine but peace humilitie, ſubiection, and ſo muche obedience to the Princes and Magiſtrates, as the Romiſhe Babylonians would not by their good willes haue to be put in the heades and hertes of the ignorannt people. But this colour haue the enemies of Goddes woorde euermore vſed to ſuppreſſe the ghoſpell. So did they by all the Martirs, ſo haue they doen by the true preachers, ſo did the olde Iewes by the auncient prophetes of God, and ſo did ỹ old Phariſees by Chriſt himſelfe, whoſe moſte grieuous crymes were, that he drew al the worlde after hym, that he taught and ſowed erroneous doctrine, that he ſeduced the people, and that he made hymſelfe a kyng. And the malicious Iewes layed to Paules charge, that he begoonne to be a ſeditious mouuer of rebellion agaynſt Ceaſar: not that the thyng was ſo in dede, but becauſe thelame was a cockeſure waie to make al obedient people hate the ghoſpell, and to prouoke the rewlers & Magiſtrates to ſuppreſſe it. But the lorde, who of his mercifull goodneſſe hath of late ſent out the clere radiaunt ſunnebeames of his holye woorde and veritie to ſhyne ouer all chriſten regions, will (I truſt) ſo continue the light of the ſame, that the ſimple flocke ſhall bee hable to diſcerne the ſpirites of men, & liuely to know the vngodly maligners, whiche by cauilling and depraueyng all good thinges, dooe waſtie and ſtrougle (as muche as in them lieth) to kepe the ignoraunte multitude in blindneſſe. In the meane time all the ſimple Engliſhe congregacion, is bound continually to praye for your highnes, that haue for theyr vſe and behoufe procured the tranſlation of this preſent paraphraſe vpon the ghoſpell of Mathew, and vpon the reſidue of the newe teſtament, wherby they may with a more comfortable and pleaſaunt readyng in theyr owne mother tounge, bothe encreace from daye to daye in knowelage, and alſo continually bee edified in true religion, nouzeled in right opinions, trayned in ſincere doctrine, and confirmed to walke in perfect innocencie and integritie of a true Chriſten lyfe accordyngly.

To the moste victorious Emperour Charles, the fift of that name Erasmus of Rotterodame, greeyng.

Eyng not ignorant, Charles Emperour moste victorious, howe muche godly feare and reuerence also, is of due congruence to be geuen, partely vnto all holye scriptures, whiche the holy fathers throughe the inspiracion of God, haue left vnto vs, and especially vnto that part of scripture, whiche maketh an vpright and faythful relacion of suche thinges as the heauenly father eyther wrought in facte, or spake in woordes, for the health and saluacion of the whole world, through his soone Iesus: and being further priuie to myne owne vnworthynes, where not many yeares gone, I first attempted to set hand to making a paraphrase vpon Paules Epistles, for the playner vnderstandyng of them (which thing to doe came vpon me at that time of a sodain pangue, euen of mine owne mind) I did no lesse, then think myself to enterprise a verie bolde and presumpteous acte, and an acte (as the prouerbe sayeth) of a right daungerous hazarde, in so muche that after I had in one or twoo or three chapiters, taken a proue, and assaye of the worke, how well it woulde doe, I was vtterly mynded to pulle downe my sayles againe, and to surcease from the course that I had afore appointed to take, vnlesse a wunderful consent of my frendes beyng men of lernyng, had perforce constrayned me to procede with that I had begon. Neyther coulde I for their moste earnest desires be at any rest or quiet, vntil I had fully ended and finished all that euer there was of the Epistles Apostolical, whereas I had not taken in hand to medle, but only w̄ thole epistles whiche without all controuersie or doubte were wryten of thapostle Paule. It hath not at al tymes framed wel with me, ne come to good ende, when I haue ben ruled to doe thynges at the motions & instaunt pricking forward of frendes. But yet in this thing neuertheles I was not a litle proude of my selfe, that this my bolde auenturyng had come muche more happily to passe, then was loked for, as well for myne owne parte that was the maker, to whome it purchased least enuie and grutche of men, of al the workes that euer I wrote: as also on the behalfe of all suche as are studentes and suters to atteigne to the philosophye of the gospell, who doe euery man more then other, geue me thākes for that by meanes of myne industrious labour, they haue to the better knowlage of thapostolicall wisedome, eyther been moued and stirred vp, or els furthered. But whā I had cleane dispatched myself of this great charge and taske, I loked not that I shoulde at any tyme afterwarde, haue any more to doe with this kynde of writing, & beholde the right reuerende father Mathew, Cardinall of Sedune (by whose aduise and instigacion I had afore made vp all the pistles canonical) at what time I spake with him at Bruxels, to welcome hym into the countrey, accordyng to my duetie, after his returne from the counsell, whiche had than been holden at the citie of Wourmes, euē by and by at the first entring in talke with me, euen lyke a man that had deuised vpon it afore, begynneth to exhorte me, that what I had afore doen vpon thapostolicall Epistles, the same I shoulde also doe vpon the gospel of Mathew;

thew. I on my pattie anon made myne excuſe by many thynges, firſte that it was alreadye an acte bolde and ouerbolde, that I had attempted the ſame vpon the writinges of thapoſtles: ſecondly that the Apoſtles in dede wer godly men, yet neuertheleſſe men they were, but the maieſtie of Chriſt to be more great, then that it myght be lefull to auenture the doynge of ſuche a thynge in his wordes. And though the maieſtie of the worke did not put of & driue one awaye, yet the nature of the argument or matter of the goſpels to refuſe the thyng, & not to ſuffre one that ſhould go about to make a Paraphraſe: and not onely for that there are in the goſpell perſons of diuers and ſundry ſortes, vnto whome while the wordes and talke is ſo applied as to euery of them for his tate or degree maye beſt accorde, it commeth to paſſe that the writers penne is kept ſhut within the encloſure of an extedyng ſtreyght grate, becauſe it is debarred from that libertie, whiche all other ſortes of commentaries doe ſuffer and receiue (for a paraphraſe alſo is to be reputed as a kynde of commentarie.) Furthermore where as a good portion of the goſpell conſiſteth in makyng report of this and that acte doynge, and that of a ſimple and a plain report without any curioſitie, one that ſhoulde in thys parte make a paraphraſe ſhall ſeme nothyng els to doe, but at noontyde to light a candell, as the prouerbe of the Grekes doeth call it. Nowe ferther, wheras the auncient doctoures and writers doe in expoundyng the allegories, partly varie, not declaryng it all after one waye: and partely ſo handle themſelues, that to me they ſeme oftymes to playe and dallie with it, nor myght expreſſe or bryng in the ſame allegories, but vnder the perſones, eyther of Chriſt, orels of the euangeliſt, it is euidente and well to be knowen in what narow ſtreyghtes I ſhould trauayle. I let paſſe and ſaye nothyng, that Chriſt in ſuche wyſe ſpake certayne thynges, as he woulde not haue the ſame to be vnderſtanded at the time of the ſpeakyng of them: of whiche ſort this here enſuyng is one: Deſtroy ye this temple, and within thre dayes ſpace I wyll buyld it vp agayne. And alſo of bying a ſwearde: of the Phariſeis leuen to be eſchued. And truly in that ſame his talke, where he foreſheweth the diſtruccion of the citie of Hieruſalē and prophecieth of the ende of the worlde, and of afflictions long after to enſue vnto the Apoſtles, Jeſus doeth ſo intermedle and temper his talke, that me ſemeth his will and pleaſure was to be darke and not vnderſtanded, not onely to the Apoſtles, but alſo vnto vs all. There be alſo certayne places (as I thinke) almoſte vnpoſſible to be expouned, of whiche ſort one is, concernyng that ſinne againſt the holy goſte ſhall neuer be remitted: an other, concerning the day of iudgement, reſerued to the knowlage of the father onely, and vnknowen euen to the very ſonne ſelfe. In theſe places and ſuche lyke, yf one wryte commentaries, he maye at his pleaſure without daunger reporte the ſundrye opinions of ſundrye expoſitours, he hath libertie frankly to confeſſe and acknowlege that he dothe not vnderſtand the mening of the place. But one that maketh a paraphraſe hath not ꝑ lyke libertie nor power. Moreouer certayne thinges there be in ſuche ſorte ſpoken, that they touche and concerne euen theſe verai times that now are, in which our tymes right many thinges there be, ferre diſagreyng from the inſtitucions & ordinaunces of the Apoſtles. And ſuche thynges although the Euangeliſtes foreknew them by ꝑ ſpirite of prophecie, yet certes vnder the perſones & names of the Apoſtles, they can not be reported, but both coldely & alſo cuttedly: There was yet alſo an other point that moued my minde, which was, that in caſe I ſhould take and beſtow this labour vpon Mathew only, there would byandby be ſome that would make inſtaunte & earneſt requeſt for to haue the lyke doen vpon all the reſidue of the Euangeliſtes: whoſe wyl & deſire if I ſhould folow, than muſte it cum to paſſe, ỹ I muſt many tymes more then once make repetition of one manier mattiers, that is to wete, of all and every matter in whiche the Euangeliſtes did amonge themſelues accorde. Or, if on the other ſyde I ſhoulde tye and linke together a certayne continuall proceſſe of tellyng the thynges, & ſo to make but one whole tale of them all together: than (forasmuche as to declare and to open all the places which in the Euangeliſtes ſeeme to diſagree, is nothyng els but to be coumbreously entangled as it wer in a certayne maſe) could I neuer haue been hable to do that is to be doen, for the clereneſſe and light that a Paraphraſe ought to haue. Whan with theſe & berai many mo argumentes and reaſons, I deſired to be ridde of the charge that was layed vnto me to go in hande withall, whereas I thought my ſelfe to haue a good cauſe, and an excuſe that might haue preuailed: yet did the ſayed Matthewe banquiſh me by his eloquence, he got the ouer hande of me by reaſon of hys authoritie wherby he might commaunde me, takyng on hymſelf the daungier and haſard of all the whole matier. Neyther durſte I bee ſo bolde as any longer to ſtriue or ſtrougle agaynſt the aduiſe and councell of hym, whoſe counſailes your Maieſtie cuſtomablie vſeth in moſte high and weighty affayres, not bu wyllyngly to folowe. And yet where as I had not euen plainly taken the matier vpon me, but had onely promyſed that I woulde one daye aſſay yf happily the thyng would frame & go forward: he than tourneyng towardes Millayn, had made aſſured warantiſe vnto ỹ Germaines in my behalf, that the worke ſhould this mſkant winter ſeaſon cum forth. Wherupon I cummyng backe my ſelf againe vnto Baſile, was in ſuche wiſe on eche ſide continually called vpon of my maiſters the Germaines, being crauers not of the leſt importune ſort, that becauſe I would in any wiſe diſcharge both his promyſe, & myne own honeſtie to, I finiſhed vp the worke with litle more then a monethes labour. And God be graunte that bothe the cõmaundement of hym and the obedience of me, may be to all perſons luckie and fortunate, and I truſt it wyll ſo be if your maieſtie will fauourablie acknowlage and accepte this ſlender gifte & preſente, to the ſame dedicated. But here perchaunce ſome man that knoweth you by none other title ſauing onely by the name of Emperour, wyl ſaye: What is a booke of ſuche an argumente or matier as thys for a prince ſecular, whiche it had been more mete and conuenient to haue dedicated vnto abbottes or biſhops. For aunſwer wherof, firſt me thinketh it a thyng aptlye geuen, whatſoeuer thyng beyng honeſt, is put vp to a Chriſten prince. And beſides this, where as no prince is ſo ſecular, but that he hath a doe with the profeſſion of the goſpell, the Emperours are anoynted & ſacred for this very purpoſe, that they may eyther maynteyne or reſtore, or elles enlarge and ſprede abrode the religion of the goſpell. Ergo than (will ſome man ſaye) the Emperour is not a teacher of the goſpell, but the defendour of it. I graunte that: but in the meanwhyle mete it is, not to be ignorant what maner thyng it is, for whiche one taketh armour to defende it. And forſoth whã I conſider that herte and mynde of yours in ſuche wiſe to bee geuen vnto religion and to godly deuocion, that to Biſhops & Abbottes it may towardes

the studie of godlinesse, bee as well a rule, as also a spurre, me seemeth, I can not dedicate this gifte vnto any man, more conuenientlye, then to youre maiestie. So that the thyng whiche I myght aptly haue dedicated to any Christen prince, and more aptlye to a Christen Emperoure: I doe moste aptly of all dedicate vnto you Charles. Whyche lesse apte thynges doe they bringe vnto you, that geue you great gyftes of precious stones, that are gayson to bee found, of lustie fierce horses, of houndes, & of riche hanginges, that come oute of farre straunge countreyes. And moreouer forasmuche as the Euangelistes haue writen the gospel vnto all folkes, no persone excepted: I do not see why it shoulde not of euery man bee read. And I haue so handled it, that it maye bee vnderstanded, euen of suche also, as are vnlettered. And surelye it shall withe excellent good fruite be read, if euery bodye shall take it in his handes of the only mynde and entent, to bee made thereby a better man then he was afore: and not apply scriptures of the gospell to his owne affeccions, but contrarywyse reforme and correct his lyfe and his desyres, according to the rule and prescripcion therof. I haue in this present worke chiefly followed Origenes, beyng singularly aboue others experte in diuinitie, and Chrisostome and Hierome, of the catholique writers most best allowed. That Lorde and Prince of heauen giue and graunte vnto you Charles, Emperour most emperiall, suche thinges to minde and to go about, as are of the principall beste sort, & thesame lord well prosper your endeuours in that behalf, to the ende that the moste noble Empier, whiche ye haue hitherto had without bloudshed of mã, ye maye semblably as well enlarge and amplifie, as defende and maintayne. And this poinct in the meane while it maye please your merciful graciousnes frõ tyme to tyme to haue in your remembraunce, that no warre there is vpon so iust & lawfull causes taken in hande, nor with so good moderacion executed, that draweth not after it an huge heape both of abominacions, and also of miseries: yea, and remembre also the greatest porcion of all the harmes, to light in fine, vpon persones bothe giltles and also vnworthy thesame.

MAtthew whiche was other wyse also called Leui, beyng of a Publican made an Apostle, first of all others composed and wrote in Iewrye, the ghospell of Christe in the Hebrue tounge, for theyr behouffe and cause, whyche beyng of the circumcision had beleued: whyche ghospell what person did afterwarde translate into Greke, it is not verai certaynly knowen. But truely the verye Hebrue selfe is had euen vntill this presente daye in the librarye of Cesarea, whyche librarye Pamphilus the martyr did with all possible studiousnes set vp and make: And I my selfe also had the same ghospell of Matthew in Hebrue, lente me to coppe it out, of the Nazarites, whyche in Beroea a citie of Syria, doe vse thesame booke. Wherin is to be noted and obserued, that wheresoeuer this Euangelist, eyther in his owne person, or els in the person of our sauiour, doethe vse any allegacions of the olde Testamente, he doeth not followe the auctorite of Septuaginta, that is to saye, of the thre score and ten translatours: but of the Hebrue. Of whyche sorte are set theyse two citacions here ensuyng. Out of Egypt haue I called my sonne: and For a Nazarite shall he be called.

The firste Chapter.

If men so gredely embrace a booke, which is set foorth by the industrie of man, concernyng the preseruacion or restoryng of health, or the waye to increace worldely substaunce, or touchyng any other faculte whiche maketh only for worldly commodities, with howe muche more feruent loue and desyer ought this boke to bee receyued of all men: whose profyt and cõmoditie belongeth indifferently to all men. This boke promiseth not worldly commodities, whiche laste but a whyle: but it teacheth all heauenly wysedome, delyuered vnto mankynde from the heauenly doctour Christe Iesus: And it promiseth also a wonderfull rewarde, not ryches, nor kyngdome, nor pleasures, but true and euerlastynge felicitie: vnto the whiche felicitie this booke sheweth the moste ready and easye way for all men. It shewethe also the author & meane, throughe whome euery man hath health and saluacion, and without whome no man maye hope for healthe and saluacion. What man woulde not be moued and prouoked with a sure hope of suche a good thynge, be he neuer so barbarous or vnlettred? And thys wunderfull saluacion (whiche neyther mannes indeuour, nor the paynfull labour of the Philosophers, nor the superstitious religion of the Gentiles, nor the diligent obseruacion of Moyses lawe, coulde fully perfourme or geue) God the maker, the preseruer, the ruler, and restorer of all thynges visible and inuisible, dyd shewe and declare in tymes paste, by the sayinges of all his Prophetes, beyng replenished with his heauenly spirite, vnto all the worlde, but moste specially to the people of the Iewes (whyche at that tyme wer a figure of Christes churche, whiche shortly after shoulde be enlarged throughout all the world) signifyng & shewyng before by dyuers darke figures & shadowes, whatsoeuer he hath now plainly made open vnto the world, by his sonne Iesus Christe, who was the messinger of this free felicitie, beyng ambassadour in yearth of God his father, in suche wyse, that he was also the teacher of the holsome philosophy, he was ỳ example, he was both the pledge, the promiser, and the author of the euerlastyng rewarde. For God by his secrete counsell whiche mannes wit is vtterly vnhable to serche oute, hath suffered mankind, beyng of disposicion lyke his first parent, and prone to all vice, to be entangled with false religions, with sondry vices of life, and naughtie desyres, to the intent that in this time of al times most to bee desired and wished for, the whiche Goddes wisdome the ordrer of all thinges had appoynted to it selfe, al men shoulde with the more desyrous & agreable myndes enbrace this philosophie, beyng bothe very holsome and of marueylous efficacie, after that they haue once perceyued, that neyther by those commodities and healpes whyche the worlde promyseth here to be chyefe, nor by so many fine & exquisite preceptes

of the phylolophers, noꝛ by lo many loꝛtes of religions, noꝛ by the ſcrupulous obſeruacion of Moſes lawe, they coulde acꝛayne vnto true godlynes and true felicite: Naye rather the moꝛe earneſtly they laboured to cum vnto innocencie and felicitie, as long as they truſted to mannes help & ſtrength, the moꝛe they wer intangled with vice and filthy deſyꝛes. Therfoꝛe yf the Jewes, whom it behoued chiefly to accept and imbꝛace the thing that is offered vnto them, beyng ſo often pꝛomyſed, and ſo longe loked foꝛ, yf they alone neglect ſo greate godnes, whiche is freely offered to all men, and yf they had rather alone to lacke it, than to haue it common wᵗ others, they can impute their deſtruction to nothyng but to theyꝛ owne incredulitie and vnbeleef. The ſayinges and pꝛophecies of the holy Pꝛopheters, pꝛophecied theſe thynges chiefely foꝛ them. They ſawe Chꝛiſte with their iyes woꝛkyng miracles, they heard with theyr eares the doctrine of the goſpell. The kyngdome of heauen was pꝛeached firſt to them. But truly whoſoeuer are wearye of theyꝛ foꝛmer lyfe, as many as loue true innocencie and godly lyuyng, whoſoeuer deſyꝛeth true, perfect, and euerlaſtyng felicitie, let them receyue this goſpel, this pleaſaunte and mery tydinges, with mery and therefull hertes, whether they be Grekes, oꝛ Jewes, oꝛ Romains, oꝛ Scithians, oꝛ Gallians, oꝛ Bꝛitans. Lyke as God is not only God of the Jewes, but indifferently God ouer all, and common to all, lyke as there is one ſunne whiche is common to the whole woꝛlde: ſo Jeſus Chꝛiſte the ſonne of God came to ſaue all menne, dyed foꝛ all, aroſe agayne foꝛ all, aſcended into heauen foꝛ all, and ſente his holy ſpiritte to all, refuſyng none, neyther foꝛ diuerſitie of ſtocke, oꝛ of age, oꝛ of kinde, oꝛ of ſtate, oꝛ of lyfe. All the ſinnes of the foꝛmer life be dꝛowned once by his death in holy baptiſme. And thoſe ſinnes be not imputed, be they neuer ſo greuous, foꝛ the cleanſyng of whiche, that bleſſed innocent once dyed: ſo that the reſte of the life be paſſed ouer after the rule of Chꝛiſt, that is to ſaye, after the doctrine of the gholpell: from the tyme of baptiſme, a man is iudged oꝛ taken to be a chꝛiſtian, to the perfourmaunce of the whiche ſo high a pꝛofeſſion, he will graunt his fre ſuccour and ayde, and will graunte alſo plentifull rewarde to them that do perſeuer vnto thende. He requireth of no man the burden of Moſes lawe, onelye he requyꝛeth lyuely fayth, the whiche maye redily beleue whatſoeuer is ſhewed, and with a ſure truſte looke foꝛ that whiche is pꝛomyſed. The eternall veritie doethe not deceyue: God the pꝛomiſer diſapointeth not. Further, mans lawe ſhall not nowe pꝛeſcribe what is to be doen, but Chꝛiſtian charitie ſhall playnly tell.

The booke of the generacion of Jeſus Chꝛiſte, the ſonne of Dauid, the ſonne of Abꝛa The texte. ham. Abꝛaham begat Iſaac. Iſaac begat Jacob. Jacob begat Judas. and hys bꝛethꝛen.

And hytherto we haue truly delyuered vnto you the gholpell by mouthe, and haue made all men partetakers of thoſe thynges whiche we haue ſeene with our iyes, and hearde with our eares. Nowe becauſe there is daunger, this thyng beyng ſpꝛed abꝛode daylye moꝛe and moꝛe, leſte the tellyng of it, paſſyng by many mennes mouthes, maye varye, oꝛ elles leſte the tale tolde by mouthe, be not ſo well beleued as whan it is wꝛitten in a booke, and further moꝛe to thintent that the thyng that is wꝛitten maye the moꝛe eaſily cum vnto all men, than the voyce of the mouthe: we ſhall compꝛiſe in this booke, the ſumme of the whole matter, ſo muche as ſhall be ſufficient to the obteynynge of saluation, as the natiuite, the doctrine, the miracles, the deathe, and the resurrection. And fyrste of all we shall recite the geneologie and petigree of Jesus Christe, takyng oure begynnyng not from the highe heade, but from Dauid and Abraham, eyther for because the memorye of these twoo is verye ryfe and common, and verye acceptable among the Jewes, for theyr glorye is chiefly of Abraham, as of the autour and beginner of theyr nation, and Dauid the kynge beeynge so muche praysed by the commendacion of God, styc-keth the more in theyr myndes, because the memorie of hym is yet but freshe and newe: otherwise because Christe whiche was looked for so many yeares, was promysed chyefly vnto these twoo, and that in the bookes and oracles of the Hebrues, to whome euen those that be directly agaynste Christe, gaue great credyt. For in the boke of Genesis God speakethe vnto Abraham, promysyng that in type to come, there shoulde spryngē one out of hys stocke, through whose free benefit, not onely the nation of the Jewes, but also all the people of the whole worlde beyng receyued into the tyght, and title, and loue of chyl-dren, shoulde obteine wyth Christe, the kelowshyppe of the kyngdome of hea-uen, not by circumcision, whych was not as than setforth, but by ỹ fayth of the gospel. For thus sayethe God vnto Abraham: In thy seed, that is to saye, in Jesus Christe all nations shall be blessed. Further Dauid in the mistical psalmes speaketh thus: Of the fruite of thy wombe shall I set vpon thy seat. And this shall we doe, chiefly because of the Jewes, leste they beyng a rebel-lious nation, and harde of beliefe (knowyng by the authorite of prophecies whiche they sufficiently beleue, that Messias whiche shoulde come, was pro-mysed) maye make cauillacions, and saye that there is an other sautoure to be loked for, and that this is not he, whome the scriptures promysed. For ma-ny of them because their myndes be blinded wyth desires of worldly thynges, not takyng aryght the sayinges of the Prophetes, (suche was theyr carnall and grosse affection) loked for some myghtye and glorious kynge, who being valiaunt with armes or hostes, weapon, riches, and suche other defences of this worlde, shoulde promote hys people to ryches, honour and emperie, and shoulde subdue the whole worlde to the dominion of the Hebrues. But Christ althoughe he be lorde ouer all, came not into the worlde, to the entent to enryche wyth worldlye gooddes one nation, of the whyche he was borne as touchyng hys body ỹ he toke, but to the intente to auaunce all the nations of the whole worlde vnto true ryches, that neuer shoulde decay: and to make them blessed euerlastingly wyth heauenly ryches, to ouercum the tyranny of deathe by sufferyng and dyeng, to subdue enemies by gentill deseruinges, to kill the monsters of vice, and the rebellious prouocacions of concupiscence by the sweard of the spirite, and they beyng once ouercum that fighte agaynst the spirite of God, to geue vs of his own righteousnesse & innocencie: Finally by spirituall weapons to winne vnto vs a spirituall kingdome. But these Je-wes cannot haue hereafter anything to saye, whan they shall see all thynges to consent and agre vnto hym, whome we knowe to be come, and constauntly preache the same: whyche thynges the holy prophetes inspired with the hea-uenly spirite, had prophecied with a full consent and agremente, so long before in holye bookes, that is to saye, the stocke, the familie, the manner of byrthe, the lyfe, the doctrine, the myracles, the afflictions, the rebukes, the kynde of death, the burtall, the resurrection, thascendyng into heauen, the holy ghoste lente downe from heauen, the wounderfull toungues of the Apostles, the conuersion of the Gentiles, and other thynges whiche we sawe and dayly see doen by them that profesſe the name of Chriſte. Finally the tyme also doeth agree, in ỹ which he was prophecied for to come. And all these thynges were prophecied, not only by the sayinges of the Prophetes, but also wer signified by the actes and dedes of ỹ Patriarches. Nowe seing thei know these thinges, if thei cõpare thẽ with these whiche we shewe to haue been doen, they shall vnderstande that they loke in vayne for any other Messias, then this whom we speake of, he came once humble and abiecte concernyng the fourme of mannes bodye (for so Esai prophecied he should come) to delyuer all mẽ by his deathe from the tyranny of deathe. And he shall cum againe in thende of the worlde, not as now, a sauiour, but a iudge of all, bothe lyuing and deade. Now no man is excluded frõ his benefite. Than no man shal escape his iudgement. But than shal they ioyfully see ỹ iudge dealyng euerlasting rewardes, whiche now doe not despise hym a meke sauiour & ealy to be entreted. This therfore is that only and very Messias, whose genealogie and petigre shal forthwith be shewed, touching the body whiche he toke for our cause: for by hym shoulde spryng and cum furth a new nacion not carnall but spiritual, which should rather repleniſh heauen than yearth, the which also shoulde be encreaced or multiplied, not by the seed of man, but by the euangelical fayth, whiche is the heauenly seed of Goddes worde. Of this faith the autour and father in a misticall figure was represented by Abraham, who (the law of circumcision not yet publyshed,) deserued the prayse of rightuousnes, not before men, but before God, not by the kepyng of the law, but by the sincerite of faith, wherby he doubted nothing of Goddes promises, although they wer farre passing the power of nature. And for this trust and confidence, he was called the father of many nacions, which after the example of hym should beleue the gospel of Jesus Chriſte. He nowe, his body beyng decated for age, his wife also beyng weake and barain, begate Isaac whiche was promised vnto hym, who also was a figure of Chriſte, bearyng wood to the sacrifice, whereunto he was apoynted. Isaac begat Jacob, which though he wer the younger brother, yet he set his elder brother beſyde, & purchased the inheritaunce to hymself, wherin he was a figure of the churche that should be congregated and gathered together of the Gentiles, the which, the Jewes being excluded, encreaseth daily more and more, receiuing the grace of the gospell by faythe, of the which the Jewes through vnbeleſe haue made themselfes vnworthy. For thus sayeth God: I haue loued Jacob and hated Esau. And in the Prophetes ofte mencion is made of this name. Jacob begate Judas, of whome the tribe had his name, of the whiche Chriſt was prophecied to cum of: and by whose name, as by inheritaunce, was promised the newe lawe of the gospel, for thus speaketh Hieremie: Beholde the dayes do come, sayeth the Lorde, and I wyll diſpose a newe testament to the house of Judas & the house of Jacob. And he did not beget him onely, albeit he deserued chiefly to be recited in ỹ genealogie, but also he begate the other eleuen brothers of Judas, which seuerally gaue names to ỹ seuerall trybes of the nation of Israell.

Further

Further Judas had two chyldren at a burden: named Phares and Zaram, not of his lawfull wyfe, but of Thamar hys daughter in lawe, whyche was maryed to Her, the eldest soonne of Judas, vnto whome when Judas did not performe hys promyse, that is to saye, that she myghte be maryed to Sela, brother vnto her housbande that was dead, accordyng to the order of the law, the woman passyng all measure desirous to haue a chylde, tooke the habite of a common woman, and couerynge her face by crafte and deceyte, laye with Judas her father in lawe, and afterwarde by shewyng of the token whyche she had receyued of hym before that she woulde suffer hym to lye wyth her, auouched and proued hym to be father of bothe the chyldren, when he otherwyse earnestlye woulde haue brente her accordyng to the lawe. The thyng thus doen is not without offence and blame, but yet the mysterie hyd vnder thys vnhoneste couerture maketh muche for the matter of the Ghospell. Lyke as also Phares was a figure and signification of the churche and Synagogue, whiche Phares preuented his brother when he endeuored to goe further of his mothers wombe, puttyng foorth his hande fyrste.

Of this Phares Esrom was borne, of Esrom Aram, of Aram Aminadab, of Aminadab Naasson, and of hym Salmon. Salmon begat Boos of Rahab, whiche though she were not of the nation of Jewes, but of the Cananites, yet because she preserued the spyalles sent from Jesu the captain & guyde of the Jewes, and because she betrayed the citie of Hierico, she deserued her place in the geneologie of theym, whiche throughe faythe were made prayse worthie of God, and she exempted out of the sorte and order of common women, was chosen and admitted emong the people of God, and maryed to an housbande of the nation of Jewes: signifying euen at that tyme, that synners & heathen people beyng alienate from the religion of God, shoulde be coupled vnto Christe throughe the merite of faythe. Boos also hade a soonne named Obeth, by Ruth a Moabite, the whiche also renouncyng her countreye, and her bodily affections, had rather to be planted emong the people of the Jewes, that is to say, suche as profesie the doctrine of Christe. Thus at that tyme figures and shadowes signified before, that no kynde of men shoulde be depriued and kept of from the felowshyp of the gospell. To that he bryng with hym faith and a desirous minde of true godlynes. Of Obed came Jesse, whiche was called also Isai, of whose name Esay prophecyng of Christe, maketh mencion saying: A rod shall cum out of the roote of Jesse. Of hym was borne Dauid derely beloued of God, bothe kynge and Prophete, buylder of the citie of Hierusalem, noble, through the slaughter of Goliad: and after that the wicked kyng Saul was deposed by the cōmaundemente of God, from a poore shepeherd he was consecrate kyng ouer the Israelites. Oute of whose stocke the whole nation of the Hebrues did loke that Christe shoulde cum, as it was prophecied before of men that wer inspired with God. And he also did represente by manywayes the figure of Christe, his offspring. Dauid begat Salomon that kyng of peace, and the buylder of the Lordes temple: and he begate hym of Bethsabee whome he loued: whome he coupled vnto hym in maryage, after that Urias her former housbande was slayne by his fraude & gyle: and that was doen not wythout great sinne yf a man consydre nothyng besydes the outwarde parte of the historie: but agayne not without significacion of thynges to cum, yf a man serche the misterie.

Salomon begat Roboham, Roboham begat Abia, Abia begat Asa, Asa begat Josaphat, Josaphat begat Joram, Joram begat Ozias, Ozias begat Joatham, Joatham begat Achas, Achas begat Ezechias, Ezechias begat Manasses, Manasses begat Amon, Amon begate Josias, Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren about the tyme of the captiuitie of Babylon. And after the captiuitie of Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, Salathiel begate Zorobabel, Zorobabel begat Abiud, Abiud begat Eliachi, Eliachim begat Azor, Azor begat Sadoc, Sadoc begat Achin, Achin begat Eliud, Eliud begat Eleazar, Eleazar begat Matthan, Matthan begat Jacob, Jacob begat Joseph the husoande of Marie, of whome was borne that Jesus which is called Christ. The texte.

Of Salomon was borne Roboham: and of Robohā Abias: of Abias came Asa: of Asa Josaphat, from whence came Joram, & of him Ozias: of Ozias was borne Joatham: of Joatham Achas: of Achas Ezechias, and of him Manasses: of Manasses was born Amon: of Amon Josias: of Josias, Jechonias and the other brothers of Jechonias, about the tyme whan king Nabugodonozor burned the temple of Hierusalem, and caryed the king and the people of the Hebrues, captiue into Babilon, which wer figures, signifiyng the tyranny of the deuill toward mankynde, and against libertie restored thorough the benefit of Christ. In this nere and naro we poynt betwene seruitude and libertie whan the people of God wer about to be restored to theyr religion and dwelling places, Jechonias begat Salathiel: Salathiel zorobabel: zorobabel Abiud: of Abiud came Eliachim: of Eliachim Azor: of Azor Sadoc: of him Achim: of Achim Eliud: of Eliud Eleazar: of Eleazar Matthan: of Matthā Jacob. And this Jacob was the father of Joseph, vnto whome was maried Mary the mother of Jesus, who was promised to be the sauiour of all men, whome the Hebrues call Messias, that is to saye Christ, or anoynted: because he onely beyng kyng ouer all, and high priest, with ỹ sacrifice of his owne bodye, hath pacified God the father beyng displeased and grieued with the sinnes of mankinde. And the tiranny of death vtterly put awaye, he hath opened the kingdome of heauen vnto all men. The cleane was marryed to the clean, the moste chaste to the chaste, of the same tribe and familie, that is of Dauid, accordyng to the order of Goddes lawe, leste any man should thinke that this ordre and geneologie of kinred were of litle profit concernyng the declaration of Christes stocke, wherof he came as touching his humanitie.

All the generations from Abraham to Dauid, are, xiiii, generations. From Dauid vnto the captiuitie of Babilon are foureteene generations. From the captiuitie of Babilon vnto Christ, are fowertene generations. The textis.

And if any man list to herken the tyme that Daniel described many yeares past by certaine orders and degres of weekes, he shall fynde the sayinges of ỹ Prophetes very agreable to ỹ thyng that is now cū to passe. The sūme of ỹ wholle geneologie resteth in three fowertenes. For if ye counte frō Abraham ỹ patriarche vnto Dauid ỹ author of ỹ florishing kingdōe, ye shall fynde, xiiii generations. Agayne yf ye counte from Dauid, vnto the decaye of the kyngedome, ỹ is vnto the exile into Babilon, ye shal finde. xiiii. generations. Agayne if ye counte from ỹ time vnto Christe, the beginner & the finisher of the newe euangelicall generatiou & newe kyngdome: ye shall fynde fowertene generatiōs. Hitherto we haue shewed you truly ỹ geneologie of Christ, to ỹ intent it may appeare to al men, ỹ this is he, whō ỹ true sayiges of ỹ Prophetes i tymes paste promised to ỹ worlde. And so many argumētes agre in one, that it cannot seme to be done by chaunce, and that withall it maye be euident, that he was verye man whiche came as touchyng the flesche of suche auncestoures as wer notablie knowen.

The texte. The byrth of Christ is on this wise. For whan his mother Mary was espoused vnto Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child, by the holy ghost.

But, although he were man borne of man, whiche came to redeme mankynde by his death: yet he was not borne after the common and vulgare sorte of them that be borne. For it was seemely, that he whiche came from heauen, whiche called vnto heauen, whiche taughte and promysed nothing but heauenlye thynges, finallye whiche after so many Prophetes and doctours was made ambassadour, to thintent that once and for altogether he should make al thynges newe, and cum forth into the worlde with a very bodye in dede, but yet after a newe maner, and that the true natiuitie of man should bee declared in suche forte, that it shoulde not be thought vnsemely for God: and Esaie prophecied this thing to cum to passe, that because men dyd in maner slepe at these common myracles of nature, by reason of custome, God shoulde shewe a newe myracle and that in the yearthe, to the intente it should be more euident to all mennes sight and vnderstanding. He is borne verye man and mortall, and yet the same very God and immortall. He is borne a man of man and yet of a virgin. He is borne of the stocke of Adā whiche was the first of mākynde, and yet without the spot of sinne. He is borne in matrimonye, but so, that the woorke of his conception was not of man, but of the holy goste: who by a wōderfull meane, fourmed and fashyoned the straunge and maruailous fruite, of ẏ substaunce of the vndefiled virgin, as in an heauenly temple consecrated to God. And he ordered this matter wyth suche a maruailous wysedome, that he couered and hyd it from the wicked, as a thyng incredible: and persuaded it vnto godly myndes with moste certain & sure argumentes, the whiche no eloquēce of man was vtterly able to proue and perswade. Wherefore whan the holy virgin eternally appoynted to this great misterie, to be the mother of Jesus, by the aduise of her parentes, whose heartes were ordered and directed by the power of God, beyng spoused to an honest man of her tribe, named Joseph, kepte company with him in house, she was founde greate with chylde before they came and coupled together as manne and wyfe, eyther because true honestie, is not hastie to the luste of pleasure, or because God dyd so ordre thys matter. For the maidens wombe waxyng daylye greater and greater, declared it vnto Joseph to be so, beyng her housbande, whiche both loued her well, and was not insencible in suche thynges. And she stedde not from the sighte of her housbande, as though she had in her conscience yelded her self culpable, neyther disclosed she the secret, whiche she had learned of the Angel: eyether because she was in despayre, ẏ the thyng might as yet bee beleued or perswaded, or because she referred this vnto god to be declared in tyme cōueniēt. Therfore the cōception was certayne & true declaryng it selfe by manifest & accustomed tokens, especially vnto Joseph, who by reason of conuersacion in householde, marked, more easily in his spouse, the habyte and fourme of her body. But this young thyng came not furthe by the imbracing of man, as other women by the common lawe of nature be wonte to conceyue, but by the holy ghoste: whiche by the angell Gabriell than messinger from heauen, enteryng into the moste holy temple of the virgines wombe (the inuisible power of the fatherlye godhed ſubſtacyng and ouerſhadoynge the whole body and mynde of the moſte holy virgin) without any hurt or detriment of chaſtitie, made her great with chylde.

¶But Joſeph her husband beyng a righteous man, would not put her to ſhame, but was mynded to departe from her ſecretly.

Furthermore Joſeph beeyng yet ignorant of ſo great a miſtery, whā he ſawe euident argumentes and tokens of conception in his wyfe, and knewe well that he had neuer to do with ỹ mayde, whereby ſhe myght becum great wyth chylde, and yet had founde the maners of her to be ſuche, that there coulde be no ſuſpicion of aduoutry in her, and beſydes that true honeſty is neyther ready to mislieue, nor haſty to reuenge: he began to caſt in his minde, by what meanes he myghte both ſaue for the good name, and the life of his wyfe: and alſo cōmit the matter vnto god, whereof he himſelfe coulde fynde no ende nor yſſue. By the reaſon of great familiaritie, he founde the maners of the mayde vtterly without blame. For that godly ſpirite, whiche dwelled wholy in her harte, dyd appere in her eyes, and in her countenaunce, and dyd declare it ſelfe euerye where in her goyng, in her geſture, and in her communication. He had eſpied in her a certayne heauenly thing & aboue the common rate of other mortall creatures. And yet he ſawe her great with chylde, & ſhe was awaye frō home certayne monethes, whyle ſhe went to ſee her coſyn Elizabeth. Furthermore he conſidered howe greate the weakenes of that age and kynde was in other maydens. What buſines would ſum other husbande haue made here, chiefely if loue had fyred vp gelowſy whiche is a very ſore diſeaſe of the mynde. But to proue this matter to be true, Joſeph was choſen out to be a witnes, leſte any man myght ſaye, the chylde of Marye was eyther another womans, or els vnlawfully gotten. He was a man well eſteemed of all menne, a manne of knowen and tried honeſtie and wiſedome, ſo that no man might ſuſpect him, eyther to be ſo notably naughtye that he woulde be his wyues bawde, or of ſo foolish patience, that he would nouryſh & bryng vp with the child her whom he knew to be an aduoutreſſe. There be none more cruell againſt their wyues that do amiſſe, than they which bee defiled with many aduoutryes theſelues. Joſeph himſelf being very innocent, was ſo far from al deſyre of vengeaunce that he dyd not ſo muche as once in woordes fynde faulte with her, leſte he ſhould diſcourage the virgins harte with any ſorowfulnes. He is troubled with himſelf with ſecrete cares of the mynde, and doth deuiſe a gentle kinde of diuorce, that he might be delyuered from her company whiche was wt chylde, in ſuche wiſe, that ſhe myght beare no blame, nor be in any ieopardie or perill.

And thus farre God hath ſuffered this innocent man to be troubled and diſtracte with doubtefull deuiſes. For this was expediente for the certentie of his fayth. But nowe it was tyme for him to be deliuered out of theſe griefes of his minde, being worthy doubtles to be made partaker of this miſtery, for the greate honour that he dyd to the virgyn thus conſecrated to God. And for the approued grauitie and ſobrenelle in ſuppreſſyng the cares of hys mynde, he was thought mete to conteyne and kepe truſtely this ſecret miſtery, whiche

was not yet to be published, because of the peruerse and frowarde suspicion of the Jewes. Beholde the angell Gabriel, (whiche signified vnto the virgin the maruelouse conception, apperyng with great lyght vnto her waking, because of her purenes whiche was moze than angelical, beyng wel acquaynted with suche kinde of visions,) presenteth himselfe vnto Joseph in his sleepe: & as he was musing in his sleepe of suche like matter, the messinger of the heauenlye oracle, spake vnto him in this wyse: Joseph the sonne of Dauid, what carnall suspicion troubleth thy mynde why art thou vexed why doest thou wauer in and out? oz why doest thou muse vpon diuozcement? oz why wilt thou be dimissed from her, whiche is coupled vnto the with so great loue, and also by the kinred both of tribe and familie? There is none other spouse wozthy for that virgin, and she is appointed to none other by the ozdynaunce of God, but to the. Thou must know, that Dauid is the authoz of thy stocke, vnto whom was promised in tymes past the thyng that nowe begynneth to be perfourmed. All that is done, is godly. Thou nedest not to feare that thy wyues wombe riling without thy doyng shal steyne thy matrimony with any spot of dishonestie. Thou doest suppose that she is greate with chylde, and doest suppose aright. But thou must not therfoze remoue her from thy companye and conuersacion, but rather take her and adioyne her vnto the, because thou seest her great, vnto whom by goddes ozdinaunce thou art geuē to be an husbāde, to the intent that hereafter thou maiest be a witnes of the fruitefull virginitie founde in thy wyfe, and that she in the meane tyme by that that she is maryed vnto the, may be in safetie agaynste the suspiciouse crueltie of the Jewes, vnto whome this misterie is not yet to bee opened, especially vnto them that be not yet wozthye, neither of capacitie to receiue it. This matter shalbe communicated and opened vnto the, to the intente thy wynes innocencie shall suffer none vnwozthye thyng. Foz this newe fruite, wherwith thou seest thy wyues wombe dayly to encreace, lyke as it is not of the, so it is of none other moztall man. The Angel bzought the message beyng as a goer betwene God and her, in makyng this godly coniunction, the father hath ouershadowed her: the holy ghoste hath prepared her wombe, the sonne of god hath replenished it.

All is newe foz that a newe chylde shall be bozne. It procedeth from heauen that thy wyfe shall bryng forth, who shalbe moze chaste also after that she hath bzought furth chylde. And she shall beare a sonne: not foz the, but foz the wozlde. In the meane season, thou shalt be called his father, and thou shalt be the keper of the mayde, rather than the housbande. When the chylde is bozne, thou as the father shalt geue it a name, not a name after thine owne fantasie, but that name that God, agreably vnto the thyng, dyd destinate and appoynt vnto hym, before the creacion of the wozlde. And thou shalte call his name Jesus, that is to say, sauoure, foz this is that same Messias desired & loked foz so many yeres, who accozdyng to the sayinges of the Prophetes, shall deliuer all his people from theyr synnes: not by the sacrifice of beastes, but thzough his owne bloude. And he wil not onely be content to geue freely this so great a benefyt, but whan we are purged frō the synnes of our fozmer lyfe, he will geue vs also very perfect, and eternall saluacion.

The texte. All this was doen that the thyng myght be fulfylled whiche was spoken of the Lord by the Prophet, saying thus: Beholde a mayde shalbe with chylde, and shall bring furth a sonne, and they shall call his name Emanuel, whiche is by interpretacion: God with vs.

And

And surely none of all this matter is brought to passe by chaunce or fortune, but by the decree and prouidence of god. For the thyng that we shewe to bee doen, the same in tymes past the lorde himselfe promised that he woulde do it, speakyng by the mouthe of his prophete Esay, and setting furth in fewe wordes bothe the straunge, newnes and ỹ greate fruite and profit, of this conception. Beholde, sayeth he, a virgin shall conceyue and bryng furthe. And this is the straungenes of it: for when was it euer hearde, a mayden to haue borne a child without blemish of hir virginitie. Nowe herken what is the fruite & profite: And his name shal be called (sayeth he) Emanuel, which soundeth in Hebrue, God with vs. For this only one shal reconcile his people vnto god, and where as he was offended and displeased, he shall make hym fauourable and merciful, and beyng conuersaunt emong men, he shall powre the moste aboundant goodnes of god in them, and at last they hauyng knowledge and experience of his effectuall doctrine, of the might of his miracles, of his present efficacy and strength, and of the vehemencie of his diuine spirite, showyng it selfe after a new sorte in them that shall beleue, they shall trie and not without a cause: God is with vs. If thou acknowledge the prophecy (as truely thou doest acknowledge) geue attendaunce and honour to this mystery, and kepe close this secrete priuitie.

Now when Joseph awoke out of slepe, he dyd as the Angell of the lorde had hym, and toke his wife vnto him, and knewe her not tyl she had brought furth hir first borne sonne, and called his name Jesus. The texte.

When the messinger of the hygh God had spoken these thynges, Joseph waking from slepe both merely and cherefully, dyd obey the oracle. He setteth aparte al his purpose of discorde, and taketh his wife more nerely vnto hym, ỹ no man might suspecte any discorde or disagrement to be betwene thẽ. And now he perceyuing ỹ she was wholly dedicated vnto god of heauen, doeth honoure in hir the godlye misstery, nor dareth not touche hir, whome god had taken onely to hymselfe. He is diligent in seruice, but he forbeareth to company with hir as hir husbande. In the meane season that heauenlye fruite wareth ripe in the holy woumbe of the virgin, whiche cummyng furthe at his time of his mother the virgin, toke not away the integritie of his parente, but did consecrate and sanctifye the same. Further Joseph (as he was commaunded of the angell) bearing the countenaunce of a father hitherto, gaue a name to the chylde, Jesus, when after the fashion of the countrey, he was circumcised the eyght daye.

The.ii. Chapter.

Whan Jeſus was borne at Bethleem a towne in Jewrye, in the tyme of Herode the kyng: beholde there came Magians from the Eaſte to Hieruſalem ſaying. Where is he whiche is borne the kyng of the Jewes? For we ſawe his ſtarre in the Eaſte, and are cum to worſhip him.

The texte.

Whan Jeſus was borne. &c.

HItherto ye ſee howe many thynges do accorde and agree with the godly ſayinges of the prophetes. He is borne of the ſame auncetours and of the ſame tribe and familie, that the prophecy promiſed he ſhould be borne. Alſo the ſuppu-tation and counte of the wekes, when Daniel prophecied that he ſhoulde cum, do the conſente and agree. Alſo the ſtrange Natiuitie dothe agree, in that that he was borne of a virgin without helpe of man. And the name doth agree. A Sauiour was promyſed, a Sauiour was loked for, & Jeſus ſignifieth a Sauiour. Further-more the name of the countrey, and of the towne, doth anſwere to the ſayth of the Prophetes, for he was borne not farre from Hieruſalem in a litle towne called Bethleem, and that in the countrey of Jewry, (for there is a towne in Galile alſo of this name, in the tribe of zabulon,) and he was borne in the time when Herode an Idumean by birthe and not a Jewe, obteyned the kyngdom ouer the Jewes, that no man neded for to doubte but that now was the time that Meſſias ſhould be borne, the whiche Jacob the Patriarche many yeres before prophecied ſhould cum to paſſe, ſaying: The ſcepter ſhall not be taken from Jude, nor a ruler from his thighe, till that he cum which ſhould be ſent. Truely this is he, the holyeſt of all, at whoſe entring all the anoynting of the Jewes ought to haue ceaſed, and geue place. Nowe ye ſhall vnderſtande by what wonderfull meanes he began by litle and litle to be knowe to the worlde. For he would be manifeſt & open vnto all, whiche came to ſaue all, that both he might be knowen vnto good men to their ſaluation, & that he myght take awaye from the wicked all errour of ignorance. He was promiſed chiefely to the Jewes, he was borne of them, he was firſte preached vnto the of the Angels, ſyngyng glory on high vnto God, and in the yerth peace emong men of good will. The ſhepherdes beyng taught by the ſeruice of the ſame Angels, & told of the childe þ was borne, offered the firſte fruites of fayth at the maunger where the babe was borne. By the ſecrete inſpiracion of the ſpirite he was knowen of Elizabeth, of Symeon & Anne the prophetiſſe. Firſte of all he ſhewed himſelf vnto pooze & humble perſones, whom he knewe to be moſt preſt & redy to receaue fayth. For the proude woulde not lightly receyue him beeyng hũble, nor the riche, him being pooze, nor the ſtoute him beyng meke: nor they that wer intangled with the deſyres of this worlde, woulde receyue him that was heauenly. And becauſe he was promiſed not to the Jewes only, but alſo to the Gentiles, yea to al the nacions of the worlde, he would euen at the very entery of his begynnyng, be knowen of them alſo, to thintent he might declare and ſhowe, that ſaluaciõ was alſo offered vnto them, and that he might ſtyre and prouoke the Jewes by their example, to cum to fayth and to beleue.

And he did not drawe all men by one meane to the knowledge of himſelfe, but he allured euerye mane by lytle and litle by ſuche thynges as they already knew knewe and were well acquainted with. The Jewes gaue fayth vnto the Prophetes, they were moued with signes and woonders, therefore he entiled the by the allurement of these thynges. The Persians and the Caldeans dyd attribute muche to the starres, as mende muche geuen to this kynde of Philosophie, throughe the knowledge whereof they had perswaded themselues, that there should be a certayne wonderfull restorer of the worlde. Therfore they had knowledge of the birthe of the childe, not by any Prophete or Angell, but by a certayne straunge and a woonderfull appearyng of a starre, truelye of that starre, the whiche the prophecie of Balaam dyd whewe before, to rise out of the house of Jacob. And now they had knowledge by the common fame that this king was chiefly promised vnto the nacion of the Jewes, and that he was not a meane kyng, and of the common sorte, but very notable, and without comparison: of whose power, of whose wisedome and of whose goodnes, far exceedyng the power, wisedome, and goodnes of man, the whole worlde should haue experience. Further (as the yll man when he hath occasiō is made worse, and a wyse man as he hath occasion is made wiser,) certayne Magians (for by this name the Persians called them that be notable in the science of Philosophie) to thintent they might come nere and learne more exactlye the thyng that the starre shewed vnto them as in a dreame, beyng nothing afearde at the great tourney, they come vnto Hierusalem, the star guydyng them the waye: either because there dwelled the Scribes and Phariseis whiche were better expert in the law and the Prophetes, or because they vnderstode that the king should be borne not farre from Hierusalem. For now knowyng certaynly that he was borne, only they inquired what place it was y was made happy with so noble a birthe. For they thoughte that the natiuitie of so great a prince could not be hid emong them, whiche loked for his byrthe so many hundred yeares, especially seing he should be borne not onely emong them, but also of them. But Christ is no where later or with more difficultie knowen, than in riche cities, and in princes courtes, and emong them that be arrogant in the profession of wisedome. But they, ignorauntof these thynges, inquire simplye and openly. Where is he (say they) whiche is lately borne the kyng of Jewes? For we knowe by a sure token that he is borne. For when we were farre hence in the Easte, we sawe his starre of a meruelous bryghtnesse and bewty. We sawe the starre and felte the inspiration. Therfore because we know that he is borne to the commoditie and profite of all men, though we be straungers, yet be we come hither to honour and worship him, and to geue the first fruites of honour due vnto the newe kyng knowing well that they shall be happy and blessed, that shall haue his power and might mercifull vnto them.

Beholde there came &c.

For we sawe his starre in the East. &c

¶ When Herode the kyng heard these thynges he was troubled: and all the citie of Hierusalem with him. And Calling together all bishops and Scribes of the people, asked them where Christ should be borne? And they sayed to hym. At Bethleem in Jewrye. For so it is written by the prophet: And thou Bethleem in the land of Juda, arte not the least emong the princes of Juda. For out of the, shall haue a captayne come, that shall gouerne my people Israell.

The texte.

What tyme they had further communication simply with all men, by and by the rumoure and tidynges was brought to Herode the kyng, whiche a good while had feared & trembled at the name of him that should be borne, fearyng lest he shoulde be set beside the kyngdome, whiche he beyng a straungier than held, if so great a prynce had been borne of the stocke of ꝑ Iewes. For Herode dreamed of nothing els, but of an earthly kingdome, litle knowing that Christ brought in another kynde of kyngdom, whiche shoulde perteyne vniuersallye to all men. Therfore after that he hearde that he was borne, whom he feared to be borne, and hearde it of the Magians, men both of learnyng, and (as concerning worldly port) not to be despised, truely he was troubled in his minde, and with him also the whole citie of Hierusalem: diuers men diuerslye, either fearyng or hopyng. But the wisedome of God so ordered the affections & endeuours of men, that both the simplicitie of the godly, and also the rage of the vngodly set forth the glory of Christ on euery syde, and made the thynges that were incredible the more to bee beleued. And this was the cause that the loode sterre of the waye, left the Magians for a tyme entering into Hierusalem: that theyr enquisitie might showe abrode the fame of the childe that was borne, and yet the place where the childe was borne, should be kept secret from the cruell king. Therfore king Herode blynded with enuy and anger, beyng wholly bent to destroye the childe that was borne, pretended a cloke of Godlines vnto his wicked cruelitie. He calleth vnto him all the chiefe of the order of ꝑ priestes, and the Scribes of the people of Iewry, whose speciall profession was this, that if there were any newe matter that dyd aryse, they should make answere out of the sayinges of the Prophetes, and theyr godly bookes, because they professed the exacte knowledge of them, to thintent that both the nūber and the authoritie should make the thyng of more credite. Therfore when these were called together, the king so muche the more wicked, because he counterfeited godlynes, demaunded of them in what place the oracles or sayinges of God, did promise that Christe should be borne. And they not yet ragyng with hatred agaynste Christe, whome they had not seen, answered simplye and without delaye: In Bethleem of Iuda. And lest theyr authoritie should haue but litle weyght, beholde they haue in a redines the prophecie of the Prophete Micheas: And thou Bethleem in the lande of Iuda, art not the least among the Princes of Iuda, for out of the shall spryng a ruler which shall rule my people of Israel.

And they said to him: At Bethlee in Iury. &c.

Than Herode priuily calling the Magians, diligently inquired of them what tyme the sterre appered. And sendyng them to Bethleem, sayde: Go, thither and searche diligently for the childe. And when ye haue founde him, bryng me worde agayne, that I maye come and worshyp him also.

And these thynges then answered the priestes and the Scribes, who afterwarde procured hym to be slayne, bryght and notable with miracles, & doing good vnto all men. The king sylste of all greatly moued with the saying of the Magians, was vtterly amased with this so rype and ready an answere, chiefely that the prophecie promised manifestlye a ruler of Bethleem whiche should rule the people, of whom he was borne. Wherfore the priestes & the Scribes beyng sent awaye, because he was in despeyre for to deceyue them, he calleth ꝑ Magians priuily vnto him, leste the Iewes might suspect any crafte or guile, and so opening the matter on eche syde as though he and they both purposed one thing, inquired of the diligently how long it was synce the sterre appered fyrst vnto them, by whose showing & pointing they had passed ouer so great a iourneye, a iourney, and came to Hierusalem: meaning and purposing this, the more certenly to vse and exercyse his crueltie to the distruction of that one new borne childe. The Magias (for godlines is not suspicious) kepe not wide nothyng from him, not thinking him to be so cruell & fierce that he would shewe crueltie vpon an infante yet scante borne, neither so furious that he would suppose to suppresse by mannes deuise, the thyng that was doen by goddes might: Whenthey had shewed the tyme, he of the other syde shewed the place whiche he had learned of the Scribes. And now he conceiuing a sure hope that the childe might be take by these two shewinges, geueth commaundement in his owne name to the Magians, which of themselues were willyng to go, that they should go to Bethleem, and serche out the childe with great diligence: and when they had found him, to returne ageines vnto Hierusalem, and geue him knowledge of all the matter: (he pretended a verye godly cause, and nothyng displeasaunte to the myndes of the Magians) that I also (sayd he) maye folowe you and worshyp hym. He himselfe woulde firste haue knowledge of the childe, to the intente he might destroye hym before that the people of the Jewes had cleare vnderstandyng that he was borne. God in the meane tyme made this prouision, that the Magians returned safely to preache Christe in their owne countreyes. Otherwyse yf this vngracious man had not bene deceyued of his hope, he would haue vsed extremely the Magians themselues, which brought him so vnlucky tydynges.

¶ When they had heard the king, they went forward: and loe, the starre which they saw in the East went before them, till it came and stode ouer the place where the childe was. And when they sawe the sterre, they were meruelously glad, and went into the house, and found the childe with Mary his mother, and fell downe and worshipped him, and opened their treasures and offered vnto him gyftes: gold incense, and myrre. And beyng warned of God in their sleape that they shoulde not go agayne to Herode, they turned into their owne countrey another waye. The terte.

The godly simple Magians, after that they had heard the king, made haste vnto Bethleem, whom the sterre which called them furth, for a time did forsake, to the intente, that the barbarous people should fyrst shew vnto the Jewes that Christ was borne, whome they lokyng for so many yeres, afterward did put to death. But when they had passed ouer this parte of Goddes ordinaunce, agayne appered that wonderfull starre, whiche serued their Godly purpose in suche wyse, that it shewed vnto the not onely Bethleem, but also the cotage it selfe, beyng very lowe, poore, and base, and therfore verye harde to fynde, yea and hangyng very nere ouer the chyldes head, it did shewe and pointe, as it were with a finger to the infant, whom they so feruently desyred. Therfore when the starre began to appeare agayne, it shooke of and put away all carefulnes frō their myndes: and nowe replenyshed with sure hope and ioye, and passyng lytle vpon mennes tellynges, but folowing the heauenly guyde, they espye the palace of the newe kyng: a filthy and a vile cotage or stable. Sincere Godlynes is nothyng troubled with these thynges. They enter in: they fynde the infante not differyng in apparaunce from others: they fynde the mother nothyng gaye or gorgious to loke to. All their stuffe shewed and testified pouertie and simplicitie. The Magians whiche did not worshyp nor fall downe before Herode, magnifying hymselfe in his seate with a And when they saw the starre.

kingly pompe, fall downe at the cradle of the crying babe: they adoure and honour grouelyng on the grounde, hym that could not yet ſpeake. And thei were not contente with this godlynes, but they take out of theyr bores, giftes purpoſely apoynted of thoſe thinges with increaſe of the whiche, the nacion of the Perſians was chiefly enriched, that is, golde, incenſe, & myrre: leſt that he which ſhortly after ſhould be compelled to flee, ſhould lacke in his vyage. And with theſe fyrſt fruites of fayth, the Gentiles that were farre of preuenting the Jewes, which were thought to be nerer vnto God, do conſtitute Chriſte to be theyr kyng: and of the other ſide do dedicate themſelues vnto hym, offeryng a new ſacrifice in three kyndes of thinges. And now as by a ryddell or a darke figure, they profeſſed that ineffable Trinitie of the father, and the ſonne, and the holy goſte, acknowlegyng alſo in one man mortalitie, prieſthode, and kingdome. For golde is for a kyng, incenſe for a prieſte, myrre for hym that ſhall dye. He was borne mortall, he did ſacrifice on the croſſe, he conquered ryſing fro death, he reygneth in heauen. The Jewes ſawe ſo many wonders, and when they knewe hym, they kylled hym. The Magians ſawe no notable thyng as cõcernyng theyr bodely iyes, and they reioyce that they had ſo fortunate a iourney. But what tyme they deuyſed with themſelues whether they ſhoulde returne vnto Herode to ſatiſfy his mynde and deſyre, they were admoniſhed in theyr ſlepe, by the diuine oracle, not to returne agayne to Herode. For that was neyther ſuertie vnto them, neither to the childe, neither expedient for ſuch a weightie matter, whiche in tyme and by parſell meale, ſhould be promulgated and publiſhed vnto the worlde. They ſpedely did obey thoracle, and returned into theyr countrey and ther waye, to be newe preachers of the newe kyng among theyr countrey men.

And beyng warned of god. &c

The texte. And when they were departed, behold the Aungell of the Lorde appered to Joſeph in his ſlepe, ſaying: Aryſe and take the chylde and his mother and flye into Egypte, and abyde there, tyll I bryng thee worde. For Herode wyll ſeke the chylde to deſtroye it. So when he awoke, he toke the chylde and his mother by nyght, and went alyde into Egipte, and was there vnto the death of Herode, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lorde by the prophete, ſaying: out of Egipte haue I called my ſonne.

Aryſe and take with thee ỹ child

Now the helth and ſafetie of the Magians was prouided for, and that the tranquillitie both of the mother and of the chylde might forthwith be ſeen for, and that alſo the vngodlines of Herode accordyng vnto his deſertes, might more and more be eraſperated & greued to the glory of Chriſte: theſame heauenlye meſſinger whiche ſente awaye the Magians, appered vnto Joſeph in his ſlepe, exhortyng hym that now beyng priuye vnto the miſtery, he would conueye awaye ſecretely the mother and the chylde into Egypt: whereby the diuine counſel intended this, that that region alſo beyng wholy geuen to the monſtreous worſhippyng of goddes, whiles it is become the hoſte and receyuer of him that is fled from his countrey: by the touchyng and hauing to do with him, it might be prepared and made redy to ſome entry and beginning of true godlines. Therfore the angel ſpake vnto Joſeph with theſe wordes: Aryſe, and take with thee the chylde and his mother, and flee priuily into Egypte, and tary there vntyll I returne vnto thee, and ſhewe thee the tyme to come hither agayne. For it will come to passe, that Herode shall seke by all meanes to destroye the chylde. Not that it is harde vnto God sodenly to extinct and kyll Herode, and to preserue the childe, yf it please him, but this ordre of the matter is more profitable for the confyrmacion and establyshment of faythe. For it is goddes wyll that the fury and the rage of the tyranne shall set forthe his glory. Joseph not tarying, toke the mother a mayde, and the chylde, and flying in the night season conueyed them into Egypte, there remaynyng tyll that Herode was deade. Truely this thyng chaunced not by the feate of man or by fortune, it was the will of God to prepare and to establyshe the kyngdome of his sone by these aduersities, by the whyche, worldly thynges be wont to be decayed and brought to naught, leste that the world should take vpon it any thyng in diuine matters. And that thou mayest the better beleue it, God who would this thyng to come to passe, prophecied many yeares past by the mouthe of his prophete Osee, saying: out of Egypt I called my sonne.

Than Herode whan he sawe that he was mocked of the Magians, he was greatly greued, and sent furth men of warre, and kylled and slewe all the chyldren that were in Bethleem, and in all the coastes therof, as many as were two yeare olde or vnder, accordyng to the tyme, whiche he had diligently knowen of the Magians. The texte.

In the meane season kyng Herode, after that he perceyued in dede that the Magians had deceyued hym, now rageing in anger, caste away the cloke of godlynes and braste out into manifest rage, and sendyng furth ministers of his madnes, kylled all thinfantes as many as were in Bethleem, and as many as were in the coastes and the compasse of the same towne, which were of the age of two yeare or yonger, folowyng the supputacion of the tyme, in the whiche the Magians tolde him, that they sawe fyrste the starre of the chylde. Crueltie enlarged the tyme and the place, compassing in al the young chyldren, supposing that by this wycked counsell, he had prouided surely ynough, that he should escape by no meanes, whom onely he desyred to be extincte and slayne. But in vayne trauayleth the crafte of meme againste the counsels of God. By these thynges was shewed a manifest example, what they should suffer of wycked princes, that would beleue the gospel, & what they should preuayle that by crueltie traueyled to extinguishe the faythe of the gospell, beyng yet tender and springing vp in the hartes of the godlye. To be killed for Christ, is to be saued. Herode had an occasion to repente, and not to rage, yf gredines to reygne and to beare rule had not blynded his mynde. But while he through his owne default turneth al thinges into matter of greater madnes, by his malicyousnes he did set foorth the iustice of god. For it is manifest to al men, that the innocent children were slayne, with great crueltie, and that he is worthy an horrible distruccion, wherewith afterwarde he was surely payde.

¶ Than was that fulfylled whiche was spoken by the Prophet Hieremy, where as he sayeth. A voyce was heard in Rhama: lamentacion, wepyng and greate mournyng: Rachell wepyng for her children, and would not be comforted because they were not. The texte.

But lest any manne might doubte, that this thing came to passe by the ordinaunce of God: harke to the prophecie of the Prophete Hiermy, seeyng through Goddes inspiracion this thyng, as though it had than been doen alreadye, whiche many yeres after should come to passe. A voyce (sayth he) was heard in Rhama, a voyce sore wepyng, sorowfull and lamentable. Rachel dyd bewayle hir children and would receyue no comforte becauſe they wer all ſlayne. Rachel bearing Beniamin, that is to ſaye, the ſonne of ſorowe, by and by vpon hir deliuery dyed, and was buryed not farre from Bethleem, wherof the Prophet dyd expreſſe in her perſone the ſorowe and waylyng of the mothers, lamentyng theyr children whiche Herode kylled.

The texte. But whan Herode was deade, beholde the Angell of the Lorde appered in a ſlepe to Joſeph in Egypt, ſaying: aryſe and take the chylde and his mother, and go into the lande of Iſrael, for they are deade whiche ſought the childes lyfe. And he aroſe and toke the childe and his mother, and came into the lande of Iſrael.

In the meane ſeaſon after that Herode was taken out of the worlde by punyſhment and vengeaunce moſte worthy for hym, the angell agayne which gaue counſell to flye awaye, apperyng to Joſeph in his ſlepe, moueth hym to leaue Egypte, and to bryng agayne the childe and his mother into the lande of Iſraell. For he ſayed that they were dead that woulde haue the chylde deſtroyed. And he redely obeying in all thynges the will of God, conueyed Mary beyng mayde and mother together with her ſwete babe, into the countrey of Iſraell. For it behoued him firſte to be knowen vnto them, vnto whome chiefely he was ſente, to thintente the people of harde beleefe, ſhould haue nothyng why they might make any reaſonable pretence of their vngodlynes, denying hym to be theyr Meſſias, but to be ſome other apoynted vnto the Gentiles.

The texte. But whan he heard that Archelaus reygned in Jewry in the rowme of his father Herode, he was afrayde to go thither, but beyng warned of God in a ſlepe, wente aſyde into the coaſtes of Galile, and wente and dwelte in a cite called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled whiche was ſpoken by the Prophetes: he ſhalbe called a Nazarite.

And as ſoone as Joſeph entred into the coaſtes of his countrey, and had knowledge there by a conſtante fame that Archelaus the ſonne of Herode that was deade, hauyng the one halfe of his fathers kyngdome reygned in Jewrye in his fathers place, fearyng leſte the ſonne had ſucceded hys father in cruelnes, lyke as he dyd in his kyngdome, durſte not go thither: and agayne beyng eſtablyſhed by the aunſwere of the Aungell, whereof nowe he wholy did depende, wente aparte into the coaſtes of Galile, whiche parte had than chaunced vnto Herode the Tetrarche brother to the king that was deade. Here the Aungell promiſed all thing to be ſafe, alſo the loue of the countrey was an inuitation, and the counſell of God wrought withall, that Chriſt by many occaſions ſhould be made common to many, whoſe cumming was to euery manne. Bethleem doeth glorye of his byrth, at Hieruſalem he was circumciſed and purified, Egypt was happy of ſo noble a geaſt, Nazareth maye well glory of his bryngyng vp. For this was the countrey of his mother, in the whiche ſhe conceyued her ſonne, a baſe and a poore byllage of Galile, a countrey not regarded but dyſpiſed of the Jewes, but it was a ſecrete corner, ſo muche more meete for the child againſt the crueltie of Archelaus. And this pointe herein god doth teache vs, that there is no nede of helpes, riches, power, partetaking, or nobilitie of birth, in thoſe thinges which are doen by the wyll of god. May theſe thinges annexed and put vnto, rather obscure and darken the glory of God among men. For that this thyng came not to passe by fortune it maye appere, in that the prophecie long before declared, that the Messias should be called a Nazarene, the whiche to be doen, euen the tytle doeth declare, which Pilate ignorant of the prophecie, commaunded to be set vpon the crosse. Iesus of Nazareth the kyng of Iewes. And at this daye they that professe Christ be therfore of many called Nazarenes. And the worde itself hath his mistery. Nazareth among the Hebrewes hath his name of a flowre, because that that godly and swete flowre the sanctifier of all virginitie was borne of a virgin, lyke as Bethleem signifieth vnto the Hebrewes the house of breade, out of the whiche came that heauenly breade, which whoso eateth, shall lyue euerlastingly. He therfore lyued certaine yeares as one vnknowen, with his mother and his foster father Ioseph, whose sonne he was thought of all menne, vntyll the tyme he came vnto mannes state, and then he shewed hymselfe vnto the worlde by doctryne, miracles, death, and resurrection, beyng knowen or notable in nothing, nor excellyng other menne, but that he went forwarde dayly and encreased in all kynde of honestie, and heauenlye giftes, that euery man loked for some great and notable thyng in the chylde. He was also in the meane season a diligent obseruer of the lawe, because he would geue none occasion vnto the euyll wyllers, of euyll saying or backebytyng, but satisfye all men in all thynges. He had rather for a tyme bydeppyng of the lawe, to bring the Iewes to more perfection, than by despysyng it, to alienate and withdraw theyr myndes cleane from hym. Onely once he shewed himselfe at Hierusalem, beyng twelue yeres of age, at what tyme he priuely leauyng his parentes, was founde in the temple sitting emong the doctours, hearing them, and by course questioning with them, insomuche that he was a wonder to them all. Euen than his godly disposicion had a desire vnto those thinges for whiche he was sent into the worlde: but as this was a praise of a redy mynde, so it was the example of moderacion and obedience to tarry the tyme prescribed of his father.

That it myghte bee fulfilled. &c

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

The.iii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ In those dayes came Iohn the Baptiste, preachyng in the wyldernes of Iewry, and saying: Repent ye of your former lyfe. For the kyngdome of heauen is at hande. For this is he, of whome the Prophete Esay spake, whiche saieth: The voyce of a crier in the wildernes: prepare the waye of the Lorde, and make his pathes strayght. And this Iohn had his garment of Camels heere, and a gyrdell of a skynne about his loynes. Further his meate was Locustes and wylde honye. Than went out to hym Hierusalem and all Iewrye, and all the countrey round about nere to Iordane, and were baptised of hym in Iordane, confessyng their synnes.

In those dayes came Iohn the Baptiste.

Owe is it worthy the hearyng, to know how our Lord Iesus Christ begā and entred with the matier, that he came for. He thrust not in sodēly to men vnawares, when they thought not vpon it. First he woulde that all mennes myndes shoulde be prepared, and made in a redines by his bisher and messenger Iohn the sonne of Zacharie, a man knowen and allowed of the Iewes themselues: to thentent that the thyng whiche euer should be beleued, might by lytle and lytle be stilled and put into the hartes of men. Therfore whan the tyme drewe nere, in the which it was decreed by the eternall ordeynaunce of God that the whole worlde shoulde be renewed through the doctrine of Christ: Iohn came furth, the sonne of a priest, and of a prophetisse, whiche Iohn was iudged afterward to be more than a Prophet by the testimonie of Christ, who also euen in his byrthe and beginning, had made men to conceyue great hope of hym. And he came not out of kinges courtes, or out of commō resortes of mē, but out of wildernes, where from his chyldhode he led an aungels lyfe, beyng contente vp a most simple & common diet, clad with a garmēt wouē of Camels heres, girded with a letheren girdell. His dyet was agreable vnto his apparell. For he lyued with course meate, and easy to be gotten, which he found in the wildernes, that is to saie, with locustes and wilde hony. Suche dyet, suche apparell, suche a place, was moste mete for a preacher of penaunce: whose wonderfull holynes so amased all mens myndes, that many supposed that he was Christ: chiefly when many were perswaded the other which was thought to be Messias, to haue perished in the number of the infantes of Bethleem. But he did not chalenge vnto him the glory of others, insomuche that he shewed Christ openly to al men, and sayed that he was not worthy to louse the latchet of his shooes. And yet he rushed not furth of his owne lwinge to preache: but whan he was admonished from heauen, that now was the tyme to playe the preacher. For he came not by chaunce to his office of preaching, or by the sendyng of man, but this was he, of whom Esaye prophecied so many yeres before, both that he should vtter openly in wyldernes the voyce of his preachyng, and also that he should be set before to prepare the hartes of men to receyue the doctrine of Christ, & because he perswading repentaunce of the former lyfe, should make them able to receyue the grace of Christe, who by baptisme shoulde par-

pardon all men of theyr sinnes. And that (the course of thynges beyng so deynly chaunged) they that were puffed vp before by the vayne iustice of Moyses lawe, and by the folysh wisedom of this worlde, should haue their combes cut, and be brought lowe. And finally that thei which before semed vyle, abiect, and vnprofitable because of theyr ignorawnce and hu-blenes, should nowe be made liuely and strong through the doctrine of the ghospell, and ryche with heauenly ryches: and those thynges whiche by the rigoure of the lawe semed hard and intricate, through faythe & grace of the gospel, should be made right and easy: and that this health and sal-nacion, should be opened and publyshed not onely to the Iewes, but also to all nacions of the worlde. All these thynges prophecied Esay, the most assured Prophet of the Lord. And this is the prophecie: A voyce of the cryer in deserte, prepare ye the waye of the lorde, make his pathes plaine and euen. Euery valey shall be fylled, and euery mountayne & hyll shalbe brought lowe. And the croked shalbe made straight, and the rough shalbe turned into plaine wayes, and all mankinde shall see the saluacion of God. And nowe a certeyne rumor and fame of the cumming of Christ, secretly spred abrode by many, and farther the conscience of theyr naughty lyues (for there was no tyme more sinfull and fylthy than that was) and finally a certaine secrete inspiracion dyd cause and brought to passe, that many of them were wery of theyr life, beyng very desyrous of him, of whom they had a certeyne sauour and vnderstandyng (simple though it wer:) who so-denly should renewe all kynde of men, and theyr synnes clerely abolyshed, bryng them vnto the kyngdō of righteousnesse. Wherfore whan they came flockyng vnto Iohn not onely out of the citie of Hierusalem, but also out of whole Iewry, chiefly out of those coūtreis that be nere vnto Iordane: Iohn himselfe cummeth and approcheth to satisfie theyr redy wyll & de-syre. And the thyng that he preached in wyldernes, the same he doth beate into the people, beyng now more thycke assembled and gathered together nere vnto the water of Iordane, that through repentaūce of theyr former lyfe, they might prepare themselues to Messias now at hande, and offer themselues to be healed of hym, who should bryng helthe and saluacion. He is in the waye of helth, that knowlegeth his disease, and hateth it. For now (sayeth he) the kyngdome of heauen, and that same moste fortunate & moste to be desyred kingdō is at hand: yea and that very nere, but there is no entrie into it, but to suche as be pure and cleane, from this worldly fil-thines. At this preaching, in figure & tokē that the filthynes of the mindes should shortely be clensed awaye, many wer baptised in the water of Ior-dane condemning theyr former lyfe, and acknowlegyng theyr offences o-penly. For so it was thought good vnto the wysedome of god, that Iohn which was the bound and border of Moses lawe, being nowe at an ende, and of the grace of the gospell nowe cumming on, with this sygne and to-ken, should go before, not to abolische synne, whiche thyng Christe proper-ly reserued vnto himselfe, but to prepare menne myndes, that they might be the more able to receyue the benefite that should furthwith ensue.

And were baptised of hym in Ior-dane, &c

The .iiii. text.

But whan he sawe many of ỹ pharisees & Saducees cummyng to his baptisme, he sayd vnto thē: O generatiō of vipers: who hath taught you to flee from the vengeaunce that is to come: Bring furth therfore the fruites that becummeth penaunce. And be not of this minde, to saye within your selues: we haue Abraham to our father. For I saye to you, that God is able able to bryng to passe, that of these stones, children shall ryse vp to Abraham. Euen nowe is the axe also put to the roote of the trees. Therfore euery tree, whiche bringeth not forthe good fruite, is hewen downe and cast into the fyer.

And this was doen in the. xv. yeare of Tiberius Cesar, beyng Emperour of Rome, and Poncius Pilate hauyng rule ouer Jewry vnder hym, & Herode the brother of hym that dyed, beyng Tetrarche of Galile, where Christ made his abode: and his brother Philip Tetrarche of Iturea, and the countrie Trachonitis: and Lisanya the Tetrarche of Abilines: and Anne, and Cayphas, beyng the chiefe of the priestes. And thus the realme of Jewry beyng deuyded vnto so many rulers, further came he whiche should call thynges to the power and rule of one pryncc. And fynally of all, a great nombre of people flockyng vnto him, whā John sawe a great multitude of Pharisees and Saduceis come to baptisme, and was not ignorant how this kynde of people was arrogāt, fierce, and standyng in theyr owne conceyte; for the notable obseruacion of Moyses lawe as it semed to themselues, & for the merites of the patriarches, of whome they craked and glozyed muche, for that they came of them. For they enuying and laying wayte to hynder the baptisme of John, beeyng in vse and reputacion, sent a craftye message vnto hym into Bethabaram, (for John at that time did baptise there) demaūdyng whether that he were Christ. If he had been, forthwith they would haue obiected, that Christe had been promised of the tribe of Juda, wheras it was manifest that John was of the tribe of Leuy. Further when John protested plainly that he was not Christ, no nor no Prophete, especially of those olde and aunciente Prophetes, whom they thought woulde returne agayne the worlde: they demaunde of hym further, howe he durst promyse remission of sinnes by baptysme, whiche properly was reserued vnto Christ. He answered, that there was muche difference betwene his baptisme, wherby he dyd stirre and moue mē to repentaunce and forthynkyng of the former lyfe: and the baptisme of Christ whiche forthwith should folow, wherby all sinnes should be forgeuen. Therfore whan he sawe many of this kynde of men come runnyng to baptisme with others: he biteth theyr conscience with bitter wordes wherby he might the rather moue them to penaunce. O crafty (q he) and malicious kynde of men, nay no menne, but rather the offspryng of vypers, the murderers of your auncetours, subtyll and yll mynded towarde all men: Seyng that hytherto ye haue haunted your selues emong men, vnder the tytle and name of fathers, whiche for their holines be muche praise worthy with them, and vnder the false pretence of righteousnes, haue reigned so negligently and idelly, as though Messias should neuer haue come, who tolde you, and put you in remembraunce, that the inuitable punishmente was at hande, vnles ye had runne with others to the remedy of penaunce. And how is it, that now ye desyre to be baptised as sinners, among whome ye appered as men of great holynes. Ye haue perceyued that your trust should be but vayne, vnles ye should escape from the vengeaunce of God now beyng at hande, by the refuge of penaunce. For neyther the merites of the fathers, nor the obseruacion of the law, deliuereth from euerlasting punyshment, but euery mannes owne purenes of lyfe maketh hym commendable vnto God. Seyng therfore ỹ ye repent your former lyfe, hereafter so bryng forth fruite w̄ godly affections and dedes, that they may testifie, that ye haue truely repented. Hytherto for the grossenes of menne, figures and shadowes

hath been sumwhat made of, that mens pronitie to naughtines, being compassed in with these stayes, might be refrayned from fallyng into farther inconuenience. Hitherto with enlarged Phylacteries, with long prayers, with washinges, with often mencioning of father Abraham the holy Patriarche, with buildyng of the prophetes shrynes, of whose posteritie ye desire to appere and to be counted, ye haue obteyned vnto you a certayne coloure and appearaunce of holynes emong men. Hereafter because that shadowes shal vanyshe away at the light of the gospel, ye must go truely and sincerely to worke, if ye will obteyne euerlastyng health. Neyther brent sacrifice, ne bloud of beastes, is requyred of you for your olde sinnes: onely if that there be penaunce without counterfaytyng, and god wyl frely pardon the offence: further Messias himselfe wyl teache you, yf he fynde you apte and willing to learne, what be the fruites of true penaunce. In the meane season set ye aside vaine trust, and flatter not your selues thus: we be holy, we come of the holy father Abraham. The iuste Abraham shall auayle nothyng them that come of him, vnlesse thei folow his faith and obedience, which wer so muche commended. The blessyng that is now at hand was promised vnto Abrahã: but cosinage and kynred be it neuer so nere, is not sufficiente to obteyne this blessyng. Whosoeuer distrustyng God doeth leane vnto the soucoures of this world, they be fallen from the kinred of Abraham. And hereafter the posteritie of Abrahã shall not be counted by the kynred of bloud, but by the sinceritie of feyth. And yet god shall not therfore lacke the posteritie of Abraham, to whom he may performe and paye the blessing that he promised, though ye swarue from the maners of Abraham. Nay be ye ascertayned, yf ye dispyse the grace offered vnto you, that god is of power, yea out of these stones to rayse vp chyldren farre better than ye bee, to his frende Abraham. And there is no cause why that ye should be the more negligente for that the cummyng of Messias hath been differred hytherto. For now the extreme parell cummeth vpon you, and now we all the matter is euen vpon the edge of the raser, eyther ye muste come vnto the kyngdome of heauen withe cleane and syncere myndes, or elles ye muste receyue eternall punishement. Saluacion is present at hande to them that wyll enbrace it, and to them that wyll refuse it, presente payne and vtter destruccion is readye at hande. For now the axe is sette to the tree, not to the boughes or to the body, but to the rootes, whiche shal vtterly cut it downe with a deadly wounde, that cannot be recouered, vnlesse it bryng furth fruite meete for god. There muste be no lingering, the daungier is so nere at hande. Haste muste be made, all impedimẽtes and lettes quite cut of. yet ye may chose which ye wyll take. The axe wyll not stryke yf ye wyll sodenly chaunge your mynde. In the naturall tree it is long and hard to chaunge the iuyce wherof the fruite taketh his taste. Here the matter is brought to passe by the onely wil. But as they that make haste are partakers of health, so they that linger are al partakers of peryll. None shall be deliuered hereafter neither by riches, neither by noble birthe, neyther by wisedome, as many hitherto haue supposed. Euery tree that beareth not fruite, and that no meane fruite but excellent good and worthye the kyngdome of heauen, is cut downe and caste into the fyer.

¶ I baptyse you with water vnto penaunce: but he that shall come after me is mightyer than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to beare. He shal baptise you with the holye ghoste and fyer, whose fanne is in his hande, and he wyl purge his floore, and gather his whete into the barne, but he wyl burne the chaffe with fyer that cannot be quenched. Hitherto

Hitherto god hath suffered and wynked at mens sluggishnesse. Errour and ignorance deserued some pardon. Mankynde was in a maner deasse at the law of nature. Small profit came by ꝑ law of Moses. The threatninges of the prophetes were set at naughte, theyr dreames and visions were not hearde. Now is he come after whome none other shalbe sent. Whose cũming leste it should be sodeine and vnwares, I (sayeth Iohn) am the messenger sẽt before. If ye be penitẽt, yf ye knowledge your diseases, yf ye receiue ꝑ Physicion with feruent desire, he wil be with you, profitable & healthfull to all: For I am not he, whom ye loke for. Truth it is I baptise you, but to this intent only, yᵗ ye being penitent may be meete to learne of him, & redy to receyue health whã he shal come. For forthwith he wil come, yea euẽ now he is cum, & as he is behinde me in ꝑ order of preaching, so he is aboue me & passeth me by all meanes, so ꝑ I whom ye thinke to be of sum estimaciõ, am not worthy to be his drudge & slaue, that is either to cary his shoes, or to leuse ꝑ latchet of his shoes. I am none other thig but a preacher, neuertheles both trusty & doing mine office, which god hath entoined me by ꝑ prophecy of his prophet. He is the autor, he drigeth wᵗ him al might & power both to forgeue sines, & to cõfer & geue al kinde of vertues. Let euery mã approche to his doctrine & to his baptisme, for he shal baptise you wᵗ effectual & liuely baptisme, not wᵗ water only but wᵗ ꝑ spirit & fier. With ꝑ spirit he shal alter & trãsforme you, wᵗ fier he shal pluck you vp vnto heauẽly thinges. He wil require nothing of you but sincere penaũce, wout coũterfeyting. He wil geue you his good thiges frely, if your yl thinges displease you hartily. Onely he willeth ꝑ there be no colouringes, which shall preuail nothing wᵗ him. There is nothing hid from him, he feareth no mã. The thing shalbe doen with seuere iudgemente, whiche can not be voided. Hereafter there shalbe no meane, either ye muste throughly be good, or throughly euil. He will passe nothing vpõ cloked' holines. He hath a fãne in his hãd, he seeth also ꝑ inward secretes of the hartes. Before him either ye must be chaffe or fyne wheate. But in the meane season whether of both ye wyl be, he hath partly put in your choyce. It shalbe but payne for the chaffe mingled among the clean corne to lurke and to be hidde. He shall vtterly cleanse his flooze, and lay vp the wheat in his granard, but he shall burne the chaffe with fier that neuer shall be quenched. Wherfore either ye must endeuour with all your herte to the high pycke of vertue, that ye maye worthely be receiued into the euerlastyng kyngdome; or elles yf ye despise the goodnes of God nowe offered vnto you, ye must nedes thereby be extremely naught, because ye refuse so great helthe offered to you, without your seking, and through your owne merite (forasmuche as ye reiect the heauenly reward,) ye must be appointed to the euerlasting fier of hell. The mindes of the common sorte were so moued with the sayinges of this holy man, that a great numbre whiche hitherto had put theyr trust in the obseruacion of the lawe, came vnto hym tremblyng for feare, and sayd: If thus stãdeth the case, what than thinke ye best for vs to do, but he dyd not exhort them to the ceremonies of the lawe, and the constitucions of men, as the pharisees wer wont to do, but vnto the workes of charitie, saying: The first way to pacifie God is the free well doyng vnto your neighbour. He that hath plenty of garmentes, let him geue vnto the naked: he that hath plenty of meates, let hym geue vnto the hungry. There came vnto hym also the Publicanes, the

which kynde of mē ꝑ Iewes abhorre, because cōmēly either for to please the princes, or to satisfy their auarice they are wōt to poul ꝑ people. They demaūde of him fearfully, what he thinketh best for thē to do. And he doth not reiect them from baptisme, & agayne he appoynteth them not to geue their goodes, who now of long time were wont violently to take away other mennes: but to thintent they might come nere by some degre vnto the perfect doctrine of Christ, he cōmaundeth them that they should exact nothing of the people, beside that, that was prescribed of the prince. Finally there came also souldiours, a violent & a diffamed kynde of people. Neyther put he them away from him, declaring manifestlye vnto the Iewes by that dede, that Christ would despise no kinde of men. They confesse nothing: for, to professe a souldiours is of it selfe to confesse the puddle & sinke of all mischiefe. They demaunde also what counsayle he would geue thē. And he teacheth them beyng so rude, rather what ought to be auoyded & shunned, that they might be lesse yll, then what was to be doen, whereby they might be perfectly good. Abuse not (ꝙ he) your weapōs which ought not to be stirred but agaynst your enemies, at the commaundement of the captayn: beate no man nor stryke no man violentlye, syth you be hyred for this purpose, that through your diligence the countrey should be quiet. Nor abuse not you familiaritie with great rulers, falsly blamyng and accusyng any man, wherby any filthy lucre or gayne might come vnto you. Finally be content with your wages, and defraude and spoile no man. For princes geue wages to thintente no man by necessitie shoulde be forced to take other mennes goodes. So he through easye preceptes accordyng to euery mannes capacitie, made al men in a redines for Christ to come, forseyng Christ in spirite, whom he had not yet seen with his bodily yes.

¶ Then cummeth Iesus from Galile to Iordane vnto Iohn, to be baptised of him. But Iohn forbade him, saying: I haue nede to be baptised of the: and cummest thou to me? Iesus answered and sayed vnto hym: Let it be so nowe. For thus it becummeth vs to fulfyll all righteousnesse. Then he suffred hym. The text.

Therfore the rumour & fame beyng now spred abrode, and dayly more & more encreasing, & that by diuers meanes, by the angels, by the sheperdes by the Magyans, by the cruel carefulnes of Herode, by the prophecye of zachary, by Simeon, by Anne, by litle and litle secretely: but most of al by Johns open & manifeste setting furth beeyng ioyned with a great auctoritie, in so muche that yll mē also being now amased with feare did frame themselfe to the cumming of Christ, thus declared & set furth. For truly it was time for him to cū furth into the sight of the world to declare himself not by ꝑ testimonies of others, but by his own vertues, ꝑ it might appere what mayer of one & how mighty he was, & that he might obscure & darken al men, by whose testimonie he was hereto fore set forth & commended. Therfore Iesus left Galile where he had been in secrete hitherto, & nowe goig about his fathers busines he leueth his mothers cūtrey Nazareth, & maketh spede vnto Iordan, where he should haue a great cōpany gathered together out of diuers coastes of Iewry, to be a witnes of the thinges ꝑ should be there spokē & doen. He who alone was defiled wt no spot of sin, yea who alone should take away ꝑ sinnes of the world, through ꝑ middes of the sinful cōpanies, euen lyke a sinner goeth vnto Iohn, & requireth to Then cummeth Iesus, be baptised of hym, who alone doth sãctifie euery baptisme. John not yet assecteyned ꝑ Jesus was that high Messias, the sonne of god, but yet ob-But John forbad him seruing & marking a meruaylouse semelynes and honesty apperyng in his iyes, in all his cõtenaunce, & in his maner of going, he doth excuse his dis-ordered office & ministracion, honsing his dignitie and worthines as yet with no certayne commendacion. Onely he saieth, it were mete & conuenĩt that I which am far beneth & vnder thy vertues, should require baptisme of the: And how cummeth it to passe that thou doest humble & addase thy selfe so lowe, to require baptisme of me, sith no man is more pure & cleane frõ al sinne than thou. These thynges wer thus doen by the ordinaunce of god, to thintẽt both that we should haue an exãple of the merueilous mo-destie & humilitie of Christ, and also that it might appere vnto all men by the testimonie of John, that Christ being without cõscience of any sinne or euil, required to be baptised. For he was baptised like as he was circũci-sed, as he was purified in the tẽple w̃ his mother, as he was scourged, & as he was crucified. He suffered all these thinges for vs, & not for himself.

Wherfore whẽ John declaring constãtly his own vnworthines, & setting Jesus an- forth ꝑ worthines of Christ, did refuse ꝑ office of a baptiser, Christ by no swereth. &c sinister suspicion did steine his own innocencie, which it behoued to be knowen & beleued of al men. Euery parte (ꝙ he) of this busines hath his time.
Be thou content in the meane season that I be baptised of the, thynke not vnduly for the, if thou baptise him, who (as thou saiest) is better thẽ thou.
Certainly it shal becũ me, which desireth to bring al vnto me, to fulfill all iustice. For he that teacheth al, & teacheth perfectiõ, must see that no likely-hode or apparaũce of vnrighteousnes (be it neuer so litle) be founde in his life and maners. I must become all thinges to al men, that I maye winne and bring al vnto my father. When John heard these wordes, he descended into Jordane with Christ, and baptised him. And here appereth an holsome example of humilitie in Christe, and of obedience in John; but the thyng, & the effecte is of contrary order. For baptisme doth consecrate vs, but he through the holy touchyng with his body did consecrate baptisme.

The texte, And Jesus when he was baptised, came straight waye out of the water: and lo, heauen was open vnto hym: And he sawe the spirite of God descendyng lyke a doue, and lyghting vpon hym. And lo, there came a voyce from heauen saying: This is my beloued sonne in whome I am well pleased.

And to thintent he might declare vnto vs what we ought to do after bap-tisme, & what felicitie was geuen vs by baptisme, Jesus going out of the water therefully & spedely as though he had cast of a great burdẽ of sines (teaching vs that we should not tarry nor linger in washinges, nor oftẽtymes returne vnto thẽ by sinning again, but to make haste to the dueties of a spiritual life, the sines of the former life once cast of, and buried in bap-tisme:) kneled downe vpon his knees, and lifted his hãdes vnto heauẽ, beseching his father ꝑ he would vouchesafe that this matter of sauing mankinde, which he toke in hande, might be happy and fortunate to all men, & that he would commend and set forth his sonne vnto the world with his fatherly auctoritie: and lest Johns auctoritie should be of smal estimaciõ, albeit this for ꝑ time was profitable for the grosse & rude people. And behold the father did manyfestly auctorise his sõne in the presence of suche a multitude of people. The heauens opened and shewed further a certayne wonderful light. John also sawe the heauenly spirite in the visible lykenes of a doue, to descende out of heauen, and to sytte vpon his holy head: from thence came the voyce of the father soundyng to all mennes eares, saying: this is my derely beloued sonne, the delight of my mynde, in whō I haue a singuler pleasure, heare hym the expoūder of my mynde, and the distributer of my goodnes towardes you. And because at that time Jesus was vnknowen to the multitude which had a great opinion of John, lest the voyce, whiche cōming frō aboue poynted no man certaynely to theyr vnderstandyng, should be thoughte to perteine vnto John: therefore there was added a visible signe of the heauēly doue, whiche sitting vpon Christes head, showed nowe playnely vnto al mē (as a man would poynte with his fynger) to whome that voyce dyd perteine. With the whiche signe also John hymselfe was playnely and certaynly monished, that he was the sonne of God. And after he did openly testifye that this sygne and token was promysed him before of the father, to the intente that in suche a multitude of people, he might certeynlye knowe him that afterwarde should baptyse all men in the spirite and fyer. And with these ceremonyes the Lorde Jesus was declared and consecrated oure mayster, whose diuinitie, and heauenly doctrine who so wyll followe, he shall be truly blessed.

And lo heauen was open vnto him

The iiii. Chapter.

Then was Jesus led of the spirite into wyldernes, to be tempted of the deuyll. And whan he had fasted forty dayes and forty nyghtes, he was at the last an hungred. And whā the temptoure came to hym, he sayd: If thou be the sonne of God, commaunde that these stones be made bread: But he answered and sayde: It is written: Mā shal not lyue by bread onely, but by euery worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

The texte.

AND yet these entries & beginninges made, he lepeth not furth byandby to preache, although auctoritie wer giuē him from heauen, but sodenly he withdraweth himselfe frō the sight of the people into wildernes, because ỳ departure frō the cōpany, of people both increaseth auctoritie, and prouoketh a desyre. Now ỳ spirite (that is the prouoker of the yll) doeth specyally assaulte them which leauyng the desyres of the worlde, do fall into meditacion of the pure and heauenly life. Therfore Jesus secretly teachyng bs the same, goeth into wyldernes. And this he doeth not by ỳ motion or instigacion of any mā, but moued of his own spirite. For he that is baptised, hath now cast of carnall affections, & being made spiritual by regeneracion, is led and moued by the cōsell of the holy ghost: he remembreth not Bethlem, he retourneth not to Nazareth, he goeth not again to his mother or to his foster father, but by the behemēcy and rauishing of ỳ spirite, he goeth into deserte, folowyng the exaūple of the olde prophetes. Solytarines doeth quicken & make lusty the mynde of a Christian souldier, & some tyme it is more sure for a man to commit himselfe to the wylde beastes, than to men. Baptisme taketh away all synnes of the former lyfe, but for all that, no man is sure from the assaultes of Sathan whiche lyueth sluggyshly. But yet the naughty desyres endeuour to spryng agayne, chiefely in them that be rude and young, and lately entered and cummen to Christ. And that frowarde Satan enuying as muche mannes saluacion, as Christe is desyroule of the same, styreth and prouoketh him with meruelouse engins and sleyghtes, to fall awaye and departe: insomuche that he possesseth and vseth him that is relapsed with more tyranny, then he dyd possesse and vse hym whan he had him before. Agaynste these perilles and daungers Christe sheweth chiefelye three remedies, often and harty prayers, forsakyng of company, auoyding of excesse, and kepyng abstinence, not without diligent meditacion of holye scriptures:

for otherwyse there maye be daunger in yole solytarines. And because the deuill goeth about to deceyue them chiefly, whiche do endeuour to attaine vnto this streyght and Angelicall lyfe: Christe hymselfe lyke a good captayne en-counteryng with him, hath taught his champions, by what meanes that malicious and crafty olde fyre maye be ouercome, & howe lytle he can do against them that be sober and vigilant, and with all their harte do leane to the godly scriptures. And this also the Lorde Jesus in the meane tyme wente about, that this misterie mighte, by litle and litle appere vnto the worlde after suche sorte, that Sathan (whiche desyred for none other purpose to knowe certayuly whether he were the sonne of God, whome he heard that the father did honour with this tytle and name, but to letre the redempcion of mankynde) might bee holden in suche doubte, that he might not certeynlye knowe this to be Messias, before he sawe his owne tyranny vtterly subuerted & ouerthrow-en. Christ also purteth vs in remembraunce of this, that no manne is mete to preache the gospell, but he that hath tryed hymselfe, and is fyrme and strong agaynst worldly desyres, agaynst excesse and her companions, that is, bodily lust, ambicion, auarice, and suche lyke diseases of the minde, wherewith oure enemye beateth and shaketh the myndes of the symple and weake as it were with most violent engyns of warre. Therefore whan Christ had fasted forty dayes, folowyng Hely, and Moyses, whiche thyng was in suche wyse aboue mannes power, that yet the Jewes beleued, that it was doen of men: at laste to shewe a manifeste token of mannes imbecillitie in himselfe, he made no cou-sayle, but shewed playne signes that he felte the tedtousnes of hunger. For after the common nature of mannes bodye, the lacke of humour greued and payned the stomacke.

And whā he had fasted forty dayes

Whiche thyng whan the crafty temptoure perceyued, thynkyng hym to be nothyng but a man, (although in dede a notable and a wonderfull man,) he casteth his hooke bayted with ỹ enticement of vayne glory, for therwith chiefly they be taken, whiche seme to endeuour to the hyest perfection. If thou bee the sonne of God (q̄ he) what nedest thou to be greued and pined for hunger?
Commaund rather these stones to be turned into bread for thy behouse. Thou canste perfourme thy desyre with a becke. Ye maie well know of olde that this is the same tyer in wayte, or teptour whiche did entice that firste Adam into the snares of death, by the bayte or trayne of gluttony: But Christ the latter Adam beyng in spirite heauenly, so auoided with his wordes, this craftie and deceitfull waiter, that neither he refused the name of the sonne of God, nor yet hymselfe to be ouercome with hunger after the common sorte of men. And because he woulde not take vpon hym to aunswere of his owne authoritie: he layeth vnto hym a manifest scripture, saying: It is written in the Deuteronomi: Man shall not lyue onely of bread, but of euery worde, that commeth out of the mouthe of God.

The temptour came.

But he aun-swered.

The texte. Than the deuyll taketh hym into the holy citie, and setteth hym vpon a Pynnacle of the temple, and sayeth vnto hym: if thou be the sonne of god, caste thy selfe downe backewarde.

For

For it is wrytten: he shall geue his aungels charge ouer the, and with theyr handes they shall holde the vp, leste at any tyme thou dashe thy foote agaynst a stone. And Jesus saide to hym: Agayne it is wrytten: Thou shalte not tempte the Lorde thy God.

Than Satan beeyng eluded and shaken of with this doubtful answere, doeth euen of his partye also abuse the woordes of scripture to doo hurte and myschiefe: And as he decepued the fyrste parente of mankinde with the baite of ambition, promptyng hym eguall honor and immortalitie wyth God: by a lyke guyle assaylyng the lorde, he toke hym vp into the holy citie, and whan he had sette hym vpon the hygh Pinnacle of the temple, he exhorted him if he were the very sonne of God, that he woulde fal doune hedlong, alleagyng that he could take no harme by so dooyng. For God hymselfe had thus promysed in the mistical psalme. He wil geue his aungels cõmaundement and charge ouer the, and they shal take the in theyr hãdes, lest thou shouldest hurt thy foote at any stone. But the lord Jesus layeng scripture against hym again, geueth a secrete understandyng, howe peruersly he wrested the sence of the holy scripture. Contrarye wyse (sayth he) it is wryten in the Deuteronomie: Thou shalt not tempt the lorde thy God. For scripture doeth exhorte vs to this poynct, that whan aduersitye and daunger is at hande, we should haue a good hope trustyng vpõ the helpe of god, and not put our selues rashely in daunger. The miracles of godlye men be not tryed by seekyng of perylles, but by auoydyng daungers whan they chaunce. For it is no godly poynct for to caste a man headlong into the ryuer, that by deliuering of hym thou mayest seme to be a man of great feates, but it is a godly thing to plucke out him ỹ by chaunce is fallẽ in. Nor miracles be not to be donne for euery thing, nor emongest all men. Jesus would not once vouchsafe to speake before Herode, who was desirouse of suche thynges, muche lesse would he showe any signe or token of hys godly power, at the requeste of Satan. So often as charitie inspired with the holy goost, desyreth it, so often as the glory of God requireth it, the power of God is to be shewed abrode.

Agayne, the deuill taketh him vp into a very high hil, & showeth him al the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them, & sayeth vnto hym: all these wil I geue the yf thou wylte fall downe and worshyp me. Than sayeth Jesus vnto hym: auoyd Satan. For it is writen; Thou shalt worshyp the lorde thy God, and hym only serue. Than the deuill leaueth hym. And beholde the aungels came and ministred vnto hym. The texte.

Nowe to thintente that Christe myght teache suche as be his not to geue themselues to a careles securitie, after they hadde the hygher hande once or twyse, but alwayes to kepe watche, and to be in a readinesse for all assaultes of Sathan, he suffred also the thirde tyme, thinportune assatling of the temptour who as he decepued the fyrst Adam, with the bayte of curiositie and anarice, promising hym the knowlege of good and euyll, so in likewyse he setteth vpon the latter Adam, and toke him from the pinacle of the temple, and ledde hym into a verye hygh hyll, where he might loke at libertye farre and wyde, and see all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and the woondrefull glorye and pompe of eche of them. Surely he knewe by experience of other menne, that there was nothing so wicked and sinful, but they woulde take it in hande to obtayne rule and dominion. But albeit God is ỹ authour & maker of al thynges in heauen and yearth, & the deuil hath no title nor interest in them, vnlesse he hath violated & defiled any thing: yet as though he were lorde ouer all, he is not affrayed thus to speake vnto Christe: I will geue the al these kyngdomes, if thou wylte fall downe and honour me. O blynde impietie. The vngracious spirite promyseth an other mans gooddes, and alketh honour due vnto god onely. But Jesus who hitherto tooke the reproche of hymselfe wel in worth, cannot beare his fathers ignominye. Hence Sathan (sayd he:) Thy counsel is farre from the doctryne of holy scripture. The scripture sayeth: Thou shalte adoure the lorde thy God and him onely shalt thou serue. After that the deuil had tempted hym by these and lyke other wayes, finding hym alwayes to be valiaunte and an inuincible champion, agaynst all inuencions & ingins, he left hym at last, beyng dispoynted of his purpose two wayes. Fyrst in that he perceyued that Christ was inuincible. Secondly, where as he came to searche, whether he was the sonne of God or no, he departed more vncertayne then he came. Thys conflicte was made in the syght of God and hys Aungelles, the whiche the lorde Jesus would not haue vnknowen vnto his, to thyntent we myght knowe with what a cumberous enemy we should haue to doe, & with what wages and rewardes, he would stirre and prouoke ignoraunt & vnware myndes. And this did he not that we should dispayre, but that we should diligētly watch & take good hede. Christe ouercame hym to shewe vnto vs that he was vincible & taught vs how we also myght geat victorye of hym. Finally he ouercame for vs and not for hymselfe, purposyng by vs to ouercome thesame, if we deserue to haue hym present with vs. And by vs he shall heare Christe saye: Hence Sathan, and he shall feare the seruauntes of him of whome he was ouercumme. Further like as in worldly warre, thinges haue theyr course and ordre, and labours bee eased with rest, & sorofull thynges with pleasaunt, and after sore conflictes triumphes be made: so in the warre of Christe sore stormes of tentacion be mitigated with myrthe and toykulnes. After the cumberouse frowardenes of the filthye spirite, by and by the Aungelles be ready to serue & wait vpon Christ the conquerour. Surelye this exaumple teacheth vs, howe in aduersitie we shoulde staye oure mynde with hope of better, trustyng vpon ỹ goodnesse of god, whiche so doethe ordre al thinges, that nowe & than he doeth exercise and proue the valiauntnes of his warriers, with trouble and aduersitie: and agayne wyth sum solace dothe prouoke them to reioysyng and thankes geuyng, whiche is the tryumphe of Christen men. And in afflictions thorow the helpe of God, they be inuincible: and if any prosperitie come vnto them, thei ascribe it wholly to the goodnes and bountifulnes of god. And so it cummeth to passe that neyther they be discouraged in aduersitie, nor insolente or proude in prosperitie.

Thā sayeth Jesus vnto hym.

Then the deuil learneth hym.

And behold the angelles came,

The texte. And whan Jesus had heard that John was taken, he wente aparte into Galile: and left Nazareth: and wente and dwelte in Capernaum, which is a cytie vpon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Neptalim: that it myght be fulfilled whiche was spoken by Esai the prophete, saiyng. The lande of Zabulon and Neptalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordayne, Galile of the Gentyles. The people whiche sate in darkenes, and in the shadow of deathe, sawe great lyght, and to them whiche sate in the region, and shadowe of deathe, the lyght is sprong vp.

Therfore whan Christe began to be of auctorite and estimacion, chiefly after that John had in maner deliuered hym and commended hym to his disciples poynctyng with his fynger, and saiyng: Beholde the lambe of god, behold him that taketh awaye the synnes of the worlde: and after that he hadde ouercum the deuil and was fully inspired with the holy gest, nothing nowe remayned, but to take a tyme and place, to begynne and enter his preachyng.

John

John had wrought no miracle, being content only to preache penaūce. Chriſt kepte ſilence ſo long as he preached, leſte any diſcorde myght ryſe emong theyr diſcyples, beyng yet rude, carnal, & geuen to worldly affections. Surely it is ỹ parte of a good teacher, to conforme hymſelfe to the capacitie of hys audience. But than and not afore entrethe he the office of teachynge, whan the rumoure was blowen abrode, that John was caſte into priſon of Herode the Tetrarche, enioying the rewarde that they be wont to haue, which dare boldly ſpeake before the Princes of this world, & wil rather ſpeake holſum thinges than pleaſaunt. For he tolde the Tetrarche of his vnlawfull mariage, becauſe he maryed his brother Philippes wyfe. And ſumtyme euill princes deſyre to haue in houſholde with them, men of greate and notable honeſtie, not that they woulde obeye the counſell of ſuche, but becauſe they may ſeme to the ignoraunte people, to dooe by theyr aduiſe and counſell, whatſoeuer they dooe after theyr owne luſt & appetite. And in other thynges of lyght importaunce, he had oftentymes ben obedient to his monicions, but here, where he oughte moſte to haue been obedient, at the foule requeſt of a filthie daunſing damſel, and at the deſyre of her filthye mother, he had caſt that very good man into pryſon, and afterward with the cruell deathe of ſuche a greate man, he defyled the feaſte of hys Natiuitie, and the ies of hys nobles. Jeſus therfore whan he hearde of this, not becauſe he was in feare hymſelfe, but to teache his not wyllingly to put themſelues in daunger, yf they maye conueniently auoyde it, but whan it cummeth, ſtoutely to neglecte it, leauyng Nazareth wente a ſyde into Galile of the Gentyles, (in the whiche Salomon gaue vnto Hira kyng of the Tyrians .xx.v. cytyes,) and went into the citie of Capernaum, therfore taken to be borderyng vpon the ſea, becauſe it is nere the ſtandyng water of Genezareth, in the coaſtes of zabulon and Neptalim, whiche were two trybes, and in the fyrſte is Galile, in the ſeconde is that, that is called Galile of the Gentiles: whereby Chriſte than as by a figure, in manier thretned, that whan the Jewes dyd refuſe and perſecute the preachers of the goſpell, than the goſpel ſhould be brought vnto the Gentyles. And leſte that a man myght thynke that thys thyng was doen by chaunce, Eſai beyng inſpyred with the ſpirite of prophecie, prophecied long before that it ſhould ſo be, ſaiyng: in the land of zabulon and the land of Neptalim, whiche borderyth vpon the ſea, in Galile of the Gentyles, the people whiche heretofore dwelled in darkenes, hath ſeen a great and a merueyloule light, and vnto them which heretofore were in a thicke darkeneſſe ſuche as is in hel, lyghte is ſprong vp. Therfore, as cōcernyng the tyme, where John left, there Chriſt beginneth. For at the clere lyght of the goſpel, the ſhadowes of Moyſes lawe do vaniſhe awaye. And thys is ſpoken directely concernyng the miſticall figures of the lawe, and to expreſſe the trueth of the goſpell. But as touchyng the place, at the fyrſt affliccion and trouble of the holy preacher, the name of the Gentyles is goen vnto, and the lyghte whiche the Jewes blynded wyth filthye deſyres, coulde not ſuffer, as as it were in a picture declared to paſſe ouer from them to the Gentyles, beeyng very Idolaters: but after ſuche ſorte that the coaſtes of neyther is forſaken, ſo that of both ſydes the trumpe of the voyce of the goſpell maye be hearde. And yet furthermore that countrey was no vnprofitable auditorie, by reaſon of the commoditie of haueng, and certen notable cities ſtandyng vpon the ſea ſyde, which by the reaſon of the courſe of marchaundiſe, wer frequented and vſed alſo of farre cummers, out of other ſtraunge countreyes.

Whan Jeſus hadde hearde .&c.

He went & parte into Galile.

That it myght bee fulfilled .&c.

The texte. From that tyme Jesus began to preache and sayd: Repent, for the kyngdome of heauen is at hande.

Nowe let vs heare the begynnyng of his preachyng. As he succeded after Johan, so he begynneth with his doctrine, whiche was wel knowen, and familiar, lest he shoulde haue driuen them awaye from him, which had John nowe in so greate veneracyon. And he fedeth the weake with mylke, that afterwarde he might bryng foorth strong meate to them whan they wer of more strength. And truely this is thorder of teachers, which desire rather to profite the heares, than to set foorth, and magnifie themselues before other. The preachyng of Christe is not onely more milde and gentle than John his preaching (for he maketh no mencion neither of axe, nor of fanne, nor of fyer that neuer shalbe quenched) but also more to be commended, for many benefites bestowed vpon all men indyfferently. Jesus therfore folowyng John, crieth and sayeth: Chaūge your myndes and repent your former lyfe. For nowe the kyngdome of heauen is at hand, the whiche as it shall be shut vnto no man, so it shall be open onely vnto them that be pure & cleane, and seke after heauenly thynges, and cut away al worldly desyres. What can be more playne and symple than this Philosophy? Lette euery man be displeased and grieued with his owne naughtynes, and heauenly thynges be redy for hym at hand, and that frely.

The texte. As Jesus walked by the sea of Galile, he sawe two brethren, Simon whiche was called Peter, and Andrewe his brother, castyng a nette into the sea, (for they wer fyshers) and he sayeth vnto them: Folowe me, and I wyl make you fyshers of men: And they straightway lefte theyr nettes, and folowed hym.

And nowe the tyme was come, that Jesus shoulde gather together a companie of disciples, whiche should be familiar witnesses of all his doynges and saiynges, and by whome he myghte teache other afterwarde. But marke what manier of men he chose, not Philosophers, not Pharisees, not Priestes, not ryche men. For he would not that the glorie of the gospel should be defiled with any worldlye ayde and succour. But as he walked neere the water whiche (as we sayed before) was in the border of bothe Galilees, he espied twoo brothers germaine, the name of the one was Symon, and he was called also Peter, the other was named Andrewe, whose fathers name was John. These before that tyme heard John, through whose prouocacion they began to folowe Jesus. But they lefte them both, and turned agayn to theyr faculte and crafte, whereby they were wont to get theyr lyuyng. And nowe they were busilye occupied castyng theyr nettes into the sea. It was a sygne of good lucke. Fyrste youth more ready to receyue the newe doctryne: further the agreablenes of brethren one readye to helpe another: Agayn a craft and faculte in whiche was no hurt: wherby they got a poore liuyng out of the common mere or poole: Fynally the fishyng put them in remembraunce of the newe fishyng, whiche serued not to take fishes with nettes to feade the belly, but wyth the nette of the gospell to catche men drowned wyth worldly cares, vnto desyre of the heauenly lyfe. Therfore as they were occupied about necessaries for theyr bodye, Christ speaketh vnto them, saiyng: Folowe me, & ye shall learne a science of me, better than euer ye learned of your father. And yet ye shall not leaue your science, but ye shall chaunge it to a better fashyon. For I will make you hereafter fyshers of men, that ye whiche wayte for fishes to destroye them, maye catche and take men into euerlasting saluacion. They knewe the voyce of hym, whome before they did beleue, and whose gentilnes they hadde proued before wyth familiar communicacion. But through the strength and efficacie of his woyce, he brought to passe, that foorthwith at the word of the caller, thei forgat not only theyr fishe, but also theyr nettes as they were they lefte them there, and not byddyng theyr acquayntaunce once fare well they folowed Jesus euen as he walked. They sawe no greate thyng yet in Jesus, notwithstandyng they stayed not nor lingered nothyng, nor were not careful howe they should gette theyr liuing hereafter, but ioyned themselues to hym, callyng them with hys onelye woorde, and folowed him, and would not awaite to dye therfore.

The texte. And whan he was gone foorth from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the sonne of Zebede, and John hys brother, in the shyp with theyr father Zebede, mending theyr nettes and he called them, and they furthwyth lefte the shyp and their father, and folowed hym.

Jesus going a litell further espyed other two brothers, James and John the sonnes of zebedeus: he was the better pleased for that the brethren and the father agreed so well together. They wer al in one bote, endeuorying one thing euen the same that Peter and Andrewe were aboute. But these went not spedely forwarde with theyr businesse, because theyr nettes were broken with longe wearying, whiche was a token of pouertye: Jesus therfore passing by as they were earnestly occupyed in mendyng of theyr nettes, spake vnto them, and bad them folowe hym. The young men of a playne confidence and truste, without any tarying, furthwith leauyng theyr nettes, and forgetting theyr father also, bend themselues to folowe Jesus: so the preachyng of John hadde framed and fashioned them, so deserued the towardenesse and redinesse of theyr partes, so had the inspiracion of Christe drawen them, who wholly breathed and sauoured of the heauenly spirite, wherwith he was replenished.

The texte And Jesus wente about al Galile, teachyng in theyr Synagoges, and preachyng the gdospel of ꝑ kyngdome, and healyng al maner of sickenes, and al maner of diseases emong the people. And his fame spred abrode throughoute all Syria. And they brought vnto hym all sycke people that were taken with diuerse diseases and gryppynges, and them that were possessed wyth deuils, and those that were lunatike, and those that had the palsey: and he healed them, and there folowed hym great multitudes of people from Galile, and from Decapolis, and Jerusalem, and Jewry, and frō the countreyes that lye beyond Jordane.

Ye see the entrynges of our Philosophye, whereby it was thoughte good vnto god to saue all mankynde. Ye se the pompe and ruffling of the euangelycall schole. Poore Jesus beyng accompanyed with these few fishers, vnlerned, of the common sorte, and poore men, walked ouer all Galile, not nowe in corners nor in deserte, but in theyr Synagoges, where was moste resorte: preachyng and shewyng that the kyngdome of heauen whiche had heretofore been promysed was nowe at hande: not puttyng them in feare of helle fyer lyke as John dyd, but inuiting and allurynge all men with free benefites. For where soeuer he wente he healed all mennes diseases indifferently, and freely, refusing no man, were he neuer so vile, and of the meanest sorte, and with lyke easynesse he chased away all diseases, were they neuer so incurable: to thintent bothe to set furth and declare by miracles, his power to be greater than mannes, and also through free benefites, to purchase and winne the loue of all menne. For hym we gladly truste and beleue, whome we loue.

Yea euen the wylde beastes also bee wunne with benefites. Surelye there is no benefite more godly, than freelye to restore health. By these meanes it came to passe, that the fame of hym spredde abrode throughout all Syria, and manye brought from a farre theyr diseased folke incumbred with diuerse dyscases eases and griefes, and beſydes theſe ſuche as were poſſeſſed with diuels, and Lunatikes, and diſeaſed with the palſey, whome Phiſitcyons commonly eyther take not vpon them to cure, or els be wonte to cure in vayne, becauſe the diſeaſe paſſeth theyr arte and cunnyng. But Jeſus healed all eaſily, not with mannes medicynes, but wyth heauenly vertue, wherwyth he was hable alſo to rayſe the dead. It was a ſmall matter to hym to take awaye the diſeaſes of the bodyes, whiche take awaye the diſeaſes of the myndes. It was a ſmalle matter for hym to prolong the lyfe of the bodye, whiche came to geue euerlaſtyng lyfe vnto all men. There came therfore from thys parte and that parte, a wonderfull numbre of people, not onely from Galile of the Gentiles where he was, but alſo out of the other Galile, whiche was beyonde the water, and oute of the countrey that was called Decapolis, becauſe of the tenne cities whiche were in it, alſo out of Hieruſalem and the reſidewe of Jewry, and out of the places whyche were beyonde Jordane. All men as they haue nede runne to a benefit. Many be moued wyth noueltyes. Sum came for malice with a mynde to wayte diſpleaſure. Jeſus (for his parte) draweth all vnto hym, but fewe be mete for the heauenly Philoſophye, for the teachyng and deliuery of the which, he chiefly came into the worlde. The people is moued wyth care of the bodye, and is deſyrouſe and deliteth muche in newe ſyghtes and galinges. But he deliteth not greatlye in ſuche ſightes, that ſeketh after thinges of perfection, and thynges farre a fondre, from the affeccions of the common ſorte.

And thoſe that had the palſey. &c.

And there folowed hym. &c.

The. v. Chapter.

And whan he ſawe the multitude, he went vp into a mountayne, and whan he was ſette, hys diſcyples came to hym. And after that he had opened his mouthe, he taught them, ſaiyng: bleſſed are the poore in ſpirite, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen.

The texte.

Therefore, Jeſus ſeeyng the people flockyng aboute hym more and more, and that of all ſortes, he conueyeth himſelf from the lowe place whither euery man myghte haue acceſſe, and goeth vp vnto the hyll, and beganne nowe to preache and teache the heauenly Philoſophy, declaryng by the highnes of the place, that he woulde ſhewe further and teache no common nor meane thyng, but all hygh and heauenly thynges, folowyng alſo the exaumple of Moyſes, who publyſhyng the lawe vnto the people (as we reade) wente vp to the hill. His diſciples whome he had choſen ſpecially vnto hym, folowed hym goyng vp, in ſuche wyſe yet that the common people were not lefte to folowe hym, if any had ſo muche deſyre and ſtrength. Therfore Jeſus whan he came to the top of the hyll, ſate downe, not as beyng weary, but purpoſyng to teache ſerious and weyghtye thynges, whiche required a diligent hearer. Whan his diſciples perceyued that, they compaſſed hym nere aboute that none of his holye doctryne ſhoulde eſcape them. Jeſus therfore entryng and begynnyng hys godlye and holſome Philoſophye, not oute of a towre or tabernacle with a golden ſeate (ſuche an one as Jarcas the greate Philoſopher of India had beyng garniſſhed with precious ſtones,) not out of the proude pulpet of the Philoſophers, not out of the arrogant chayre of the Phariſeis, but oute of a ſeate of graſſe he ſaſteth his yes, not vpon the commen people, but vpon his diſciples: and o-

penyng hys holye mouthe, he began to shewe furthe the lessons of the gospell, whiche hytherto had not been heard, and whiche bee farre from the opinion of all men, that appeared to the very wyse vnto the worlde. All men promyse blessednes, whyche take vpon them to be teachers of wysdome. All menne of what estate or condition soeuer they bee, desyre blessednes. But muche controuersye hath been emong Philosophers, and muche errour in the lyfe of men, in what thynges the felicitie of man doth consiste: And forasmuche as this is the marke and foundacion of all wisdome, Jesus kyrste doth open and set furthe straunge sentences, but yet very true. And therefore throughe myracles he obtayned credite to bee geuen to hys sayyng, thoughe it semed sumwhat incredible, soe that they that founde his power to bee effectual in healyng of diseases of the bodye, myght truste also his doctryne to bee true, whereby he healed the diseases of the mynde. Yet fewe disciples there were, that did both heare and enbrace this blessednes: Let all men heare, for he spake to all, and all shall bee made blessed and happy. Of false opinions spryng all synnes in lyuyng. Therfore aboue all thinges, we muste endeuour to plucke them awaye. And for because that fierceneslle and arrogancie is the moste daungerouse disease of the mynde, whiche suffereth not manne to receiue the true doctryne (for yt is the verye fountayne from whence in maner spryng all deadly offences) Jesus kyrste of all healeth this, saying: Blessed bee the poore in spirite, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen: whose eares coulde haue abiden so incredyble a saying, but after so manye testimonies of John, of the father, and of the doue, and finally vnlesse hys authoritye had been set furth, and credite obteyned through eyedem signes and myracles. Wayne be made vile, abiecte, and humble, and be brought in discourage of themselues, by the reason of poouertye, of basenes of byrthe, of lowenesse of estate, or of aduersitye. Truely these bee nere to the blessednes of the ghospell, yf they folowe with theyr harte, as they be called by their state. But hys humilitie of spiritte, resteth in the inwarde affection, not in outwarde thynges. But howe shal he haue a kyngdome, whiche taketh nothyng vpon hym, whiche geueth place to all, whereby is offended with hymselfe, which thrusteth out no man, whiche hurteth no man? For he semeth more nye the seruitude of an alle, than a kyngdome. This kinde of men is trode vnder the feete euerye where, is hurte and harmed withoute reuelle, liueth lyke an abiecte withoute regarde, poore and comfortles. But it is true, that truely sayeth: To these only appertayneth the kyngdome, but it is the kyngdome of heauen. Thinkest thou that these fierce and violente men doe reigne? They bee verye slaues, they bee vnder manye tyrannes, they bee vexed with auarice, angre, hatred, desyre of vengeaūce, with feare, with hope. They vnnethes lyue, muche lesse they reygne. But he that is free from all these veracions and troubles, and betaketh hymselfe to innocencie and cleane lyfe, puttyng hys truste in God, lookyng for the rewarde of the worlde to cumme, and is verye quiete and regardeth not the thynges of thys worlde, but seketh after heauenlye thynges: hath not he a goodlye kyngdome, farre passyng the kyngdomes of worldlye thynges? Neyther filthye lust, nor auarice, nor hatred, nor anger, nor other worldlye infections of the mynde, reigne ouer hym: And armed with fayth so often as the case requireth he geueth commaundement to diseases, and they flee awaye: he geueth commaundement vnto the waters, and they be styl: he geueth commaundemente to deuils,

Blessed are the poore in spirite

and they departe. So mighty is the kyngdome of the mynde, whiche dystrustyng hymselfe, putteth hys truste in God, and distrustyng the succoure of man, doethe depende wholye of heauen. It is not the dyademe, it is not the oyntmente, it is not the garde, that maketh a kyngdome: But the other afore mencioned be the thynges that make a kyng in dede, and bryng hym finally to the heauenly and euerlastyng kyngdome, where there shall be no disobedience nor rebellion. A worldly kyngdome is gotten by violence, and defended by fiercenesse. This kyngdome is gotten by modesty and soberneſſe, and defended and established, by humilitie and mekenes. The worlde iudgeth none meete to gouerne a kyngdome, but suche as bee of notable spirite, and of a stoute courage. But God auaunceth vnto hys kyngdome those chiefly, whiche do moste humble themselues.

The texte. Blessed be they that are meke: for they shall receyue the inherytaunce of the yearthe.

Iesus goeth on and ioyneth vnto this an other sentence as harde to be beleued and taken. Blessed be the meke, for they shall inherite the yearth. And who bee the meke: they that vse no man violently nor extremely, and whan they haue any harme, they be redy to forgeue the iniuryes done vnto them: they also that had rather lese theyr thyng, than to contende or striue for it, and that regarde more concorde and quietnes of mynde, than large possessions, and suche as rather desyre quiet pouerty, than troublesome ryches. But this kynde of men is oftentymes set beside and put from theyr goodes and landes, and he goeth not aboute gredely to get other mennes, but is rather dryuen out from the possessions of hys auncetry. But this is a newe fashyon of enlargyng of possessions, for meknesse obteyneth more of them that geue wyllyngly and of theyr owne accord, than violence and rauenye can purchase or obtaine by right or wrong. The stout and fierce lord doth not possesse the thing that he hath. But the meke and quiete man will rather geue place and leaue hys goodes, than contende or striue for them, therfore is his possession in all places whereas he fyndethe louers of the euangelicall mekenesse. Stoutnes and stifnes is hated of all men, softenes and mekenes is fauoured of the heathen. Finally, yf the meke lese hys possession, it is no losse vnto hym, but greate gayne and lucre. He hath loste hys lande, but he reserueth quietnes of mynde. He hath wel solde hys lande, whiche hath auoyded trouble and busines, and hath kept styll quietnesse of mynde. Finally, if the meke man be put from all that he hath, the more sure and certayne is he to possesse the lande of heauen, out of the whych he can not be thrust. The worlde lamenteth and counteth them vnhappie which be banysshed and dryuen out of theyr countreye, but Christe pronounceth them blessed, whiche be banisshed for the gospell sake. For they be made denisens in heauen. They bee dryuen out of the libertie of one cytie, and caste out of theyr house, and chased oute of one countrey, but the gospell man hath the whole worlde for his countrey. And the godly men be sure of heauen for theyr houls and theyr countreye.

The texte. Blessed be they that mourne, for they shall receyue comforte.

Lacke of chyldren or parentes, and suche other as we entierly loue, commonly is counted a miserable thing, insomuche that sum lacking theyr desyres, and depryued of theyr affections, as of wife, parentes, brothers, or chyldren, do sumtyme kyll themselues for sorow. And for that cause frendes vse to repayre vnto them in suche cases, to comforte them, and to mitigate the bitternesse of theyr sorow. But blessed be they that mourne for the loue of the gospel, which be plucked awaye from theyr wyfe, chyldren, and other that they loue, and see them

th at they loue moste derely, to be punished and slayne for the righteousnes of the gospell, whyche also despyse the pleasures of thys worlde, and leade theyr lyfe in wepyng, watchyng, and fastyng. With these, the heauenly spirite wyll be present, he wyll be theyr secrete comforter. He wyll recompence theyr temporall waylyng with inestimable hartes ioye, and afterwarde they shal bee translated vnto euerlastyng blisse. Mannes comforte entending to heale the grefe, doeth oftentymes make it worse. But the spirite whyche is the true comforter doeth so inwardly refreshe the mynde beyng cleare in conscience and assertayned of the rewardes of the lyfe to cum, that in moste grieuous afflictions of theyr bodyes, they thynke not themselues infortunate, but rather do most ioyfully reioyce.

The texte

¶ Blessed be they whyche hunger and thyrste for ryghteousnes, for they shall be satisfied.

Famyn and hungar by the opinion of al men, is a grieuouse thing, and pouertie is a thyng with all endeuour to be auoyded, and euery man calleth them fortunate and blessed, whiche do notably encrease and establishe theyr housholde and substaunce, and haue abundantly to vse and occuppe, but it is not the ryches whorded and heaped vp that satisfieth the mynde: and the felicitye of man is not to be measured by the fulnes of the belly. What be they than in thys kynde of men whom Christe calleth blessed? Blessed (sayeth he) bee they whyche hungar and thyrst for ryghteousnes. The thynges wherewith the body is nourysshed and fostred vp, oughte to bee despyzed but lyghtly: and yet the common sorte are sore turmoiled with care for them. And sumtime the saturitie doeth more vexe them that bee full, than the hunger dyd trouble them before: and by and by after theyr satyrtie, thurste and hunger retourne agayne, and must oftentymes be repayred. And these thynges be present euerye where to the godly, whyche be contente wyth a litle, and desyre nothyng but necessaries, and are without al carefulnes, for he doeth geue and mynistre vnto them, whych feedeth the sparowes, and doeth clothe the lilies. Happy be they whiche doe take thys hunger and thurst from bodilye and casuall thynges, and applie them to the desyre of the euangelicall iustice, where there is euermore that is to be hungred for, euermore that is to be thyrsted for, and blessed saciete and fulnes. And this is one parte of blessednes, to hunger for that breade of the mynde, wherof whoso eateth he shal liue euerlastingly, and to thurst for that liuely water wherof who so drynketh, in hym there shall spring a well of water, runnyng into euerlastyng lyfe.

Blessed be the mercifull, for they shall obteyne mercy.

The texte

The common sorte supposeth them to be blessed, whiche be holpen wyth other mennes aide, and they reioyce and be glad rather for their sakes that bee holpen, than for their cause that helpe them. But I saye: Blessed be the mercifull, who for brotherly charitie counte an other mannes miserye to bee theyr owne, and bee sorye for theyr neyghbours hurte, and doe bewayle theyr miseries: and of theyr owne do feede the nedy, and clothe the naked, and monyshe them that do amysse, and teache the ignorannt, and pardon the offender: Fynallye what soeuer gifte or good thyng they haue, they bestowe it in helpyng and refreshyng others. And they leese nothyng by it, but they gayne. For the mercifull and beneficiall man towarde his neyghboure, shall fynde God much more mercifull and beneficial toward hym. Thou hast pardoned thy neyghbour of cum lyght offence, God wil forgeue thee all thy synnes. Thou haste passed ouer for thy neyghboures lacke a temporall vengeaunce, God wyll pardon thee of euerlastyng punishement. Thou haste socoured wyth thy substaunce thy brothers powertye, God wyll restore vnto the hys heauenlye ryches. They that be mercifull ware poore as concernyng worldlye thynges, for by geuyng theyr ryches are consumed, but towardes God they were ryche: for theyr worldly store beeyng consumed, theyr harte is heaped vp wyth the fruites of godlines.

The texte. Blessed are the cleane of harte, for they shal se God.

The common sorte of men calleth them vnhappye that bee blynde, and because they haue lost theyr moste pleasaunte sense, they saye they bee no longer alyue, but that they abyde in darknes lyke deade men. So pleasaunte a thyng it semeth to the eyes to loke vpon the lyght, and to beholde this goodlye spectacle and lyght of the worlde. That if it bee a thyng so muche to bee wished for to beholde the sunne with the bodilye eyes, how muche more pleasaunt and blessed a thyng is it with the eyes of the mynde to beholde God, the maker of the sunne, and of all thynges? Ye see howe they leape for ioye, whiche haue beene blynde, and howe do see the sunne agayne, Yea they reioyce as muche as if they had ben delyuered from hell. Howe muche more blessed be they, whq beyng delyuered from blindnes of the mynde, haue the gift inwardly to see god, the fountayne of all ioye, whom to beholde, is high felicitie and blessednes. As the sunne is to cleare eyes, so is God to pure and cleane myndes. As matter of sunne or a webbes to the eyes, so are sinnes to the myndes. Therfore blessed be they whose harte is pure and cleane from all filthines. For they shal haue thys gyfte, which is more to be desyred than al the pleasures of the worlde. They shall see God.

The texte Blessed be the peace makers, for they shall be called the children of God.

The common sorte of men iudgeth them to be blessed whiche hauyng theyr thynges in good frame and staye, liue in rest and quietnes, and haue no manne to trouble them. But after my iudgemente they bee blessed, whiche after they haue repressed in theyr hartes the rebellion and rage of all theyr fowle lustes, doo studye and endeuour to make vnitie and concorde emong suche as bee at strife and variaunce, not only not reuenging themselues yf they haue bene hurt of any bodye, but wyllyngelye on theyr owne accorde, prouokyng them to peace, of whome they haue suffered harme. And if any manne thynke it harde to be doen, let hym harken to the reward. For they shall be called the sonnes of God. What is more honorable than this title and prayse? Yea what is more blessed? For it is no vayne title. He that is the sonne, must nedes be heyre also. But the vnlykenes of manners declareth and argueth a bastarde. The folowyng of the fathers steppes, declareth a true and a naturall chylde. God forgeuyng freely all offences, doeth stirre and prouoke all men whiche hath offended hym, to peace and amitie. He offereth hymselfe of his owne accorde verye mercifull to all them that do repent. He wyll not knowe/dge them for hys children, which do not shewe themselfe to theyr brethren, as he hath shewed hymselfe towardes all. Carnall fathers disherit theyr sonnes, whiche do not agree with theyr other brethren. So the heauenly father wil addicate and put away the hatters of peace and causers of discorde, from themheritaunce of heauen.

The texte. Blessed be they that suffer persecution for ryghteoulnes sake, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen. Blessed be ye when men reuyle you, and persecute you, and speake falsly all maner of euyll against you for my sake. Reioyce and be glad, for great is your rewarde in heauen, for so persecuted they the prophetes whiche were before you.

And

And because there be many frowarde & euill men in euery place, peace cannot be stayed & continue wyth al men, but thorow sufferaunce of displeasures: It is the part of godly men vttetly to endeuour themselues, that thei be at debate with no man, whether thei be good or euill, they muste moue and allure all men with curtesy, gentilnes and pleasures, as much as maie be, to loue and concord. But the frowardnes of sum is such that they wil bee stirred to anger, yea with benefites also, and wyll vexe them that do for them, and vse cruelnes agaynst well doers, and count them for theyr enemyes that studye to preserue them. If in this case peace cannot be conserued on bothe sydes, yet blessed be they for the loue they beare to peace: whom the wicked do persecute for none other cause, but for the ryghteousnes of the gospell, which hurteth none but profiteth all. For the selfe same thing prouoketh theyr hatred, for the whiche they ought to loue, and they do iniury for none other thyng, but for the whiche they ought to render thankes. Sum wil saye: who can loue such that for gentylnes requiteth hatred and ill doynges? It is a greate matter I graunte, but greate is the reward. And what reward? not a crowne of oke or laurell, not a bullocke or a goate, or any suche lyke rewarde, whiche worldly men vse to geue to suche as get the ouerhand in worldly maistryes, but the kyngdome of heauen. Ye that be my disciples muste make you ready to this wrastling, if ye esteme the rewardes of the gospell. Ye muste not feare the cruelnes of men. No man can hurte you, yf ye sticke stifly to ryghteousnes. The persecution of euil men shall not take away your innocencye, but shal increase your blessednes. In the middle stormes of aduersytye ye shall be blessed, yea whan they curse you moste bitterlye, whan they shall assaulte you with all kyndes of hurtes, whan they shall rebuke you, and laye al offences agaynste you, and that falsely, not for your faulte, but for the hatred and displeasure of me, for the summe of the crymes whiche they shall laye agaynst you shal be, that ye are christen men. Do not lament and bewaile your selues, as men thrust out, afflicted and beaten, misreported and infamed, but rather for these thynges be glad and reioyce, because the more fierce they be in persecutyng, so muche the more your rewarde is increased and heaped vp for you in heauen of the heauenly father. God will tourne theyr naughtynes to your good. He wyll tourne the hurtes that they do, to your aduauntage and luere. He will tourne the ignominie, rebuke, and reproche that they put you to, into euerlastyng and true glory. He wyll tourne the crymes and reproche whiche they falsly laye to youre charges, into the titles and commendacions of true godlynes. He wil tourne theyr maledictions and curses, into prayse and reioysyng on your parties, not onely before God (and yet to please him it is sufficiently enough, yea though ye displease the whole world) but also before men. For, to be rebuked of wicked men for godlynes, is a prayse: to be tormented of the haters of God, is to be crowned. Glory is not to be sought for of men, but glory of her owne accorde customably doeth folowe true vertue. Will ye haue a redy and playne exaumple? At this date what is more holy and honourable than the memorye of the Prophetes? And yet whan they were alyue, did the wicked sorte persecute them with all kyndes of afflictions, as they shall dooe you.

They persecuted the Prophetes for the hatred of my father: ye shall bee persecuted for the hatred that menne beare towarde me. These bee behemente thynges I graunte, and passyng mannes weakenes. But it muste nedes bee an excellent and a notable thyng, whiche by his myghte shoulde moue and drawe the whole worlde, beeyng ouerwhelmed with wrythe opinions, and bayne

desyres. For whiche of all these worldly men doeth not abhorre the tormenting of the bodye: who is not afrayed at the daunger of lyfe? Who is not styrred with desyre of auengyng, whan he is prouoked with sore checkes and rebukes? who can quietely suffer his name to bee spotted and hindred without any deserte? But to the intente ye maye be blessed, I requite more of you, that is, to thynke youre selues blessed for suche euill afflictions: and rather to haue pytye of youre blynde persecutours, than to bee agreued with them: to saye well by them that saye euyll by you: to offer them euerlastyng healthe, whiche goe about your destruction. This high and excellente vertue ye cannot perfourme, vnlesse ye cum vnto it by the degrees whiche I shewed you before. If ye caste away vtterlye the swelling and pryde of the mynde, if ye put from you the desire of reuengyng, yf ye dispise all the pleasures of this world, & embrace the sharpe way, yf ye extinguishe the desyre of worldly thynges, and tryste for nothyng greatly, but for tryghteousnes and godlynes, yf ye be full mynded to succoure and helpe the greekes of al men, and desyre to further the commodities of al me, if ye haue a minde sincere and cleane from all vices and filthye desyres, not regardyng any thyng, nor delityng in any thing but in God alone: finally, yf ye study and deuise with quiet hartes to nourysshe and to make cõcord and peace then shall ye perfourme these thynges, the whiche other menne cannot yet attayne vnto nor once dreame vpon. But yet they that be curable and not vtterly of a desperate mynde, musyng muche at youre sufferaunce and godlynesse, they shall well vnderstande that it is no counterfeyt thing, they shall well perceyue that it is not a thyng of mannes power, and beyng moued therewe your exaumple, shall be turned to better thryfte.

The texte

Ye be the salte of the earth: but if the salte be vnsauery, wherwith shall it be seasoned: It is henceforth good for nothyng, but to be caste out, and to be troden of men.

For I haue chose you fewe, not to the entent I would allure and bryng to the knowledge of the euangelicall wysedome, one or twoo cytyes, but the whole worlde. It muste nedes bee a liuelye and a pithye thyng that can be sufficient to sawce and sauour the lyfe of all mankynde, beeing so werysshe and vnsauerye thorowe the desyres and fond opinions of vayne thynges. For I haue chosen you, not to the intent ye shoulde bee of the meane and tollerable sorte, but that ye shoulde be the salte of the yearth: it nedeth not to haue muche salte, but such as is good and strong, that whatsoeuer it doethe touche it maye season, and of werysshe make sauoury. The yerth is greate and yet the saltnes that it hath, it hath of a litle salte mixte with it. And ye see that a greate deale of meate vnsauoury and werisshe, with a litell salte sprynkeled vpon it, is made sauourye.

Ye be the salte of the yearth.

But if the salte be vnsaurey. &c,

It must nedes be that in great noumbres of men, many be founde but meane and vneath tollerable. But in Apostles, in bishoppes, in doctoures, & teachers, that quicke and perfect liuelines of the euangelicall charitie, muste nedes persecuet and abyde. Otherwyse if youre maners be made vnsauoury with the loue of prayse, with desire of ryches, with the luste of pleasures, with the gredines of reuengyng, with the feare of infampe, harmes, or death, what remayneth than, wherby the vnsauoury lyfe of the multitude maye bee seasoned: so it shall cum to passe, that ye shall not onelye bee vnmete to season others, but also ye youre selues not perfourming the thing that ye teache, shal cum into extreme contempt of al men. For what is lesse to bee regarded than vnsauoury salte, whiche serueth not for so muche as to doung the lande, for so muche as yf it be cast on the grounde it causeth barrainesse.

By

By that meanes men shall haue you in veneracion, yea they also whiche enuyously and hatefully barked agaynste you, yf they once perceyue that your doctryne doeth sauour of the liuelynes of the gospell, yf they see all your lyfe to bee agreable to your doctryne. Whan ye haue once taken vpon you this professió, eyther ye muste be verye profitable vnto all menne, or verye vnprofytable, eyther ye muste haue greate prayse emong men, or greate dispraysle. Dispraise and rebuke ought to bee shunned more than deathe, for it doeth redounde to the infampe and slaunder of the gospell. Wherfore se that ye be on euerye syde sincere pure, and verye perfect, to thende that the impuritie of the multitude maye be corrected thorowe your puritie.

The texte

Ye be the lyght of the worlde. A citie that is set on a hyll can not be hyd. Neyther do men lyght a candell, and put it vnder a bushell, but on a candelstycke, and it geueth lyght to al that be in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they mate se your good workes, and glorifye your father whiche is in heauen.

Ye be the lyght of the worlde.

Let your life and your doctryne be suche, that it maye be a guyde and a rule of good life to all men that doeth behold and loke vpon it. There is but one sunne of this worlde, but thesame is so myghtye and plentifull of lyghte that from a farre, it shyneth vpon all them that dwell vpon the yearth. So I haue set you in an high place, that whatsoeuer ye speake, whatsoeuer ye doe, muste nedes bee spyed abrode thorowout the whole worlde. If the cloudes couer the sunne, howe shall men haue lyght? If your doctryne be darkened with errours, yf the lyght of your lyfe be dimmed with worldly desires, what thyng shal driue awaye the darkenes of the multitude? Wherfore ye muste beware, that there be no darkenesse nor foltishnes in you. Ye cannot be hyd though ye endeuour neuer so muche. Consider wel that ye haue a parte to playe in the stage of the whole worlde, to thintente that carefulnes should sharpen you to bee circumspect and diligent. A small offence in you, is as muche as a great crime. Ye be as a citye set vpon an high hyll, which may be seene of the waye goers farre and wyde. It can not be hid thoughe it would, for the hyll with his highe toppe that beareth it, wylleth it, nilleth it, maketh it seene of al men that it may shewe the waye to them that erre and be out of the waye. Thys is the nature of the euangelicall doctryne, it suffereth not the professoures of it, to be hyd and vnknowen, although they fleing the fame of men seke dennes to hide them in. And why should ỳ be hid, which is ordeyned for this purpose, to do good to al men indifferently? Salt is geuen to season w̄, the sunne is geuen to the worlde to geue lyght, the citie is buylt in the toppe of the hyll, to be sene of all men. In the nyght men lyght a candele in the house, to geue lyght to al them that be in the house: And therfore they hide it not vnder a bushel, but set it vpon a candelsticke that the lyght therof maye the better cum to all, and the vse of one lyght maye extende and reache to manye: So ye ought not to seke, howe to purchase a fame and opinion amonge men: but onely bee ye carefull that ye darken not the lyght, whiche I haue lyghtned in you, and that ye perseuer and continue vpon the candlesticke, where I haue set you. The salt cannot but season. The lyghte cannot but shyne.

A citye that is set on a hyll can not be hyd.

Therfore let your lyght shyne, yea rather my lyghte and the light of my father, vnto all men, that they considering your lyfe to be vtterly pure & blameles, and very heauenlye, maye glorifye youre heauenlye father, to whome is due al honour and glorye. For all youre good workes and miracles be they neuer so

Let your lyghte so shine before men.

woonderfull, ye shall chalenge nothing vnto your selfe, but ye shall referre all glory and prayse vnto hym, from whome cummeth whatsoeuer men doe worthy prayse. It shal be your part, to haue none other care, but manfully and faithfully to perfourme the office committed vnto you. He shall geue the rewarde in tyme conuenient, and that a great rewarde, to whose glorye ye doe seruice.

The texte. Thynke ye not that I am come to destroye the lawe of the Prophetes: no I am not come to destroye, but to fulfyll. For truly I saye vnto you, tyll heauen and yearth passe, one iote or tytle of the lawe shall not passe, tyll all be fulfylled.

Whan ye heare the newe preceptes, which neither Moyses dyd deliuer nor the Prophetes taughte, suppose not that I bryng lyke matter as the pharisees were wonte with theyr additions and mannes constytucions makynge the lawe heauy and sore, and the very pyth and chiefe of the lawe vtterly neglecting and abolishyng. I came not to diminish and abate the lawe or abolishe it with newe preceptes: But I came rather to fulfyl and make perfect the lawe. For it doeth commaunde nothyng that any man can complayne that I haue not obserued and kepte. And yf the shadowes geue place whan the lyghte cummeth forth, yf I perfourme in dedes, that whiche the Prophetes saide before shoulde cum to passe, the lawe is nothing hindered, but rather made perfecte. The lawe had his time, it hadde his honour, it dyd shadowe wyth certayne figures, that whiche nowe is represented and open to the worlde: the lawe dydde in manner hedge aboute the desires of men, with ceremonies and carnall preceptes, as it were with certayne barres, that they shoulde not fall without anye staye into euery sinne, to thintente they might be the more apte to take the doctryne of the gospell: but nowe that that is perfect, is shewed furth. The carnall and grosse lawe was profitable to this entent, that men myghte acknowledge theyr synnes, but nowe grace whiche washeth awaye synne, is geuen vnto vs without ceremonyes. Therfore the lawe is no more offended, than if the kyng hymselfe beyng alyue, shoulde cum in place where is image was paynted, and allure all men rather to loke vpon hym than vpon his image: or elles yf a a weake chylde in processe of time shoulde growe to be a manne, or yf the rype fruite should succede after buddes and leaues, or yf the sunne springyng vp shoulde darken the moone and the starres. What the lawe promysed is nowe perfourmed, what it did shewe before, is nowe done. What it dyd shadowe is nowe made open to al mennes yes, what it endeuoured to perfourme and coulde not, is nowe brought to passe at full. This lyght is promysed vnto al men, but yet so that the Jewes haue no cause to complayne of vs. The grace of the gospel is fyrste offered to them, neither shal thei haue the lesse therfore, if that they haue be common to many wyth them. This is certayn, that we breake not the lawe wherein the Phariseis do glorye, in so muche that not the least iote, no not one pricke of the whole lawe shal perishe, for there is nothyng writen in it, but it shalbe fulfilled. It were a foolishe thing to loke for that hereafter whiche is nowe present, it were a mad thyng so to delyght in shadowes, that ye should dispise the true thinges, so to sticke to imperfect thinges, that ye should dispise perfecte thynges, so to embrace carnal thynges, that ye should looth spirituall thynges, so to bee geuen to worldlye thynges, that ye shoulde neglect heauenly thynges.

Whosoeuer

Whoſoeuer therfore breaketh one of theſe leaſt commaundementes: and teacheth men ſo, he ſhal be called the leaſt in the kyngdome of heauen. But whoſo doeth, and teacheth the ſame, ſhall be called great in the kyngdome of heauen. For I ſay vnto you, vnles your righteouſnes excede the ryghteouſnes of ỹ Phariſeis, and Scribes, ye can not enter into the kingdom of heauen The texte

Among the Iewes he is not regarded ne counted a good keper of the law that doeth omitte or lette paſſe any of thoſe thinges whyche the Phariſeis haue added of theyr owne preſcribing, as waſhynges of handes, of pottes & veſſels, and yet theſe additions and patches profit ſo litle towardes the perfection of the lawe, that thei oftetymes withdraw men from the obſeruacion of the laine. But in ỹ kyngdome of heauen whiche is muche more perfect, he that breaketh but one of theſe ſmall preceptes whiche I nowe adde vnto the preſcripte lawe of Moyſes, althoughe he teache the thyng to be obſerued whiche he hymſelfe thorough weakenes and frayltye doeth not perfourme, he ſhall be counted the leaſte and moſte deſpiſed, in ſo much that vnleſſe he profit and goe forwarde vnto better thynges, he ſhall be vtterly excluded from the felowſhyppe of the goſpell. But whoſoeuer teacheth theſe ſmalle thinges not to be deſpiſed, whiche driue men farre from thoſe thynges whiche the lawe doeth forbyd, and doethe perfourme that whiche he teacheth, he is to be hadde in veneracion, and ſhal be counted greate in the kyngdome of heauen. And yet they that be the chiefe and the higheſt in the Synagoge deſpiſing ſuche thynges, thinke it enough yf they dooe committe none of thoſe thynges whiche be puniſhable by the lawe, and yet in the meane ſeaſon they fauour, and flatter, and perdone themſelues in the naughtye deſyres of the mynde. Truely this is the iuſtice of them whiche by the feare of pain be refrained from il doing. But thei that be moued to thinges of more perfeccion by charitie, and by that heauenly ſpirite, they wyllyngly withdrawe themſelues from the approchyng to ill doynges, and they doe not onely forbeare to hurte any man, but they will no hurt to no man. And that ye maye perceyue what difference there is betwene a Iewe and a true Chriſtian man, betwene Moyſes diſciple and myne, this I do aſcertayne you, yf ye dooe perfourme whatſoeuer the lawe doethe preſcribe, whatſoeuer the Phariſeis ỹ be nowe doe perfourme, whiche nowe be accoumpted and thynke them ſelues very ryghteous, and yf ye adde nothyng of more perfeccion, ye ſhall be ſo farre of from being great in this profeſſion, that an entry ſhal not once be geuen you into the kyngdome of heauen. For this profeſſion doeth ſo farre excel, that thei that be the chiefe there, haue not ſo muche as the leaſt place here.

Ye haue heard that it was ſayd vnto them of the olde tyme: Thou ſhalt not kyl: whoſoeuer kylleth, ſhall be in daunger of iudgement. But I ſaye vnto you, that whoſo is angry ỹ his brother vnadviſedly, ſhal be in daunger of iudgement. And whoſoeuer ſayeth vnto his brother Racha, ſhall be in daunger of a counſell. But whoſoeuer ſaieth thou foole, ſhal be in daunger of hell fyre. Therfore yf thou offer thy gyfte at the aulter and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt the, leaue there thine offering before the aulter, and go thy way fyrſt, and be reconſiled to thy brother, and than cum and offer thy gyfte. The texte.

And yet that it maye be more euident how muche we adde vnto the Phariſaycall iuſtice, and that our commaundementes be not repugnaunt againſte the preceptes of the lawe, but rather aide them: we ſhall make the matter manyfeſt by certayne exaumples. Ye haue heard that a commaundemente was geuen in times paſte vnto the elders: Thou ſhalte not kyll. And if a man doe kyll, once conuicted and iudged, he ſhal be puniſhed.

Therfore hitherto he thinketh himſelfe to haue fulfilled the lawe, whiche hathe slayne no man, and so hath escaped the threatenynges of the lawe, thys manne as a iuste and an innocent manne shal be receiued into the Synagogue. Nowe harken howe muche I adde hereunto. Truely this I ascertayne you, whosoeuer is angrye wyth hys brother shall be in daunger of iudgemente. For the dignitie of the professiõ doeth encrese the faulte, in so muche that what homycide is in the olde lawe, the same in the newe lawe is the vehement motion of the mynde to be reuenged. For the firste degre to homycide is to be angrye. For suche an one hath not yet actually committed homicide, but now he beginneth to go towardes homicide.

Who so is angry with hys brother &c.

Therefore he that willeth yll to hys brother, euen nowe hath commytted a greuous offence before God his iudge. And if he doe not furthwith represse his fearce mynde, but beyng ouercome with anger, doe burste out with summe woorde whiche toucheth not his brother in dede, wyth any euydent, and plaine reproche, but maketh hym sad with a manyfeste token of contempte, as yf he shoulde saye Racha, or some other lyke thyng, whiche declareth the yll wyll of the mind: now is he (as one nere vnto homicide), not onely in daũgier to iudgemente, and shall suffre lyghter punishemente, and yet as great as the homicide mencioned in the olde lawe deserueth, but also he is in daunger to a counsell, where he shal be the more greuously condemned. Furthermore if the disobediẽt moeion of the minde: doeth burst out so farre that a man strike his brother with a manyfest and a certayne rebuke, and calleth hym foole, or suche other lyke, nowe shall he be in daunger to that moste greuous payne, that is to saye, to the payne of hell fyer. So many wayes is he punished whiche is not yet cum vnto homicide & murdre. But he is nere vnto homicide, whosoeuer is fallẽ from brotherly charitie. Whosoeuer wylleth yl to his brother in anger, thoughe he hath not plucked out his swerde, yet he hath strikẽ in minde. Whosoeuer hath rebuked in anger, hath striken with the tounge, & peraduenture woulde haue slayne but that he feared punishement. Therfore the lawe of the ghospel which punisheth the angry man, is not agaynste the precepte of ỹ lawe: Thou shalt not kyl: but it driueth & putteth of a man further from that, that ỹ lawe commaundeth to be punished. He is more safe and farther from murther, that vtterlye plucketh out from his harte all anger and hatred, oute of the whiche roote springeth homycide and murther. Therfore whosoeuer hath gotten to hymselfe the charitie of the gospel, whiche wylleth wel to them that wylleth yl, whiche recompenseth iniurye wyth wel dooyng, he hath litle nede of the threatenynges of Moses lawe, for the auoiding of murther. The vttermoste degree of hatred is to kyl and sleye, and the vttermoste degre of charitie is to wil well to the killer and sleyer. Among the Iewes he is counted godlye and deuoute whyche beryng ill will to his brother, bryngeth hys offeryng to the aulter, where as no sacrifice is accepted vnto God, without brotherly charitie, and concord: wherfore chyefly ye must regarde peace and mutual concord. And if any displeasure chaunce among brethren, as by ỹ weakenesse of mans nature it doeth happen, al thynges layd aparte, se that attonement and concorde be made, in so muche as yf by chaunce thou makest in a redines any gyfte to offer vnto God, and beyng nowe nere at the aulter doest remember that thy brother and thou be at square eyther because he hath offended the, or els because amitie is broken through the griefe of both parties, deferre not, linger not, but leaue thy gyfte at the aulter, make hast home, and bryng to passe, that before al thynges were amyte amitie may bee restored, and made vp betweene thee and thy brother. That done, returne vnto the aulter and doe thy sacrifice. No no gift is more acceptable to God, than consent and agrement of men. God suffereth no dammage if his gift be differred, but much peril and daunger hangeth ouer both partes by the breache of concorde. For displeasures prolonged and deferred, ingendre hatred: of hatred springeth homycide and murther. And no seruyce is acceptable vnto God which is not furnished with charitie. And if thou wilt say vnto me I haue offended nothing, let hym bowe firste and make suite that hath offended, thou arte not to be heard. He that is commaunded to loue his enemy, wil not sticke to restore and make vp loue and concorde, though it were broken through a nother mans defaulte. Forgeue the trespasse of thine owne accorde, and ease thy brother of his heauines, which did suppose that thou were angry with hym: Thou shalt not finde God mercifull vnto the, vnlesse thy neboure fynde the mercifull vnto hym. Thy gyft shall obtaine no thanke ne fauoure at al before God, except thou beare perfect fauour & loue towardes thy brother. And than come, & offer thy gifte.

Agree with thine aduersarie quickely, whiles thou art in the way with hym, lest at any time the aduersary deliuer thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer thee to the minister, and then thou be caste into prison. Verely I say vnto thee: thou shalt not come out theme, tyl thou haue payd the vtmoste farthing. The texte.

If the concorde and agrement of men is so highlye estemed of God, that he will suffre hymselfe to be defrauded of hys gifte nowe in a redines for hym, so that concorde and agremente may bee restored and made vp, howe muche more meete and conuenient is it for man, whome this matter specially dooeth touche, to redeme peace and amitie with the losse of hys substaunce. But perchaunce some may be founde so vniust, that wrongfully of his owne accorde dooeth drawe men into the lawe, ready to make trusteing and businesse vnlesse he haue his wil and pray of them. And now they being bent of both sides, with burnyng hartes, they prepare their accusementes, they runne to the iudges. You would knowe of me: what shoulde I doe in this case? Shal I pursue my right by the lawe? Agre with thyne aduersarie.

If thou wilt folowe my counsel, in the way as thou goest with thy aduersary, thou shalte spedely finishe and make an ende of the matter, eyther with equal and indifferent condicions, or els with vnequal and vniust condicions. Ende the matter with hym, ths condicyons beeyng neuer so vniuste, yet thou shalte haue auauntage and gaine. There shall be some losse of money: but the thyng is conserued whiche is moste precyouse, that is peace and amytie. The quietnes and tranquilitie of the mynde is conserued, the whiche if thou haddest bought with all thy whole goodes, yet thou haddest payde but litle for it. Thou shouldest haue wayted vpon the atturneys and the clerkes, thou shouldeste haue runne busily vp and downe, thou muste haue sued for the fauour of the iudges. Thou shouldeste haue done and suffered many thinges vnsemely and vnmeete for thee. And where as nothyng is more precyous than time, consyder howe muche thereof thou shouldest haue spent and losse. Wherefore marke well what greate gayne and auauntage thou shalte haue, if thou fynishe thy suite spedely, seeyng the issue of the lawe is vncertayne. For he that hath the better matter hath not alway the higher hande, and there is daunger leste thy aduersary hauing the vpper hande, deliuer thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer the to the common officer who shal leade the into prison, where if thou bee once layde, it is not nowe in thy power to fynyshe the matter with thy aduersary, and so thou shalte purchace not onely affliccion and punyshement of the body with shame, but also thou shalte not escape vntill thou haste payed the whole some euery farthyng whiche thy aduersary did demaunde, where as thou mightheste haue compouned with hym for lesse, whan he was yet more gentel and lesse angrie. So in makyng of concorde and amitie, way not so wrely nor extremely whiche is more in faulte. Let thys onely bee thy endeuour, yea though thou geue ouer parte of thy right, that concorde and amitie suffer no dammage.

Thou shalt not cum out thence, &c

The texte. Ye haue herde that it was sayde to them of the olde time, thou shalte not commit aduoutry. But I say vnto you: that whosoeuer looketh on an other mannes wyfe to luste after her, hath nowe committed aduoutry with her in his herte. And if thy ryghte eye hinder the, plucke it out and cast it from the. For better it is vnto the, that one of thy membres perysh, than that thy whole body should be caste into hell. And if thy right hande hynder thee, cut it of and caste it from the. For better it is vnto the that one of thy membres perish, than that al thy body should be cast into hell.

Hytherto we haue treated of loue and hatred, of the whiche one is the roote of al euangelical godlynesse, the other is the pestilence and poyson of the same. But next vnto murther is aduoutry, and there is no loue more tender & streight than the loue of matrimony. Let vs therefore treate of this matter also, what the law hath commaunded to your elders, and howe muche we dooe adde thereunto. There was nothyng more sayde vnto them in the lawe, then: Thou shalt not commit aduoutry, if thou dooeste, thou shalt bee stoned of the people. Therfore hitherto among the Iewes he hath ben coũted holy and perfecte, who being content with his owne, hath abstayned from an other mans wyfe. But after the lawe of the ghospell, whiche I bryng, he dooeth not onely commit aduoutry whiche dooeth defyle another mannes wife, and embraceth her body with his, but also he whiche with vnchaste yes dooeth beholde an other mannes wyfe. For as he that is angrie with hys brother is nygh vnto murther, so he bendeth toward aduoutry, whose minde is now vnchaste, and whose yes be aduoutrous. The husband hath not to punish the for aduoutry, but God hath for to condemne thee for aduoutry, before whome he that hath willed, hath committed the offece. Therefore as it is in murther to bee angrie, so is it in aduoutry to luste: As it is there to say Racha or foole, so is it here to delighte the yes, and through the wantonnes of them, to intice the mynde of another mannes wife to vnclennes. But here a carnal man will say, no man can forbeare to lust and desire in his harte the thyng that he loueth. But who can loue an other mannes wife with his owne daunger, and with the iniurie of her husbande, whiche is so bent in his mynde not onely to forbeare to hurte or to harme hym, that is innocent, but also to requite pleasure for displeasure, to them whiche hath hurte hym? perchaunce he will say, I cannot shut myne yes. Yea it were better to plucke out thyne ye, than through it to take losse of godlynes. For there is no parte of the body that oughte to be so deare vnto man, but that it is better to cut it awaye, than by the occasion thereof to loose any of the vertues of the minde. So we muste make spede vnto the high perfeccion of the ghospel, that whatsoeuer dooeth let our iourney thitherwarde, we muste vtterly cast it away, bee it neuer so swete, be it neuer so wel beloued.

Thou shalt not commit aduoutry.

Whosoeuer loketh on an other mans wyfe. &c

Ii

It is a great lucre and gaine to purchase the precious margarite of the euangelical charitie by the losse of any thyng whatsoeuer it be. Wherefore if thy right eye be a let vnto the in this behalfe, consider not how dere a thing the eye is, but consider from what a more precyous thyng it dooeth hynder thee: and without any delay dygge out thyne eye that hinderd thee, and caste it awaye, and so make spede as thou dyddest begyn. Where the whole man is in daunger of his life, it is beste to saue the reste of the whole body, by the losse of one parte thereof. Thou wilt say: I shall lyue hereafter, an one eyed manne. And what of that? Is it not rather to be wished to liue with one eye, than to dye with both? There is no member more deare or more necessarie for many purposes, than the righte hande. Who can thys deny? And yet if it be a lette vnto him that maketh spede vnto the high perfection, wherof depedeth the helth & the saluacion of the whole man, cut of thy right hand that hinderth thee and cast away the burden that thou mayest make spede and expedicion thither as thou didste purpose. In this peril and daungier, it is farre better to haue the losse of one membre, though it be very dere, than with the whole body to fall into the distruccion of hel fyer. If men alowe this policie, when there is none other daungier but of the bodye, howe muche more is this to be doone, when both the body and soule be in peril? But these thinges I haue spoken to teache you by a similitude. For I meane not this that any man shoulde cutte of any membre of hys body. For the nature of the membres is not yll, but the abuse of them is to be reproued, but I meane of the membres of the mynde: for the minde hath her noysome membres, and it is a godly thing spedely to cut them of. If a membre of the body bee cut of, beside the payne, this harme cummeth of it, that the parte once cutte of can neuer bee restored agayne. But when the noysome membres of the minde be cut of, as hatred, angre, fleshly lust, ambicion, and auarice, the minde is not maymed, but made more perfect, by reason that the monstruouse and noysome partes be cut away. And after a short griefe of cutting of, foloweth a continual pleasure. I wil speake more playnly to thentent ye may vnderstande what I meane. Thaffeccions be the membres of the minde. There be some affeccions which of their owne nature leade vnto vngodlines, as yre, hatred, enuy, desire of other mennts goodes. If any of these begin to spryng in the minde, furthwith it must be cutte vp, for so the yll that beginneth to spryng, shall bee the more easely and safely taken away. Againe there be affeccions of themselfe not vttrely yll, but yet by occasion they withdraw somtime from that that is good, as the loue towarde oure countrey, thaffeccyon to wife, chyldren, and parentes, or elles to kynsfolkes and frendes, the care for a good name. There is no cause why to cutte of these membres so long as they serue and make for the perfection of the gospell. For my doctrine is not against naturall affeccions, but dooeth restore nature to her puritie. But in case thaffeccion towarde thy parent, or wife or children, by occasion dooeth withdrawe thee from the loue of the euangelicall godlynes, and plucketh thee to worldlines, cut of that noysome natural affeccion. Like as he that cutteth of noysome thoughtes, cutteth not out the hart whete they grow but onely the naughty desyres: so he that nowe beholdeth an other mannes wife chastely, like as he looketh vpon his sister, or daughter, he hath well cast out hys noysome eye, and taken for it the eye of a doue, a cleane and a single eye. And he that was woonte to exercyse hys hande in robbyng of other, and

When that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

And if thy right hand hinder the.

nowe doeth labooure to helpe the nedines of other, he hath well cutte of hys rauening right hande: that in stede thereof he myght haue a beneficial and a liberall hande.

The texte. It was sayde: whosoeuer putteth awaye hys wyfe, lette hym geue her a lettre of diuorcemente. But I say vnto you: that whosoeuer doeth put away hys wife, except it be for fornication, causeth her to bee an aduoutresse, and whosoeuer marryeth her that is diuorced, committeth aduoutrye.

Nowe goe to and let vs shewe an other exaumple. The lawe of Moyses doeth suffer the husband if he bee offended with any faulte of his wyfe, to put her away after his owne deuise, so that he geue her a writing of diuorce, whereby shee may bee marryed to an other, and whereby her former husbande may not lawfully require her agayne, whome he hath cast of.

Wherefore that man hath satisfied the lawe, the whiche hath caste of hys wife for any cause, so that he hath geuen her a writyng of dyuorcemente: neyther shal he be taken as an aduouterer, nor no man shal note her as an aduoutresse. And though the law wisheth & desireth perpetuall amitie and concorde among married persones: yet notwithstanding, the same lawe, knowing the hardnes of the heartes of the Jewes, suffered diuorce to be vsed, lest any worse thing might chaunce, that no poysonyng nor murtheryng, should be committed and done. But I wil haue Matrimony obserued more holily & vndefiledly among them that professe the newe lawe. For whosoeuer leaueth hys wyfe, but for aduoutry, for than she is his wife no lenger, because she hath intermedled with an other man, he compelleth her and dryueth her violently to aduoutry. For if she marrieth another she marrieth not an husband, but an aduouterer. And whoso taketh her so cast of, into marryage, he taketh not a wyfe, but an aduoutresse. The lawe of Moses punysheth none of these, but the lawe of the ghospel doth condemne them. And yet this is not contrary to that. For the lawe of Moses hath geuen the husbandes libertie to diuorce, leste they should be more fierce and cruell to their wyues that they hated, and yet it restrayned this libertie by the booke of diuorce, both that they should not doe it priuely, & that they shoulde not requyre agayne, so often as they fantaysed, the wyues whome they had cast of vnaduisedly. And the lawe durst not require more in matrimony because it durst not commaunde those thinges that we taught before. For a man indued with the mekenes of the Gospel, either will soone correcte and amende the maners of his wife, or elles he will pacientely beare the same: for whan wil he seke debate with his wife, whiche with his enemies is at peace? & han will he seke the distruccyon of hys wife, whiche is not angrie whan he is harmed? and when he is offended, he willeth no man yll: Or howe shall not he abyde hys wyfe, whiche is in daylye company with hym, whiche suffereth his enemy kyllyng hym? And if the purpose of the lawe bee thus, that Matrimony shoulde bee holye, and diuorces not commonlye graunted, we breake not the lawe, but helpe and susteyne it, whiche woulde haue no dyuorce except in case of aduoutry, whiche is contrary to the nature of Matrymony. For Matrimony was made for thys intente that the woman once appoynted to the husbande, shoulde bryng forth children to hym onely, and hym onely obey. Further shee nowe turneth awaye from her husbande, whiche hath hath geuen another man the vse of her body. Therfore emong Christiã spouses let there not be greuous displeasures and offences, neither let him nor her seke any diuorce or separacion for light displeasures, but the one muste be reconcyled vnto the other yf any thing chaunce through the weakenes of men.

Ye haue herde howe it was sayde to them of olde tyme: Thou shalte not forsweare thyselfe, but shalt performe vnto the lorde, those thinges that thou sweareste: but I say vnto you. Sweare not at all, neither by heauen, for it is goddes seate: nor by the earthe, for it is his footestole: nyther by Hierusalem, for it is the citie of the greate kyng: nyther shalte thou sweare by thy head, because thou canste not make one heare white or blacke. But your communicacyon shalbe yea, yea, and nay, nay: Further whatsoeuer is added more than these, it cummeth of euill. The texte.

Now ye shall heare another thing. Commaundement was geuen vnto youre elders none otherwyse, but if they had made an othe, they shoulde performe it, and not be forsworne, for nowe they are bounde to god and not to man onely. Wherfore emong the Jewes, onely periurie is punishable. But he that deceiueth his neyghboure without any othe made, he is vnpunyshed: but yet the law of the gospel condemneth him, the which, that ye should be the more sure from periury, doeth vttrely condemne al maner of othes, that it is not lefful to sweare neither by god, nor by those thinges which seme to the common sorte to be thinges of lesse religion, that is, neither by heauen, because it is the seate of god, nor by the yearth because it is his footestole, nor by Hierusalem, because it is the citie of the great king, that is to say, of him which hath made al thinges. Neither as the Heathen sweare by the head of another man, whereof thou hast no authoritie, but it is consecrate to God whiche hathe made all thinges as he wouldе, for thou canste not make one blacke heare whyte, nor one white heare blacke. And because all thinges be consecrate to God the maker, thou oughtest to be feareful to sweare by any thing. And what nedeth any othe emong them, where no man, because of their symplicitie can distruste, nor no man can desire to deceiue though they might doe it freely, such is their sincerite and perfectenes, specyally in those thynges, of the whiche they declare themselues to bee despisers. Therefore among you, playne and simple speche oughte to be more holy and more sure, than the deuoute and solempne othe emong the Jewes. For emong you, whose hartes and lippes ought to agree, there is no other vse of speche, but to expresse youre mindes eche to other. In your bargaynes ye nede none othe, ye nede no execracion or cursing, or suche like to binde the promiser, or to assure him to whome the promise is made. Two woordes be sufficient: Nay, and yea, whereby thou denyest that whiche thou doest not promise, and whereby thou doeste performe that whiche thou diddest promise by playn woorde, that thou wouldest doe. For there is no man lesse bounde with his simple and bare woorde, than the Jewe swearing by all holy thinges: and he whome thou makest thy promise vnto, doth trust thee as wel as if thou haddest made a solemne othe. Yf there be any moe besides these, it must nedes come of euill and sinne. For he that sweareth, eyther he thynketh yll of hym to whome he sweareth, or els he that requireth the othe dothe dystruste. But none of these ought to be in you, whome I would haue perfect in all poyntes. Therefore when I vttrely forbid sweating, I doe not abolish the lawe, whiche doeth prohibite periurie, but I make the lawe more full, and I

withdrawe men farther from that, that the lawe doeth punishe.

The texte. Ye haue heard how that it was sayd: eye for eye, and tooth for tooth. But I say vnto you: Resist not against euil. But whosoeuer geueth the a blowe on the right cheke, turne to hym the other also. And if a man will sue thee at the lawe and take away thy coate let hym haue thy cloke also. And if any compell the to goe a mile, goe with him twaine. Geue to hym that asketh thee, and turne not from hym that is desyrous to borowe.

Ye haue heard what the law hath graunted vnto our forefathers in reuenging of wrong doinges. It sayeth, eye for eye, and tooth for tooth. For it knew that [illegible] mindes were full of reuenging. Therefore hytherto it hath bridled the desire of reuenging, that the faulte myghte bee recompensed with the like punishement after the deuice and discrecion of Judges: and he that had put out an other mannes eye, shoulde loose an eye, and he that had stricken out another mannes tooth, shoulde be punished with the losse of a tooth. For if the reuenging of the iniurie had ben left to the mynde of him that was hurte, oftentimes he shoulde haue chaunced to haue loste his life for stryking out of a tooth. Therefore the intent of the law was, that vengeaunce should not goe to farre. And I doe not abolishe this lawe, but establishe it. For my doctrine is, that ye shall in no case reuenge iniuries, be they neuer so sore, that ye shall not geue taunt for taunt, nor hurte for hurte, nor wrong for wrong: yea if a man geue you a blowe vpon the cheke, whiche is counted commonly an vntolerable rebuke, ye shall not requyte it with a blowe, but rather offer the other cheke to be beaten to, and desire rather to suffer a double displeasure, than to requite the lyke. And if any man will goe to lawe with thee, to take away thy coate, stryue not with hym, but rather euen of thy selfe geue hym thy gowne to. Agayne, if any froward person wil force thee to goe with him the space of a myle, walke with hym two myles, rather then to fall at contencion with hym. By this gentilenes and sufferaunce it shal come to passe, that he which is redy to hurte, shall not be further prouoked, and that thou shalt the soner be deliuered from griefe, than if one euil shoulde spring of another, and a great thing made of a smal, and many matters of one: And further thou shouldest not be disquieted in thy minde, and perchaunce through thy gentilnes, of an enemye thou shouldest make thee a frende. It is a great matter that ye do enterprise. Ye must apply your whole study to these thinges, and litle regarde those trysling thinges, in getting, and increasing, or in auoyding of the whiche, other men doe bestowe theyr whole life, vnto whome it chaunceth oftentimes that whiles they hunte for these thinges, they lese the heauenly goodes: And yet they liue not pleasantly here, for they heape vp griefes vpon griefes vnto themselues, intangling themselues with sundry strifes and hatreds. Through the despising of these thinges, whiche, when you haue them, make you not godly, and whan you haue them not, they make you not vngodly, you shall bothe auoide hatred, and also obteyne you loue and good will, and cause youre doctrine to be of more authoritie and better beleued. Therefore if any man doeth molest thee for a garmente or a vessel, or for any other like thing, wherof he is gredy, and would fayne haue it from thee, rather than he should goe about to doe the a displeasure other wayes, graunt him his request, and so thou shalte bynde him vnto thee through thy good turne, & deliuer thy selfe from molestacion & griefe. Agayne if any man requireth to borow money of thee, let it not greue the to geue it him, yea though it be so that nothing of it shal returne vn-

to thee agayn, neither of the vsurie, nor of the stocke it selfe: for he that lendeth money to vsurie doth rather hunt for other mennes, than geue his owne. And why shoulde it greue the to lende hym though thou shouldeste neuer haue it againe, vnto whome thou oughtest to geue freely where thou haddest plentie and he lacked. So through your example men shall learne vttrely to neglect these thinges, for whose sake they suffer and doe al thinges.

The texte.

¶ Ye haue heard how it was sayde: Thou shalte loue thy neighbour and hate thine enemie. But I say vnto you: loue your enemies. Bleste them that curse you. Doe good to them that hate you, pray for them which hurte you, and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your father: whiche is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euill and on the good, and sendeth rayne on the iust, and on the vniust. For yf ye loue them whiche loue you, what rewarde haue ye? Doe not the Publycans euen the same? And if ye make much of your brethren onely, what great thing doe ye? doe not also the Publicanes likewise? Ye shal therfore be perfect, euen as your father whiche is in heauen is perfecte.

Nowe herken you to that commaundement whiche is counted chiefe in the law. Thou shalte loue thy neighbour & hate thyne enemie. It requireth good will towarde well willers, and them that haue deserued well, but it suffereth to wil them yll that doe hurt vs. Consider how I doe not hinder this precept, but how I adde vnto it. For I am not content with mutuall beneuolence emong frendes, but this I require of you that be ỹ folowers of my doctrine, that ye loue your enemies, and that ye do not only not hate them that hate you, but prouoke thẽ with good turnes to loue you. And if they be so farre out of frame that they will not vse your good turne, but continually trouble you and prouoke you with yll sayinges and yll doinges, yet see that ye in the middeste of your troubles, turne not your good minde from them, but pray vnto god for them that they may chaunge their mindes and repente. Yf ye vse thys gentilnes towardes all men both good and euill, ye shall declare your selues to be the kindely children of the heauenly father, who desirynge all men to be saued, geueth so manyfolde benefites vnto the woorthy and the vnworthy. For he suffereth his sunne indifferently to shyne vpon them that worshyp him, and vpon them that despise him, and he suffereth his rayne to profit both the iust and the vniust, prouoking the yll through his benefit to repent, & styrring the good to rendre thankes. The likenes of maners shal bring you to the heauenly father, and men will beleue that your doctrine cummeth from hym, if they espie in you his notable goodnes. For yf ye loue them that loue you, if ye doe for them that doe for you, yf ye wil wel to them whiche beare you good will, ye haue escaped blame: but ye haue not deserued prayse. Not to requyte one good tourne for another, is counted a detestable vnkindenes euen emong the heathen and the Publicanes, whose fashion is euil spoken of, euen of the common sorte. To loue him that loueth thee, doeth pertaine vnto nature, and not to the vertue of the ghospel. And if ye shewe your selues curteyse and gentle in speche towarde your kinsfolkes, or countrey men onely, and disdayne to salute others, as though they were straungers, what great thing doe ye? Doth not the heathen men the same? These be common thinges which doe not shew men to be good, but that they bee men onely. And thase thinges cannot seme excellent, whiche doe chaunce also vnto yll men. Wherfore, I woulde that ye should be perfect and resemble your heauenly father with woonderful lighte

But I saye vnto you. &c.

Do good to them ỹ hate you.

of goodnes, who being omnipotent, yet of his goodnes doeth good to al men, loking for reward of no man. He is meke and gentle towardes all men, and yet he is hable if he will, out of hande to punishe all men.

¶ The. vi. Chapter.

The texte

TAke hede that ye geue not almes in the sight of men, to the intent that ye would be seene of them, or els ye haue no reward with your father which is in heauen. Therfore when thou geuest thine almes, let not trumpettes blow before thee, as Hipocrites doe in the Synagoges and in the stretes, for to be prayed of menne. Verely I saye vnto you: they haue receyued their reward. But when thou wilte geue almes, let not thy lefthande knowe what thy righthande doeth, that thyne almes may be in secrete, and thy father whiche seeth thee in secrete, shall reward thee openly.

I Haue declared vnto you in what thynges ye ought to passe and excel the righteousnes of the Scribes and the Pharisees, yf ye will bee my disciples. Nowe shall I shewe you what ought to be auoyded in those thynges whiche seme common, and belonging vnto you bothe. For there is a certayne priuie poyson, whiche doeth infecte all the good dedes of the Pharisees, that they deserue vtterly no prayse of God. It is an holy thyng to releue the nedy. It is a godly thing to talke with god by pure prayer. Fasting is a deuout thing: And the pharisees through the setting forth & bosting of these thinges, doe claime & obteyne an opinion of high holynes before men, whereas they displease god, who doth beholde, not ỹ outward face, but the inward harte. And they doe worthely displease him, because their hart is fouly infected with vaineglory. They hunt for vaine praise of ỹ people rather than for a good conscience before god, and whyleste they catche after a vayne reward here, they be disapoynted of that, whiche onely ought to be desired. This poyson creping in by secrete vndermining, lyeth in waite priuely also for them, whiche be sumwhat entred in the rase of vertue. Wherfore I wil in this behalfe, that ye be ware and circumspect, that when ye goe about to doe any godly worke, ye desire not rather to doe it openly, than in secrete, to thintent ye might be sene of men, and so hũt after prayse and glory of men. Ye ought alwaies to do wel, whether men se you or se you not. For god doth euer beholde you, of whome you loke for reward. But if ye go about to get ỹ praise of man for your good dedes, ye lese the reward of your heauely father. Your good worke must not alwaies be kept priuie, but ye muste not play your pageaunt in the sight of men, like as players in the stage doe play their playe, whose desire is nothing els, but to please the yes and the eares of the people. But he can not alwaies folow the beste, whiche dooeth apply hymselfe to the iudgement of the common sorte: For ye must please men in suche sorte, that ye may allure thẽ to your maners and fashions, and not you to goe out of kinde and fal to them. Though praise be fled and shunned, yet it foloweth vertue, of her owne accorde. And that siberly is true prayse, whiche doeth chaunce without ambicious seking for. And the whole glory that ryseth of wel doing, must be wholly geuen to god. Ye shall displease him as sone as ye stande in your own conceite and please your selues, chalenging vnto your selues that which is wholly of his bounteousnes.

Take hede that ye geue not almes in ỹ sight. &c.

Therfore

Therefore whosoeuer thou arte that wil folow the lawe of the ghospell, when thou entendest through thy liberalitie, to releue the nedines of the poore: do not as Hipocrites be wont to doe, whiche be men lyke players counterfeted & disguised, whiche when they appeare liberall and mercifull, in harte they be both couetous and cruel. For the misery of their neighboures moueth thē nothing, but being desirous of glory & renoume, they bye with a litle money, the praise of the people, and would geue vttrely nothing if they wer alone, and saw their brother welnere dead for hunger. Therefore as oft as they geue any thing to the poore, they seke not to be secrete & alone, but they come abrode in the stretes and where as men resorte. And like as players shoulde play their pageaūte, they call furth a numbre of the people with the sounde of the trumpe to toote and to gase, both casting the poore and miserable in the teeth with their misery, and hunting for themselues a vayne and a folish prayse of men. Wyll ye heare what they gayne? Let the people prayse them neuer so much, they haue lost their rewarde of their good dede at goddes hande, whiche doeth measure the godly worke of the sincere affeccion of the minde. He that geueth for praise & glory, he selleth his good turne, he geueth it not. Truely thou must be so far from the affeccion of these men, that when thou geueste any almes, thy lefte hande must not know what thy righthande doeth, and thou must not desyre to be loked vpon of man, yea and if it wer possible, thou thy selfe shouldest not know that whiche thou doest arighte, and shouldest forget thyne owne dede, and not impute it to any man, that thou hast done wel, nor stande not in thine owne conceite, because thou hast geuen thyne almes, but only reioyce inwardly, that the poore and nedy is refreshed. What if men knowe not, yea what if he that is succoured knoweth not hym that succoureth hym? It is ynoughe for thee to haue a witnes of the father, from whose yes nothing can be hid. He wil rewarde thee although thou haue no thanke at all of man.

Let not trō pets blowe before thee

And thy father which seeth in secrete.

The texte.

And whan thou prayeste thou shalte not be as Hypocrites are. For they vse to stande praying in the synagoges, and in the corners of the stretes, that they may bee seene of men. Verely I saye vnto you: they haue their rewarde. But whan thou prayest, entre into thy chambre, and whan thou hast shut thy doore, pray to thy father, which is in secrete: And thy father whiche seeth in secrete, shall rewarde the openly.

Semblablie whan ye make your prayers to god, doe not folow the guise and vsage of Hipocrites, whose special delite is to stande in company of men, and in the corners of the stretes, so often as they pray, for none other entēt but to be sene of men, at whose handes they hunt and loke for the prayse of deuout and holy conuersacion. Let them please themselfe and others also with suche glorious prayers. This I assure you, nowe they haue their rewarde, whiche they loked for. And what is more vayne then thys rewarde? and for a counterfeit and a false glory they frustrate & set themselues beside that blessed rewarde, which god would haue geuen, if they had offred in his sight, the pure and sincere oblacion of their prayers. Doe thou therefore contrary wise. When thou prayest, forsake the multitude, enter into thy secrete chamber, & shut the dores, and in secrete vttre thy sincere prayers before thy father. It is ynough that he doeth beholde & see thy godlynes, from whome nothing can be hid. He wil rēder vnto thee ỹ euerlasting rewarde. These thinges haue I setfurth, to teache you by playne and homely exaumples. For it is not yll to geue almes sumtime before men, or to pray in a multitude, and where as men resort, but than knoweth not the left hand what the right hande doth, when the worke of charitie is not defiled with any affection of worldly vanitie. Then thou art secrete in thy chaumbre, when thou speakeste vnto god with such perfecte clerenes of minde, as though no man did beholde thee. He that prayeth in a multitude of menne as earnestely, yea peraduenture more vehemently than if he were alone, he prayeth in his secrete chaumbre. For the ryghte hande and the lefte, or the secrete chambre, standeth not in the thynges, but in the affeccions and desyres of the harte.

The texte. But when ye pray, bable not muche as the heathen doe, for they thinke it will come to passe that they shalbe hearde for theyr muche bablinges sake. Be not ye therefore lyke vnto them. For your father knoweth what thinges ye haue nede of, before ye aske of him.

This also must be considered in prayer. It is the affeccion and the harty desyre that moueth god, not the noyse of the lippes. And it skilleth not how long and how loude the prayer be, but howe feruent and syncere the affeccion and desire is. Wherefore let the example of the heathē men, be farre from you, which do recite, and say long prayers, and ful of many wordes, redy framed, and prescribed vnto them, as whō woulde say, they shoulde obteine nothyng excepte they wered God with bablyng of many wordes, repetyng one thyng oftentimes, and prescribing and appoynting with recitall of many wordes, what, when, and howe they woulde haue the thyng perfourmed, whiche they pray for. And yet oftentimes they pray for thynges noysome and hurtefull. We ought to aske of God the best thinges, and not all thynges: and we ought to pray often, rather than much, and vehemently rather than long: finally with the harte rather then with voyce: Neyther alwayes with prescrybed and purposed wordes after the custome of the heathen, but so much as the feruencie of the minde, and rauishment towards god, doeth styre and prouoke. Truely your father loueth to be called vpon, but not to be taught with long prayer what your necessitie doeth require, but to be prouoked through youre godlines to geue the thing, whiche the slothfull and sluggishe deserueth not to haue: For he knoweth what your necessitie doeth require, yea before that he be called vpon.

The texte. After this maner therfore pray ye. Our father whiche arte in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy kyngdome come, thy wil be done in yearth as it is in heauen. Geue vs this day oure dayly bread. And forgeue vs our trespasses as we forgeue them that trespasse against vs. And leade vs not into temptacion, but deliuer vs from euell. For thine is the kyngdome, and the power, and the glory for euer. Amen.

Therefore be ye vnlike to the heathen men, bothe in life and also in maner of praying. And if ye will haue a fourme and maner of the euangelicall prayer prescrybed and set forthe vnto you, thys is the worthy prayer, wherewith the true and naturall children ioyned with brotherly charitie, may speake vnto the heauenly father: father vnto all men indifferently: of whome although ye haue all thinges, yet those chiefely oughte to be requyred whiche make for the attaynemente of the euerlastyng lyfe. For all the other thynges he will caste vnto you, euen of hys owne accorde, as an encrease and aduauntage, according to the desires of his children, as he is a most bounteful father. Whose glory ye ought to regarde aboue al thinges, to whome al glory is due in heauen and in yearth. To perteine vnto his kyngdome is to conquere the tyranny of the diuell. To be subiecte vnto hys will is to rule and reygne. Of whose free liberalitie it cummeth, whatsoeuer doeth norishe and reuiue mens hartes to the perfeccion of the ghospell.

But he will not heare you vnlesse ye accorde and agree in one: and concorde and agreement cannot lightly be, vnles ye forgeue eche others offences, without whiche men do not liue in this worlde, although they endeuour towarde thatraynement of perfection. And through this concorde ye shal be safe by the ayde of your father against the frowarde temptoure, yf ye watche well, and busily call for the helpe of your good father, against that naughty one.

Wherfore in vaine calleth he vpon the father with this fourme of prayer that I teache, whiche is not of thys sorte, whiche neither feareth, nor loueth God, which liueth to himselfe, which foloweth hys owne glory more than goddes, whiche gapeth for worldely goodes and authorytie, whiche had rather haue thinges pleasaunte to his owne appetite, than thinges pleasaunte vnto God, whiche sueth after earthely thinges more than heauenly, whiche setteth lesse by the qualities of the minde, than bodely commodities, whiche is at varyaunce with his brother, whiche through ryot and dysplearures dleth hymselfe sluggishe against the assaultes of the deuil. And the maner of prayer is after this sorte. Our father whiche haste regenerate vs to heauen, who were once vnluckiely borne of Adã, & prepared for vs (forsaking earthely thinges) a kingdom & inheritaunce euerlasting, which art sayd to be in heauen because thou doest replenish all, & hast no manner of drosse or earthly infirmitie: graũt that thy name may be honourable and glorypouse emong menne through vs, which by thy benefite, be perfect and pure For it is not our glory but thy gift, whatsoeuer is well done of vs. Let the tyranny of Satan be abolished, that thy kyngdome dayly may preuayle more and more, whiche dooeth not stande in riches or worldely strength, but in mildenes, chastitie, softenes, sufferance fayth, and charitie: that vices and yll desires once chased away, thy heauenly vertues may florysh, and shewe themselues emongest men, and that it may come to passe at lengthe, that lyke as in heauen all thynges bee peccable and quiet, and all creatures there doe obey most humbly thy commaundementes: so lykewise there be none in yearth whiche be not obedyent to thy moste holy will, euery man as farre furth as the weakenes of nature doth suffer, diligently recording now that which shal come to passe perfectly in the like to come. O father nourish that thou hast brought furth, see vnto vs, that the bread of thy heauenly doctrine doe not fayle vs, that we may bee dayly stayed, growe vp, and made lustie by the taking therof, to the obseruacion and kepyng of thy commaundementes. And alienate not thy minde away from vs being offended with our trespasses, but for thy clemencie and mekenes pardon our offences, whiche we commit through infirmitie and weakenes, that we may haue peace with thee, like as we emong our selues forgeuing eche other, if one hath offended an other, conserue mutuall concorde and amitie.

Our father which arte in heauẽ, &c

Geue vs this day, &c

Thou being merciful, we feare nothing, and being vnderset with concorde, we be made stronger against our common enemy. Vnto whome we beseche thee (if it be possible) deliuer vs not to be tempted. For we knowe his malice, we know his frowardnes and craftines. And if thou suffer vs to fall into temptacion, to thintent to trie the constancie of our mynde, o thou merciful father, deliuer vs from that naughtie deuil. Vouchesafe of thy goodnes, to graunt & make sure these our desires. See therfore how many thinges this short prayer doeth comprise, that nedes he must be perfect whosoeuer doeth rightly pronounce this prayer, that is, who so doeth pronoũce it with mouth that the hart

and affection agree vnto the same. First it teacheth you to depend wholly vpō none other but the heauenly father, to whom ye owe that ye be made, to whom ye owe that ye be redemed from sinne, to whome ye owe whatsoeuer vertues ye haue. He is called father, that ye may vnderstande he is full of mercye and bounteousnes: he is sayde to dwel in heauen, that ye shoulde lift vp your hartes thither, despising yearthly goodes. Ye cal him youres, that no man should vendicate any thing proper vnto himselfe, seeyng that whatsoeuer they haue cummeth vnto all men of his onely liberalitie. And in this behalfe there is an equalitie of kinges and seruauntes. Ye wishe onely his glory, that no man in the earth attribe vnto himselfe, prayse of any thing, whereof ariseth insolency and stoutnes of minde. Ye wishe that he should reigne, that he should be obeyed and not you. For the vertues be his which doe worke by you. It is his doctrine whiche ye shall deliuer vnto men from me. And it is not ynough to persist and abide in hys vertues, but ye must dayly encrease and goe forwarde in goodnes, and for this ye aske of hym, that woondrefull bread whiche his will is that it shoulde be dayly asked, because he doeth daily geue it, and he willeth it to be asked of him, to put you in remembraunce that all good thinges come from him. Finally that ye shoulde bee the more ware to fall from the charitie of so bounteouse a father, he dooeth monyshe you of that frowarde Sathan, whiche neuer ceaseth to lye in watche for the godly, to plucke them backe into hys tyranny.

The texte. Therefore if ye forgeue men their trespasses, your heauenly father will forgeue you. But if ye will not forgeue men their trespasses, neither will your father forgeue you your trespasses.

Wherefore, before ye speake vnto your father with this prayer, consider with your selues, whether ye desire truely the thing that ye aske, and whether ye be mete persones to be hearde of youre father in suche thinges as ye pray for. But chiefly this ye must duely searche with your selues, whether ye haue amitie and concorde with your neyghboures. Euen suche a father shall ye fynde hym towardes you, as your neighboure findeth you towardes hym. He wyll not knowe hym for hys sonne, whiche doeth not agree with his brother. If ye forgeue them that offende you, your heauenly father wyll forgeue all that ye trespasse against hym. But yf ye will be harde and sore against other menne, your father will not forgeue you youre offences. Wilte thou not forgeue thy felowseruaunt, whome on thy behalfe at one tyme or at other thou hast offended again, and requirest thou of God forgeuenes of thy trespasse, whome thou arte hable by no meanes to recompence with forgeuyng agayne hys offence made to thee?

The texte, Further, whan ye faste, bee not sory as hipocrites bee. For they disfigure their faces, that it may appere vnto men that they fast. Verely I say vnto you, they haue their reward. But whan thou dooest faste, anoynte thyne head, and washe thy face, that it appere not vnto men, that thou dooest faste but vnto thy father, who is in secrete: and thy father that seeth thee in secrete, shall rewarde thee openly.

Nowe ye perceiue what difference ought to be betwene your almesse and the almesse of the pharisies, and betwene your prayers & their prayers. Now harken what difference ought to be betwene youre fastes and theyrs, if ye will haue them acceptable to the father, and profitable to your selues. It is not the forbearing of the meate that commendeth fastyng vnto god, but the pure and cleane affection of the minde, feruently desiring to please god onely.

wherefore as often as godlynes shal prouoke you to fast, folow not certeine menne whiche be not fasters, but counterfeyters of fasting, setting foorthe the colour and cloke of fasting with a sower countenaunce, not intending that in dede, wherefore fasting shoulde be vsed, that is to say, eyther to pacyfie god, or to chastice the body, wherby the minde might be the more free and redy to apply and ensue holy thinges: but by this coulour they hunt for vaine prayse of men, for whose sake despising god, they play this pagent. For to this purpose they disfigure theyr faces with palenes and sowernes, that by the behauiour of their body, menne may see that they doe fast. This is certayne: There is no cause why they should looke after any rewarde of God for these good dedes: For now they haue their rewarde: attayning that which they hunted for with theyr fasting. But so often as thou doest fast, appeare rather not to faste, and appeare to be mery, annointing thy head and washing thy face, leste men perceiue that thou doest fast. And thinke not that fast to be vnprofitable, whiche is hid from men. It suffiseth to thee, that thy father seeth it, from whome nothing is hid. And he that seeth in secrete, in the stede of vaine praise of mē, wil rewarde thee with the perfect rewarde. Againe, I say not this that it should be wicked that men shoulde know of thy fasting, but that thy minde shoulde abhorre from the desire of vayne praise. Than no man seeth thy fasting, when thou doest fast not to thintent to be seene of any man. Than onely god doth see thy fasting, when thou dost fast with this entent, that thou wouldest as gladly fast though no man should see thee when thou doest faste.

¶ Lay not vp for your selues treasures vpon yearthe, where the rust and mothe doeth corrupte, and where theues breake through and steale. But lay vp youre treasures in heauen, where neither rust nor mothe doeth corrupte, and where theues doe not breake through nor steale. For where your treasure is, there wil your hearte be also. The texte

The common sorte of men not considering these thinges, whiles they hunt for smal and visible rewardes of men, be disapointed of the inuisible and true rewarde, which for wel doing God doeth geue abundauntly. In like case be they whiche with much thought and care, doe gather together and heape vp riches, and hide them in the ground for losing, albeit this is euen to lose them in dede. He that dealeth and bestoweth his riches rightly, it is he that layeth them vp surely. For that that thou hidest in the grounde, is not profitable vnto thee, but is in daungier of mothes, rust, & theues, so that thou hast nothing of them, but a miserable carefulnes to get them & to kepe them. These thinges must be gotten neither carefully nor vnmeasurably. And when they be gotten or come by chaunce, they must be redily distributed if any haue nede, or els so bestowed, that necessitie of nature may be holpen, and not ryot mayntayned, nor any disease of the minde be serued and satisfied. And yet all menne for the moste parte vnto this thing apply theyr whole studie and care, as though pouertie made men miserable, and ryches indued them with felicitie. And whyles they folow after these false goodes, which will shortely forsake theyr maisters, they forsake the eternall goodes, whiche indue them with true felicitie, and can not be taken away. But ye of the other side, hasting with all endeuour to the best and most perfect thynges, whereby ye shall be riche in dede, lay vp your treasures in heauen, the keping of the whiche, can not trouble you with cumberous carefulnes.

For

For neyther ruste nor mothe dooeth destroy suche maner of riches, nor theues doeth not digge it vp nor steale it, of whiche chaunces, worldely goodes be in daunger. If ye lay vp these goodes with your father, he will kepe them safely for you, and your minde shall not sticke groueling on the grounde beeyng oppressed with these filthy cares, but it shall despise these vile and fading thinges, and be rauished vp vnto heauenly thynges, for where as a mannes treasour is, which he loueth entierely, there is his harte also. Therfore they haue no high nor heauenly thought, which hath gathered riches and hid thē in the ground. They walke and wander hither and thither, but their harte is in the hole where the money is hid. And if the minde be corrupt, either by the disease of vayne glory or auarice, whatsoeuer is done, must nedes be vicyouse.

The texte. The light of the body is the ye. Wherefore if thine ye be single, all thy body shal be ful of light But if thine ye be naught, all thy body shal be full of darkenes. Wherefore yf the light that is in thee be darkenes, how great is the darkenes?

For first it is to be considered, what is chiefely to be desired, and whereby we may obteine that which we doe aske: furthermore as the candel is in the house as the ye is in the body, so is the minde in man. If the light of the minde bee not faultie through the darkenes of false opinions, and yll desires, if the ye of the minde doeth looke none other way, than to the true marke, whatsoeuer is done throughout all the life is acceptable vnto God, and euery thing helpeth towardes the heape of felicitie. Like as if there be a great candel in the house, there is no stumbling nor falling: so if thine ye be cleare and whole, it geueth sight to al the membres, and no parte stumbleth or wandreth, the ye being the captaine and guide. Againe if the ye of the body be faultie, no membre doeth his duetie well. For there is no right iudgement whan that parte of oures is faultie, by ꝑ which only we do iudge. Therfore if that part of thee which is geuen thee for light, be turned into darkenes, how great shal the darkenes of the other partes be, whiche haue no lighte of themselues? If reason be blynded with desires, and iudgeth that to be good which is miserable, & iudgeth that chiefely to bee despred, which is to be despised or not to be regarded, into what darkenes shal men be drawen through ambition, filthy luste, auarice, folichenes, angre, enuy, hatred, and other perturbacions and troubles of the minde, whiche of their owne nature be full of darkenes? Therefore let youre ye bee cleane and sincere, that it may beholde the beste, and let it beholde and looke vpon the best thinges, either onely or chiefely.

The texte. No manne can serue two maisters. For either he shall hate the one and loue the other, or els leane to the one and dispyse the other. Ye cannot serue god and Mammon. Therefore I saye vnto you: bee not careful for your lyfe, what ye shall eate or drinke, nor yet for your body what garment ye shall put on. Is not the life more worth than meate? and the body more worth than rayment? Beholde the fowles of the ayer, for they sowe not, nor reape nor, nor cary into the barnes: and your heauenly father fedeth them. Are ye not muche better than they?

Thinke not those men worthy to bee heard, whiche deuide themselues betwene God and men, betwene yerthe and heauen, and so folowe thinges eternal, that they wil not dispise thinges temporall. For they doe nothing els, but where as they woulde catche bothe, they obteine neyther of bothe. Thys heauenly Philosophie like as it doeth promise great rewardes: so it doeth require the whole man.

And

And emong men a man shal not find two of such gētil cōditions ỹ one seruaūt can be hable to please both. So it cūmeth to passe, that thone must be forsaken or els neither can be satisfied. And if the maisters be of contrary appetites and do square within theselues by some grēuous debate, it must nedes be that the seruaunt if he wil please the one, must not onely forsake thother, but also sticke vnto the one, & hate the other, whome he hath forsaken. And if he wil go from this againe vnto thother, he must nedes translate and tourne his loue and seruice vnto him onely, and dispise thother whome he hath forsaken. And who be so contrary one to an other, as God and Mammon? how can one serue two, when they commaunde so diuers thinges? God commaundeth thee to geue of that thou hast to the neady. Mammon cōmaundeth the to take away other mens by right and by wrong. God commaundeth the to prouide for thy brother which is in danger. Mammon cōmaūdeth the to liue to thyselfe. God commaundeth sobrenes, Mammon teacheth excesse and ryot. Wherefore ye flatter your selues in vayne, if ye beleue that that thing may be doone, whiche is vnpossible, that is, to serue both God and Mammon. His seruaūt is eche man to whome he is wholly geuen. Ye see howe riches doue possesse them full and whole, which do trauaile for it with so great tumult & busines, which defende them and kepe them with so great carefulnes, whiche forgoe thē with so great griefe: for these they suffer all thinges, for these they doue all thinges. Whosoeuer hath bound himselfe to this seruice, can not be the seruaūt of god: he requireth the whole manne and cannot abide the felowshyp of so fowle and filthy a maister, nor can not abide a dimy seruant, which is partaker with his aduersary. But the common sorte of ryche men are wont to excuse the sore of auarice, by the pretence of mans necessitie. They say by these thynges men prouyde for against hunger and nakednes. So speake they which doe not depend wholy of god, but put their trust in their owne defence and ayde. My wil is ye should be voide from this carefulnes, leste it withdrawe you from the desire of better thinges. The necessitie of nature is content with very litle, & euery where it is to be had, that may suffice for such, as I wil my seruantes to be. For either the liberalitie of good menne alwaies ready shal suffice, or elles diligence and labour shall prouyde that thyng whiche may ease necessitie. Fynally yf none of these helpe, the father wil not forsake those that be his: for he that geueth the greater thynges, will caste the smaller thynges to them, whiche with all theyr hartes desyre after heauenly thinges, although they be not carefull for the worlde. Therefore lay not vp nor hoorde not for a long tyme, bee not vexed with carefulnes of meate without whiche ye cannot liue, neyther with carefulnes of apparell that coureth youre body, and kepeth you from colde. Is not the lyfe more precyous than meate? Is not the body more precyous than the garment? He that hath geuen these better thynges, and hath geuen them to suche as were not careful, shall it greue him to nourisshe and preserue that which he hath geuen with these thinges of lesse valewe and estimation? If ye desire an exaumple, looke vpon other lyuyng thynges, whiche the maker of all thinges hath made for youre sake. Hath he not prouyded a lyuyng for al thinges that he hath made? Consider the birdes of the aier: they sow not, they reape not, they lay not vp in barnes, carefull for tyme to come, they liue from day to day without all carefulnes: whatsoeuer they get, they take it ioyfully, & yet the heauenly father geueth meate vnto them all. And wil he disappoynte ye can not serue God and mām.

What ye shall eate or drinke, &c.

poynte you whome he estemeth farre aboue the byrdes? And if he be carefull ouer you (as he is in dede) is not your carefulnes in vayne? If he forsake you, what shall youre carefulnes preuayle? As he hath geuen a body after his owne deuise, so will he geue a liuing after his owne deuise.

The texte. ¶ Which of you by carefull thoughte, can adde one cubite vnto his stature? And why care ye so for rayment? Consyder the lilies of the feelde howe they growe. They labour not, they spinne not. And yet I say vnto you: Not Salomon in all his royaltie was apparayled lyke one of these. Wherefore yf god so apparayleth the grasse of the feelde whiche standyng this day, to morow is cast into the furnace, shall he not much more doe the same for you, o ye of litle fayth?

Mo not Salomon in all his royaltie &c.

Wel ye se how profitable ye carefulnes of the minde is about such thinges? what auayle is there (be he neuer so carefull) that can adde one cubite to the stature of his body? But euery mannes body though he thynke nothyng vpon it groweth with certayne increase vnto a quantitie appoynted of god. If thou cast away all care, thy body shal be nothing the shorter. If thou be vexed with care thy body shall bee nothyng the hygher. Therefore he that maketh the body bigge and strong without thy carefulnesse, he will prouyde liuyng for thee without thy carefulnes, who doeth withdraw thee from care of those thinges whiche be not gotten without our diligence. It is great folishnes therfore to feare leste ye should lacke foode, for as much as ye see that birdes be prouided for sufficiently. And now leste ye should be careful for prouision of apparel for the body, consider the lilies whiche doe spring and growe in the fieldes without the care of any man. They labour not, nor spinne not, and who doeth prouyde them of apparell, as semeth good to hym, who but the heauenly father? And he doth so prouide, that neyther Salomon the notable ryche & gay king was euer so apparelled, whan he chiefely did set foorth the glory of his riches, as one of these poore lilies, smally regarded and set by, which grow not onely in gardens, whet man bestoweth some labour and diligence, but grow also in medowes of their own accorde. For the labour & care of mā can make nothing so elegant and fit as the prouidence of nature. And if the heauenly father doth garnish and clothe so freshely the vile grasse, which shortely shall perishe, and to day is freshe in the fieldes, and to morowe cut downe, and dryed and caste into the furnes: why haue ye so litle trust in him, sith he hath geuē you thinges of greater excellentie, and sith he hath made you to be immortal, and sith also he hath specially prepared you for the glory of hys name, that ye will thinke that ye shall lacke apparell, which ye ought to seke for and prepare, not for adournyng and gaynesse, but for necessitie and nedefulnes?

Thy texte. Therefore take no thought, saying: what shall we eate, or what shal we drinke, or wherwith shal we be clothed? After all these thinges the Gentiles seke. For your heauenly father knoweth that ye haue nede of all these thinges. But rather seke first the kingdome of God and the rightcousnes therof, and al these thinges shalbe cast vnto you. Be ye not careful for to morowe, for to morowe shall care for it self: sufficient is vnto the day, his owne trauayle.

Therefore ye that haue god to your father so benignely prouiding for the birdes, prouiding for floures and grasse, of the whiche the one lacketh reason, the other hath no feling: sith ye se and perceiue that he tendreth & maketh so much of you, enduing your body, which is made with merueylous prouidence, with a soule reasonable, and like vnto the angelical mindes, not disdaining that ye shoulde be called his children: chosing you out from emong all men through his free charitie, by whose pure lyfe and sincere doctrine he might be knowen & glorified through out all mankinde, whō he hath appointed to thinheritaūce of the euerlastyng lyfe: Cast away this carefulnes of vile and filthy thynges, & saye not doubtfully and fearefully, what shall we eate, what shal we drinke, or what shall we put on. These be the sayinges of ỹ heathen and not of Christen men, for they either beleue not that god is, or els beleue not that he is carefull ouer men. Neither haue they learned that there is any other better life, to set their mynde and care vpon. Therfore distrustyng goddes helpe & puttyng mannes felicitie in thynges of the bodye, they prepare with muche carefulnes those thinges, that do perteyne to their liuing & apparel, or other commoditie of the body. They leape for ioy when these thynges chaunce vnto them, they sounde for feare, when these thynges be in daunger: They be vexed with sorowfulnes, and sumtyme hang themselfes, when these thynges bee taken awaye. And thus through carefulnes cleauyng vnto these corruptible thinges, they neither liue pleasauntly here, nor can lift vp their hartes vnto the study and desire of heauenly thynges. Emong men, who is so wicked a father, that wil not prouide for his children thinges necessary for the sustentacion of theyr life? Ye haue a father so riche, so bountefull, so circumspecte, that he is sufficient for all, so enriche all, and leue nothyng vnprouided for, be it neuer so litle or vile. And feare ye that he will not prouide for his children these thynges, without the whiche they cannot lyue? Laye this carefulnes vpon him, he knoweth well that ye haue nede of all these thynges. And he is not so harde that he wyl withdraw thinges necessary from such as be occupied in his busines. But sum wyll saye: what then? Shall we not gette vs with oure handye worke whereby we maye norishe our selues, our wyfe and our children, whereby we maye ease the pouertie of the poore? Yes truely, but wythout all carefulnes.

For truely the common people dothe double their misery, bothe labouryng with the body, and beyng also carefull in the mynde. They sowe, beyng carefull lest that whiche they sowe should not cum vp, they mowe beyng carefull lest the warrier or the theefe should take awaye that whiche is cut downe before it be laied vp in the barne, they lay vp in theyr graner, beeyng carefull lest any infection should hurte their corne, or lest any fyer should rise and destroy it. Finally because they haue an yie to plenty, and not to the present necessitie, they heape vppe for a long time, and they neuer haue ynough as thoughe they were sure to lyue longer. Wherfore if the matter so requireth, ye muste labour, but without al carefulnes. Yf ye chaunce to haue money without fraude, and muche busynes, take it: but in suche wyse, that the carefulnes thereof, withdrawe you not hyng frō the busynes of the gospel. For your matters are greater than that the carefulnes of lighte, trieflyeng, & corruptible thynges should withdrawe you from them. Let your chefe care be aboute that good thyng, in comparison of the whiche, these worldly thynges be of no value nor reputacion. The kyngdome of God must be set vppe, that is to saye, the doctrine of the gospell, by the which we attayne vnto the heauenly inheritaunce. Wherof I haue chosen you to be the preachers and setters furth, and haue showed you what excellent vertues be nedeful to the doyng of this thyng, that is bothe to loue your enemyes, and to wyshe well vnto them, who seketh your destruccio. These thynges because they be chiefe and highest, whiche come not vnto you from youre father without your diligence and carefulnes, ye must first & chiefly seke

ly seke for them. The other smaller thinges whiche pertayne vnto the necessitie of this life, the goods gracious father wyll caste vnto you as an augmentation, and that of his owne accorde, without any carefulnes on your behalfe, that for bothe causes ye shoulde render thankes vnto his bountifulnes, bothe because he hath geuen you those high and cheefe thinges, you endeuoryng vnto the same: and also because he hath caste vnto you these thynges, without any carefulnes on your behalfe. He wyll not haue you greued with cares, whiche maketh you more troubled, but not the better. And this busines that ye take in hande, is so great and weighty, that it requireth ỹ whole mynde, fyd and voyded from all cares. Wherfore as men that liue th from daye, to daye, beynge contente with thynges presente & at hande, be not greued nor vexed wyth carefulnes of thynges to cum, lyke as the common sorte of men dothe, doublyng theyr affliction, both doyng what they can to prouide for the present necessitie, and troubling themselues with feare of thinges to cum. Whatsoeuer this daie offereth vnto you, receyue it wt thankes geuing. Let the morow care for it self whatsoeuer it bryngeth. Yf it bryng any good, ye shall not hange in hope: yf it bryng any yll, ye shall not preuent your trouble, with feare of yll to cum. This life hath his afflictions, whiche it needeth not to double with feare. For it is ynoughe to suffer them, when they cum: so that it is not needful for feare to make them presente before they cumme. Tyme doth alter and bryng these thinges in mannes lyke, myngling ioye with sorow we, and yet all shall tourne you vnto good, yf ye take well in worthe whatsoeuer shall chaunce, and sette your care wholy vpon the heauenly kyngdome.

We ye not carefull for to morowe.

¶ The. vii. Chapiter.

The text. Judge not, that ye be not iudged. For as ye iudge so shall ye be iudged. And with what mesure ye mete, with the same shall other men measure to you.

Here is an other thyng also, wherin I woulde ye shoulde be farre from the manners of the Scrybes and Phariseis. For they pardon themselues in great and greuous synnes, but agaynst theyr brother beyng an offender, they be moste vnmercyfull iudges, yea falsely reprouyng thynges that be well, sinistrally expoundyng thynges that be doutfull, makyng very muche of thynges that be light and small: Finally if they see a manne fall into any greuous cryme, they endeuour more to destroye hym, than to heale and saue hym. And yet herein they seke for a name of ryghteousnes, because they be very slowe and sore against other mennes faultes, where as they do it neyther for the loue of their neighboures, (whome they desyre rather to be destroied than corrected, and to be slaundered openly, rather than amended,) neyther for the hatred of vice, whereas they maintayne and pardon theyr owne vices farre greater than the others. But the iudgementes that ye haue, must sauour of the euangelicall charitie, whyche redily dothe forgeue, which misdemethe no man rashely wythout cause, which dothe expounde euery doubtefull thyng to the best, whiche doth gently tolerate and ſuffer many thynges, whiche deſyreth rather to heale than to punyſhe whiche conſyderyng her owne infirmitie and weakenes, ſo iudgeth other mennes offences, as ſhe woulde be iudged offendyng her ſelfe. Finally ſhe taketh not vpon her an high countenaunce in chiding and checking other mennes faultes, if ſhe finde her ſelfe gylty in lyke or in greater. Fyrſt ſhe becummeth her owne iudge, before ſhe blameth or monyſheth other. And in the meane ſeaſon it chaunceth to thoſe high minded menne, that the example of an vniuſt iudgement, lighteth vpon the iudges themſelues, and they finde other like iudges ouer theyr like, as they were ouer others. Iudge not ye therfore after ſuche ſorte, leſte ye be iudged in like maner of others. For els it ſhall cumme to paſſe, that as ye iudge other men, ſo other men ſhall iudge you. And as ye meaſure to other men, ſo other men ſhall meaſure to you. For like as a good turne prouoketh a good turne, and mercifulnes prouoketh mercifulnes, ſo reproke prouoketh reproke, and cruelnes prouoketh cruelnes. He that ſpeaketh yll by his neyghboure, ſhall be as yll ſpoken by.

Why ſeeſt thou a mote in thy brothers eye, and markeſt not the beame in thyne owne eye? or howe ſayeſt thou to thy brother: ſuffer me to plucke oute a mote oute of thyne eye, & beholde a beame is in thyne owne eye? Thou hipocryte, fyrſte caſte out the beame oute of thyne owne eye, and then ſhalte thou clerely ſee to plucke oute a mote out of thy brothers eye. The texte

For no men be ſo ſore agaynſte the light offenſes of theyr neyghboure, as they that ſwarme with much greater vices. One ſclandereth his brother becauſe he weareth a looce garmente, where he hymſelfe is full of enuy. An other ſpeaketh euell of his brother, becauſe being ouercome with weakens of the fleſhe he lyethe a concubyne, where as he himſelfe is wholly the ſeruaunt of auarice and ambicion. An other abhorreth his brother becauſe he is a greate bibber, whereas he hymſelfe hath in his harte a numbre of murders and ſorceries, beyng ſo blynde that he can not ſee his own bunches, and yette can ſpye a lytell watte in his neyghboure. What a wrong and waiwarde iudgemente is this? Euery mã ought to be a ſharpe iudge in his owne faultes, and more milde in other mennes. Euery man ought to loke narrowly to his owne faultes, and not to be ouer buſy in other mennes. And euery man ought fyrſt to be hys owne phyſician, before he laye handes on an other man.

Why doeſte thou ſee a mote in thy brothers eye, and canſte not ſee a blocke in thyne owne eye? or with what face doeſte thou ſaye to thy brother: Lette me caſte a mote out of thyne eye, where as thou carrieſte a blocke in thyne owne eyes? Thou hypocryte whiche doeſte hunte for prayſe of holynes emong menne, not of thyne owne goodnes, but of other mennes eupilles, fyrſte caſte the blocke out of thyne owne eye, and than loke with thy pure and cleane eye, whether there by any mote whiche thou mayeſt caſte out of thy brothers eye. Like as with the eye we iudge the thynges of the body: ſo with the mynde, we iudge the thinges of the mynde. Therfore that muſt be faultles, wherewith we iudge another mannes faulte. And he muſt fyrſt teache himſelfe, whiche taketh vpon hym to teache others: and he muſt be his owne iudge, whiche entendeth to gyue ſentence of other: and he muſte monyſhe hym ſelfe, whiche goethe about to monyſhe others. Thou hipocryte firſte caſt oute, &c.

Geue not ye that which is holy vnto dogges, and caſte not your pearels before ſwine, leſte they treade them vnder theyr feete: and the other turne agaynſt you and all to rente you. The texte

And these thynges perteyne chiefly vnto them, whiche take cure and charge of the people. And although I woulde ye shoulde be prompte and redy to do all men good, and to suffer them that do you wronge, and to be mylde, gentyll, and indifferent towardes them that fall by mannes infirmity and weakenes: Finally to be suche towardes theim whiche be peruerse and frowarde, that ye had rather to amende them, then to distroye them: yet I woulde not that the mysteries of the euangelicall wysdome, shoulde be vttered and declared indifferently to the worthy and vnworthy.

For lyke the Iewes dooe so esteme theyr mysteries and holy thynges, that they kepe them from the dogges, whiche is a fylthy cattel: Ye fryche menne so regarde theyr precious pearles, that they wyll not caste them to the hogges lyke madde menne: ye whiche haue in possession the holy thynges in dede, whiche do passe all precious pearles, be they neuer so hyghe of pryce, beware that ye caste not the ryches and treasure of the ghospell vnto suche as be vnworthye. For they be dogges, whiche beynge wholy geuen to prophane and worldly thynges, abhorre those thynges that sauoure of holynes. They be swyne, whyche beyng wholy drowned in fylthy pleasures, do deteste the pure and chaste doctrine of the ghospell. Rotten karcases and fylthye bometynge is more pleasaunte vnto dogges, than all sawse and swete spices.

The swyne had rather haue myre, than precious stones. Therfore whosoeuer doeth openly despise holsome doctrine, beeynge without all hope of anye good frutte: ye ought not to put into them the secretes of the heuenly doctrine, leste by occasion they maye be prouoked to be worse than euer they were before: and leste the same chaunce by them, whiche shoulde happē yf a man shoulde caste margarites to swyne, or holy thynges to dogges. For dogges wyll not onely vnreuerently vse the holy thyng, but also beyng prouoked, if they be cast at, will run vpō you, and teare you with their teeth. And the swyne will treade with theyr feete the precious stones like rubbell and rubbishe. So the dogge is not the holyer for the holy thynge, but doth prophane and defyle the holy thyng: and the swyne is not the trymmer for the precious stones, but doth defyle the pureneys of them. Lykewise men of desperate malice, do skorne the holy doctrine as a foolishe thyng, when they knowe it, and do falsely reproue it as a wicked thynge: and dooe trouble and putte thē to busynes, whiche dooe teache it. Wherfore the wisdome of the ghospell must be communicated & deliuered vnto thē, that be dekyrous of it, or at the leaste to such as be curable. All thinges must not furthwith be cōmitted to all men, but as euery man liueth a proffe of his towardnes and profityng: so certaine secretes must be opened vnto him.

The texte.

Aske and it shall be geuen you: seke and ye shall fynde: knocke and it shall be opened vnto you. For whosoeuer asketh, receiueth: and whosoeuer seketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. Is there any man emong you, which if his sonne aske bread, will geue him a stone: or if he asketh fyshe, wyll he offer hym a serpente? If ye than beeyng euyll canne geue youre children good gyftes, howe muche more shall your father geue good thynges, if ye aske of him.

Aske and it shal be geuē you, &c.

These excellente iewelles lyke as ye ought not to cōmunicate thē to all men: so they cum not from God the father to suche as be sluggishe & ydell. He geueth these thinges, but vnto suche as gredely craue thē: he denieth not these thynges to them that seke them diligently: he restreigneth not from this treasure, them that knocke importunatly. Aske therfore of the father not gēmes or golde, but thele true and inestimable riches of the mynde: aske I saye, and ye shal haue your asking. Seeke and ye shall finde, knocke and it shalbe opened vnto you. Your father is riche & bountifull, he denieth none, he enuieth none his ryches, but he wyll haue theyr pryce and value knowen. But he dothe not knowe the pryce of thē, whiche desireth faintly. Therfore whoso dothe aske as he ought, he receyueth: whoso seketh gredely, he findeth: whoso knocketh at the doore instantly, to him it shall be opened. It is he that asketh well, which asketh holsome thinges, and whiche asketh with a sure trust: he seketh well which seketh with contynuall desyre: he knocketh well, whiche doth prouoke and moue goddes goodnes wyth good workes.

And in case ye receyue not forthwith that ye aske, yet distruste not the bountifulnes and liberalitie of your father. For he wil geue whan nede shal require, and asmuche as shalbe nedeful, yf ye persteuer and continue. For god is as sone entreated of his children, as manne being a father is intreated of his children. For what father is there emong you so vnkynde, that yf his sonne require a profitable thyng, as is bread, wil he not geue him that he requireth, but for bread wyll he geue him stones? Or if he aske hym fyshe for to eate, wil he geue hym a serpent in stede of fishe? Truely he would denye it, yf his sonne should aske hym a stone, or serpente, or some other noysome thyng. Ye therfore whiche be naturally geuen to yll, and also in other thynges yll for the moste parte, yet in this behalfe, not by vertue but throughe the instigacion of nature, ye kepe this honest and naturall affection, that ye can geue profytable thynges vnto your children: Howe muche more than will your heauenly father beyng naturally good, do the same? Wyll not he geue vnto you his children, his good thynges, yf ye stryue and call vpon, with feruent and contynuall desyres, his bountefull goodnes?

If ye then beyng yll, cā geue your children good gyftes. &c.

¶ Therefore what soeuer ye will that men should do to you, do ye the lyke to them also: for this is the lawe and the prophetes.

The texte.

And as touchyng the lyke of manne, whiche is hurte or holpen with mutuall gentylnes and iniuries of bothe sydes, because it were to long to gene preceptes and lessons of them seuerally, I wyll geue you a generall rule, whiche is naturally planted and grauen in all men. Euery man well aduised, wylleth well to himselfe: but the common sorte of menne so loue themselfes that they wyll prouyde for their owne commoditie, to other mennes hurte and hyndraunce. But ye muste not do the lyke: but as ye would wyshe others to be towardes you, euen suche be ye towardes others. Euery man that is in ignoraunce desyreth to be taughte: euery man that dothe amysse, desireth louingly and secretly to be monished, rather than to be openly blamed: euery mā that is redy, would gladly haue ayde and succoure: no man would be backebyted nor slaundered, nor hindred of his good name. Therfore of this common witte and vnderstandyng, whiche is geuen to all men, let euery man take counsell of hymself, how he should vse hym selfe towardes his neyghboure. Let hym not do to another that whych he would not should be doen to himselfe: and that he desyreth to be done to hymselfe, let hym doe to another. This is the very briefe and sum of all thinges, whiche are taught by the lawe and prophetes: The whiche yf a man for lacke of leysure or for lacke of skylfulnes can not turne ouer and reade, yet hye euery man hath a rule at home in hym selfe, by the which he maye directe and ordre his actes and dedes, so that he desyre rather to folowe ryght reason, than lustes and desyres.

The texte. ¶ Enter in at the strayght gate: For wyde is the gate, and brode is the waye, that leadeth to destruccion: And manye there be whiche go in thereat. But streyghte is the gate, and narrowe is the waye, whiche leadeth vnto lyfe, and fewe there be that fynde it.

If these thynges seme harde vnto them that loue thys worlde, yf ye see the moste parte of men folowe the contrary, yet let nothyng trouble your mindes. The better the thynges be, the harder is the waye to them. Consyder ye rather whether this waye dothe leade, than the easy entrye in to it. Let it be, there be two gates: the one a narrowe gate, where no man can enter but by a straite and a narrowe waye, but this gate leadeth byandy to euerlastyng life: And another gate large and brode, where all men may enter by a brode and a playne waye, but it leadeth byandy to euerlastyng destruccion.

Enter ye therfore by the narrowe gate, and desyre rather to goe to euerlastyng lyfe with a fewe, than to euerlastyng perdicio with many. For the large waye restraineth no man with the lawes of godlynes: it fawneth vpon men wt those thynges whiche delyght the senses of the body and doe please the lustes of the mynde: and therfore it doth allure many vnto it, and within shorte tyme it sendeth them so intised, throughe the large gate into miseryes, that cānot be told, and delyuereth them being deceyued with false goodnes, vnto extreme and very ylles. Howe narrowe is the gate, howe streyght is the waye, that leadeth to lyfe. For it sheweth furth nothyng that is pleasaunt to the flesche: it is roughe and displeasaunt to many, and furthwith it doth offer vnto them, thinges that be paynful to nature: as pouertye, fastyng, watchyng, sufferyng of wronges, chastitie, sobernes. This gate receyueth not thē that swell with glorye of this worlde, this gate receyueth not thē, that be puffed vp with pryde, this gate receyueth not them that be bollē with excesse and ryot: this gate receyueth not them that drawe with them aboundaunce of worldly thynges. It receyueth none, but suche as be naked and vnburdened of all the desyres of this worlde, and as a man wolde say, theyr bodyes beyng put of, extenuated and fined into the spirite. Wherby it cummeth to passe, that this gate is found but of a fewe, because it is not spyed but with cleare eyes, which do clearly see those thynges that be spirituall.

And fewe there be that fynde it.

The texte. Beware of false prophetes, whiche cum vnto you in theyes clothynge: but inwardly they be rauening wolues. Ye shall knowe them by theyr frutes. Doe men gather grapes of thornes, or fygges of thistles? so euery good tree beareth good fruites; but a rotten tree beareth yll fruites: a good tree can not beare yll fruites, neither can a rotten tree beare good fruites. Euery tree that beareth not good fruites, is hewen downe and cast into the fyer. Therefore by theyr frutes ye shall knowe them.

Beware of false prophetes.

But as touchyng suche men as doe dayly, with lust, excesse, pryde, auarice, & with suche other fylthy desyres, and laughing lyke mad menne, goe hedlynge into theyr owne destruccion, ye be in no perill: (for in folowynge of them it is rather madnes, than errour.) ye muste rather beware of them which compasse with you hauynge a cloke of godlynes, where as they be enemyes of godlynes. They be alwayes talkyng of God the father, of the euangelycall doctryne, of the kyngdome of heauen, theyr apparell is course and symple, theyr cheekes be leane with fastyng, theyr body is worne awaye with leanesse, they praye long, they geue to the poore, they teache the people, and expounde

the holy ſcriptures: and being diſguiſed with the cloke of theſe thynges they cum vnto you apparelled as though it were with ſhepe ſkinnes, whereas inwardly they be rauenyng wolues, and deuourers of the euangelycall flocke. It can not be harde to knowe the wolfe from the ſhepe, yf eche of them vtter his owne voyce, and yf eche of them be couered with his owne ſkynne. But what ſhal a man doe where as the wolfe counterfeytyng the ſhepe bothe with the ſhepes ſkynne, and the ſhepes voyce, creepeth into the ſhepe folde, not to becumme a ſhepe, but moze cruelly to rent and teare the ſheepe? The wolfe chaũgeth his voice and profeſſeth the name of Chriſte, he profeſſeth the doctrine of the goſpell, but to the theintent he maye poiſon with his hereſye, them that be vnwares and negligent. He counterfeyteth godly wozkes, to thintent he may the rather abuſe the ſimplicitie of other to hys deſyres. Therfoze ye whome I haue choſen to be the keperꝰ and feders of my flocke, muſte diligently take heede of theſe. Ye ſhall eaſely fynde out this counterfeyted iuggyng, yf ye loke narrowly vpon, not the tytle and veſture, but the verye deedes whiche doe diſcloſe the coꝛrupte mynde. Foꝛ albeit they teache well, yet they dooe not in dede the thynge that they teache. Euery tree hath hys peculyar and proper fruit, whiche by the taſte bothe declare the ſtocke. If ye obſerue and marke diligently theyꝛ lyfe and manners, ye ſhall fynde that they ſtande in theyꝛ owne concepte: they loke foꝛ theyꝛ owne profyte, proude, reuengers, enuiouſe, backebiters, deſyryng of glozye, geuen to the belly, and alwayes moze diligente in theyꝛ owne matters, thã in the matters of theyꝛ flocke, oꝛ the gholpel. I haue ſhewed you which be the frutes of the euangelycal tree, that is to ſay, a minde farre from all pryde, full of gentylnes, & not deſyrous of vengeaunce, a minde deſpiſynge all pleaſures of this woꝛlde, a mynde deſpiſynge riches, and gredelye deſyryng the godlynes of the gholpell, a mynde prompt and ready to dooe good to all menne, a mynde pure and cleane from all luſtes and deſyres, noꝛ hauing no nother iye but to God onely, a minde refuſing no affliction oꝛ trouble, ſo that he maye promote and ſette foꝛward the doctrine of the gholpell, a mynde lokyng after no rewarde in this woꝛld foꝛ his well doynges, neither glozye, noꝛ pleaſure, noꝛ ryches, a mynde that wyllethe well euen vnto his yll wyllers and doeth good to them whiche doe him hurte. Whoſoeuer trulye in dede bryngeth foꝛth theſe fruites, he is the euangelicall tree. Therefoze they that ſhewe themſelfes to be prophetes, and boaſte thẽſelfes of this tytle, they that feyne themſelfes by religioule apparell to be ſhepe, where as in harte and affectiõ they be wolues, they muſt be eſtemed and iudged of theſe fruites. Regarde not the boughes and the barke. Theſe oftentymes be common to thẽ that growe in the fielde and them that growe at home, to the holſome and vnholſome: the fruite once taſted bothe declare the iuyce of the tree. And yf ye ſee in theſe, auarice, arroganey, enuy, deſyre of vengeaunce, diſſemblyng, and ſuch other, whiche are cleane contrary to the fruites of the euangelicall myndes: thynke not that any good fruite wyll ſpryng of the ſame trees. Foꝛ what man is ſo mad to gather grapes of thoꝛnes, oꝛ fygges of brambles? that is to ſaye, of roughe and wylde ſhrubbes, moſte pleſaunte fruite? Lykewyſe it is emonge menne. A very good tree, and bearyng gentyll iuyce in the roote of the mynde, bringeth furth good fruite. On the other ſyde, a very yll tree, what leaues and barke ſo euer it hath, yet it bryngeth furth yll fruites. And theſe can not be turned noꝛ chaunged: ſeyng their nature is vtterly repugnaũt. Foꝛ he that hath a cleane and a syncere mynde, muste nedes expresse in dedes, the syncerenes of his heart and affectiō: and againe, he that hath a faulty and an infected minde, can not expresse in deedes, those thinges whiche declare a very good man. Although by the inglynges and colour of holynes, sumtyme he deceyueth vnware men, truely he can not deceyue God: Therefore they that be colourable good, let them leaue of theyr coloure, and become good in dede.

For emonge men, of an yll tree, maye be made a good. But yf he continue in his frowarde counterfeytyng let hym feare, leste he suffer the lyke of god, that will reuenge it, that the vnfruitful tree suffreth of the tylliman. And what dothe it suffer? It is cut down and caste in the fyer. So, whosoeuer beyng in the kingdome of God bryngethe furthe no fruite, or suche fruite as is vncumlye for his profession, vnlesse he repent, he shall be caste into the euerlastynge fyer. Therfore by this token ye shall knowe them, that is to saye, of the fruites, which yf ye fynde in them to be eupl, ye shall remoue them from the cure of the flocke: and shall not receyue them into the kingdome of heauen, nor coūte them for Christians, but for enemyes: not to thintent to hurte them, but to beware leste they hurte the flocke, beyng myngled among them. For there is nothinge more daungerouse than vngodlynes, if it getteth kaythe and authoritie, thoroughe the false coloure of holynes.

The texte. ¶ Not euery one that saythe vnto me, Lorde, lorde, shall enter into the kyngdome of heauen, but he that doeth the wyll of my father whiche is in heauen. Many wyll saye to me on that daye: Lorde, Lorde, haue we not prophecied in thy name? and haue we not cast out deuils in thy name? and doen many miracles in thy name? And than wil I confesse vnto them: I neuer knewe you, departe from me ye that worke iniquitie.

All they that profesle me onely with woordes, shall not be counted worthie the kingdom of heauen: for it is not the tytle that maketh a Christian man, but the lyfe. And I will not furthwith knowledge them for my disciples, whiche saye vnto me religiously, Lord, Lord, when in dede they serue diuerse other lordes: that is to saye, Mammon and ryches, the belly and ambition. Whom therfore shall I thinke worthy the kingdom of heauen? Them that haue vtterly refused worldly delyzes, and hartily do obey the will of the father which is in heauen, whose will I preach vnto you. For whatsoeuer I teache you, it cummeth from him. And truly my name shal nothing profite them which lacke my spirite and workes, specially in that daye whan rewardes shall be appointed accordyng vnto euery mannes desertes, not by mans iudgement, whiche oftentymes dothe fayle, but by the iudgement of god: and the chefe shalbe secluded from the goates: so that those thynges shal not profite them, whiche nowe seme amongest menne, a certaine godly thing, and passing the doinges of manne. For than when they shall see euerlastyng life prepared for them, whiche folowyng the doctryne of the ghospell haue declared themselfes to be my true disciples: and agayne when they shall see euerlasting punishmente prepared for them that shall be remoued from the companie of the godlye, many beeyng sore aferde shall come and desire nowe to be knowen of God, where as they haue counterfeited before menne the chiefe and moste excellent disciples of Christe, and preachers of the ghospell, and they shall saye vnto me: Lorde knowest thou not vs thy seruauntes? haue not we prophecied in thy name? haue not we chased awaye diuels in thy name? haue we not reised vppe dead menne in thy name? haue we not put awaye poysons and diseases in thy name? haue we not wrought other wonders in thy name? and by these dedes glorified thy name we haue declared vs to be thyne by so many argumentes and tokens, & nowe doeste thou not knowe vs? Than shall they heare this answere of me. Truely I neuer knew you, no not than when ye dyd these thinges. I heard you say, lorde, lorde, but I neuer perceiued in you ỹ harte of faithfull seruauntes. I heare muche speakyng of my name, but I neuer felt my spirite in you: I heare of myracles whiche wer doen in my name, but I heare not of those speciall fruites, by the whiche the true disciple of Christ is knowen. Wherefore seyng that than, when ye did set furth your selues amongest menne in my name, ye were not myne in dede, but vnder the coloure of my professyon ye serued the dyuell, departe nowe awaye from me, and goe vnto hym whose spirite ye haue receiued, and whose wyll ye dyd obey. What title or name soeuer they haue, yf they worke vnrighteousnes, they shall not be partakers of my kyngdome.

Depart fro me ye that worke iniquitie.

The texte.

Euerye one therefore that heareth these wordes of me, and doeth the same, I wyll lyken hym to a wyse man, whiche buylt his house vpon a rocke: and a shower of rayne fell, and the floudes came, and the windes blewe, and bette vpon the house, and it was not ouerthrowen, because it was grounded vpō the rocke. And euerye one that heareth of me these wordes, and doth them not, shall be likened vnto a folyshe man, whiche builte his house vpon sande: and a shower of rayne fel, and the floudes came, and the windes blewe, and bette vpon the house, and it was hurled downe, and the fall of it was great.

But lyke as the fruyte of the tree can haue no good taste, vnlesse the roote haue good iuyce: So the buyldyng, be it neuer so gorgious, high, and galaunte outwardelye, shall not be sure, vnlesse it be stayed vpon a sure and sounde foundacion. He that hath my spirite, that is to saye, a sincere affection, regarding nought elles but the glorye of God, he is a tree of a good roote: So he that stayethe not vpon the vayne thynges of this worlde, but vpon the true good thynges of the mynde, and doeth continue constantly in the same: he verye polytikely buildeth the buyldyng that neuer shall falle.

Therefore whosoeuer heareth my woordes, & not heareth onely, but reposeth them inwardly in his harte, to thintente he maye expresse in his deedes that, that he hath learned: I saye that he is lyke a manne both wyse and politike, who to thintente he maye buylde a sounde and sure buyldyng, firste of all he deuiseth and loketh for a sounde and a sure foundacion, whereupon he maye sette his buyldyng to endure agaynst all tempestes of wethers. For in a calme wether euery buyldyng standeth safely, but the winter proueth the soundnes of the buyldyng. Some tyme aboundaunce of rayne falleth downe and beateth vpon it: Sometyme the fluddes increased with rayne, all to shake it with greate violence: Sometyme the hurlyng of the wyndes beateth agaynste it, and beeyng beaten and layed at by so many wayes, it standeth styll and moueth not. Why so? Because it standeth vpon a sure foundacion.

Because it was grounded vpō the rocke.

The buylder dyd forsee all these thynges, and therfore he sette it vpon a sounde rocke, throughe whose ayde it neded nothynge to feare all those assaultes. Agayne whosoeuer heareth my woordes, and heareth them onelye, and dothe not repose them in his hearte, nor expresse them in his dedes, is lyke vnto the recheles buylder, whoe not forseynge the stormes and tempestes, setteth hys buyldynge vpon the sande, whyche is a foundacion euer fletyng and fayling, and nothyng trusty. Afterwardes falleth aboundaunce daunce of rayne, the violence of ryuers runneth vpon it, the stormе of windes runneth agaynste it, and the house is leused and plucked vp from the foundacion, and falle the downe with a great crashe. Why so? Because the buyldynge was goodly and gaye to see to, but it stode vpon an vnprofitable foundacion. Therefore your principall chiefe care and consideracion must be of your foundacion: fasting, almesse, prayer, simple apparell, finally myracles, be lyke a gay building. But if the minde of hym that dothe them, loke after vaine praise of men, after lucre, or after pleasure, all shal fall when the sore stormе of temptacion drawеth nere. But whose affeccion and desire is surely fastened in the doctrine and promyses of the ghospel, lokyng for the rewarde of his well doinges of God onely, he shall be able to stande agaynst all displeasures and iniuries, against the cruel persecutiōs of the wicked, against the craftye assaultes of heritikes: Fynally agaynst al the eggyns of Sathan, and against death it selfe, shall he be hable to stande styffely, without discouragement, vntill that day when that Perseueraunce, the conquerour of all euels, shall receyue her crowne.

The texte. ¶ And it came to passe, that whan Jesus had ended these sayinges, the people were astonied at his doctryne. For he taught them as hauyng power, and not as the Scribes.

Whan Jesus had ended these sayinges, the multitude mused muche at this newe trade of doctrine. For they heard no suche thyng of the Scribes or Phariseis, whiche yf they added any thyng vnto Moyses lawe to bryng them selfe in estimacion with the people, they vsed to brynge furthe certaine weriche constitucions, of washyng their handes before meate, of washyng the bodye yf any came home from market, of washinge of cuppes, of paying of tythes, that came of mintes and of rue. Jesus taughte no suche thing, but where as he set furth by miracles what he could do in dedes, he declared himselfe to be the same in doctrine, forbydding wyth authoritie, that whiche the lawe fauourably did suffer, and requiryng that whiche the lawe did not require. The lawe suffered diuorce for euery cause: Jesus forbade all diuorces vnlesse it were for aduoutry. The lawe forbade nothyng but to kill: Jesus required, that we shoulde not be angry with our brethren, and declared euidently that he was not onely the interpreter, but the lorde of the lawe also: not the minister, but the author. Finally a certaine lyuelines, of his perfecte doctrine, and a certaine naturall strength of trueth, touched and enspired the simple multitude whiche was desirouse to learne, and neuer had experience of the lyke in their Scribes and Phariseis.

For he taught this as hauyng power.

And not as the scribes.

¶ The.viii. Chapiter.

The, texte. ¶ And whan he was cum downe from the mountayne, muche people folowed hym. And beholde, there came a lepre, and worshypped hym, saying: Lorde yf thou wilte, thou mayest make me cleane. And Jesus put furth his hande, and touched him, saynge: I wyl, be thou cleane. And furthwith his leprosye, was clensed. And Jesus sayethe vnto him: See thou tell no man but goe and shewe thy selfe to the priest, and offer the gifte, that Moyses commaunded to be offered for a wytnes vnto them.

Therfore

THerefore whan Jesus had spoken these weyghtye and highe thynges in the mounte, not to euerye man, but chiefly to hys disciples, and to suche as were able to folowe them with cherefulnes of the spirite: he dothe abase hymselfe agayne to the humylytie and lownes of the common sorte, whiche had many vnweldy, weake, lame, and sycke, whom he thought to allure to the desire of heauenly thynges, throughe torporall benefytes. And in healyng of them he dyd the same by signification, whiche he did by his doctrine in healyng the diseases of the mynde.

Eyther of these thynges gaue credite and autoritie to other. We beleue hym the more willingly whom we loue, and loue is wunne by benefites. And his sayinge weyeth weil with vs, whom we see and perceyue to be so mightye in dedes. Therefore when Jesus left the hill and came into the playne, diuerse companies of men drew vnto him on euery side, to thintent that many might beare witnes of the miracles that he shoulde do.

Wherfore a greate numbre being gathered togethet, beholde, there cummeth furth a certayne man geuyng occasion of a miracle, and teachyng them withal, as by a figure, from whence and by what sayethe, they that wer diseased wyth the leprye of the soule, should seke remedy. For there came forth a certayne man hauyng his body infected with the lepry. This disease emong the Jewes was counted muche abhominable, and is thought to be suche, that no phisition can heale it. The iudgement of this disease, as of a sacrate thyng, was appoyncted vnto the prieftes, whiche searched out by meruayloufe and diuers obseruacions, whether the bodye of anye man wer infected wyth the verave lepry or not. It was not leful for them that wer iudged to haue this disease, to cum in the companye of men, neyther was it lefull to touche the body which was defyled with this disease. This man therfore iudged of the prieftes, and beyng fowle with the very lepry, durst yet cum to Jesus, which is the purifier and clenser of all. The desyre of health toke awaye shamefastnes, the approued goodnes of Jesus towardes all men made him bolde. So many examples of other, which returned home beyng made whole, made him to trust well: Therfore when he fel downe before Jesus and worshypped hym, he sayed: Lorde yf thou wilte thou mayste clense me. What would a proude pharise or one of Moyses prieftes haue done in this case? he would haue abhorred the vncleane and fylthy man, and would haue disdayned to haue talked wyth hym. But Jesus playing the parte of a good shepeherde, hauing delight in the mans fayth, whiche was ioyned with so greate modesty and coldenes, whiche also durst not desire to be clensed, vnlesse it myght stand with the pleasure of hym, who knowethe what is meete for euerye man, (but yet he doubted not but that he was able yf he would) Jesus (I saye) refused not the vncleane manne, but reched out his hande and touched hym. And here he dyd neglecte the lawe, as touching the letter. And spake suche wordes wherby he declared bothe the goodnes of his will, and the greatnes of his power. Because (sayd he) thou doest beleue that I can yf I wyll, I will: Be thou whole. And as soone as he had spoken, the skynne was chaunged, and the disease left hym, the people beeyng witnes of the same.

Lord if thou wilt ỹ mayest make me cleane.

And Jesus put forthe his hãde. &c.

After this, to thintente the myracle myght the better be beleued, and also

also the priestes haue no occasion of reproke to reproue or misconstrue that he should take vpon him auctoritie to iudge of the leprye, and to plucke vnto him the lucre and gaine which was wont to cum vnto them of suche as were cleansed of leprye, he sayeth vnto hym: See thou tel no manne that thou arte purged of the leprye. For it is not thy parte to iudge of thy selfe, and I take not vpon me the office of the priestes.

But go shewe thy selfe to the priest. &c.

Therfore firste of all go vnto the priest and shewe thy selfe vnto him, and if he declare the to be cleane, whiche heretofore hath declared the to be leprose, then shalt thou offer the gifte whiche Moyses commaunded to be offered of them, who chaunced to be cleansed of the leprye: leste afterward they lay vnto thy charge, and blame the which camest among the multitude: and me also which coulde not geue perfect health. For the gift whiche they receiue of thee as pure and cleane, shall reproue them yf hereafter for hatred of me, they begyn falsely to blame that that is done. For yf thou were not leprouse before, why dyd they remoue the from the congregacion? If thou be not nowe cleane, why haue they receiued of thee thy gyft, as of hym that was pourged & cleansed? Iesus would that the people shoulde testify how muche profyte the Leaper had by his faith, and howe lyghtly with a woorde he toke awaye all his disease, to thintente they myght geue eare vnto his doctrine with the same fayth, whereby they myght be healed of the diseases of the minde.

The texte.

¶ And whan Iesus was entred into Capernaum, there came vnto hym a Captayne and besought hym, saying: Lorde my seruaunte lyeth at home sicke of the Palsey, and is sore vexed. And Iesus sayethe vnto hym: whan I come I wyll heale hym. And the captayn aunswered, and saied: lord I am not worthy that thou shouldest cum into my house, but onely speake the worde, and my seruaunt shalbe healed. For I also my selfe, am a man vnder the authoritie of another, and haue soldiers vnder me, and I say vnto this man, go, and he goeth, and to another cum, and he commeth, and to my seruaunte do this, and he doth it. Whan Iesus hearde these wordes, he meruayled, and sayed to them that followed hym: Verely I say vnto you, I haue not found so great fayth in Israell. And I saye vnto you that many shal come from the East and weste, and shal sit with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob in the kyngdome of heauen. But the chyldren of the kyngdome shalbe caste out into the vtter darcknes: there shalbe wepyng and gnasshyng of teethe. And Iesus sayed vnto the Captayne: go thy waye, and as thou beleuest so be it vnto the. And his seruaunte was healed in the same houre.

Therfore after that he had taught the Iewes by thys facte and dede, that the waye vnto ealth was eafie by the sincerenes of fayth: So forth with he teacheth in the captayne of an hundred menne, that the waye vnto health, was not stopped from the Gentiles, so that they haue fayth mete and worthy for the ghospell. For whan he was entred into Capernaum, whiche is a towne not farre from the poole of Genesareth in the borders of Zabulon and Neptalim, there came vnto hym a certayne captayne, the whiche kynde of men, the Iewes abhorred for two causes. First because they be vncircumcyled for the moste parte, and alienes from Moyses lawe: secondlye because that kynd of lyfe is defamed commonly. But the good Iesus whiche came to heale all men, turneth not hym awaye neyther. The captayne maketh requeste vnto hym, saying: Lorde I haue a seruaunt at home, whom I loue entierly, for that he is faythfull and profitable in seruice: He nowe wholy vnprofitable, lyeth vpon his bedde, diseased with the palseye: and he is not ease, being now at deathes dore. And this kynde of disease, lyke as it is daun-gerouse and greuous: so is it not lyghtlye cured by the arte of Phisitians.

Jesus delightyng in the fayth of the man (whiche doubted not but that with a worde he was hable to heale his seruaunte beyng absent) to thintente he might declare vnto all menne, the fayth and truste of the man joyned wyth greate humilitie of harte, aunswered: I wyll come, and I wyll heale hym.

Whereunto (quod the Capitayne) Lorde I am no Jewe, I am a captayne to be abhorred of the Jewes, for twoe causes, and therefore muche vnworthye, that thou shouldeste enter into my house and be defyled wyth my companye. There is no nede of thy bodelye presence: Onelye saye the worde, and (suche is thy power and myght) furthwith my seruaunte shall be healed.
Thou haste aungels and messengers to whome thou mayeste commit suche dulines. I knowe by my selfe, I haue a ruler to whome I am subiecte, I am obediente to his commaundementes, neyther is it nedefull for him to do all thynges. It is sufficiente for hym to committe his matters wyth authoritie.
Agayne I haue souldiers vnder my rule, by whome I doo those thynges whyche be not meete for me. Onelye I geue my commaundemente, and they obey thesame: I commaund one to goe some whither, and he goeth.
I commaund another to cum, and he cummeth: Agayne vnto myne owne priuate seruaunte I saye, do this or do that, and he spedely doeth what he is commaunded. If my seruauntes obeye me beeyng a sinner and an abiecte:
howe muche more oughte youres to be obediente vnto youre commaunde-mentes. Jesus hearyng these thynges merueyled, not for that he was ignorante of the mannes faythe, but because he would cause all men to meruayle at it, and turnyng vnto the Jewes whiche folowed hym, and as it were castyng theym in the teeth with their vnbeleefe, sayed: This I assure you, hitherto haue I not founde so greate faythe in my people of Israell, as I haue founde in this straunger: whiche neyther knowethe the Prophetes, neyther hath receyued my doctryne, nor hath seen my miracles.

Ye standе in your owne conceyte, because ye be the children of the patriarches, whome god loueth, because ye are the peculiare people of god to whome this healthe and saluacion is promysed. But this I assure you: the tyme shalbe, that many shall come on euery syde from the vttermoste partes of the worlde, whom ye do lothe and abhorre as straungers and alyens, whiche shall enter in by fayth, and sytte in the kyngdome of heauen wyth Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and your fathers shall acknowledge them for theyr euangelicall faythe, as theyr lefull children, and shall take them to theyr table to be partakers of the euerlastynge felicitie. Contrarye wyse the chyldren of the kyngdome, whiche touchynge the fleshly kynrede, cummeth of the

When

When Jesus had spoken these thynges vnto the Jewes, to the intente they shoulde geue the more credite vnto his saying through the miracle, he turnyng vnto the captayne, sayeth: Go thy waye, and as thou haste beleued, so be it done vnto the. Clerelye declaryng that helth is not geuen, neyther to the stocke and kinred, neyther to the other merites, but to fayth onely whiche he required, and founde lacke of, in moste parte of the Jewes. And as he sayed, so the thyng folowed. For it was tried that the selfe same time the Capitaynes seruaunte was sodeynlye delyuered from his disease, that no manne shoulde suspecte that it was done by chaunce, or by the helpe of Phisicians. For as no man is sodeinly delyuered from the lepry after the course of nature: so the palsey forsaketh no man sodenly.

¶ And when Jesus was cum into Peters house, he sawe his wyues mother lyinge in bed, and sycke of a feuer. And he touched her hande, and the feuer lefte her: and she arose and ministred vnto them. When the euen drewe nere, they brought him many that were possessed with diuels. And he caste out the spirites with a worde, and healed all that were sicke, that that might be fulfilled, whiche was spoken by Esai the prophete, when he sayeth: he toke on him our infirmities, and bare our syckues.

The texte.

And he touched her hande & the feuer lefte her,

When he had shewed furth these and certayne other myracles, he withdrewe himselfe for a tyme from the multitude, and wente into a house that was common to Symon Peter and Andrewe his brother. There folowed on James and John. There he knewe that Peters mother in lawe hadde so greate a feuer, that she kepte her bed: and he beyng desyred to heale her tarved not but toke her by the hande and lyfte her vp, and forthwith her whole feuer wente awaye, lyuelines and cherefulnes returned, in somuche as she ministred and serued theim of meate: so clerelye was she delyuered from all grudgyng of the Ague. Truely no parte of the feuer remained, where as they whiche be healed by the arte of phisicians bee troubled longe tyme after their disease with feblenes and lothsumnes. Nowe whan night drewe on, a greate multitude cummethe thycke and swarmethe at the doores: lokyng that after his meate, he woulde retourne agayne vnto hys well doynge. As he came furthe, they offered vnto hym a meruayloule number that were vexed wyth diuerse diseases, and also demoniakes whyche were possessed wyth deuylles, he castynge oute the spirites, and puttinge awaye the diseases, healed them all: wherein also he did agreablye vnto his name. There was none so fowle and so horrible kynde of diseases, whyche Jesus woulde lothe and turne away from. There was none so vehemente or incurable, whyche furthewyth at his commaundemente dyd not forsake the man.

And healed all that were sicke,

Wyth a worde he healed all, freely he healed all, doyng nowe the selfe same thyng in takyng away indifferently the diseases of the bodye, whiche he went aboute to doe in takynge awaye synnes, whiche be the more fyerce diseases of the myndes. Truely for this he came into the worlde: and this was it, that Esay prophecied of him many yeres paste: he toke our infirmities wyllyngly vpon himselfe, and he dyd beare our diseases.

¶ When Jesus sawe muche people aboute him, he commaunded them to go vnto the other syde of the water. And a certayne Scribe came, and sayed vnto him: Maister I wyll folowe the whither soeuer thou goeste. And Jesus sayethe vnto him: the foxes haue holes, and the byrdes of the ayer haue nestes: but the soonne of man hath not where to reste hys heade.

And when Jesus sawe that the multitude wouldе not departe, thoughe he had healed all the sycke and diseased, and thoughe nyght were at hande, for nowe the sunne was gone to glade, but that they came thicke aboute hym on euery syde more and more: he commaunded his disciples to prepare him a ship to goe ouer the water, that by that meanes he myght bee delyuered from the multitude. This once heard, certayne of them departed home. But a certayne importunate Scribe folowed Jesus vnto the water syde, delyryng to bee receyued into the numbre of his disciples: whom he had seen so magnified of the people for his power in shewyng of miracles: not to thintent he would folowe his doctrine and lyfe, but that he might get him renoune and lucre of his miracles. He therfore cumming vnto Jesus, sayde: Master I will folowe the whither soeuer thou goest. It was a woorde mete for him that should haue been a disciple, yf the woorde and the harte had agreed. He put forth himselfe of his owne accorde, and offered hymselfe vnto all thynges, nor made no pretense of tarying. But Jesus neyther repelled the mannes importunitie, neyther layed vnto his charge his corrupte mynde, but secretely monyshed hym that he was no mete disciple for hym. nor himselfe lyke wyse no mete maister: for whosoeuer loketh after the commodities of this woorlde, ioyneth himselfe vnto hym but folyshly, whiche neyther had nor soughte for, neyther riches, nor glory, nor kyngdome in this woorlde: but inhearced extreme pouertie, ignominy and affliction: in so muche as he had not those thynges whyche the byrdes and beastes lacketh not. The fores (ye) although they haue no houses, yet haue they holowe dennes to hyde them in. The byrdes flyyng and wauoryng in the ayer, in the stede of houses haue nestes to rest them in. But the sonne of man so is destitute of all succours of this woorlde, that he hath no place to laye his head in. yf any manne delyre lucher? Master, yf he will, let him folowe me: but with harte and affectiō, and not onely with the steppes of the feete. So the Scribe knowyng his owne conscience, dyd forbeare to folowe hym.

The fores haue holes

But the sonne of mā hath not wher to rest his head.

Agayne one of them whiche began to be in the noumbre of his disciples, moued by frayltie and weakenes, when he heard of the extreme pouertie of Christe, tryed an occasion by sum colourе to slippe awaye from the disciples of Jesus: Lorde (ye) before I folowe the wholly, whither soeuer thou goest, suffer me first to returne home and burye my father. The rauke to the apperaūce semed godly, but Jesus willing to breathe that all thynges should be set a part in the matter of eternal lyfe healthe, and that herein all tarying and lingering is daūgerouse: suffered not the yonge man beyng of a good mynde, but yet feble and weake, to be intangled with bulynes of testamentes of the dead, vnder the pretence of goodlynes, and whiche he prouideth for the vile inheritaunce of the woorlde, to fall from the inheritaunce of heauen. Nay (ye) thou shalt not nede to bring home to doe with thy dead father, whiche hast forsaken thy selfe to the heauenly life, there will be ynow to burye thy father. The texte. And whan he entred into a shippe, his disciples folowed him. And beholde there arose a great tempest in the sea, in so muche that the ship was coucred with waues, and he was a slepe, and his disciples came vnto him, and waked him, saying: Lorde saue vs, we perishe: and he saythe vnto them: why are ye fearefull, ye of litle fayth? Than he arose, and rebuked the wyndes, and the sea, and there folowed a great caulme. And the men meruayled, saying: What maner of man is this, that bothe wyndes and sea obey hym?

Therefore when Jesus had sent awaye the multitude, and was entred into the ship, his disciples wayting vpon him, as he rowed, sodainly there rose a tempeste, and the water was so moued, that the waues ouerwhelmed the ship. Jesus in the meane season slept vpon a pillowe, signifiyng as it were by a figure, what perill there is in thynges here in the worlde, as often as they slepe beyng delighted with cõmodities and pleasures of this worlde, whiche haue taken vpon them to be in stede of Christ. But in these tempestes & troubles the disciples do shewe where we shoulde seke for succour. For they beyng amased in feare, pluche at Christe, and wake him out of his slepe. Lord (y they) saue vs, we be lost. For yet they beleued he was but only man, and that they Lorde saue vs coulde not be safe, vnlesse that he were awake. Therefore Jesus inyoyning to make them bolde and without feare, and conquerours against al assaultes of the most sore and vehement troubles, rebukyng their great feare: why feare ye (y he) ye men of litle fayth? Ye whiche haue seen so manye miracles, & haue hearde my doctryne, ought to be put in feare with nothyng, as though the helpe of God woulde fayle you in any place, if so bee that fayth and trust neuer fayle you, whiche as yet I se not in you so muche as ought to bee. After that Jesus had thus monished his disciples, he rose, and to thintent to shewe hym selfe the Lorde of all the elementes, he rebuked the wyndes, and the sea, and furthwith the tempest ceased, and there folowed a meruelous caulme, because it myght the more appere, that it was doen, not by the strength of manne, but by the power of God. For there is nothyng more disobedient or vnruly, than the sea once troubled, and yet at the Lordes commaundement it was sodainly turned into a great calme. Further the disciples and other whiche were in the shippe, muche mulyng at so meruelous a matter, sayde: what maner man is this? for vtterly he semeth to be more than man, for not onely diseases and deuils, but also windes and the sea obey his commaundementes. And by this example, Jesus our very good Lorde hath taughte vs, that as often as the stormes of tẽptacions and persecucions rage against vs, that we shoulde seke for helpe no nother where but of hym. Euery tumult and trouble shalbe made caulme and quiete, if that he awake in vs.

The texte. ¶ And whan he was come to the other side of the water, into the countrey of the Gergesites, there met him two possessed with deuils, comming out of the graues, and they were out of measure fierce, so that no man might go by that waye. And beholde they cried and saying: O Jesu the sonne of God, what haue we to do with the? Art thou come hyther to tormente vs before our tyme? And there was a good waye of from them an hearde of many swyne feeding. And the deuils besought him, saying: if thou cast vs out, suffer vs to go into the heard of swyne. And he sayde to them: go your waye. And they goyng out went into the heard of swyne, and the whole heard of swyne ranne violently headyng into the see, and perished in the waters. Than they that kept the sheep fled, and went their waye into the citie and tolde all thinges, and what had happened vnto the demoniackes. And beholde the whole citie citie came furth to meete Jesus. And whan they sawe hym, they besought him to departe oute of theyr coastes.

Therfore when Jesus had passed ouer the water, he came into the countrey of the Gergesites, and beholde there was offered a matter and an occasion of a greater wonder. There met him two men, which of long time had been possessed with the wurst kynde of deuilles, which eyther wandered in the wildernesse, or els hid themselues in dead mennes graues, whiche were wont to be made and set vp by the highe waye. Theyr rage was so great, that no cheynes coulde holde them, but breakyng all theyr bondes ranne vpon the waye goers, so that no man could safely passe that waye. No man durste bring them vnto Jesus, as I haue tolde you how they did with dyuers other, but the secret might of Jesus drewe them against their wylles. The wicked spirites wer sore vexed, and could not abide the diuine power, in so muche that beyng giltie in themselues, they felte a certayne newe and a secrete torment, yea before that Jesus spake vnto them, they feared lest the daye were nowe at hande in the whiche they should be sent into the dungeon of hel, there to be punished eternally, and not to be suffered hereafter to molest and trouble men. Therfore torment and feare forced them agaynst their willes, to speake and to beare witnes of the diuine power in Christ. They cryed out therfore by the mouthes of the miserable men. Jesu the sonne of God (q they) what hast thou to do with vs? Arte thou come hither to torment vs before our tyme? we know what misery and wretchednes abydeth for vs according to our merites, but suffer vs for a tyme. That daye shall come to vs to soone. We desyre delaye and not to be deliuered. Not farre frō the place where these thynges were doen, there was an heard of hogges feding, than the deuils feling themselues to be sore vexed by the power of God, lest they shoulde departe without any hurte doing (so great was their malice) they made this petition vnto Jesus: If inno case thou wilt suffer vs to dwell and abyde in this house, suffer vs at the lest, that we maye departe hence and enter into the hogges, a beast bothe filthye and abhominable.

O Jesu the sone of god what haue we to doo with the?

As soone as Jesus had geuen them this libertie, which thought it sufficient to prouide for the helth and saluacion of man, the multitude of diuels went furthwith into the heard of hogges. And behold furthwith the whole heard, driuen into a fury, ranne downe hedlong from the hill into the water, and there perished in the water. This suffered Jesus both to shewe the notable malice of the deuils, and to geue occasion that this myracle might be hated abrode. For the swynehardes seyng this horrible sight, ranne away for feare, and went into the citie of Gadera, and tolde the citezens what they had seen, and what had happened to the Demoniakes, now commonly knowen, to whom it chaunced to be healed, and what had happened to the heard of hogges. The whole citie of ỹ Gaderenes being amased at this tidinges, went forth to meete Jesus, fearing lest he should come to them. They saw theyr hogges kylled. They saw the two men that were naked, now appareled, they sawe them healed of theyr frenesy and quiet out of theyr rage, insomuch that they sat at Jesus feete knowlegyng hym to be the autor and cause of theyr helth. But because the Gaderenes were grosse and euill, they feared more the mighte of Jesus, than they loued his goodnes, and they regarded more the losse of theyr swyne, than the healthy of men.

They went vnto Jesus and desyred him to depart from theyr coastes: who if they had throughly knowen him, they would haue desyred him instantly that he would haue vouched safe to come into the coastes of theyr countrey, to do the same thyng in theyr hartes, which he did in the two Demoniakes. For the hogges declare what was theyr lyke, the which ỳ deuilles desyred to possesse in the stede of men. Therfore Jesus taughte them nothyng, content onely to put them in feare: notwithstandyng he hath taught vs by this exaumple, that there is no pestilence, nor poyson of the mynde so sore, that we should despayre of health, yf we chaunce to come to Jesus. For there be certayne desyres so vnbrydeled, so behement, and so wilde, that they driue and force hym that hath them, vnto witchecraft, manslaughter, to slaughter of his dearest frendes, and to other wicked dedes not to be named, and sumtyme they dryue hym vnto suche madnes, that he killeth hymselfe. No meanes of man can heale and helpe these thynges, onelye Jesus can geue healthe if he wyll vouchesafe to come vnto them. There is no despayre, he wyll vouchesafe yf they agayne wyll come to hym.

The texte. And entering into a shippe he passed ouer, and came into his owne citie. And beholde they broughte to hym a man sicke of the palsey, lying in a bed. And whan Jesus sawe the faythe of them, he sayd vnto the sicke of the palsey: sonne be of good chere, thy synnes be forgeuen thee. And beholde certayne of the scribes sayde within themselues: This man blasphemeth. And whan Jesus sawe their thought he sayde: wherfore thynke ye euyll in your hartes. For whether is it easyer to saye: thy synnes be forgeuen the, or to saye, aryse and walke? But that ye maye knowe that the sonne of man hath power to forgeue sinnes in yearth: than sayeth he to the sicke of the palsey: arise, take vp thy bed and go home: and he arose and went home. Wat the people that sawe it, marueyled and glorified God, who had geuen suche power vnto men.

Jesus therfore not minding to geue that that is holye vnto dogges, nor to cast precious stones vnto swine, entred into the shyp, and went ouer the water agayne, returnyng into his citie called Capernaũ, for there he had a house at that tyme. And when he was entred into the house, many gathered about hym, emong whom wer also doctours of the lawe, that came from Galile, Jewry, and Hierusalem, and as he sat, (the Scribes and the doctours sitting by him) he taught them. And when there came about hym so great a number of men, that the house was no we to litle, nor the entrye was not hable to receyue so greate a multitude, certayne there were whiche broughte vnto hym a certayne man greued and vexed with so behement a palseye, that he was carried of foure men bed and all, whiche was rather a karkas of a man, then a man. Who when they knewe that Jesus was within, and that they coulde not entre for the multitude, they clymed vp vpon the house top, and remouyng the tiles of the house, let down by ropes through a hole the bed with the sicke man, before the feete of Jesus. Jesus not offended, nor greued with this importunitie of the seruauntes, but rather allowing the feruencie of their faith, and albeit the faithe of the sicke man ought to be no lesse, which eyther commaunded that he should be let down, or els willyngly suffred it: turning vnto the manne bedred, to thintent

thintēt that he might cōmēde his fayth very muche to thē that stode about: be of good courage my sonne (q he) thy synnes be forgeuen the: first deliuering that parte of the man from disease, frō whence the disease of the body came: and yet meruelouse gently he calleth hym sonne, beyng a man wretched and miserable both in body and soule, priuely casting the phariseis and Scribes in the teeth with theyr pryde and arrogancie. The multitude keping silence and marueling, certayne of the Scribes whiche remembred that God sayth in the holy scripture: It is I that put awaye the sinnes of men, wherag in suche a great resort of the fauourers of Jesus they durst not openlye murmur agaynst hym, they spake secretely with themselues: this is a blasphemer of God, whiche beyng but man, taketh vpon him the power of God. This man blaspheme.

But Jesus whiche had somewhat declared his godly power vnto the phariseis in forgeuing of sinnes, declareth the same also by a speciall signe, openyng and shewyng that it is not hyd from him, what euery man doth thinke.

Therfore makyng aunswere vnto those thynges, whiche they spake with themselues in their secret thought, sayeth: Why do ye enuy at well doynges thinking ill in your hartes? Suppose ye because the disease of the minde is not seen with bodely iyes, lyke as the health also, that I take vpon me vntruly, and promise vnto other that I cannot performe? But whether thinke ye more easy to saye to hym that is in sinne, as I sayed euen now, thy sinnes be forgeuen thee: or els to saye vnto the man diseased with the palsey, whom ye see wholy bound with diseases, aryse and walke? Therfore to thintent that by the reason of thinges that ye see, ye may also beleue the thinges true that ye see not, and that bothe are indifferently easye to the sonne of manne, with a worde to take awaye the disease, and to pardon the sinnes, I wyll geue you a signe and a token manifeste and open to euery mannes sense & vnderstanding. And in case ye shall see these wordes whiche I shall speake nowe not to be vayne, but to haue theyr present efficacie and strength, doubt not but that the sonne of man hath power in yearth to forgeue sinnes, and that not by sacrifices, or by holocaustes, but by simple and plaine woorde. And therewith turnyng to the diseased of the palsey, sayed: Aryse, take vp thy couche and departe into thy house, that they whiche haue knowen the sicke, and despayred of thy health, maye see and perceyue that thou art sodēly made whole and strong, insomuche that thou art not onely hable to go vpon thy feete, whiche a litle before wast borne of .iiii. portes, but also, the course of thynges now chaunged, thou art hable to beare the bed, which hitherto hath borne thee. And furthwith as he spake, the thyng came to passe, the diseased of the palsey ryseth vp, and layng the bed vpon his shoulders, departeth into his house after an other manner of fashyon and pompe, than he was caryed a litle before. When the multitude sawe this euident and manifest myracle, and playnly perceyued that it was a thyng not of the power of man, but of God, they glorifyed God whiche gaue suche power vnto men in yearth, saying that they neuer sawe suche a thyng doen of them, whiche are counted the chiefe and the moste excellent men emong the Jewes. But the Scribes were so put to silence, that they were the more styrred and exasperate with enuye, because they sought more theyr owne glorye then the glorye of God: by the whiche increasyng and shynyng furth dayly through Jesus, they sawe themselues to bee diminished and darkened. For like as Arise take vp thy bed & go home.

the sunne darkeneth the candle: so the glory of God darkeneth, and causeth to vanishe awaye the vayne glory of men. But the envy of these men prophyted to none other ende, but through resistaunce, to make the glory of Christ more manifest and notable. For god can vse the malice of men, vnto his glory and renoume. Therfore Jesus to geue place to the envy of the Scribes, departed thence, and returned vnto the meere and poole, where he taughte the multitude gathering about on euery syde.

The texte.

¶ And as Jesus passed furth from thence, he sawe a man named Matthewe, sitting at the receyte of custome, and he sayeth vnto him: Folowe me. And he arose and folowed him. And it came to passe as Jesus sate at meate in his house, behold many Publicanes also, & sinners that came, sate down with Jesus and his disciples. And whan the Phariseis sawe it, they sayd vnto his disciples: Why eateth your maister with publicanes and sinners? But whan Jesus heard that, he sayed vnto them: They that be strong, nede not the phisicion, but they that are sicke. Go ye rather and learne what that meaneth: I wyll haue mercie, and not sacrifice. For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentaunce.

Further as he passed by the custome house, he espyed sitting there a certayne Publicane called Matthewe, whiche also was named Leuy the sone of Alpheus. And this kynde of men because of their filthy gayne and great extorcion, be defamed and slaundered many wayes, especiallye emong the Jewes. But Jesus whiche heretofore called vnto him Simon & Andrewe, John and James, from an homely & a meane kinde of gayne, but yet honest and lawfull, now to declare openly that he despiseth vtterlye no kynde of men, so that they repent and turne them to the better: called vnto him Matthewe, and commaunded him to folowe. He without any tarrying, leauyng his accomptes vnperfecte, leauyng his lucre and gayne, beganne to folowe Jesus: and sodenly became of a Publicane, a disciple. For the voyce of Jesus, had a certayne wonderfull efficacie and strength, and a certayne secrete power & maiestie shining in his countenaunce, whereby whom he would, he allured & drewe vnto him, euen lyke as the stone called Magnes, draweth yron. After that, Matthewe desyred Jesus, that he would voucheſake to feast in his house. Which thing Jesus did without any grieke, to teache his disciples that they shoulde not forsake the cumpanye of wicked men, if there be any hope that they wyll be the better by theyr cumpany. Matthewe of suche thynges as he had than, made a bountifull and a great feast, vnto the whiche he brought many of his sorte of men, both Publicanes and sinners, whom by his example and communicacion, he allured vnto admiracion, and loue of Jesus. Therfore whē the Phariseis sawe Jesus and his disciples sitting at meat with them, seking for matter on euery syde of blame and reproke, they dare not speake vnto him leste they might heare that whiche they would not, but indeuoure to withdrawe his disciples from him. Why (q they) doth your maister (whome ye folowe as one notably holye) feast with Publicanes and sinners, whome we forbeare as filthye and abhominable? But lyke do soone flocke with the like: and commonly we become suche as they be, with whome we lyue. When that Jesus heard this communicaciō, he taketh vpon hym to defende his disciples, beyng yet but weake: teaching that the preachers of the gospel be not defiled with the cumpany of sinners, with whom they cumpany for no nother intent, but to allure them to goodnes. But the Phariseis do shunne and flee from the Publicanes, whiche cōmonly be counted sinners, not because they would not be defiled with their sinfulnes, but to thintent that they themselues beyng worse than the Publicanes, canes, may be counted holy among men: but they that be indued with the holines of the ghospell, do not desire the cumpany of sinners, to the entent that they would take any lucre or hauntage from them, but to enrich them with godlines, and they enter into their houses for no nother purpose, than the good physicions enter into the houses of sicke men. For it becumeth a faithfull physicion, to bee more often in no place, than among them which haue nede of the helpe of physicions. Therfore he turnyng vnto the Phariseis, whiche thought themselues iuste men, whereas in dede they were infected with muche wurse vice, sayeth vnto them: I cumpanye with the Publicanes and sinners, because I am the physicion of the soules, & thyrste for the helth of men. To what purpose is it to cumpany with the iust, as ye suppose your selues to be, sith they nede no physicion? They nede a phisicō that be ill at ease, and the phisicion is profitable vnto thē, which knowlage their disease, and be willing to be healed. Therfore to lothe and despise thē, it is no holines but pride: and to succoure them, it is a sacrifice muche more acceptable to god, then any kind of sacrifice whiche is offered in the temple. ye which know the scriptures, ought not to be ignorant in this, where god speaketh thus: I wyll mercye rather than sacrifice. Agayn in Esai, he refuseth your offeringes, but the worke of mercy, he neuer refuseth. If ye haue not yet marked this thing, go and learne what this worde of god meaneth, and than if ye thinke good, reproue my doyng, which is not cōtrary to your lawe, but agreable to the wil of god. And why should I refuse the cumpany of sinners, whiche came purposely to stirre and prouoke suche maner of men to repentaunce of their former life? Many thinke themselues iust: if I withdrawe my self from them, they ought not to be greued, for they haue no nede of my helpe. And it were a vayn thing, and but a rebuke to cal them to repētance, whiche haue nothyng to repēt. With this talking Jesus touched and in maner skorned the arrogant pride of the Phariseis, whiche thought themselues to be iust, and were not.

Go ye rather & learn what that meaneth.

Than came the disciples of John vnto him saying: why dooe we and the Phariseis fast often, but thy disciples faste not? And Jesus sayed vnto them: Can the bridegromes children mourne as long as the bridegrome is with them? but the dayes wyll cum, when the bridegrome shalbe taken from them, and then shal they faste. No man putteth a piece of newe clothe in an olde garmente. For than taketh he away a piece from the garment, and the rent is made wurse. Neyther do men put newe wyne into olde bottels, for then the bottels breake, and the wyne runneth out, and the bottels perishe. But they put newe wyne into newe bottels, and both are saued together. The texte.

After these thynges, certain disciples of John, which by the reasō of a certain carnall affection, dyd enuye Jesus, magnifyng John their maister, as one more excellent than Jesus, ioynyng them selues with the Phariseis, go vnto Jesus, and feare not falsely to blame him to his face, because he vsed his disciples ouer delicately, and brought thē not vp so hardly as John did his, whiche semed to promise a more hard and straite discipline. The Phariseis sought for a fame & an opinyon of holynesse among the people by two waies chiefly; that is by fasting and praier. Wherfore they demaund of Jesus, why do we the disciples of John and the Phariseis fast so often, & pray after the ordinance of our auncetors, whiche haue taught that prayer should be commended and set forthe by fastyng, and thy disciples vse not like fastyng? Unto this manifest and false reproche, because it touched hym, & not his dys-

ciples, Jesus answered very gentely, so that he neither reproued the ordinaunce of John, neither plainly condemned the fastynges of other men. But only shewed that the gentlenes, which he vsed towardes his disciples, was not of negligence, but of policie, whereby he brought them by lytle and litle to greater thinges, euen as when a wyse and skylful teacher of youth doeth not furthwith feare the tender age with harde thynges, but with inticementes allureth it to thynges of difficultie, and taketh occasion to answere, by ꝑ reason of the witnes that John bare. For heteſtifiyng of Jesus before thē that thought that John was Christ: he that hath a spouse (ꝙ he) is a spouse, and his frende standeth by and reioyseth muche because he heareth the voice of the spouse, meanyng Jesus to bee the spouse whom the prophecye in the psalme did promise should cum lyke a bridegrome out of his chaumbre: and he hymselfe nothing els but the frend of the spouse. Jesus therfore putting them in remembraunce of the saiyng of John, saieth: Can the childrē whiche be in the chambre of the new spouse, where as al thinges ought to be ioyful be troubled and greued with the Jewish and lowryng fast, chiefly seing the spouse is present? Enuy them not for this ioye whiche wyl not long indure. Suffer them to be led with this tēdernes gently and swetely vnto thinges of more perfectiō. Now they haue their spouse, and they be holy set on hym, they haue no leysure now to faste: and they be so tendre, that they cannot awaye with it. In the meane season they shall growe and were, and the tyme shall cum, when their spouse shalbe taken from them, than they beyng stronger, shal not onely fast of their owne accord, but also they shalbe able to sufferr sharper showres. The Jewes put the chiefest point of their religiō in often fastinges, and lōg praiers: These thinges as they be not to be reproued. yf they be not doen for vayneglory but for godlines: so the doctrine of ꝑ gospel hath an eye and regarde vnto strōger thinges, & matter of more weight, vnto the whiche thynges I frame and fashion my scholers by litle and litle. Therfore my manner of teachyng agreeth not with John. It is newe that I teach, and my doctrine is new, and a new maner of teaching is most semely for a newe kynde of doctrine. It behoueth not a scholemayster to bee ouer hasty: the thing shal declare it self in time, whose scholers be better brought vp and taught. Old thynges must not be mengled with newe. For no manne soweth a patche of new and rawe cloth in an old garment. For by this way, the hole of the olde garmente is not onelye not mended, but also the hole is made greater and more ill fauored, because the newe cloth agreeth not with the olde. And they that be wyse and polytike menne, put not newe wyne into olde vesselles. For than a double inconuenience foloweth, whilest both the wyne runneth out, and the vessels be broken and vtterly lost. But rather put newe wyne into newe vesselles, whiche maye beare the strength of the wyne, nor start a sūder with the boiling and worcking of the wyne. So both the vesselles be saued, and also the wine. I wil my disciples to be al newe, and so I fashion them for me by lyttell and lyttell, that in tyme to cum they maye bee strong and styffe to beare the myghte of the doctrine euangelycall. John durst put no nother than olde wyne in olde vesselles, as fastyng & such other, which be far frō those thinges that men of the gospel must perfourm. I doe not commit the swete wyne of my doctrine but vnto newe vesselles.

Neither do me put newe wyne into olde bottelles.

Whyle he thus spake vnto them, beholde there came a certayne ruler, and worshypped

him, saying: my doughter is euen now deceassed, but cum, and laye thy hande vpon her, and she shall liue: and Jesus arose and folowed hym, and his disciples also. And behold a woman diseased with an issue of bloud twelue yeres, came behynde hym, and touched the hem of his garment. For she said within her self, if I may touche but his vesture onely, I shalbe whole. But Jesus turned him, and whan he sawe her, said: doughter be of good cõfort, thy faith hath made the safe: And the woman was made whole euen the same tyme. And whan Jesus came into the rulers house, and sawe the minstrels and the people makyng a noyse, he said vnto them: get ye hence, for the maide is not deade, but sleapeth: and they laughed him to skorne. But whan the people were put forth, he went in and toke her by the hande, and the damosell arose. And this rumor went abrode into all the lande.

Jesus speaking these thinges, there came vnto him a certain warde of the Synagoge called Jairus, & falling hũbly vpõ his knees worshipped hym, and with vehement praier & beseechyng, said: my only daughter twelue yere of age, was at the poynt of death, whan I came frõ home, and I am afeard leste that she be now deade. Cum I pray you, and lay your hande vpon her, that she may recouer and liue. Jesus (as he was ready to do good to al men whiche asked with plaine trust and confidence, whether they were pore or rich, Jewes or strãgers) forthwith arose vp & folowed Jairus, whiche made haste home if perhappes he myght fynde his daughter yet alyue. The disciples & the thicke multitude folowed Jesus. And behold as he was goyng, there befell an occasion of an other miracle. There was amõg the great multytude, of people a certayne woman, whiche had been diseased with the bluddy flixe for the space of twelue yeres, and had spent her whole substãce vpon phisicions, and yet founde she none that coulde heale her disease. Therfore was she in double miserie, for that pouertie was ioyned with her sickenesse. This woman when she had conceyued in her hart a great truste and cõfidẽce in Jesus, because of the filthines of her disease, she durst not speake vnto Jesus before so many witnesses. Therfore as though she would steal a benefite secretely, she came priuely behynd his backe, and touched the hem of his garment. For thus she perswaded her self: if I touche but the vttermost part of his garmente I shall be whole, and by and by his garment once touched the flyxe stayed, & the woman perceiued that the helth of her body was restored. But Jesus willyng suche a notable exaumple of faythe not to bee hid, and teachyng withall that the glory of God ought not to be conceled: to thentent he would haue the benefite to be confessed, he turneth vnto ỹ multitude saying, who touched me? whan all denied it: yet sum body touched me (q he:) For I feele a power goyng out from me. Here Peter and the other disciples, not knowyng what Jesus mente, saye: Lord thou seest the thicke multitude thrusting the on euery side, & doest thou aske who touched the, sith so many touche the? But whan Jesus, as ignorant who had touched him, loked about hym as seking for the priuie toucher, the womã being onely priuy of the thing, perceiuing that she could not be hid frõ Jesus, al shamefastnes set apart, fearing and trembling, fell downe at Jesus feete, and confessed al the matter as it was, & what disease she had, & how many yeres she had been sicke, and how she had spent al her substance in vain vpon phisicios and how that she perswaded her selfe, that by the onely touching of the skirt of his garment, she myght be healed, and howe by and by after the touchyng she felt perfit health of her body. It was the wil of Christ that these thiges should be declared before the multitude, not to put the womã to shame, neither to purchase him self prayse of men: but by this exaumple to teach all mẽ, what ſure confidence and truſt is hable to do, and by the example of the woman to eſtabliſhe the faith of the warden of the Synagogue, which he perceyued ſumwhat wauerynge, and withall to reproue the Phariſeis for their vnbeleſe. Therfore Jeſus, leſt he ſhould ſeme to be angry, and to take away his benefite againe, comforted the woman trembling for feare, and ſaid: my doughter be of good comfort. Thy faith hath obtained thee health. Depart in peace with a quiet and a careles mynde. My wil is that this benefite ſhal continue with the, though thou haſt ſtollen it from me.

Thy faithe hath ſaued the.

As Jeſus was ſpeaking theſe thynges, certayne came from the wardens of the Synagoges houſe, and tolde him that his doughter was dead, & that there was no cauſe why to trouble Jeſus. For they toke Jeſ⁹ to be nothing els, but ſum notable phiſicion, whiche was hable by his facultie to reſtore health to them that were alyue, but not to reſtore the dead to lyfe. And therfore they thoughte it but vayne to call a phiſicion, bee he neuer ſo excellente, to a dead mā. Jeſus perceiuyng that the father of the maide was muche amaſed with this tidinges, comforted him, ſaying: Feare not, only haue faith and truſt that the maide ſhalbe whole, and ſhe ſhall be whole. It is in thee, that thy doughter may be whole. And now whan they wer cum to the warden of the Synagoges houſe, Jeſus ſuffered not the multitude to enter in, nor the other diſciples, beſyde Peter, James, and John, and the father and mother of the mayden. But al her kinſemen and frendes did wepe, and after the countrey maner, they beate their bodies, bewailing her, and cryng out, and ſuch other thinges as men be wonte to do very folyſhely in the funerals of ryche men and greate men. Jeſus bad them ceaſe from their wailing, for the mayden was not deade, but a ſlepe. Meanyng thereby that the mayden was dead, to them whiche coulde not rayſe her, but vnto him ſhe ſlept only, to whō it was more eaſy to raiſe her from death, than to other to rayſe her from ſlepe. Whan the familiars and frendes of the warden perceyued not theſe thinges, they laughed Jeſus to ſcorne, becauſe they knew certainly that ſhe was dead, ſeing her whā ſhe died: Therfore after that he had thruſt forth from the funerals the mourning multitude, he taking the father and the mother of the maiden, entred into the parler, where as the corps of the mayden dyd lye. And Jeſus takyng the virgin by the hande, ſaid: Maidē aryſe. And furthwith whan at the word the mayden roſe, ſhe walked alſo, that ẏ fayth of the miracle might be the more certain. For he did not onely reſtore lyfe ſodainly, but alſo ſtrength and cherefulnes. And whē the parentes of the maiden were greatly amaſed, he gaue thē in commaūdement, and deſyred them inſtantly to tell no body what was doen: both that he myght auoid the ſuſpicion of vayne glory, (for this chiefly ought to be doen with the heades of the Synagoge, which did al thinges poſſible to obtaine the praiſe of men:) and alſo that they myght ſhew furth with greater faith, and credite ẏ thyng that was doen, if they commaunded to kepe ſilence, yet would nedes tel the thinges that they had ſeen doen, to the Phariſeis and to the Prelates of the Synagoge. For he knewe the diſpoſition of man, which he minded to vſe to the profite of others. And whan he departed, he badde them geue the maidē meate, beyng the part of a phiſiciō, making as though it had been no myracle, whiche thyng eſtabliſhed the fayth of the miracle the more.

For the mayde is not deade, but ſlepeth.

And whan Jeſus departed thence, two blynde men folowed him cryng, and ſaying: O thou thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy on vs. And whan he was cum into the house, the blynde came to hym, and Jesus sayeth vnto thē: beleue ye that I am hable to do this? They said vnto hym: Lord, we beleue. Then touched he their yes, saiyng: accordyng to your faithe, be it vnto you. And their yes were opened. And Jesus charged them, saiyng: see that no manne knowe of it. But they when they were departed, spred abrode his name in al that lande.

Now whan Jesus left the house of the warden of the Sinagoge and returned to his owne house: two blinde men folowed hym, whiche had heard the fame of his miracles, and therof conceyued an hope to obtain health, especially hearing of his goodnes towardes al men, wer they neuer so meane. But when they coulde neither see Jesus, nor cum vnto him, yet with a loud crie for loue of health, and for feruentnes of faith, farre of they crie vpō Jesus, with gentle prater, saiyng: O sōne of Dauid haue mercie vpon vs. Jesus in the way aunswered them nothing, differring his benefite, that the miracle might be the more manifest: endeuouring alway to allure ỳ Jewes to faith, and by the very thynges many wayes to reproue ỳ Phariseis vnbeleefe. The captain had faith & trust, the woman had faith and trust, they that caried the man sicke of the palsey, did beleue and trust, the Jewes and Phariseys dyd distrust, and wer also full of malice & enuy. But wha Jesus was cum home, the blynde men were receiued into his house, who with stiffe hope folowed hym. Than Jesus geuyng exaumple vnto others, firste demaunded them of theyr faith: Beleue ye (q he) that I am hable to perfourme your requestes. And they without any delay, sayde: Lord we beleue. Than Jesus touching their yes with his hande, sayed: As ye beleue so be it to you, not chalēging to hym self the restoryng of the sight, but imputyng it to theyr fayth & trust, declaryng that chiefely vnbelefe made vs vnmeete for the bountyfulnesse of God, whiche is prest and ready for all men. Assone as Jesus had spoken, the yes of the blynd wer open, so that they saw clerely. Here Jesus willing to warne vs couertly, that although glory of it self foloweth the good dede yet we muste flee it rather then desire it: he charged the blynde menne verye earnestly, that no man should knowe this dede. But the ioying of their newe felicitie, spred the fame of Jesus the more through out the whole countrey: emong all them that knewe of their olde blindnes.

Beleue ye that I am hable to do this?

As they went oute, behold they brought to hym a dumme man possessed of a deuill, and whan the deuill was caste out, the dumme spake: and the people maruelled, saiyng: It was neuer so seene in Israel. But the Phariseis said: He casteth out deuils through the prince of deuils. And Jesus went about all cities and townes teachyng in their Synagogues, & preachynge the glad tidynges of the kyngdome, and healyng euery sickenes & euery disease among the people.

The texte.

Whan the blynde were departed, there was an other miserable manne offered vnto hym, who was vexed with a deuill, whiche toke awaye the vse of his tonge, that the man neither was wel in his wit to wishe for helth, nor had no tonge to aske for it. He therfore because he had neede of an other mannes fayth, was offered vnto Jesus. Whiche withoute any tarryng cast out the deuil, and furthwith the dumme spake. The multitude marueiling at so great spedines of miracles, ready in all kynde of diseases, beyng neuer so incurable, sayed among them selues. There was neuer manne emong the Israelites, that wrought so many miracles so easily. Cōtrariwise ỳ Phariseis blynded daylye with malyce more and more, where as the thynges that were doen in the sight of all menne could not be denyed, yet to the entēte they myght withdrawe from hym the myndes of the people that had hym in veneracion, they falsely slaūder him, that he casteth out deuils not by the power of god, but by the myght of Belzebub the prince of deuils. Thā which vntrue slaūder, what could be a more mad thing? As who should say one deuill driueth out an other, or as who should say, Belzebub the enemy of mankynd, gaue lyfe to the dead, health to the sicke, sight to the blynde, speche to the dum. These illes cum from them oftentimes, which Jesus of his goodnes hauing cōpassion vpon mē toke away, with suche corporall benefites, as might sēsibly be perceiued, preparing them for the capacitie of spiritual benefites. But most meke Jesus was not offēded wt suche malicious reproch, but deuised more for the health of all men, because he sawe the Pharisеis, (to whome it apperteyned to see for the healthe of the people) so lyttell to helpe and succour, that also they enuyed the commodities of others. Jesus therfore as a good shepeherde walked thorough al cities and stretes, laboring to heale both the soules and bodies of all men, teachyng in their cōgregacions, and preaching the kingdome of heauen (into the whiche none bee receyued, but suche as be poyd of all diseases of the soule) and healing also al kyndes of diseases and sickenesses.

The texte. But when he sawe the people, he was moued with compassion on them, because they were destitute and scattered abrode as shepe hauyng no shepeherd. Then saieth he vnto his disciples: the harueſt is plenteous, but the labourers are fewe. Pray ye therfore the lorde of the harueſte, that he wyll send labourers into his harueſt.

Further whan Jesus sawe the multitude swarming on euery syde, and euery day more thicke, and now gredy of health and sincere doctrine, and cōsidered withall, that the Priestes, Pharisеis, and Scribes, vpon whō the people hitherto did hang, to do any thing rather then to preserue the people, and that they were whole geuen not to the glory of God, but to their owne glory, to their owne lucre, to theyr own bely, and to their own pleasures, in whō if there wer any religiō it was but coloured and counterfaited, so that it was very noysome vnto true religion: and considered also that the people was but rude and grosse, and yet in the way of amendment, for they lokyng to be healed in their bodies, folowed with a simple and plaine faithe, & glorified god: and although yet they vnderstode not the doctrine of the gospel, yet they did not reiect the same. Contrariwise whan he cōsidered the Pharisеis and the Scribes, where as they had the Prophetes and the law, yet to be blinded with worldly desires, and also to resist the doctrine of ỹ gospel: the good shepeherde was moued with pitie and compassion, because he saw them lyke vnto wanderyng shepe, shatered a sunder and destitute of a shepherd, and rumming vnaduisedly hither and thither. Jesus therfore cōsideryng that in the Pharisеis, whiche played the wolues rather than the shepherds, the flocke had no hope, & that the people thorough miracles was nowe sumwhat prepared to receiue the doctrine of the gospell, he sayd vnto his disciples, whom he had now well gathered together: I see a great harueste, but very few labourers. The fame of ỹ gospel is spred abrode euerywhere. The feruencie of many is stirred vp, whiche seme ripe and redy to heare the wisedome of the gospel. But where be they that wil take vpon them to preache & teache? where be they that will teache purely and sincerely, neyther seekyng after glory of man nor after gayne and lucre, but teachyng so sincerely as ye see me teache?

He was moued with cōpassion on them.

The harueſt is plenteous but the labourers ar fewe.

Truely

Truly suche a cumpany of men must not be neglected, beyng kindeled with the desire of the heauenly doctrine. What is than to be done, but to desyre and require the lord of the haruest, to thruste into his haruest the ydle and vnwilling labozers. For the occasiō is now, and lingerynge is daungerous. I knowe that it is moze pleasaunt for you to bewith me, but the tyme is at hand, that ye must shewe some pzofe of your selues, and that ye must begin to shew forth for the saluacion of other, that whiche ye haue receiued of me.

The. x. Chapter.

¶ And when his twelue disciples were called vnto hym, he gaue them power against vncleane spirites, and to caste them oute, and to heale all maner of sickenesse, and all manner of disease. The names of the twelue Apostles, are these. The first Simon, whiche is called Peter, and Andrewe his brother. James the sonne of Zebedee, and John his brother, Philip and Bartholomew, and Thomas and Matthew, which had ben a Publican, James the sōne of Alphe, and Lebbeus, whose syrname was Taddeus, Simon of Canaan, and Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him. The texte.

THerfore Jesus going vp vpon the hill, commaunded his disciples which specially folowed him, to cum vnto him. Of these he ordeyned twelue to be chiefe, vnto whom as to the better learned and moze stroōg, he committeth with authozitie, the office of teachyng, that accordyng to ther ausmple that they sawe in theyr maister, they should teach the people, eche in sondry places. And leste the doctrine of fishers, vnlearned and abiecte men, should foorthwith be dispised, he gaue them also power against all vncleane spirites, to cast them out with the worde, and to heale all kyndes of diseases, and all faultes of the bodye, that whatsoeuer Christ did before them in the fathers name and his owne, that they should do in the name of Jesus Christ, in whose rowme they were. For so Jesus entred, that through healing of greuous and incurable diseases, (whiche benefite semeth vnto men most godly) he myght allure the rude and the simple to the thynges of the soule. But leste any manne should take false Apostles for the true, these be the names of the twelue whom Christ himselfe dyd ordein. First Simon the sonne of John, whiche also was called Peter, and his brother Andrewe: For these were the fyrste that Christ called. Secōdly James the sonne of zebedei with John his brother: Thirdly Philip and Bartilmew. Fourthly Thomas whose surname was Didimus, and Matthew the Publicane. Fifthlye James the sonne of Alphe, with Judas the sonne of James, whiche also was called Lebbeus or Thaddeus. Sixtly Simon the Cananite, whiche was also called zelotes, and Judas Iscarioth, whiche afterward betraied his maister. By such maner ambassadoures beyng poore men, rude, abiect, fishers, sinners and men not knowen, and of no reputacion, Christ went about to tourn and renue the whole worlde vnto the wisedome of the gospell: leste in this prayse the worlde myghte attribute any thyng vnto it selfe, yf he had begonne this heauenlye pourpose by menne of learnyng, of power, of ryches, or of nobilitie. He gaue the power against vncleane spyrites.

to the lost shepe of the house of Israell. Goe and preache, saying: the kingdome of heauen is at hande. Heale the sicke, cleanse the lepers, rayse the deade, caste out deuils. Freely ye haue receiued, geue freely: Possesse not golde, nor siluer, nor brasse in your purses, nor yet scrippe towardes your iourney, neyther two coates, neyther shoes, nor yet a rodde: For the workman is worthy of his meate.

Now it is worthy the hearyng, to heare what he commaunded them, and how he furnished these ambassadours in theyr iourney. And firste of all he appointeth them the coastes and limittes of preachyng, & forbiddeth thē to go out of Jewry, and forbiddeth them to go eyther to the people that were next, or vnto the cities of the Samaritanes, whom the Jewes did abhorre, not that Jesus did count any kynd of men to be abhorred, but leste he should seme to be offended with the iniuries of the Phariseis, and for reuēging of him selfe, to send his disciples vnto straungers: or leste he might geue occasion vnto the Jewes, to excuse themselfes, and saye that they wer despised, and that the Gentiles and Samaritanes were preferred before thē. Againe because he knew that the Jewes chiefly would rebell against the gospel, he would leaue them no maner of excuse, but that it should appeare vnto al me that they were put from the kingdome of god, by their owne frowardnesse, and that the Gentiles were receyued by their own plain and simple sayth. Therfore (sayth he) forbeare them for a tyme, and go rather to the lost shepe of the nacion of Israel, that they may repent to be saued. For they be not all of the Phariseis malice, there be shepe emong them, erryng by simplicitie and ignorannce, whiche being monished and taught will sone repent, & heare the voyce of the good shepeheard. And ye shall beginne your preachyng thus, lyke as ye saw me do. For it is not mete nor expedient forthwith to disclose the secret misteries vnto ỹ rude people: they muste be made in a readines before, that they may be hable to receiue the heauēly doctrine. First of al therfore preache nothyng els, but that the kingdome of heauen is at hande, that they retournyng from their olde life, may prepare themselues to a new lyfe. For the first degree of righteousnes, is to abstayne from sinne. And the first degree to health, is to knowledge the disease. Furthermore left the teachers being men of no reputacion, and teaching newe thinges, should not bee beleued, make them beleue your doctrine by miracles, lyke as ye saw me doe. Heale the sicke, rayse the dead, cleanse the lepros, caste oute deuils. These thinges though they be very great, yet ye shall haue them of me, & they shall get you fauour and authoritie with all men. For first the weake muste be allured. Take you hede onely that ye do not abuse these thynges eyther to payne glorye, or to lucre. Lyke as ye haue freely receyued of me, so freely geue. Defyle not the euangelical function, no not with the least suspicion of glory or lucre. Thus men shall esteme you greate in dede, yf they shall see you of so great might and power, and yet not to be haut nor proude, nor desirous of lucre, but stoutly to dispise those thynges, for the which the comō sort of men, do & suffre all that they may. I will haue you light and ready to do this message, and to be laded with no burdens, to be encombred with no carefulnesse, that ye may wholly ye apply the office committed vnto you. Ye teache heauenly thynges, set not your care vpon worldly thynges, ye haue preparatiō mete for your preaching, which teacheth no meane thing. Wherfore when you take your iourney burdeyn not your purses with golde nor syluer. No carrye not so muche as a bagge about with you to put your

Nor ye shall not nede to be carefull, how ye beyng naked shall come by necessaryes. Onely be carefull in your office committed vnto you, and all these shalbe geuen you from your heauenly father. It is his matter that ye haue in hande. He wyll not suffer his workemen to be defrauded of theyr hyer. For them that lyue from daye to daye, and according to nature, necessaries be soone prepared. And there wyll be ynowe whiche of themselues wyll geue to you, doyng and teachyng suche thynges. So shall it come to passe, that neyther ye shall be troubled with suche cares whiche maye diminishe youre auctoritie, and make you to be suspected, nor they whome ye teache, shall be vnkynde towarde you, of whome they receyue farre greater thynges. For the worke man. &c.

¶ But to whatsoeuer citie or towne ye shall come, enquire who is worthy in it, and there abyde tyll ye go thence. And whan ye come into the house, salute the same: and if the house be worthy, let your peace come vpon it: but if it be not worthy let your peace returne to you again. And whosoeuer shall not receyue you, nor wil heare your preachyng, whan ye departe out of that house or citie, shake of the dust of your feet. Verely I saye vnto you: It shall be easyer for the lande of Zodoma and Gomorra in the daye of iudgement, than for that Citie. The texte.

And ye shall be grieuouse to no man with begging, nor no man shall caste you in the teeth with his benefit, because he hath made a chaunge for better thinges rather than geuen any thing. For it shall not be nedefull for you to tourne into common innes, but into what citie or strete you entre into, firste enquyre yf there be any honest man there, desyrouse of the heauenlye kyngdome, and wery of the worlde, whiche with godlye desyres sygheth nowe and than after Messias that was promysed, whiche sheweth a greate hope of greater increase, by simplicitie and innocencie of lyfe, by liberalitie towarde the poore. For suche one will be a very mete hoste for you, and again ye shall be mekte gestes for him. Whan ye haue founde suche an one, turne into his house, and chaunge not your inne, vntyll youre busines aboute the gospell, causeth you to remoue into another citie. For it shall not be nedeful neyther comely for you, oftentimes to chaunge your host, as light persons, or persons desyrouse of more deynty fare. Euery house, euery fare, oughte to suffyse for men of the gospell. Be ye curteous & gentill of manners, that ye appere neither proude, nor flatterers. Whan ye enter into the house, speake fyrste and saye: Peace be in this house. youre prayer shall not bee in vayne. For yf the house be worthy this prayer, by and by without delaye it wyll receyue it: but yf it refuse it, your salutacion shall not be loste. For that whiche they despise shall returne vnto you. And truely I wouldе not haue you bowyng, and becking, or flatteryng any man for your necessities, that yf any house thinke muche to receyue you, or yf anye citie thinke muche to haue you as geastes, and wyll not of theyr owne accorde receyue the salutacion of the ghospell offred vnto them, I will that ye shall leaue the house whiche ye saluted, and leaue the citie whereunto ye entred, and go into the stretes and shake of the dust from your feete, declaryng openly that ye hunt for none of theyr worldly commodities, who caste of the ghospell of God, insomuche that ye shall not be caste in the teeth with the vile duste that sticketh vpon your feete. Here haue in remembraunce, that an holy thyng must not be geuen to dogges, nor precious margarites caste vnto hogges. And there abide tyl ye go thence.

kyngdom of god is at hande to the greate commoditie of them that receiue it, and to the great hurte of them that refuse it. Iuyse them whiche receyue the worde of the gospell. Wo be to that citie, wherein none shalbe founde, that doeth repent him of his yll lyfe, and desyreth not to be amended. This I assure you, that the countrey of Sodom and Gomorre shal be more gently handled in the daye of iudgement, than that citie, though it be a citie of Israel. The more that the clemency of god is to prouoke them to penaunce, by so many myracles, and so many benefites, the more grieuously shall they be punished, yf they reiect it.

The texte. Beholde I sende you furth as shepe among wolues, be ye therfore wyse as serpentes, and innocent as doues. But beware of those men, for they shall deliuer you vp to the counsels, and shall scourge you in their Synagoges. And ye shall be brought to the head rulers & kynges for my sake, in witnes to them and to the Gentyles. But whan they deliuer you vp, take you no thought how or what ye shall speake, for it shall be geuen you euen in that same houre what ye shall speake. For it is not ye that speake, but the spirite of your father which speaketh in you. Whe brother shall deliuer the brother to death: and the father the same, and the children shall aryse against their fathers and mothers, and shall put them to death: and ye shalbe hated of al men for my names sake: But he that endureth to the ende shall be saued.

But leue ye the punishment of them to god, be ye meke and patient against all iniuries, and so endeuour to profite all good men, that whan ye be prouoked of yll men, ye requite not iniuries. It is sufficient for you to bee garnished with those thinges, wherewith ye maye do good to all men. Against the iniuries of men I wyll haue you vtterly without weapon, and to ouercome with none other defence but with sufferaunce. Otherwise I could make you terrible and to be feared, but it is not expedient for the gospell. For violence doeth not extinguishe violence, nor iniury iniury, nor pryde pryde, but rather soulnes, gentilnes, and quietnes. I know that the pharisees, and men that be stoute with the fauoure of this worlde, will go about to do you sore displeasures. But against all these there is none other bucheler but patience. Nor there is no cause to feare, ye be sent lyke shepe without weapon, simple, innocent, in the middes of wolues, but ye be sent of me. I would not that ye beyng prouoked by their naughtines, should be turned into wolues, but to go about this by all meanes, that the wolues assuaged by your gentylnes, maye be turned into shepe. It is no great matter to reuenge yll men, but to turne their hertes to good, is a verye great & an harde matter. Therfore ye must couple two certayne thinges together, the policy of the serpente, and the simplicitie of the doue. The simplicitie of the doue shall cause you to desire to do good to al men, and to hurt no man, no though ye be prouoked. The policy of the serpente, shall cause you to geue none occasion, whereby your doctrine might be reproued. This is the chiefe point of your ambassade, that the gospell maye entre into all mennes hartes.

Beholde I sende you furth.

but beware of those men. Therfore ye must do vtterly nothyng, which by any probable colour might withdrawe any mans harte from the doctrine of the gospell. your doctrine shall make great stirres and tumultes in the worlde, the more therfore ye must beware, leste any busynesse aryse through your defaulte. Whiche can not be, yf ye communicate your benefites freely vnto all men, and kepe patience also towardes the yll men, and desyre to do them good.

warelye, and nowe prepare your mynde agaynst all kyndes of yll, that nothyng may trouble you, whan it shall happen. For the tyme shall come that they will plucke you as ill doers into theyr counsels and conuentycles, and beate you with whippes like vngracious men, and subuerters of publique weale, ye shall be brought before rulers and kinges, not for your desertes, but for my sake, & though I may let them, yet wil I suffer all these thynges to be doen, that it maye be witnessed and open to all men, that they perysshe through theyr owne default, which beyng moued and prouoked by so many myracles, by so many benefites, by so ready doctrine, by youre simplenes & gentilnes, so spitefully reiect saluacion offered vnto them. Therfore whan so fewe shal be brought furthe to so many, so weake & vnarmed to so mighty, so vnlettered to so learned, be not carefull howe ye shall pleade your cause, though ye be rude, and not skilfull of iudgementes, of lawes, and of the lawe place. Also I would not ye should run to suche ayde and succour, by the whiche the common sorte of men be wont to haue the higher hand in iudgementes. They take vnto them a cunning and a well tonged aduocate, they flatter the iudges, they fall downe humblye vpon theyr knees, they get fauour with money. Medle ye with none of these. Do ye this onely, go furth whan ye be called, answere whan ye be commaunded, that they haue no iust cause of cõtumacy and stubbernes against you: but answere playnly and boldly, not with a deuised and a prepared oracion, but with suche one as hath boldnes ioyned with wisedome and mildnes. Like as vitayle shall be ready for you in euery place: so speche shalbe geuen vnto you, vpõ which carefully to muse, appertayneth not to hym that dependeth wholly vpon the helpe of god. Yea speche shalbe geuen vnto them in season whiche muse nothyng vpon it, not garnished nor gaye, but wyse and effectuall, and meete for the gospel. It is not mannes matters that ye haue in hand, but goddes, wherof ye be not authours, but instrumentes. For it is not ye that shall speake there, but the spirite of your father speaketh by your mouthes. Trusting therfore vpon his helpe, ye must be moued by no stormes of aduersitie. For the worlde will aryse against my doctrine with suche tumulte and busines, that the brother forgetting his brotherly loue, will bryng his brother to death: ỹ the father forgetting his naturall loue, wyl putte his sonne in daungier of death: that the sonne all honoure and dutie set aparte, will ryse against the father, and mother, and put them to death, of whome he had the beginning of his lyfe. Briefly ye shall be hated of all men, for the hatred they beare to my name. For this worlde beyng so corrupte on euerye side with ambicion, pryde, auarice, lechery and other worldly desyres, wyl not beare the heauenly doctrine contrarie to his appetite and desyre. And it shall be a greater offence to be a Christian man, than to be a murtherer of a sorcerer. These hurly burlyes the deuill shall rayse agaynste the gospel, but distrust not, godly wysdome shall ouercome the wyles of the deuil, and the malice of man: do ye the busines cõmitted vnto you with a bolde and cheerefull courage. For whoso among these ylles doeth perseuer and continue vnto the ende, he shall be saued. For ye must not beyng discouraged with feare, leaue of the busines of the gospell.

For it shall be geuē you &c.

But he that endureth to the ende shall be saued.

¶ But whan they persecute you in this citie flye into another. For verelye I saye vnto you: ye shall not go through all the cities of Israel, vntyll the sonne of man be come. The disciple is not aboue his teacher, nor the seruaunt aboue his master: It is ynough for the disciple

ciple to be as his teacher, and the seruaunt to be as his mayster: If they haue called the good man of the house Belzebub, how muche more his householde seruauntes? Feare them not therefore. For there is nothyng kept close, that shall not be opened, and nothyng hid that shal not be knowen. What I tell you in darkenes, that speake ye in light. And what ye heare in the eare, that preache ye on the house toppes.

There is no peryll vnles a stomacke meete and worthy for the ghospell saye you. But lyke as ye ought not to prouoke the crueltie of yll menne, nor to stirre vp persecucion, nor resist it with might and power, so whilest the preachyng of the gospell is but newe and young, I graunt you libertie to auoyde daunger and peryll by flying and running awaye, not onelye that ye maye be in safetie youre selfe, but also that by this occasion the fame of the ghospell maye be spred the further abrode. Therfore yf they persecute you in one citie, geue place to their madnes and flee into another, so that in no wise at a litle iniurie of persecucion, ye cease from your labour in the ghospell. This onely is to be doen now, that the fame of the ghospell maye be spred throughout all Palestine. And in this the persecutor shall do you good, because he shall not suffre you to tarry long in one place. The tyme shall come whan ye shall not auoyde persecucion with flight. Nowe the tyme is shorte, and haste muste be made. For the kyndome of god is at hande. This I assure you, before that ye haue goen ouer all the cities of Jewry, the sonne of man will shewe himselfe, and will helpe you beyng in daunger. In exaumple shal be shewed you in hym how great aduersities the preachers of the ghospell muste suffre. The whiche all ought to seme vnto you the more tollerable for this, that ye se that I haue suffred al maner of reproches and afflictions. The scholer is not better than his maister, nor the seruaunt better than his lorde. This sufficeth to the scholer yf he bee equall with his mayster: This ought to suffice the seruaunte, yf he be equall with his lorde. If they haue so vnworthely checked me the father of the house, insomuche that in moste vile reproche they called me Belzebub, and named the sonne of God by the name of an vncleane deuill: what meruaile is it, if they be bolde vpon the seruaunters of the house? I knowe that infamy semeth a great ill, and almoste more greuous than death: but it is a prayse and no infamye, whiche cummeth of wicked men for the gospell sake. They will saye that ye be witches, yll doers, and seditious, but this ignominy and shame afterwarde shalbe turned into glory. Your sinceritie and innocencie at length shall appere vnto the worlde, whiche synceritie all men shall prayse, cursing them whiche haue dishonested you with false reporte. Prayse long suppressed, breaketh out commonly with greater light. There is nothyng couered but time will vncouer it, and nothing is hid, but it once will come to light. Endeuoure this onely, that ye do thynges worthy prayse, and not seke after prayse. There is nothing therfore, why ye should be troubled with feare of infamy, and not freely preache the gospel of the kyngdome. It hath no dishonest thyng, nor nothyng to be kept close. Yea yf ye heare any thyng of me in darkenes, preache ye it in the cleare light. And if I haue tolde any thing secretely, preache it openly. Our doctrine is without any colouring. It desireth to come furth before all men; and it is afrayde to be knowen of no man

The texte, ¶ And feare ye not them that kyll the bodye, but are not able to kyll the soule. But feare rather hym whiche is able to destroye both soule and body in hell. Are not two litle sparowes solde for a minare? one of them shall not fall to the grounde without youre father. Yea and

and all the heares of your head be nombred: Feare ye not therfore; ye be of more value than many sparowes. Euery one therfore that shal confesse me before men, him will I confesse also before my father which is in heauen. But whosoeuer denieth me before men, him will I also deny before my father whiche is in heauen.

But there shall be some perchaunce, whiche will lytle passe upon my name, and other ylles, but who can despise and set lytle by death? It were mete you should feare them, yf they could kyll the whole man: but ye that knowe that the body is the vilest parte of man, and that the soule which is the chiefe parte of man cannot be hurte of them, be they neuer so sauage and cruell: ye (I say) nede not to feare them. They should hurte you more yf they dyd not slay you folowyng their myndes, than yf they kill you not regardyng them. I will shewe you who is more to be feared. Feare him, who like as he made the whole man, so he is able to condemne him to euerlastyng death, and to deliuer him into hell fyre.

Yet the body whiche the tiranne doeth kyll for a tyme, doth not vtterly perysshe. For the selfe same at the resurrection shall be restored in far better wise. Hitherto therfore onely the body is in daunger, yf in case ye be killed constantly obeying my commaundementes. But yf ye obey their commaundementes, and leaue the businesse of the ghospell, nowe not onely the body doth perysshe, whiche yf no man kill it, yet by the comuon lawe of nature it must nedes dye, but also the soule shall be deliuered to euerlastyng fier. And what matter is it, whether the persecutor, or disease, or any other chaunce take awaye the lyfe? Truely more glorious it is to die for the ghospell sake, whiche death though it be violent and sore, yet it shall not come before the daye, whan soeuer it cummeth it shall not come without the prouidence of God. And by this it cummeth to passe, that yf ye endeuour to anoyde it, ye cannot. God will not suffer you to be slayne but when it shall be very expedient for you to die. Wherfore put out of your myndes all this feare. God also will prouide for this, to whome it were not hard to geue you immortalitie, but that it is a greater thyng to despise death, than to escape it. What is of lesse value than sparowes? of the whiche two be bought for a farthing, a very lytle coyne? And the nombre of sparowes is great in euery place, and yet not so much as one of them is loste in the yearth, but by the wyll and sufferaunce of your father. Doe ye feare than leste he will suffre you, whom emong all he hath chosen to this businesse, to perisshe before your tyme, whom he doeth not neglecte, insomuche that he keepeth the nombre of all the heares of your head? Seyng that ye be of more estimacion to the father than innumerable sparowes, there is no cause why ye should feare, leste men be able to do any thyng against you, otherwise than shall be thought to hym, who hath continuall care ouer you. Wherfore leaue the care of your lyfe and death vnto hym, and be not ye driuen from the open profession of my name, be it neuer so hated of the worlde, by any feare of displeasures that men can doe vnto men. For whosoeuer litle regarding the rebukes of men, doe professe me in this lyfe to bee his Lorde and maister, hym will I acknowlege to bee my seruaunt and disciple, before my heauenly father. Contrary wyse whosoeuer wyll be ashamed of me before men and deny me, hym will I deny before my father whiche is in heauen. And this is no dayntie ouse and delicate profession, for he doeth not profesle me vnles he doeth declare by his lyfe that he doth beleue my sayinges.

And he hath denied me whiche so lyueth that he setteth by any thyng more than by me. What winning therfore can it bee, yf a manne lese that noble and euerlastyng prayse with the father and his angels, for feare of a false slaunder here, which neither lasteth long, nor is no slaunder in dede but with ignorant and folyshe menne, and before God very true glory. It is a great gayne lytle to passe vpon these thynges, and to make haste to the euerlastyng rewarde: whiche shalbe geuen in due tyme to them that haue deserued it: in the meane season a good conscience is a great piece of the rewarde.

The texte. Thynke not that I am come to sende peace into the yearth. I came not to sende peace but a swearde, for I am come to set a man at variaunce with his father, and the doughter with her mother, & the doughter in lawe with the mother in lawe. And a mans foes shall be they that are of his household. He that loueth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, and he that loueth sonne or doughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his crosse and followeth me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his lyfe, shall loose it, and he that looseth his lyfe for my sake, shall fynde it.

The profession of the ghospell is no wretche nor lyght thyng. Truely the rewardes be great, but ye must come vnto them with vehement and continuall desyres of the mynde: they chaunce not vnto vll menne and lingerers: they must be obteyned by strength and violence. Thinke ye that I am cumme to sowe peace in the yearth emong men? It is farre otherwyse. Nay I am not come to sowe peace and concorde, but warre and swerde and warre, and that inwarde and domesticall warre, and not ciuille warre onely.

For where as the doctryne of the ghospell shall be hated of the moste parte, and sith it requireth so feruente a desyre to warde it, that all the affections of men be they neuer so great and vnruly, must geue place: it cannot be but great stryfe and dissencion must aryse emong the that be most nere & frendely: whyles they that dote vpon the worlde wyll rage rather agaynst their derest beloued, than forsake their vices, wherevnto they be accustomed: and whoso is once touched with the great feruencye of the euangelicall charitie, he wyll not suffre hymselfe by no maner of affections to be pluckt awaye from the thing, whiche he hath begoonne to embrace and make muche of. But happy is that stryfe and dissencion whiche doeth auaunce sincere and good thynges, and cutteth awaye rotten thynges: happy is that swearde whiche pareth awaye from the soule all noysome lustes and desyres. Lette this tumulte and hurlyburly be layed vnto me, and not to you, whiche haue geuen a medicine & troubled all the body: but so, that they that stryue against their beloued, that is to saye their nereste kinsfolkes, for the hatred of my name, ought to impute it to themselues and not to me. For they myght folowe them whome they persecute. I offer helth and saluacion to all men, whyche yf all men do embrace, there shall be no stryfe nor dissencion. Truly the ghospell of it selfe is a thyng of peace, and of quietnes, but sedicion is rayled by the faulte of others: Lyke as the medicine is a holsome thyng of it selfe, but in the body it maketh a trumbling and trouble, whiles it prouideth that all the membres may be in quiet. But it is expediente that the noysome thynges be pared away, that true and holy concorde may be established the more emong the pure & cleane. This swearde therfore I bring into the earth to breake concorde betwixt the sonne and the father, to deuide the sure and streight bande of nature betwene the

doughter and the mother, to discouer the loue and concorde betwene the mother and daughter in lawe. There is no knot of nature or amitie so sure, which this swerde is not able to breake. Whom domesticall acquaintaunce hath made louers and very nere frendes, them the swerde of the gospell shall set in sundre. But so ferre and no ferther shall this battayle extende, and so farre shall this warre go, that they whiche be of our syde shall onely despise their enemies, but not hurte them, and as muche as in them lyeth, saue them also yf they can. And thus farre shall this despising goe, not to disdayne them and abhorre them, but soberly to make them an aunswere, and not to obey their wicked commaundementes. Ye must take hede by all meanes that the common state of the publique weale be not troubled by you. Be not slacke in the duty which by the law of nature the sonne oweth to the father, the daughter to the mother the brother to the brother, the husbande to the wyfe, the cosen to the cosen, the frende to the frende, and the familiar to his familiar, and acquaintaunce. For I do not abrogate and put awaye the lawe of nature, but make it perfecte. Ye must be obediente in all thynges vnto the publique magistrates and ministers, vnlesse they prescribe and commaunde wicked thinges. They call you to the lawe, ye must go: they require an accompte, ye must make it: but yf they commaunde you to do honour and sacrifice to ymages and pictures, yf they commaunde you to cease from preachyng of my name, ye ought not to obey them. And yet they must not be stirred with checkes & railinges, but they must be aunswered soberly, why it is more mete to obey God the prynce ouer all, than the power of man. For it is reason that the commaundementes of God should be preferred before the cõmaũdementes of men. And yf they prescribe vniust thinges which yet do not make menne wicked yf they obey them, they must be suffered, leste they beyng stirred they fall into a rage. As for an exaumple, if they take away vniustly thy garment or money: if they cast thee into prison: if they scourge thee with whippes. For these thynges do not take awaye godlines, but rather by occasion, increase & set furth the vertue of the gospell. Lykewyse the duetie of the naturall loue must be performed to the parent yf he haue nede, though he be an heathen, and alienate from the ghospell. But yf the authoritie of the parent withdrawe from the ghospell, the heauenly father ought more to be obeyed, than the yerthly father. And yet the father must not be churlishly despised, but gently & reuerently monished, not to repyng against God. In lyke maner also we must do with other, vnto whom we owe the dutie of humanitie, either of nature or els of curtesy. Some will say, it is heard to master suche affections, which nature hath inwardly graffed in vs. But suche stronge and manly menne, the profession of the ghospel doth require, and such as wyll be moued from the heauenly busynes by none affections. Ye shall see me go this waye: he must nedes folowe in the same which will be taken in the numbre of my disciples. The sonne that loueth the father or the mother more than me, is not mete for me. Agayne the father whiche loueth the sonne or the doughter more than me is not mete for me. And he loueth him more than me, yf in doyng hym pleasures, he neglecteth my commaũdementes. It is wicked loue so to tendre thy parentes being but men, that thou offende thy parent being God. And leste it should seme to be muche to set more by the wyll of God than all mennes affections, where as nothing is more deare to man than life, except he despise this also for the ghospell sake, and be alwaies in a redines to all kyndes of death and punishmente, and take vp his crosse and folowe me dayly, he is no mete disciple to haue me to his maister. For lyke as the disordered loue of the parent or childe, is hatred rather than loue, sith it is noysome vnto both: so the disordered care to preserue the lyfe, is a verye destruccion of the life. He hath preserued his life, that loste it well, he hath loste it, which hath kept it naughtily. He that by forsakyng the ghospel, and denying me, hath pacified the iudge, hath escaped prison, hath escaped hāging, hath escaped death, whereas he semeth to men to haue wonne his life, he hath loste his life in dede. Agayne he that constauntly stickyng vnto the ghospell putteth furth hymselfe boldely to all daungers & deathes, he semeth vnto men to loose his lyfe, where in dede he winneth his lyfe. The lyfe doth not perishe when it is taken awaye for professyng of the ghospell, but is preserued euerlastyngly: It doth perishe in dede, if it bargayne to haue a shorte tarrying in the bodye with vngodlines: and yet it liueth not than in the body, whiche liueth in the hatred of God.

He that loueth father or mother, &c.

He that findeth his life. &c.

And he that loseth his lyfe. &c.

The texte. ¶ He that receyueth you receyueth me, and he that receyueth me receyueth hym that sent me. He that receyueth a Prophete in the name of a Prophete, shall receyue a Prophetes reward. And he that receiueth a iust mā in the name of a iust mā, shall receiue a iust mans reward. And whosoeuer shall geue to one of these litle ones to drinke, a cup of cold water, only in the name of a disciple, verely I say vnto you, he shall not loose his reward.

Neyther is there any daunger leste if it chaunce you to be forsaken of your parentes, kynnesfolkes, aliaunce, and frendes, that there shoulde bee none to geue you houserowme and vittayle. The gyftes wherewith I doe adorne you, and your innocencye, shall purchase you euery where, houses, parentes, chyldren, kinnesfolkes, and frendes. For ye shall haue so many chyldren, as ye shall haue disciples. Lyke as there shall be euer some which wil despise you and persecute you: so there shalbe euer some which will comforte you with an entiere and pure affeccion. And as, albeit ye reuenge them not, but wishe them well, God in time to come wil greuously punishe them, because he taketh him selfe to be despised when ye be despised: so to the others he will rendre a great reward for your sake, albeit ye requyte them not. For God willeth not that it shoulde be imputed to you, but vnto hymselfe, yf any Gentilnes hathe been bestowed vpon you for the gospels sake. For whosoeuer receiueth you, receyueth me, in whose name ye be ambassadours: and he that receyueth me, receyueth my father, from whom I am sent, and whose matter I haue in hāde.

He that receiueth you receyueth me.

He therfore like as he is riche and liberall, so will he rendre a very great reward for euery litle benefite whiche is bestowed vpon you, that meane shall not loose theyr benefite vpon you, but haue a great auantage therby: ye muche more ought he to rendre thankes whiche gaue the benefite, than he that receyued it. For truely it is a great gayne to exchaunge a corporall benefite indurying but a whyle, for spirituall and euerlastyng ryches. Whoso receyueth the Prophete or the preacher for no nother cōsideracion but that he is a Prophete or a preacher, and that he beyng sent from me preacheth the will & promises of God, he shall receyue the rewarde of a Prophete, and become a Prophete himselfe. And whoso receyueth the iust man not because he is his kinnesman, or for any other worldely affeccion, but for this cause onely that he is a iust and a good man, liuing after the rule of the ghospell, he shall receyue the rewarde of the iust, & become a iust man himselfe. Hath not he made an happy chaunge, whiche hath vsed hospitalitie, and wonne innocencye. Pouertie can withdrawe no manne from this gayne. For here the good wyll of the geuer is counted the gyfte, and not the value of the gyfte. In somuche that whoso geueth but a cup of colde water, I saye not vnto me, but vnto any of the leaste of these, onely because he is my disciple, I saye vnto you, certenly he shall not leese his rewarde: for he also shall become my disciple. And who is so poore and bare whiche is not hable to geue a cuppe of colde water to the thirstye. And as it skilleth not howe great the thyng is that is geuen, but with what affection and in whose name it is geuen: so it skilleth not howe great he be, vpon whom this gentilnes is bestowed: this is sufficient that he is my disciple, that I may excepte and take it for a great benefite.

¶ And it came to passe that whan Iesus had made an ende of commaunding his twelue disciples, he departed thence to teache and preache in theyr cities. The texte.

After that Iesus had instructed & furnyshed his disciples with these commaundementes, and commissions to preache the gospell, he lefte them: that they beeyng aparte from theyr maister, myght make a triall of themselues, and proue what they could doe: and went from the hill, that he for his part might preache the ghospell in the cities of the Iewes.

Whan Iohn beyng in pryson harde the workes of Christe, he sent two of his disciples, and saied vnto him: Art thou he that shall come, or do we loke for an other? Iesus answered and sayed vnto them: go and shewe Iohn agayne what ye haue heard and sene. The blind receyue theyr sight, the lame walke, the lepros are clensed, the deafe heare, the dead are raysed vp, and the poore receyue the glad tydinges of the ghospell. And happy is he that is not offended by me. The texte.

And at what tyme the fame of Iesus, by the reason of his miracles which he wrought in many places, and by the reason of his wonderfull doctrine, did increase daylye more and more throughout all Iewry, and in the countreyes nere vnto Iordane, where Iohn before had preached and baptised Iesus: the disciples of Iohn somewhat nowe enuying the glory of Iesus, of whom as yet they had no great opinion, whereas of Iohn they thought that he was somewhat more than manne: they tolde vnto Iohn beeyng in pryson, what good successe and fortune came of all thinges which were doen by him, whom a lytle before he had baptised in Iordane, and with whom he dyd beare witnesse vnto the people.

Further Iohn a man of perfecte holynes, reioysing that it nowe came to passe whiche he spake before, that the name and opinion of hymselfe, whiche was greater than it was in dede, did decrease and diminishe, and the fame and opinion of Iesus did dayly increase and spreade abrode, perceyuing also the enuious affectiõs of his disciples, to the intent that he might heale theyr weakenes and abandone them from hym and deliuer them to Jesus: he chose out two of them & sent them to Jesus, to say vnto him in his name these wordes: Arte thou that Messias, whiche was sayed should come, or arte thou not he whom I spake of before, and do we yet loke for an other? Thus dyd Iohn, not that he was in doubt, but to confirme and establyche the myndes of hys disciples, and throughly to abolyche and put awaye the ouer great suspicion that they had of hymselfe, supposing him to be Christe. For yf he should haue denied that he was Christe and should haue repeted that whiche he had often spoken before that Jesus is Messias, his disciples woulde haue imputed it vnto humilitie: and the more he should haue humbled hymselfe, the greater opinion would they haue had of hym. But he knewe that Jesus hymselfe coulde best heale and cure this theyr weakenes. They go vnto Jesus and tell hym what Iohn commaunded them. Jesus knowyng that the testimonye whiche is gathered of dedes, is more certayne than that whiche spryngeth of woordes, chiefly yf a man testifieth with himselfe, made none aunswere at the first, but euen before theyr face worcking many wonders, both newe, & which haue not been heard of, healyng the sicke, chasing awaye the vncleane spirites, restoryng the lame, geuing sight to the blinde, sayeth vnto them: It nedeth not for me to shewe what I am. Onely goe and shewe vnto Iohn what ye haue seen with your iyes, and what ye haue heard with your eares. The blynde receyueth syght, the lame walketh, the lepers bee clensed, the deafe heareth, the demoniackes whiche be troubled with deuils, be deliuered, the dead ryse againe: Finally according to the prophecy of Esay, the poore and humble doth embrace the ioyfull tidinges of euerlastyng lyfe, whiche the stoute and arrogant do despise. These workes do declare sufficiently what I am. And blessed is he, vnto whose mynde suche great successe of the ghospell geueth not occasion of yll. Jesus spake this also, notyng modestly the enuy of Iohn hys disciples, but in suche wyse that they should not be putte to shame before the multitude, but should knowe theyr faute secretely with themselues: temperyng his answere by all meanes, both that he myght auoyde suspicion of arrogancy, and that the disciples myght beleue hym the better, and also that he myght rather heale theyr affeccion, than openly to reproue them.

Go & shewe Iohn againe what ye haue heard and seen.

The texte.

And as they departed, Jesus began to speake vnto the people concerning Iohn. What went ye out into the wildernes to see a reede that is shaken with the winde? go to, what went ye out to see a man clothed in soft rayment? beholde they that weare soft clothyng, are in kinges houses. But what went ye out to see a Prophete? verely I say vnto you, and more than a Prophete. For this is he of whom it is written: Beholde I sende my messenger before thy face, who shall prepare thy waye before thee. Verely I say vnto you: among them that be borne of women arose not a greater than Iohn the baptist. Yet he that is lesse in the kingdom of heauen, is greater than he. From the dayes of Iohn Baptist vntill this day, the kingdom of heauen suffereth violence, and the violent plucke it vnto them. For all the Prophetes, and the lawe it selfe prophecied vnto Iohn. And yf ye will receyue it, this is Helias, whiche was for to come. He that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

Then when they were departed, Jesus turnyng vnto the multitude, leste they shoulde surmyse any thyng of Iohn otherwyse than were conuenyent, supposyng that he demaunded these thynges as though he had been in doubt himselfe, and not rather to heale the weakenes of his disciples: he beganne to setfurth the prayses of Iohn very largely, but yet in suche wyse that he woulde not geue hym the prayse of Messias, but the nexte prayse onely,

and yet he wouldde that John his testimony concernyng hym, shoulde be of weyght. For it is expedient that the people shoulde haue a very good opinion of John, whiche had testified so notably of Jesus, that he was the sonne of God, that he was the lambe whiche shoulde take awaye the synnes of the worlde, that it was he that shoulde baptise in fier and spirite. For neither vanitie nor lying coulde be suspected in suche a manne, as though he had falsely so praysed Christe before: nor waueryng or inconstancye, as though beeyng chaunged afterwarde he shoulde haue begonne to doubte of Christe. Let no man (yf he) suspecte John of inconstancie.

For yf ye thynke hym suche a one that he wyll chaunge his minde after the maner of mutable men, and doubte of that thyng whiche he before affirmed, for what cause dyd ye lately flocke together in wildernes to gase and lobe on? To see a reede shaken with the windes? For suche maner of manne should he be, yf he would nowe swarue and dissente from hymselfe, and should become much vnlike vnto himselfe. But the continuall hardnes of his whole lyfe, doth lightly deliuer him from this suspicion. What I saye, came ye together in to wildernes for to see? A manne gayly appareled with silkes? This was a sight nothyng mete for wildernes. For they that be clothed with fine lynnen and silkes, be in kynges palaces, vnto whom doth agree excesse and riot, and delicate lyuyng. And emong them inconstancye and flattery hath place. He that liueth with locustes and wylde honye, he that is clothed with Camels heare, he that is gyrded with a letheren gyrdle, is not thus suspected nor misdemed: And the familiaritie of the kynges courte coulde not alter his ordre. The prylon doeth declare and shewe that he coulde not flatter. But it must nedes be some great spectacle and sight whiche drewe you so thicke into the desserte. Therfore what came ye to beholde? Any Prophete? for they be commonly wunte to leade theyr lyues in desserte.

What went ye out into wylderne to see? &c.

Beholde they that weare softe clothing. &c

Here truly ye be not frustrate of your hope: For ye haue not seen onely a Prophete, but a more excellent thing than a Prophete. For it is he of whom Malachias once prophecied, that he should come before Messias as beeyng nowe at hande, that he should not onely by his oracle and true saying, promise him to come long after, but also poynte hym with his finger to be at hande. Thus is the prophecie: Lo sayeth he, I sende my Aungell before thy face to prepare thy waye for thy cummyng at hande. This I assure you, so great is the excellencie of John, that none is greater than he, emong them all that hath been borne of a woman: Yet he whiche is at this present esteemed lesse of many in preaching of the gholpell, onely is greater than he: for he promised not with doubtfull prophecies, that Messias once shoulde come, but he shewed him, & appointed him nowe cumming, and preached that the kyngdome of heauen was nowe at hande. Hitherto the heauenly doctryne was looked for, whiche the figures of the Patryarkes, whiche also the oracles of the Prophetes, had darkely promised. Nowe John so excited and stirred the hartes of many to the desire of euangelicall doctryne, that from the begynnyng of his preachyng vnto this daye, they breake in vnto it through the violence of fayth, both sinners and heathen people, and wyll we, nill we, they plucke it, and rauishe it violently. They wyll no longer be excluded, they wyll no longer be detayned in shadowes & darke riddles of the olde lawe, perceiuing that the light of the euangelicall trueth is at hand, and that the thyng is nowe present, whiche was shewed and signified in the former bokes, perceyuyng also that none other prophecie ought to be loked for, touchyng Messias that shoulde come. For all figures, by the whiche the lawe poynted Messias to come, and all prophecies of the Prophetes, which promysed that Messias should come, as soone as Jhon came, left of to promyse the thyng to come. For it is folishnes to loke for the thing that is presente, as though it were to come.

I for: vnto you. &c.

From the dayes of. &c

For all the Prophetes &c.

There is no more to do, but feruently and gredely to teache, and take that which agreably to the true sayinges of the Prophetes is nowe presently offered. And to the intente that ye maye playnly se that hereafter there is none other Prophete which shall shewe you of Messias to come, this is that John, whome Malachias vnder Helias name (whome he folowed in austeritie and hardenes of lyuyng, and apparell, whome he folowed also in franke reprouing of kinges) prophetied before should come before that Christe did come. Wherfore yf ye receyue hym, beleue ye that Messias so long loked for, is nowe at hande: ye haue seene his lyfe, ye haue hearde his testimony, ye heare also what I will saye vnto you. Yf any haue eares to receyue the trueth, let hym heare: yf any wyll stop his eares, let hym thanke hymselfe of his owne madoyng. There is nothyng omitted of vs that may moue the hartes of all menne.

The texte.

¶ But whereunto shall I lyken this generacion: It is lyke vnto children whiche sitte in the market places, and call vnto theyr felowes, and saye: We haue pyped vnto you, and ye haue not daunced, we haue mourned vnto you, & ye haue not lamented. For John came neyther eating nor drinkyng, and they saye he hath a deuyll. The sonne of manne came eatyng and drynkyng, and they saye: beholde the glutton, and the wyne bibber, a frende to the publicanes, and to the synners. And wysedome is iustified of her children.

And yet I see many so obstinately vnbeleuyng, that neyther afrayed by the austeritie of John, nor allured by my curtesye and well doyng, wyll receyue the thyng whiche they haue loked for nowe so long tyme, by the promyse of the Prophetes. What maner of generacion shall I call this? Or by what comparison may I set it furth? It is lyke vnto children syttyng in the market place, whiche with a common song crye thus to theyr felowes a farre of: we haue song you pleasaunt thinges vpon our pypes, and ye haue not daunced: we haue song you sorowfull thinges, and ye haue not wayled. We haue proued & allayed one thing, but diuers waies. Neither waie hath been profitable vnto the vnbeleuers, lower and vntractable. John minding to stirre vp this nacion vnto penaunce, (as it were with a sorowfull song) came furth with great austeritie & hardnes of lyfe, fasting, abstayning from all delicate meates, forbearyng wyne, and drynkyng water. And some lette not to saye that he is possessed with the deuill, so farre they be from folowyng of hym. The sonne of man came furth minding to stirre vp this nacion to the loue of the heauenly doctryne, as it were with a more merye song of the pypes: and that he myght allure them the more with his gentilnes, he hideth not himselfe in deserte places, nor weareth no notable rough garment, nor vseth no notable sower meates, but framing himselfe to all men, and despising the cumpanye of no man, eateth all maner of meates, and drinketh whatsoeuer is set before hym: and ingayne they picke quarels, falsely to reproue hym, saying: Beholde the great eater, the wyne bibber, the frende of the publicanes and synners. They that be not moued with austeritie and roughnes, be wont to be wonne by fayre speakyng

ting and gentilnes. But this nacion by euery occasion is made wurse, & turneth euery remedy and medicine into a matter of greater disease and sickenes. But by the moe wayes they be prouoked to health and saluacion, the more euident it shall be to all men, that they perishe through theyr owne malice: and the wysedome of God, by whose councell all these thynges be doen, shall haue the prayse of righteousenesse emong her children, when they shall see them that appered great menne and iust menne before the world, to be repelled from the kyngdome of heauen for theyr vnbeleefe: contrarywyse when they shall see sinners, Publycans, harlottes, heathen people, humble and abiect, to be receiued into euerlastyng saluacion for the redines of theyr fayth.

Than began he to vpbrayde the cities, in whiche moste of his miracles were doen: because they repented not of their sinnes. Woe vnto thee Chorazin. Woe vnto thee Bethsaida. For yf the miracles whiche were shewed to you had been doen in the citie of Tyre or Sydon, they had repented of theyr synnes long agone in sacke clothe and ashes. But I say vnto you: it shalbe better with Tyre and Sydon in the daye of iudgement, than with you. And thou Capernaum whiche art lift vp vnto heauen, shalt be brought downe to hell. For yf the miracles whiche haue been doen in thee, had been shewed in Sodome, they had remayned vntyll this daye. But I saye vnto you, that it shall better with Sodome in the daye of iudgement, than with thee. The texte.

Here Iesus musyng in maner at the inuincible malyce of certayne people, for the feare and exsample of others, began to rebuke the cities, whiche where as he had shewed many miracles, and healed men, & taught so many thynges: yet they were not stirred to repentaunce of theyr former lyfe, saying: Woe be to the Chorazin: woe be to the Bethsaida: for yf the wonders which haue been shewed in you, had been seen in Tyre & Sydon, whiche cities ye abhorre as heathen and wycked, long ago they beeyng contryte would haue doen penaunce in heere clothes and ashes. And in the meane time ye stand in your owne conceyte, because ye be of the stocke of Israel, because ye sacrifyce not vnto Idolles, because ye be not geuen to riot and excesse so openly and loosely, because ye worshyp one God, because ye be the children of Abraham, because ye haue the lawe and the Prophetes: but vnlesse ye repente you, all these thynges shall turne into the heape of your damnacion. For this I assure you, in the daye of goddes iudgement when euery man shalbe iudged of God, not after opinion and heare saye, but according to his desert: Tyrus and Sydon shall be more gently handled than you. They shalbe the more easely punyshed, because they were not stirred to repentaunce as ye be. And thou, o Capernaum, which nowe standyng in thyne owne conceyte, art in courage as high as heauen: shalt than be plucked downe to hell. Thou reioycest with thy selfe as though thou were righteous and doest abhorre the Sodomites of Sodome whiche in tyme paste were horribly punished for theyr synnes: but in the daye of iudgement theyr damnacion shal be more easy than thine. For if those miracles had been wrought in Sodome whiche haue been shewed in thee, they would haue satisfied by penaunce, God that was offended with them, and theyr cities had stande vnto this daye. Woe be to the Chorazin. Woe be to thee Bethsaida. But I saye vnto you. &c.

At that tyme Iesus answered, and sayed: I thanke the o father, o Lorde of heauen and yearth, because thou hast hyd these thynges from the wise and prudent, and hast reuealed them vnto babes. Merely father so it was thy good will. All thynges are deliuered vnto me of my father. And no man knoweth the sonne, but the father: nor no man knoweth the father, but the sonne, and to whomsoeuer the sonne will reuele hym. The texte.

And when the disciples were returned vnto Jesus from their preachyng, and told him cherfully that the matter came well to passe, he teachyng vs that whatsoeuer we do prayse worthy ought to be ascribed vnto God, lifting hys eyes vp to heauen, saide: I thanke thee, o father, which art Lord of heauen and yerth, and by whose wysedome all thynges be gouerned, because thou haste hyd this heauenly philosophie from them that be high mynded and puffed vp with pryde, through an opinion of their worldely wysedome and polycie: and haste opened it to the litle ones, & to the meke, and to fooles after the worldes iudgemente. Truly so it is father, for so it is thought best vnto thy gentilnes: to teache that thou art not pleased with the stout, and such as trust vnto their owne iustice and wisedome: and that they be great with the, for the simplicitie of fayth, whom the worlde taketh for fooles and abiectes. So it pleased thy godly wysedome, to condemne the wisedome of man, and to drawe vnto thee good meme by the humilitie of the doctryne euangelicall. And by and by turnyng to them that stoode aboute him, sayed: My father is the author and the cause of all these good thynges, who hath deliuered all vnto me. To knowe hym and me, is the very true felicitie. And he doeth not bowe hymselfe but to quiet and meke myndes. This is a certayne secrete Philosophie and not knowen vnto the worlde. No manne knoweth the sonne but the father: no manne knoweth the father but the sonne, and to whom the sonne wyll manifest hym: and he doth not manifest him to the proude and high minded. The doctryne auayleth nothyng, the miracles auayleth nothyng, without the secrete inspiracion. But none be worthy of this, but they whiche distrustyng their owne helpes commit themselfe wholy to the goodnes of God. They that thynke themselues wyse, be not worthy for this wysedome. They that thynke themselfes ryche, be not receyued to these ryches. They that thynke themselfes noble and myghtie, be not receyued to these preferrynges. They that thynke themselfes iuste, be not mete to receyue the iustice of God.

Verely father so it was. &c.

The texte. Come vnto me all ye that labour, and are laden, and I will ease you. Take my yoke vpon you, and learne of me: For I am meke and lowely in hearte, and ye shall finde rest vnto your soules. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is lyght.

Here Jesus considerynge in his mynde the great miserye and calamitie of mankynde, some to be oppressed with powertie, agayne some more greuously to be tormented with care for riches, some to be greued with diseases, some with olde age, some to be vexed with loue, and some more greuously troubled with hatred, many to wander and wauer in fundry mazes of false opinions, many to be afflicted and greued inwardly with the consciences of their synnes, and that there was none, whiche played the parte of a faythfull and effectuall pastour, whereas there were innumerable whiche take vpon them to be preestes in countenaunce and hawtie behauioure, whiche magnified themselfes by the name of maister & Rabby, and whiche dyd easte their tithes: moued with pitie and compassion doeth inuite and call vnto hym all men, promisyng of his owne accorde vnto all menne, comforte and remedy, so that with a synple and syncere harte, they cumme vnto hym, and shakyng of the moste miserable and moste greuous yoke of the worlde, take vpon them the yoke of the doctryne euangelicall.

Cumme vnto me (sayeth he) as many of you as bee greued with afflictions, cares, or with conscience of your synnes, and as many as be oppressed with the burden of aduersitie, I will refreshe you, I will geue you solace and comforte agaynste all kyndes of displeasures. Neyther ryches, nor honours, nor pleasures of this worlde, bryngeth the true tranquillitie & quietnes of mynde: nor the wysedome of this worlde, nor the religion of the Pharisees deliuereth from greuouse carefulnes. The worlde hath his yoke, at the firste apperaunce pleasaunte, but in dede greuouse and sharpe. Firste of all shake it of, and cumme vnto me gladly, and bowe your neckes cherefully vnder my yoke. Learne of me what thyng onely and truly doeth pacifye and ease the mynde, and of what fountayne this whole tumulte and trouble of menne doeth spryng. Truely this is the hawte and fyerce mynde trusting to it selfe, and trustyng lytle to God. Out of this spryngeth Ambicion, desyre of money, lust to reuenge, debate, enuy, warre, sedicion, wickednes agaynste God: than the which thynges what canne be more tumultuous or troublesome. So that yf ye will be once deliuered from all illes, take awaye the fountayne of these euyls, receyue my doctryne, and folowe my lyfe. Learne of me howe that I am meke and of no hawte herte. I haue declared by miracles what I canne doe, and yet I desyre neyther ryches, nor honour, and I am ambicouse and gredy vtterly vpon nothyng whiche semeth to the worlde great and goodly. I disdayne none be he neuer so vile or sinfull. I geue not taunte for taunte: I curse not them that wyshe me yll: I stryke not hym agayne, that stryketh me: I depende wholy of the commaundemente of my father. He wyll punishe the yll doers: he wyll rewarde the good dedes: to hym I render the whole glorye: to hym I committe all my care. I obey simply and playnly in all thynges his will: and as muche as in me is, I study to do for all men, and to hurte no manne. yf ye learne onely this of me, ye shall fele and perceyue these miserable tumultes and troubles to be asswaged, wherwith nowe ye be tossed and turmoyled without any ende, and ye shall gette rest and quietnes to your myndes: whiche shall folowe you and be with you in the mid tempestes of aduersities which trouble you on euery syde. A meke and a colde mynde is the fountayne of all mannes tranquillitie and quietnes. Onely hauyng confidence bowe downe your neckes. There is no cause why ye should feare my yoke. It semeth harde and heuy vnto the vnbeleuers, but vnto them which with all theyr harte trust vnto the goodnes of God, whiche haue receyued the fyer of the euangelicall charitie, my yoke is softe and easye, and my burden is lyght. For the certen and sure hope of rewardes, maketh the yoke pleasaut: and the ineffable loue towardes God, maketh the burden light. For what is not swete and pleasaunte to him that hath a loue to it? yf the mynde haue a good conscience and be voyde of all care, yf it haue a certayne trust of the rewardes of euerlastyng lyfe, what shall spryng or ryse whiche canne trouble or moue suche a mynde?

And I will ease you.

For I am meke & lowly of herte.

The texte. At that tyme, Jesus went on the Sabboth dayes through the corne, and his disciples were an hungred, and began to plucke the eares of the corne, and to eate. But whan the Pharisees sawe it, they sayed vnto hym: beholde thy disciples do that whiche is not lawfull to do vpō the Sabboth day. But he sayd vnto them: haue ye not red what Dauid did whan he was an hungred, and they that were with hym: howe he entred into the house of God, and dyd eate the shewe breaddes, which were not lawfull for him to eate, neither for them whiche were with him, but onely for the priestes? Or haue ye not red in the lawe howe that on the Sabboth dayes the priestes in the temple breake the Sabboth, and are blameles? But I saye vnto you: that in this place is one greater than the temple. Wherfore yf ye wist what this meaneth, I will mercye, and not sacrifice: ye would not haue condemned innocentes. For the sonne of man is Lorde also of the Sabboth daye.

AND vpon a certayne daye as Jesus went by the corne, and his Disciples stirred with hunger and goyng before hym, plucked the eares of the corne, and rubbyng them with theyr handes, eate the corne: the Phariseis takyng occasion on euery syde falsely to blame them, sayed vnto him: Seest thou not what thy disciples do breaking the Sabboth daye? Why than doest thou not forbid them sith they do vpon the Sabboth daye, that whiche is not lawfull? Here Jesus so defended his disciples, that they coulde not blame hym, as the aucthour of breakyng of the Sabboth day, & teacheth them withall, that suche maner ordinaunces ought to cease as often as necessitie or some notable profite chaunceth. For the Sabboth daye, fastinges, and suche lyke constitutions were not ordeyned for mans hurte and vndoyng, but for his preseruacion and health. Therfore he doth obiect against the Phariseis beyng skilfull in the lawe, an exaumple out of the lawe, and that of a man not of the common sorte, but of him whom they counted chiefly to be an honest man and blameles. Why (sayd he) doe ye falsely blame my disciples for that they asswage theyr hunger with a smale thing, and easie to be gotten? Haue ye not red how that holy Dauid cōstrained by necessitie, enterprised a greater thyng. Who fleyng from Saule, when he came to the citie of Nobe, dyd eate the loaues, whiche they called the loaues set furth to be shewed, and not only he, but also his folowers and seruauntes? It is vnlawfull for any man sauing only priestes and Leuites, to eate of these loaues: but when he was in daunger for hunger, neyther the priestes feared to shewe hym these loues, nor Dauid feared not to touche and eate them, as though they had been prophane and not holy. Yf ye alowe the doyng of the priest Albimaleth: if ye disalow not the doyng of the Prophete Dauid: why do ye reproue my disciples for a thing muche lesse to be regarded? For what a smale worke is this to pluche vp the eares of corne being at hand, & to eate the corne rubbed out with your hādes? Besides this the lawe it selfe cōmaundeth the Sabboth to be broken. For the priestes in the temple killing ỳ beastes on the Sabboth day, & exercising the bucherly office, gathering together a pile of wood and setting it a fier, plucking of the skinne, cuttyng them in pieces, and sethyng them, breake not they the Sabboth day? the lawe suffereth no worke

to be doen, and yet the sacrate prieſtes doe exercise & vſe theſe fowle woꝛkes in any holy place vpon the ſabboth day. Ye knowe that theſe thinges be doen, and ye doe allowe them foꝛ this, becauſe they make foꝛ the vſe of the temple. If the authoꝛitie of the temple be ſo great, that the woꝛke which is beſtowed vpon it doeth not breake the Sabboth daye, this I ſaye vnto you: Heare is one of greater authoꝛitie than the temple. They that doe ſeruice vnto hym, ought moꝛe to be excuſed from the blame of breakyng of the Sabboth daye. If they breake not the Sabboth day which labour in the ſacrifices of Moyſes: muche moꝛe ought they to bee excuſed that ſerue and wayte vpon the ghoſpell, whiche is a ſacrifice moſte acceptable to God. He that did oꝛdayne the Sabboth daye may alſo take awaye the Sabboth: and he that oꝛdeyned the Sabboth daye, dyd oꝛdayne it foꝛ mans ſake, and contrarywiſe he made not man becauſe of the Sabboth daye. It is mete theꝛfoꝛe that the kepyng of the Sabboth daye geue place to the pꝛofite and commoditie of man, and not man to periſhe becauſe of the Sabboth daye. If ſacrifice be made ſo muche of, that whoſo attendeth vpon it, may blameleſſe breake the Sabboth daye, why holde ye not hym excuſed, whiche by a neceſſarie benefyte helpeth his neyghbour vpon the Sabboth daye? Foꝛ God confeſſeth that he eſteemeth moꝛe this kinde of ſacrifice, than yf a man offer vpt to him a beaſt. Foꝛ he ſayeth by his Pꝛophete Oſee. I deſyꝛe mercye and not ſacryfice: And the knowledge of God, moꝛe than bꝛente ſacrifice. Ye take vpon you to be learned in the lawe, and yet this is wꝛytten in the lawe, whiche yf ye truely vnderſtoode, ye would neuer haue blamed them that be blameleſſe, foꝛ a lyght matter, & noyſome to no manne. Foꝛ there be certayne oꝛdinaunces, not that they be good oꝛ yll of themſelfes, but that by ſome meanes they be pꝛofitable towardes godlines, and do rather ſignifie, than bꝛing oꝛ geue holines: as be kindes of meate, the colour oꝛ faſhion of garmentes, oꝛ the ſtuffe that they muſte be made of, faſting, and holy dayes. Theſe thinges we muſt not ſo ſuperſticiouſly obſerue and kepe, that foꝛ them we omitte and let paſſe thinges that be of themſelues and euer good, oꝛ doe thoſe thynges whiche be of themſelues and euer yll.

But I ſaye vnto you. &c

Wherfore pꝛye wiſe what this meaneth. &c.

Aduoutrye, homicide, backbytyng and enuye, bee euer yll and wicked: And yet they that bee of the phariſaicall religion, doe leſſe abhoꝛre from theſe thynges, than from the breakyng of the Sabboth daye. To helpe thy nedye neyghbour is euer godlye and holy, and yet the Phariſeis vnder the colour of kepyng of the Sabboth daye, ſuffre theyꝛ neyghbour to be greued and vexed.

The texte.

But he departed thence, and went into theyꝛ Synagogue. And beholde there was a man hauyng a withered hand. And they aſked him, ſaying: Is it lawfull to heale vpon the Sabboth dayes? That they myght accuſe him. And he ſayed vnto them: who emong you ſhall haue a ſheepe, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabboth daies, will he not take it and life it out? Than howe muche better is a man than a ſheepe? Wherfoꝛe it is lefull to do a good dede on the Sabboth dayes. Than ſayeth he to the man: ſtretch furth thy hande. And he ſtretched it furth. And it was reſtoꝛed vnto healthy lyke as the other.

This daungerous ſuperſtition, Jeſus Chriſte ſtudied clerely to plucke out of the myndes of his diſciples. Theꝛfoꝛe to the intent he myght beate the ſame into the myndes of all men by a moꝛe manifeſt example, departing from this place, he returned into theyꝛ Synagogue, myndyng to take them to witneſſe, whom he knew to be chiefly infected with this diſeaſe. And behold, furthwith there was geuen hym occasion of a miracle. For there was one in the multi-

And behold there was a mãne hauyng a wi-thered hãd tude whiche had a lame and a withered ryght hande. Nowe the Pharisees le-kyng after an honest quarell to accuse Jesus, marked him whether he would heale the man vpon the sabboth day, which a litle before defended thapostles where as they were blamed for breakyng of the sabboth daye. But Jesus myndyng to declare vnto all men that their accusemente came not of religion but of enuy, commaunded the man with the lame hande to come furth before them, that the faulte myght appere vnto them all, to the intent they myght be moued with pitie toward the miserable man, whiche had that membre dead
And they asked him. &c. and vnprofitable, that is moste necessary for a poore manne. But before he healed the man not ignorannte what the Pharisees thought, he demaunded of them this question. Is it lefull to heale a manne on the sabboth daye? And whether is it more tollerable emong you to doe good to a man or to do yll, to saue a manne or to destroy hym? For he destroyeth hym, who whan he maye saue hym, doth not saue hym. But they all helde theyr peace leste the people should thynke them cruell, yf they should saye, it were not lawfull to helpe and succour a miserable manne on the sabboth daye, or leste they should lese theyr occasion to blame Jesus, yf they had answered it had been lawfull.
Who emong you shall haue a shepe. They therfore saying nothyng, Jesus hymselfe bryngyng furth an example leused the knot of the question. Whiche emong you (sayd he) shall be founde so religious and deuoute a keper of the sabboth day, that yf it chaunce one of his shepe to be in daunger, by fallyng into the dyke on the sabboth daye, wyll he not put to his hande furthwith to plucke her out? If auarice can do so muche with you, that ye had rather breake the sabboth daye, than to diminyshe your substaunce by one shepe: howe muche more ought charitie to preuayle, and obtayne of you, to helpe your neyghbour on the sabboth day, whiche is farre better than a shepe? It is manifest therfore (I reporte me to you) to be lawfull to helpe your neyghbour with a good turne vpon the sabboth daye.
Than saieth he to the manne. But whan Jesus perceyued that theyr enuy woulde not be mitigated neyther by these woordes, nor by the syght of the miserable man, and that they would not be moued by so euident and playne reason, casting his eyes about, taking it greuously, and beyng sory for suche great blindnes of theyr hearte, he turned vnto hym that had the drye and withered hande, and sayed: Put furth thyne hande: and at that woorde he put furth his hande as plyaunt and nimble, as the other was.

The texte. Than the Pharisees went out, and helde a counsayle agaynst hym, howe they myght destroye him. But Jesus whan he knewe it, departed thence, and muche people folowed hym, and he healed them all, and charged them that they shoulde not vtter hym: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esay the Prophete, who sayeth. Behold my sonne whome I haue chosen: my beloued in whome my soule hath muche delyght. I will put my spirite in him, and he shall shewe iudgement vnto the Gentyles. He shall not stryue nor crye, neyther shall any man heare his voyce in the stretes. He shall not breake the brosed reede, and he shall not quenche the smokyng flaxe, tyll he sende furth iudgement vnto victory, and the Gentyles shall trust in his name.

The Pharisees driuen into a rage by this so notable an acte, when they perceyued that they had loste an occasion to accuse Jesus, departyng out of the Synagoge, & leauyng the multitude whom they perceyued to beare a good mynde vnto Jesus, consulted secretly with the Herodians, whiche also had to do with Iohn his diſciples, which enuyed ẏ glozy of Ieſus, by what meanes they myght rydde Ieſus out of the waye. They had nowe a will toward murder, and nothyng lacked but a meete occaſion. But Ieſus not ignozaunte what they intended, withdrewe himſelfe from that place, leſte he myght ſeme to haue geuen ſome occaſion of extreme delyng to the rageyng and furyous men. He myght haue ſpytefully repreſte them, he myght haue ouerwhelmed them with miracles, he might haue deſtroyed the alſo, but myndyng to ſhewe the euangelicall mekenes, he gaue place to theyr rage & fury, ẏ perhaps they would relent and repent: and thus farre he gaue place vnto them, that neuertheles in other places he diſtributed his heauelydoctrine vnto the multitude, which folowed him thicke and thikefold, and as many ſicke men, oz otherwiſe myſerable, as were brought vnto hym, he healed them. Foz his tyme was not yet come: the gholpell was not yet ſufficiently ſpred abzode. Wherfoze he gaue place to them, not to prouyde foz hymſelfe, but to take from them the occaſion of a wicked dede, & to teache withall, that the wyſdome of the gholpell ought not to be defended againſt the diſobedient with threatnynges, wyth checkes oz contencions, but with mildenes & mekenes. Therfoze he cõmaunded the multitude ẏ folowed hym, that they ſhould not diſcloſe hym, leſte the tumour ſpreadyng abzode, the Phariſeis myght bee ſtirred moze and moze. Neyther was this thyng doen by chaunce, but it was prophecied nowe long before by the Prophete Eſay that it ſhould ſo come to paſſe: In ẏ wrytinges of the whiche Prophete the father doeth deſcryde and ſet furth the victozye of his ſonne obteyned thozowe mekenes, and the ſaluacion of the gholpell, tranſlated to the Gentyles, foz the pertinacye and ſtubbernelſe of the Iewes, ſufficiently knowen to all men. Behold (ſayeth he) my ſonne whom I haue choſen before other: behold my dere beloued, in whom my ſoule is delited. I will geue vnto hym my meke and gentle ſpirite, by thinſpiracion wherof, he ſhall ſhewe iudgement, not onely to the people of Iſrael, but alſo to all nacions. He ſhall not doe this tumultuouſly oz violently. Foz he ſhall not chyde noz ſhall not crye out againſt them that be contenciouſe. No man ſhall heare his voyce in the ſtretes, as they be wonte that warre with the tong. He ſhall geue place to the muincible malice, but he ſhall endeuour to bryng all vnto ſaluacion. He ſhall geue none occaſion to the ẏ of theyr incurable deſtruction, but he ſhall ſeme all, ẏ by any meanes they can turne themſelues vnto the better. He wyll not deſpiſe the weake, he wyll not deſpyſe the fedle, in whome there ſhall remayne any good hope: he wyll cheryſhe them, rather than oppreſſe them. He wyll not breake the browſed reede, and he wyll not quenche out the ſmokyng flaxe, vntyll the trueth of it ſelfe, by the proceſſe of time, haue the hygher hand and vntyll the madneſſe of the wicked through theyr owne default breake out ſo farre, that all men maye pereeyue, that they be worthely repelled and caſt awaye. Than the Gentyles ſhall embrace his doctryne, whiche the Iewes deſpiſed, and put theyr truſt in hym, whom the Iewes refuſed to truſt.

And the people folowed hym he healed them all.

And charged thẏ &c.

That it myght bee fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſay. &c.

¶ Than was brought vnto hym a blynde and dumme man, vexed with a deuyll: and he healed hym, inſomuche that the blynde and dumme both ſpake and ſawe. And all the people were amazed, & ſayed: Is not this that ſonne of Dauid? But whã the Phariſeis heard it, they ſayed: This felowe dryueth not out deuils but by the help of Belzebub the prynce of deuils. But whan Ieſus knew their thoughtes, he ſayed vnto them: Euery kyngdom deuided againſt it ſelfe ſhalbe brought to naught. And euery citie oz houſe deuided againſt it ſelfe selfe shall not stand. And if Sathan cast out Sathã, he is deuided against himselfe. How than shal his kingdom endure? And if I cast out deuils by the help of Belzebub, by whose help do your children cast them out? Therfore they shall be your iudges. But yf I cast out deuils by the spirite of God, than is the kingdom of God come vnto you. Or els how can one enter into a strong mans house and spoyle his iewels except he first binde the strong man, and than spoyle his house.

This feller driueth out deuils, &c.

It chaunced in the meane tyme that emong many whome he healed, they offered vnto Iesus one that was possessed with a deuyll, whiche had taken from the wretched man both his yes and his toung. Iesus commaunded the deuill to departe: he departed, and forthwith the moste miserable manne was wholy restored in such wyse that both he sawe and spake. The multitude was amased at that so great a matter, and nowe suspectyng hym to bee Messias, they spake among themselues. Is this that sonne of Dauid, whom the Prophetes dyd promyse? When the Phariseis heard this voyce of the people, they set not vpon Iesus hymselfe, of whom alwayes they had the worse, but they endeuour to withdrawe the hartes of the multitude from the honorying and veneration of him. It cannot be (sy they) that this is that sonne of Dauid as ye suppose, for he shall come borne vp and mayntayned by the power of God. He casteth not out deuils by the helpe of God, sith he is wicked and a breaker of the Sabboth daye, a glotton, and a dronkard, and a companion of the Publicanes, but by the helpe of Belzebub the prynce of deuils. Now Iesus although he heard not their voyce, yet knowing both what they thought, and what they spake to others, turnyng vnto the Phariseis, so ordereth his answer, that by manifest reason he repreueth their madde railing and rebuke, and yet he rayseth not on them agayne, but rather prouoketh them louingly to embrace their health and saluacion. Euery kyngdome (sy he) deuided with inwarde deuision and discorde, muste nedes come to naught. And euery house stryuyng with it selfe, with inwarde disagreing must nedes fall. And yf Sathan driueth out Sathan, and yf one deuyll driueth out an other, howe shall his kyngdome endure? And howe is it lykely and greable, all deuilles beyng enemyes of mennes, desiryng nothyng but the hurte and destruccion of them, whose health miserably they doe enuy, that nowe they fauour so greatly their health, that for this cause one deuyll stryueth fighteth with an other? Nowe yf I cast out deuils by the power and helpe of Belzebub, these me disciples your children, whom ye knowe, by whose helpe cast they out deuils? for they also cast out deuils, and yet ye repreue not them, but only me ye falsely blame: and yet they haue might of me to cast them out. Therfore it cãnot be that they should chase awaye deuils in the power of God, and I in the might of Belzebub, sith they doe it in my name. And therfore men vnlettered and vnlearned be able to doe so great thynges, because they beleue simply that by the power of God I chase awaye deuils. Therfore their godly beleefe shall condẽne your vnbeleefe, because you desyre rather vniustly to repreue, whereas ye might be godly folowers. And if the thyng it selfe declare that I doe cast out deuils not by the helpe of ỹ deuill, but by the might of God, ye ought not to doubte any more, but that the sõne of Dauid is come, and the kyngdom of God, sith ye see that the strength of the aduersaryes decth banyshe awaye, whan they whiche profesle the ghospell call vpon my name. Therfore lyke as there is a concorde and agrement emong the deuils themselues to destroye all men: so I whiche am cum to saue all men, haue no concorde nor agrement with them, but deadly dissencion and disagremente. Hitherto Beelzebub hath exercised hys tyrannye vpon sinfull men geuen vnto fylthie desyres: I takyng away the synnes of men doe confounde and destroy Beelzebub the Prynce wyth hys whole garde, and I doe restore vnto god through innocencye, whom he did possesse throughe vnrighteousnes. The thyng is done by force, not by any agremente betwene me and the deuils. They feele, and confesse that there is a present power wherunto they be forced to geue place. Or els howe maye it be that any man myght enter into the tower of a myghty man, and take away his stuffe, vnlesse fyrst he ouercum the myghty man, and lay him in bandes. Than he once kept vnder which was hable to resyste, he wyl spoyle the whole house, and as it were carye awaye hys pray. The worlde is the house of Beelzebub. In thys he claimed to hym a certeyne kyngdome, because the whole worlde was geuen to ambicion, excesse, fylthy lustes, auarice, anger, enuy, and other noysom desyres, by the whiche he is made myghty. I as a man of more power and valiantnes, haue entred into his kyngdome, and ouercōming him haue wunne againe to the true prince, that whiche he vntustly did possesse. Therfore there is no agrement betwene vs: the prynces be diuers, the kingdomes be diuerse, by no bande or leage to be reconciled and made at one.

The texte. He that is not with me, is against me: and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abrode. Wherfore I saye vnto you, all maner of synne and blasphemy shalbe forgeuen men, but the blasphemye agaynst the spirite, shall not be forgeuen men. And whosoeuer speaketh a woord against the sonne of man, it shalbe forgeuen him. But whosoeuer speaketh against ꝑ holy goste, it shal not be forgeuen hym, neyther in thys worlde, nor in the worlde to cumme. Eyther make the tree good, and hys fruite good, or els make the tree euyll, and hys fruite euyl. For the tree is knowen by hys fruite. O generacyon of vypers, howe canne ye speake good thinges, whā ye your selues are euil, for out of the aboūdaunce of the hart, the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of the harte, bryngeth furth good thynges, And an euill man out of the ill treasure bryngeth furth euil thynges. But I saye vnto you, that of euery ydle worde that men shall haue spoken, they shall geue account in the day of iudgement. For of thy woordes thou shalte be iustyfyed, and of thy woordes thou shalt bee condemned.

He that wyl be grafte in the kyngdome of god, muste withdrawe hymselfe from the kyngdome of Beelzebub, and muste fight agaynst hym in my tentes. No man can be at peace wyth God, vnlesse he be at war with the deuyll. I take goddes parte, and not Beelzebubs. Therfore whoso is not in my tentes, is my enemye, and aduersarye. And whoso healpeth not me in gatheryng together, is agaynst me in scatteryng abrode. See that ye ioyne youre selfe to the better parte. It is better to obteyne health in the kyngdome of God, than euerlasting deathe in the kyngdome of the deuil. Ceasse from seruyng of synne, and the deuil shall haue no power ouer you. God wyll receiue them to hys kyngdome that run from hym, and wyll not impute the synnes of the former lyfe, bee they neuer so outragious, vnto such as be penitent. Thys onely is to bee obserued, that no manne blynded with enuye, and peruerted wyth malice, withstande the glorye of god agaynste hys owne conscience: and where as he seeth with hys eyes the diuyne power by manifeste sygnes and wonders, to be opened to the worlde, that he attribute it not to the spirite of Beelzebub. Wherfore thys I assure you, whatsoeuer is done by woorde or dede, shall bee remitted vnto men, so that they repente them. God doeth easyly forgeue that whiche by anye meanes is venyall and pardonable by the reason of frayltye of mannes nature.

But yf any man speake blasphemye against the spirite of God, whose manifest power he seeth of hys playne woorkes, he shall scarcely fynde pardonne and forgeuenes. And whoso speaketh blasphemy agaynst the sonne of man, whom he despyseth for the weakenesse of hys flesshe, he shall bee pardoned, because errour and ignorannce mixte wyth hys doopng, dothe exclude peruerse and set malice. But whoso speaketh blasphemy agaynst the holye ghost, shall vneth obteyne pardonne and forgeuenes eyther in this woorlde, or in the woorlde to come. This thyng spake Jesus to thyntente he woulde feare the Phariseis from theyr obstinate frowardnes, because whan they sawe and perceyued that those thynges whiche he dydde, coulde not bee doene but by the spirite and the myght of God, yet they moued with enuy resisted the glory of god, and ascrybed his miracles vnto Beelzebub, whose spirite they saide wroughte in Christe.

Whan after common reason (saieth he) the tree is knowen of the fruite, why do ye blame the tree, sythe ye cannot but allowe and commende the fruite? The miracles whyche I woorke, ease and releue the miseries of menne: they hurt no man, they be not done for vayne ostentacion and glory, or for gaine and lucre, but to do good and to healpe. No man can deny but thys is good, freely to doe for them that be in affliction. Why therfore saye ye that that which is good of it selfe, cummeth from Beelzebub, who by your owne iudgement is al naught? If ye wyll hyde the blindenesse of your myndes, ye muste speake thynges that may stande together, nowe the thynges whiche ye speake, agree not together after the common iudgemente of menne. Therfore eyther make the tree good and his fruite good, or els make the tree ill and his fruite ill. Either graūt that I am moued wyth a good spirite, wheras ye graunte that my woorkes bee good, or els saye that my woorkes be ill, that your saiyng may appere probable, where ye saye that I haue the spirite of wicked Beelzebub. And yf my doynges be suche that ye muste nedes cōfesse that they be good, ascrybe not good thinges to an ill authour. Ye kinred of vipers, yll men springyng of yll parentes, coniecture and iudge ye by your selues: Do ye not speake euen as ye be, and doos not your woorkes declare what spirite ye haue? Ye enuy the glorye of god, and falsely blame his spirite. From whence cummeth so pestilente fruyte, but of an euill tree? For as it can not bee that a wylde tree shoulde bryng furth gentil fruite, and that a tree of poysoned iuyce shoulde bryng furth holsom appulles: euen so how can ye speake well syth ye be yll? For as the fruite taketh hys taste and verdoure of the iuyce of the roote: so communycacion ryseth of that whiche is hyd in the harte, lyke as a good manne bryngeth furthe good thynges oute of the good tresure of his harte: so the yll man bryngeth furthe yll thynges out of the euyll tresure of hys harte. Whose harte is replenished with godlines and charitie, they speake woordes whiche sauour of that that is in the harte. Whose harte is replenished wyth enuy, pryde, and auarice, they vse suche communycacion, whyche by the mouthe doeth vtter the affeccion of the harte. Menne shall be esteined before god not onely of theyr dedes, but also of theyr woordes. An ill thought is pestiferouse and noysome onely vnto the thynker, but yl talking doeth powre out the poyson of the harte emongest many. The tonge therfore muste bee refrapned, not onely from outragiouse blasphemies, from skolding, chiding, and backbityng, and vncleanly communication, but vtterly from all thinges wherof cummeth none honeste profite or commoditie. Yea I saye vnto you, that man shall render a count in the day of iudgement not onely for filthy

talkyng, but also for euery vayne,idle,and vnprofitable worde,that they shall speake.For theyr wordes also,shalbe taken and accounted for dedes. Of thy wordes eyther thou shalte be iudged good,yf good woordes issue out of a good harte,or thou shalte be condemned as vniuste,yf yll woordes issue out of an yll harte.And here vnderstande ye the perfecte iustyce of the kyngdome of heauen, far passyng the iustice of Moyses lawe.For that lawe punysheth onely the manifest blasphemye agaynste god: here shall be punyshed also anye reuilyng or taunte agaynste thy neyghbour,and not only the noysome and perilouse sayeing,but also the idle and vaine woorde.For that whiche is vnprofitable on the tree, is the burden of the tree and not the frupte:and therfore it is noysome,because it occupieth the time and the eares of the hearer,without any fruite or profite,whereas the tounge is geuen for this intent,that therwith we should profite our selues and our neyghboure,andethat with this member we should celebrate and magnifye the glory of God.

Than certayne of the Scribes and Phariseis asked hym saiyng:mayster we will see a sygne of the:but he aunswered and sayde vnto them:The euyll and aduoutrous generacion seketh a sygne,and there shall no sygne be geuen to them,but the signe of the prophete Jonas. For as Jonas was three dayes and three nyghtes in the whales belly:so shall the sonne of man be three dayes and three nyghtes in the harte of the yearth. The men of Ninyue shall arise in the iudgement with this nacion,and condemne it,because they amended at the preachyng of Jonas:Beholde here is one greatter than Jonas. The quene of the south shall ryse in the iudgement with this generacion,and shal condemne it. For she came from the vtmoste partes of the worlde,to heare the wisedome of Salomon.And behold in thys place is one greater than Salomon. The texte.

Certayne of the scrybes and phariseys whan they had hearde these thinges, dissemblyng the rage of theyr myndes,go vnto Jesus with more gentyl woordes,as though they woulde nowe beleue him,yf for theyr sake he wouldе shewe sum miracle worthye and meete for them and also for hym,who chalenged to hym the spirite of god,and had alwayes in his mouthe the heauenlye father. Mayster(q they)we whiche bee not of the common sorte,but learned men,desyre of you to see sum notable sygne from heauen,whiche maye declare that ye be derely beloued of god,and that ye doe that thyng whiche ye do by his power and myght.But Jesus knowyng theyr subtill thoughte and obstinate malice, whiche required a sygne for none other intent, but to take a newe occasion thereby falsely to accuse hym,chiefly sithe it is more easye to pycke a quarell at those thynges whiche bee shewed from heauen, than at those thynges whiche appeare before the iyes,bee heарde wyth eares,and touched wyth handes:not bearyng so greate frowardnes,but in maner turning from them,and taking it angrely(as it were)wyth hymselfe,made answere,saiyng: O naughtye and counterfeit nacion, whiche doethe glorye that they haue god to theyr father, whiche doeth crake of her progenitoure Abraham,where as it foloweth rather them whiche forsakynge God, wurshypped the golden calfe: whyche styrred sedicion agaynste Moyses: whyche murmured in the deserte: whyche kylled the Prophetes:whereas it declareth that it hathe Beelzebub to her father, with whose spirite beyng replenyshed,it doeth rebell agaynste the spirite of God. The euyll and aduoutrous &c.

But it shall haue no sygne geuen from heauen,whiche it maye calumniate and reproue,and whiche it is vnworthye to haue, for as muche as it is wholly sette and geuen to the yearthe, but once there shalbe a sygne geuen to it out of the yearth, whereby it maye be ouercum and vtterly perysshe, yf it wyll not conuerte. This nacion meruayled at the miracle of the Prophete Jonas, whyche swallowed vp of a beaste in the sea, was restored againe aliue after thre dayes. Thys shalbe a sufficient sygne for them, yf they maye see hym reuyue agayne by the deuine power, whome by theyr malice they haue slayne. Thys myracle shortly shalbe shewed vnto them, whiche they wyll falsly slaunder.

For as Jonas was thre dayes &c.

For lyke as Jonas wyllyngly deliuered hymselfe to deathe, and was receyued of the beast of the sea, and was in her belly three dayes, and three nyghtes, and beyng paste hope of all menne, byandby through the healpe of God was restored alyue: so the sonne of manne shall bee deade in the harte of the yearthe three dayes and three nyghtes. By thys sygure and darke exaumple, Jesus syginfieth hys deathe and buriall, and furthwith hys rysyng from death. And he added. As Jonas was to the Niniuites, so am I to you. He tolde them that the vengeaunce of god, and the destruccion of theyr citye was at hande, vnlesse they would repent: I declare the same vnto you all. But the Niniuites whome ye despyse as heathen and idolaters in comparison of you, shall ryse in the iudgemente of God, and shall declare you worthelye to be damned in comparison of them. For they although they were synfull, yet beyng a feardе at the threatenynges of the Prophete, humbled themselues vnto penaunce. And beholde: here is one greatter than Jonas, whyche preacheth to you in vayne.

The men of Niniue shal ryse, &c.

The Niniuites were people farre from the wurshyppynge of God, Jonas vnknowen, and symple, and meke came vnto them. No man commended hym, or tolde before of hys cummyng, he shewed no miracles, he allured vnto hym no bodye with benefite, he promysed no great thyng. Onely he threatned vndoyng and destruccion, and he preached no lenger than three dayes. I beyng promysed by thoracles of the Prophetes, so often commended by the testimonye of John, by the testimonte of the father, beyng your countreman, beyng cumme also of the same parentes of whome ye glorye and crake: haue taught you nowe so long tyme, testifyng by so manye miracles, that my doctryne is not vayne: haue holpe so manye wyth my free benefites, and doe not thunder fore threatenynges, but of myne owne accorde promyse forgeuenes of all synnes: I offer euerlastyng felicitie of the heauenly kyngdome: yet it is sayed that I haue the spirite of Beelzebub: I am layed at with deadlye deceptes, so farre ye bee from bendyng and bowyng to true penaunce. Furthermore, the quene of Saba shall ryse in the iudgement, to the reproche and condemnacion of this generacion, because that she by the reason of tidynges brought far of, leuing her kingdome and her countreye, toke a longe iourneye vnto Salomon, not moued by any feare, but only for the desyre of wisedome. And she did not only cum to Salomon, but also she brought with her great gyftes. And beholde, there is one in thys place greater than Salomon. For what lyke thyng dyd Salomon to the thynges whiche ye see me do: or what lyke thyng taught Salomon: And yet ye put me to al kynde of rebukes, whyche of myne owne accorde bryng vnto you the doctryne of the gospell, wherby ye maye be saued: furthermore also, ye go about to do me more grieuoule displeasures whych am beneficiall vnto you. But the greatter the wonders and benefites be whereby ye bee prouoked vnto penaunce: the greuouler shall your punyshemente bee, vnlesse ye repent in tyme.

The quene of the south shal rise. &c.

¶ Whan the vncleane spirite is gone out of a man, he walketh thrugh dry places seking rest, and findeth none. Than he saieth: I wyl returne into my house, from whence I came. And whan he is cum, he fyndeth it empty, and swept and garnyshed. Than he goeth and taketh vnto hym seuen other spirites worse than hymselfe, and so entreth in, and dwelleth there. And the ende of that man is worse than the begynnyng. So shall it bee also vnto this frowarde generation: The texte

Further what thyng shoulde chaunce vnto them, and into what blyndnesse the people of Israell shoulde cum, and howe miserably it should be handled of the prynces of Rome, and how it should be banished thrughout the worlde, reiected and despised of all nacions, Iesus had rather to signifie by a certayne darcke exaumple, than to declare it manifestlye. And he taketh a similitude of a man whyche was possessed of a deuyll, who whereas he was once deliuered and restored to hys ryght mynde, afterwardes by his owne defaulte receyuyng the deuill agayne, was more grieuously vexed, than he was before. Whan an vncleane spirite (q he) goeth out from a man, beyng banyshed from his olde hospitall, he walketh in dry and baren places, seking rest and fyndeth none. Than sayeth he wyth himselfe. I will returne into the house from whence I went, where when he cummeth, he fyndethe it decked and clensed, but without anye geast. Than he seyng that there is a place and not occupied of anye other, not beyng contente to returne thyther hymselfe alone, he taketh vnto hym seuen other spirites worse than hymselfe, whyche entryng into the house together, make theyr dwellyng there. And it cummeth to passe, that the man is more grieuously vexed than he was before. So shall it happen to this vngracious nacion. By thys similitude Iesus noted the obstinate and wylfull malice of the pople of Israell, falling backe oftentimes to theyr olde maners. In tymes paste they serued and followed the deuilish vices and desyres. It was sumwhat deliuered by the lawe and the Prophetes, but returned often agayne to her own manner and disposicion. It retourned to Idolles, it did sacrifice in the woodes, it kylled the Prophetes. It was redressed and amended thrugh afflictions by Pharao in Egypte, by Nabuchodonoser in Babilon, and by diuerse other calamities and miseries. Finally prouoked of the sonne of god so many waies, hathe not onely renewed, but also farre exceded al the wickednesse of her forefathers, not only arayyng the harmelesse and the well doer wyth al kynde of spitefulnes, but also dryuyng him vnto the crosse and passion with false accusementes. Whereof a certayne monstruous blyndenes, and seuen tymes more miserable than the blindnes of theyr fathers, hath possessed theyr hartes, and therfore they shall be more cruelly handled and destroyed than they haue been hytherto.

¶ And when he yet talked to the people, beholde hys mother and brethren stoode without desyryng to speaak wyth him. And one saied vnto him. Behold thy mother and thy brethren stande without desyring to speake with the. But he answered and saied vnto him that had tolde him. Who is my mother, or who be my brethren, and he put furth hys hand towarde hys disciples, saying: Beholde my mother and my brethren. For whoso doeth the wyll of my father whyche is in heauen, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother. The texte.

As Iesus spake these thynges to the people, there came the mother of Iesus, wyth certayne of hys cosens whyche desyred to speake wyth hym. But when they coulde not cumme vnto hym for the multitude beyng so thycke, and standyng aboute the doores of the house, a voyce passyng ouer from one to another, a certayne man interrupted the communication of Jesus, and tolde hym that hys mother and hys brethren were at the doore whiche desyred to speake with hym. But Jesus offended wyth this importunitie and troublesumnes, and wyllyng also to teache that such affections should be passed litle vpon, as often as the matter of the gospel is in hande, and that the kinred of the myndes oughte more to be regarded than the kynred of the bodies, whyche is gotten by vertue and not by the nerenes of bloud, the whych also is more large than the other, he aunswereth him whych interrupted him. Who is my mother and who are my brethren: I being occupied about the heauenly busines knowledge no mother nor brethren ioyned by carnall affinitie: wherof sum bee fat of perchaunce in hartes. And holdyng out his hand towardes his disciples, which syttyng nere receyued gredely in silence his wholsome doctryne, if ye wil know (sayd he) my very true kinsfolkes which be moste dere vnto me, these be my mother my sisters, and my brethren. Here is no difference of kinde or age, no respecte of kinred. Whosoeuer doth obey the wyl of my father whyche is in heaurn, he is my mother, he is my sister, he is my brother. I esteme hyghely the spirituall and not the bodily affinitie. This affinitie euery man may come by. Euery mā like as he is moste obedient vnto my fathers wyl, so he is moste nere and moste dere vnto me.

The .xiii. Chapter.

The texte. The same day Jesus went out of the house, and sate by the sea syde, and much people were gathered vnto hym, insomuche that he went and sate in a shyp, and the people stood on the shoore, And he spake many thynges to them by symylitudes, saiyng: Behold the sowyer went forth to sowe. And as he sowed, some sedes fel by the way syde, and the foules came and deuoured them vp. And some fel vpon stony places where they had not much yearthe, and anon they sprong vp, because they had no depenes of yearth. And when the sunne was vp, they caught heate, and because they had no roote, they wytherred away. Agayne some fell emong the thornes and the thornes sprong vp and choked them. But some fel into good ground and brought forth fruite, some an hundred folde, some sixty folde, & some thyrty folde: Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, let hym heare.

T the same tyme whan Jesus sawe that the place was not able to receiue suche a multitude, he went oute of the house to the water syde. And whan he came thyther, he satte vpon the banke, teachyng the people whiche gaped after his doctryne insaciablye. Further when he sawe the multitude so great and thicke, that they thruste hym, and prested hym: and to thintente he myght bee at more libertye from the people, he entred into a shyp, and spake out of that as out of a pulpit, to the people standyng vpon the banke. For so he myght be both better seene and better heard of manye, because the sande of the bancke and the brincke of the bancke, made as though it were a rounde auditory.

And he spake to the many thynges in similitudes,

And because in that multitude euery man had not one mynde, he shewed and sette furthe manye thynges vnto them by darke similitudes, eyther because thys maner of speakyng is familiar and commonlye vsed of the prophetes, or because it is moste meete and conuenient for to teache and to moue the myndes of the people, because that comparison taken of thynges that bee well knowen and perceyued also of them that be vnlearned, by and by toutheth and moueth euerye one: or because by this feate and pleasaunte manner of speakyng, thynges that bee spoken bothe creepeth into mennes myndes more pleasauntlye and lye, and sticketh more surely: or els because that thys manner of monicion slaũdering no manne, but secretly by similitude touchyng euery mannes conscience, is wont commonly lesse to offende. And fyrste of all he setteth furthe a parable, signifiyng that many on euery syde come runnyng to the preachyng of the gospell, and yet fruite springeth not in them all: whiche chaunceth not by the faulte of the teacher, but by the faulte of the hearers. Nor lyke fruite springeth not in all the hearers, but accordyng as euery manne bryngeth a mynde voyde from worldlye cares and desyres: so is the fruite of the woorde that is heard of hym greatest. Therfore exhortyng to geue audience, he putteth furth thys parable, saiyng: The sowyer went furth to sowe his sede, and as he caste his sede abroode certayne cornes fell by the waye syde, and because they were bare and vncouered, the birdes came fliyng and eate them vp. Agayne other summe fell in the rough and stony places, which when they were not depely couered with yearthe, because of stones that letted them, nor coulde not take roote depely ynoughe, they sprang vp shortelye and before theyr tyme, throughe the warmnes of the sunne, because there was not muche yearthe to kepe them couered vnto theyr tyme, nor no deepe roote to minister humoure and moysture. Agayne other sum fell into the thorny grounde, and by the reason of increase of thornes, they were kepte downe and choked, and coulde not tyke nor spryng vp at theyr libertye. Further other sum fel vpon a good and a fruitful grounde, and springyng vp luckely brought furth fruite, yet not al alyke but accordyng to the goodnesse of the grounde: sum an hundred folde, sum three score folde, some thyrtye folde as muche: so that of one sede sprang an eare that bare an hundred cornes: of another that bare three score, of another that bare thyrty. Jesus speakyng these thynges did not as than explicate and declare the darke riddel and similitude, but leaueth it to euery manne to coniecture and thinke vpon in hys mynde. Onely he made an exhortacion that thei that had meete eares shoulde heare the parable diligently.

And the disciples came and saide vnto him: Why speakest thou to them by parables? he aun- The xiii. verse swering sayed vnto them. It is geuen vnto you to knowe the misteries of the kyngdome of heauen, but vnto them it is not geuen. For whosoeuer hath, to him shalbe geuen, and he shalbe made more aboundaunt. But whosoeuer hathe not, from hym shalbe taken, that also whiche he hath.

But another tyme when the disciples hadde Jesus alone, they wente vnto him and asked hym why he spake vnto the people by darke and obscure similitudes. Vnto whome Jesus aunswered on thys wyse: because as yet they yelde not themselues mete to haue the truethe opened vnto them, by the whiche certayne of them emonge the multitude bee not onely not the better, but also bee pricked and stirred to be the worse. Wherfore I vtter vnto them lyke manner of preachyng as they bryng hartes to heare. They wil not vnderstand thinges that be moste manifeste. I doe inuolue and wrappe my language wyth darknes, that by suche meanes I maye prouoke them to the desyre of learnyng and searchyng. But ye whiche receyue symplye and desirouslye the thyng that is geuen, ye are worthye to bee partakers of the more secrete thynges concernyng the wisedome of the gospell. For vnto hym that hath, it shall bee geuen, that he maye haue aboundantlye, but vnto hym that hath nothyng, nothyng shall bee added, insomuche that he shall bee also spoyled of that whyche he semed for to haue. In other thynges it is a cruell thyng to spoyle hym that is nedy: Here because powerty cummeth throughe the defaulte of the nedy, it is mete and ryght to take from the vnkinde manne. We bring and offer freely certaine principles of heauenly Philosophy, and that accordyng to the capacitie and simplicitie of the myndes, as castyng certaine seedes, whyche whoso receyueth desirously, truly he prouoketh vs to commit no thynges vnto hym. Contrarywise, whoso despiseth and reiecteth that whiche is geuen frely, and turneth it to occasion of more yll, is he not worthy to be spoyled of that whiche he had vnworthely?

The texte. Therfore speake I to them by similitudes, because they seyng, se not, and thei hearing, heare not: and vnderstande not, And ꝑ prophecie of Esay is fulfilled in them, whyche sayeth: Ye shal heare wyth your eares, and shal not vnderstand: and seyng ye shal se, & shall not se. For the harte of thys people is waxed grosse, and they're eares be dul of hearyng, and thei haue shut they're yes, lest at any tyme they should see with they're yes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand with they're harte, and be conuerted, and I heale them.

For thys cause I speake to them in darke parables because they will heare the manifest trueth eyther with no profit, or els to they're owne hurt. For it cũmeth to passe through their frowardnes, that where as thei haue yes and se manifest tokens, yet beyng blynded with enuye, they see not that whyche they see. And whete as they haue eares and heare the trueth that cannot be confuted, yet thei heare not that that they heare, nor vnderstande not ꝑ which they heare although they vnderstande. Truely the saiyng of Esaie is fulfylled in these men: Ye shal heare wyth your eares and not vnderstande, and ye shall see with your yes, & yet not se. For the harte of thys people is hardened, and they be dul of hearyng, and they haue closed they're yes, lest they myght se with they're yes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstande with they're harte, and at laste tourne vnto me, and I make them whole. Truely these men therfore be infortunate, but not to be pitied though they be very miserable, whyche wittingly and willingly seeke they're owne destruction, and reiect their owne health.

The texte. But blessed be your yes, for they see, and your eares, for they heare. For verily I say vnto you, that many Prophetes, & righteouse men desyred to se those thynges whithe ye se, and they haue not sene: and to heare those thynges whiche ye heare, and they haue not hearde.

Contrariwise youre yes are blessed, because they see the thinges that we doe: your eares are blessed, because they heare the thinges ꝑ we speake: Your hartes are blessed, because they vnderstande the wil of my father. This is no meane nor common felicitie, truely many prophetes, and many iust and holy men, haue desyred to see ꝑ thinges which ye se, and happened not to see them: and to heare the thynges which ye heare, and they had not the gifte to heare them. And they truly as in a dreame, gessed at the thyng that should cum, which ye se before you, and also heare.

The texte. Heare ye therfore the similytude of the sowier. Whan one heareth the worde of the kingdom, and vnderstandeth it not, than cummeth that cupi one and taketh away that whiche was sowen in his harte: this is he which was sowen by the wayes syde. But he that receiued the sede whyche was cast in stony places, the same is he that heareth the worde, and anon with ioye receiueth it, yet hath he no roote in hymself, but dureth for a season: for whā tribulacion or persecution happeth because of the worde, by and by he falleth. He also that receyueth sede into thornes, is he that heareth the worde, and the care of this worlde, and deceitfulnes of ryches choke vp the worde, and so is he made vnfruitful. But he that receiueth sede into ꝑ good ground, is he that heareth the worde and vnderstandeth it, which also beareth fruite, and bringeth furth sum an hundreth folde, sum sixty folde, sum thyrty folde.

Therfore because your simplicitie and desyre of knowledge, deserueth thys, harkē ye what the parable doth meane, which I put furth of the sowier sowing his sede. There be thre sortes of men, in whom the sede of the woord of the gospel

eyther bringeth furth no fruite, or els bryngeth not to perfeccion, the fruit that is sprong vp. And the fyfte is moste baren of all. These be they whiche lightely and negligently heare the wordes of the heauenlye doctryne, and suffer them not to entre into theyr myndes, nor fasten them in their remembraunce, to thintente they maye be rooted there: but theyr myndes beyng compassed and fenced with no desyre nor care, beyng armed with no purposes agaynst the assaultes of vaine thoughtes, at euery lyghte occasion they suffer that that is sowen, to be spurned at and troden downe. That perceiuing the yll and naughtye one, whiche lieth in waite and enuieth good begynnynges, byandby sendeth into the mynde, certayne sleyng and wauerynge cares, whiche maye destroye the seede before that it sprynge vp in grasse, or haue any roote, that they be no better than yf they had not heard at all. These be signified by the seede that fel by the hye waye where go bothe menne and beastes, that is to saye, all maner of cares, affections of kynred and of affinitie, care for common offices, loue, hatred, suspicion, and suche other. These thinges chase awaye the woorde of the gospell oute of the mynde, welnere before it bee receyued. Agayne there is an other, whiche receyueth (as it were seede) the woorde of the gospel with hys eares, and gredely putteth it into hys harte, recordyng and deuising wyth hymselfe to frame hys life after the rewle therof: but because he pryncteth it not vtterlye in the inwardes of hys mynde, but after the fashion of men, he doth that he doth lightly with a certayne affeccion for a tyme, he nourysheth the seede that he hathe taken, vntil it be growen vp to a grasse, and sheweth a certayne hope of euangelicall godlines, abstynyng from greate sinnes, and flourishyng with meane vertues. But if any storme of persecution begyn to ryse, and yf for the gospell sake banishment be offered, or prison, punishement, deathe, & such other whiche require a stedfast strength of the mynde, than, as at the vehemente heate of the sunne, they wyther awaye, and vtterly fainte and decaye. A figure of this was the stonie ground, whiche receyued the sede, and brought it foorth into grasse, but it was not able to succour and defend it with humour agaynst the heate of the sunne, for throughe the stones it can haue no depe nor sure roote. Agayne there is an other whiche gredely heareth the woorde of the gospell, and setteth it depe ynoughe in hys mynde, and kepeth it long, but his mynde being intangled and choked with troublesum cares of this worlde, and especiall of ryches, as it were with certayne thicke thornes, he can not freely folowe that he loueth. Because he wyl not suffer these thornes, whiche cleaue together and be intãgled one with another emong themselues, to be cut away, the fruite of the seede that is sowen dothe vtterly perishe. This was signified by the similitude of the sede whiche was receiued in the grounde full of thornes and briers. Further the seede that was receiued in the good ground, signifieth them whiche bothe heare the woorde of the gospell and recorde it wyth themselues, and fasten it surelye in theyr remembraunce, and so doe powre it into thaffections of theyr mynde, that they will not swarue from it to dye therefore, who also do ryddе and deliuer themselues from affeccions and filthye cares of ryches, whiche suffer not the mynde to be free and at liberty, but geue themselues wholy to the heauenlye inspiracion. The seede of the doctryne of the gospell is not vnprofitable to suche myndes. But lyke as one kynde of wheate bringeth not furthe lyke fruit in all groundes, but it springeth with lesse or more increase accordinge to the goodnes of the grounde: So after the godly desyre and capacitie of them that heare the worde, the fruite of godlines cummeth forthe more aboundauntlye. By thys parable Jesus taught vs, with what studye and desyre the heauenlye doctryne ought to be receyued, yf we desyre that fruit should spring of it. These thynges Jesus dyd interprete and declare vnto hys disciples aparte.

The texte. Another similitude put he furth vnto them, saying: The kyngdom of heauen is likened vnto a manne, whyche sowed good seede in hys field. But whyle men slepte, hys enemye came and sowed tares emong the wheate, and went hys way. But whan the blade was sprong vp and had brought furth fruit, than appeared the tares also. And the seruauntes of the housholder came and sayed vnto hym: Syrd idest not thou sowe good seede in thy field? From whence than hath it tares? he said vnto them: The enuiouse man hath done thys. The seruauntes sayed vnto hym: Wilt thou than that we go and wede them vp? but he said: naye, leste whyle ye gather vp the tares, ye plucke vp also the wheat with them: Let both grow together vntil the harueste, and in tyme of harueste, I wyl saye to the reapers: gather ye first the tares: and bind them together in sheues to be brent: but gather the wheat into my barne.

But let vs retourne vnto the order of our former communication. The lorde Jesus proposed vnto them another parable, to shewe them also that there was another poyson and mischiefe to be taken hede of, if a man wil late vp pure and fine corne in hys barne. For the other ylles do onely hurt ȳ sede lately sowen, or springyng into grasse. This doeth corrupte the corne now sprong vp and well growen. Thys poyson is, whan Sathan, whiche coulde not choke and destroy the seede of the euangelicall doctrine with flying, wauering, and ydle thoughtes, nor with troublesome persecutions, nor with carefulnes of riches, honours and lyke thinges, wherewith mannes lyfe is entangled, goeth about to infecte it by false Apostles and wicked Bysshopes and Heritikes, whiche wresteth and wriethe by subtyl interpretacion, the heauenlye doctryne after theyr lustes and desyres, and myngle true thynges with false, and sincere and pure thynges wyth vicious and fawty. The parable is after this sorte. The kingdome of heauen (sayth he) is like vnto an housbandman, which being a good husband, sowed good seede in hys field. But his seruauntes being aslepe, there came priuely a certayne aduersarye, whiche bare the husbande manne no good wyl, and because he could not in the night take away the seede which was now layed safely in the ground: he vseth crafte and decepte to hurt it. He scattereth and mengeleth with the wheate that was sowen, the vnprofitable seede of cockelles, and thys doen he wente awaye. Fyrste no man perceyued thys deceite. But whan the seede was nowe sprong vp into grasse, and the stalkes were laden and burdened with eares, than at lengthe the cockels growyng vp together, (their vnlykenes vtterynge or shewyng them,) began to appere. Than the seruauntes merueylyng howe this shoulde cum to passe, go vnto the husbande man. Maister (sayth they) dyddeste not thou sowe good seede in the fielde, howe is it than that cokelles be mengled with them? But the mayster suspectyng who was authour of the shrewde turne, sayeth: Myne aduersary dydde thys whyche beareth me so cupl wyll, that he hathe a plasure to hurte me, thoughe he haue no profite hymselfe therby. Than spake the seruauntes: wyl ye than that we go and gather the cockelles and cleanse the corne? The maister sayeth: In no case, leste peraduenture as ye plucke vp the cockelles vnaduisedly, ye plucke vp also therwith the wheate that groweth nere by. Suffer the wheate to growe together with the cockelles vnto harueste tyme. Than wyll I committe thys matter to the haruest folkes, that before they mowe and cut downe, they shall fyrste gather the cockelles and bynde them together a parte in bundels for to feede the fyer, and afterwarde laye vp and couche the cleane wheat in my barne.

Another

Another parable put he furth vnto them saiyng: The kyngdowe of heauen is lyke to a grayne of mustarde seade, whiche a man toke and sowed in hys fielde, whiche is the leaste of al seades. But whan it is growen, it is the greatest emonge herbes, and is a tree, so þ the birdes of the ayer cum and make their nestes in the braunches therof. The texte

Agayne Jesus mindyng to shewe by a similitude howe that the philosophy of the gospell fyrste in apperaunce abiecte and homely through the ignomi-ny, and slaunder of the crosse, being as it were planted by a fewe vnlearned men should by litle and litle through the strength of the trueth, grow to such myghte and power, that it shoulde go ouer all the worlde, and shoulde embrace al kinde of men, proposed this tedell and similitude. The kyngdome of heauen (sayd he) is lyke vnto a mustarde seede, whiche a certayne man toke and sowed in hys field, which of it selfe is leaste among al pulse. But whan it is growne vp, it is greater than al kyndes of herbes and ryseth vp as bigge as a tree, insomuche that the birdes make their nestes in the bowes therof.

An other similitude spake he vnto them: The kingdom of heauen is like vnto leauen, which a woman taketh, and hideth in three peckes of meale til al be leauened. Al these thynges spake Jesus vnto the people by similitudes, and without a parable spake he nothing vnto them: that it myght be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophete, that sayeth: I will open my mouth in parables, I wyl speake furth thinges hidden frō the begynning of the worlde. The texte

Agayne Jesus dyd inculcate and beate in the selfe same thyng, doyng them to vnderstande by what meanes the strength and myght of the doctryne of the gospell secretly creppyng in, and dispersed and set abrode by a fewe apostles, should alter and transforme al the worlde into her nature: and whan it shall seme most to be consumed and extinct, than chiefly it shall set forth and shewe strength. The kyngdome of heauen (sayd he) is lyke vnto leauen, whych beyng but a litle quantitie, the woman put in three measures of meale, and there lefte it vntill the litle piece of leauen had changed by litle and litle the whole quantitie of the meale, & turned it into her owne nature. All these thynges Jesus declared vnto the people in riddelles, and cloudes of parables, and spake nothyng vnto them than without a parable: to thyntent that he might both excite and stirre their myndes with darke speakyng, and make them desirouse to learne, and yet geue them no holde, though they sought occasion busily, vniustly to reprone hym. And the soothe saiyng of the Prophete tolde of this before in time paste. I wyl open my mouthe in parables, I wyl shewe furth thynges which hath been hyd hytherto sith the worlde was made.

(When the people were sent away, Jesus came into the house, & his disciples came vnto hym saiyng. Expound vnto vs the parable of the tares of the field. He answered and said vnto them: He that soweth the good seed, is the sonne of man. The fielde is the worlde. And the children of the kyngdom, they are þ good seede. The tares are the children of that naughty one: The enemy þ soweth them is the Deuel. The harueste is the ende of the worlde. The reapers be the Aungels. As the tares therfore are gathered and brent in the fyer, so shal it be in the ende of thys worlde. The sonne of man shal send forthe hys Aungels, and they shal gather out of hys kyngdome al thynges that offende, and them whiche do iniquitye, and shal cast them into a fornace of fyer: There shalbe wailyng and gnashyng of teeth. Than shal the righteouse shyne as the sonne in the kyngdome of their father. Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, let hym heare. The texte

Than Jesus departyng from the multitude went home, and they folowed not, for that they vnderstoode not what he mente, and that none occasion was geuen of false reproke. Further whan he was at home alone, hys familiar disciples came vnto hym requiryng hym to expounde them the parable of the cockle mengled with wheate. For the parable of the seed diuersly sowen once declared, declared, they gessed well of themselues what he mente by the mustard seede, and the leuen put in the meale. Jesus without any griefe declared it plainely. The good husband (q he) whiche sowed the good seede, is the heauenly father: the feilde in whyche he sowed, is the whole worlde and not onely Jewry. Further, the good wheat that sprang vp of the good seede bee they, whyche by the doctryne of the gospell behaue themselfe worthily for the kyngdom of heauen, agreeing to their profession in lyfe and dedes. The naughty cockels springyng of the yll seede mengled wyth these, bee yll men whyche professe not purely nor sincerely the doctryne of the gospell, And the aduersarye whiche mengled hys seede priuely in the nyghte, whereof springeth peruerse and yll doctryne, is the deuill. The seruauntes whiche would gather the cockel before the tyme, be they whyche thynke that the false apostelles and chiefe heretikes shoulde bee rydde out of the waye with sweorde and deathe, where as the good man of the houle willeth not that they shoulde bee killed, but suffered, yf happe bee that they repente, and be turned from cockelles into wheate. And that yf they repente not, they shoulde be kepte and preserued to their iudge, of whome once they shall be punished. The time of harueste is the ende of the worlde. The harueste folkes be the angels. In the meane season therfore the yll mengled with the good, must be suffered, when they be suffered with lesse daunger and peril, than they bee taken away. Further whan the last tyme shal cum, whan the good shal be seuered from the ill, when rewardes shall be geuen to euery manne for hys dedes: than the sonne of man the iudge ouer all, shall sende furthe hys angels to clense hys kyngdome, and they shall suffer none offence to remaine there, for than neither the good can profite the yll, nor the yll shall be suffered any more to trouble the good: but whosoeuer liuyng emong the good had rather molest and trouble them, than to be made better by theyr cumpany, he shall gather them together and shedde them from the others, and deliuer them to the fyer of hell. There shall they punyshed worlde without ende: for their shorte and false lustes and pleasures remoued from the flooze of the churche, and caste into a darke den of hel, that is to say, into the kyngdome of theyr father, where as nowe ouer late vnprofitable penaunce, shall force those mysserable people to wepe and to waile and to gnashe with theyr teeth. Further they that cum and springe furthe of the good seede and perseuer and continue vnto thende, although in the meane tyme they appere here vyle and abiecte, and be afflicted of the yll forte: than all vylenes of mortalitie set aparte, they shall shyne lyke the bryght sunne in their fathers kyngdome. These thinges because they be great and weighty thinges, of both partes ought not to be heard negligently. They perteine either to the euerlasting felicitie, or to the euerlasting destruction of al men. Wherfore whosoeuer hath an eare, neyther deafe nor stopped with the desyres of the worlde, let him heare, ꝙ he may auoide euerlastyng punishemētes, & obteine the like euerlasting.

The texte. Agayne the kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto a treasure hyd in the fielde, whych a man hath found and hyd, and for ioye therof goeth & selleth al that he hath, and bieth the fielde.

Beside these, to thyntent he myght the more kyndle and stirre the myndes of them that were hys, to the desyre of theuangelicall godlines, he added twoo other similitudes, whereby he teacheth that the profession of the gospell is a thyng not to bee desired lyghtly, or after the common maner, but that this onely thyng ought to be laboured for with great studye, all other thynges sette aparte and that thys excellent good thyng must be purchased and obteyned by the losse of all your goodes. Whiche thyng thoughe it chaunce not easilye to euery man, yet whan it is once found it hath high felicitie. And althoughe in the meane season it be hyd emong men, and setteth not furth it selfe, yet he that hath it, reioiseth secretly wyth hymselfe, lokyng safely for that daye, in the whiche the felicitie that is nowe obscure and darcke shall after bee made manifeste and open. The kyngdome of heauen (sayth he) is lyke to a treasure hyd in the fielde, which if a man perchaunce do get, he blabbeth it not abrode to others, lest any take it from hym, but ioying secretly & reioysyng to hymselfe, he goeth to the lorde of the ground, and sellyng al that he hath and making asmuch monye, as he can, byeth the fyelde, in the whiche he knoweth the greate or precious treasure is hyd, and thynketh hymselfe happye, to loose all hys meane possessions, for to be enryched wyth one notable grounde, although he know it not.

The texte. Agayne, the kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto a marchaunte man seekyng goodpearles, which (when he had found one precious pearle) went and solde al that he had, & bought it.

Agayne the kyngdome of heauen (sayth he) is lyke vnto a marchaunte manne, whiche deliteth in goodly Margarites. And when he hadde got a notable good one, byanby he solde all that he had, and bought it. And he thoughte not hymselfe the poorer, because he had now lefte him nothyng of hys olde ryches. Naye than at the length he thought hymselfe ryche, because he was priuie to hymself, that he had in secrete possession, a precious Margaritte, whiche though it were but litle, yet it passed the price and value of all the other possessions.

The texte. Agayne, the kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto a nette that is caste into the sea, and gathereth of al kynde of fishes, whych whan it was ful, men drue it to lande, and sate downe and gathered the good into vessels, but caste the bad awaye. So shall it be at the ende of the worlde. The angels shall cum and seuer the bad from among the good, and shall cast them into a fornace of fyer, there shalbe waylyng and gnashyng of teeth.

Unto these he added also an other parable, not vnlyke vn to the parable of the wheate and cockels, exortyng hys disciples, whome of fyshers he made apostles, that is to saye, fyshers of men, that they shoulde studye and endeuor to allure and drawe manye to the professyon of the gospell, and that they shoulde not byanby caste awaye and destroye the yll mengled with the good, but saue them and kepe them to be punished of theyr iudge, yf after that al thinges were proued, they would not repente. Againe the kingdome of heauen (sayth he) is like a net caste into the sea, whiche beyng spred abrode, dothe take and embrace all kynde of fyshe. Whyche when they nowe perceyue to be full, than they drawe it to the banke, and nowe syttyng vpon the drye lande choose the good fyshes and put them in theyr vesselles, the yll and vnprofitable fishes they caste awaye. So shall it bee in thende of the worlde. The angels shall go furthe and loke aboute what the net of the gospell dothe take and drawe. They shall not suffer the good to be mengled with the yll any more in one net, but they shall esteme euerye man by his merites, not by hys profession. They shall seperate the yll from the cumpany of the good and shall lay vp the one safely for theyr maister, the other they shall caste into a burnyng fornace: there shalbe intollerable sorowe whiche shalbe testified by weppyng and gnashyng of teeth:

The texte. Jesus sayeth vnto them, haue ye vnderstande all these thynges? They saye vnto hym, yea lorde. Then sayde he vnto them: therfore euery Scribe whiche is taught vnto the kyngdome of heauen, is lyke vnto a man that is an housholder: Whiche bryngeth furth out of hys treasure thynges newe and olde.

Jesus to thyntente he myght the more surely fasten these sayenges in the myndes of his disciples: he asked of them whether they vnderstode these thynges well well. When they made aunswere that they vnderstode them, he added yet an other parable, wherby he monished them that these and manye suche oughte to be learned, and surely remembred, to the intent that by and by vpon euery occasion, they myght redily take them furth: whether the hearer should be allured with rewardes, or ells put in feare, by the feare of punishemente. For the breste of the euangelicall preacher ought to be (as it were) a certayne store house and a ryche, and a plentiful treasure, from whence they maye easely take out diuers thynges, sumtyme out of the bookes of the olde testament, sumtime oute of the euangelicall Philosophy, as shalbe moste expedient for theyr hearers. For one thyng muste not be spoken at all tymes, nor after one fashyon, nor all men be not moued with all thinges. Therefore they haue nede of a certayne ryche treasure furnished with all kynde of learnyng. The parable is thus. The Scribes of the Iewes (sayth he) when thei bee consulted, make aunswer out of their bookes.

Therfore euery scribe. &c. But whosoeuer wil be a cunnyng Scribe in the kyngdome of heauen, it is not sufficient for hym to bryng furth olde thynges, vnles he bryng furth newe also, lyke a certayne riche householder whiche hath all thynges in hys treasure: whether a man desyre newe thynges, or whether he woulde haue olde thynges, to satisfie and contente all men.

The texte. And it came to passe that when Iesus had finished these simplitudes, he departed thence. And when he came into his owne countrey, he taught them in theyr synagogues, insomuch that they were astonied, and sayde: whence cummeth this wisedome and power vnto hym. Is not this the carpenters sonne? Is not his mother called Marie? & his brethren, Iames and Ioseph, and Simon, and Judas? and are not all hys sisters with vs? Whence hath he all these thynges? And they were offended at hym. Iesus sayd vnto them: A prophete is not without honor, saue in hys owne countrey, and in hys owne house. And he dyd not many myracles there, because of theyr vnbelefe.

When that Iesus had taught sufficiently with these diuers parables, both the people and hys disciples, he wente into his countrey, that is, to Nazareth: that by often chaungeing of the place, the doctrine of the gospel myght be the farther spred abrode. In the whiche countrey of hys, he beganne not hys preachyng, leste he shoulde seme any thyng to folowe mannes affeccion, and yet he woulde not passe it ouer, to teache that we ought to do good vnto all. Iesus therfore enteryng into theyr congregacion, began to teache them as he hadde taught other. Here that thyng hindred the matter of the gospel, whyche ought to haue furdered it, because the cõmon sorte of men had rather to enuy thinges that be knowen and familiar, than fauour them, whereas they make muche of straunge thynges, fondely and folishely, estemyng a thing therfore to be goodly because it cummeth farre of. Therfore whan Iesus was knowen here of certayne whyche knewe the lowenesse and symplenesse of hys stocke, and the pouertye of hys parentes, and also the arte whereby Ioseph (commonly thought to be hys father) founde and nourished his wife and her sonne, knowyng also that Iesus was of the same arte, and where as they neuer hearde saye that he was brought vp in learnyng, thus they mutter and murmoure among themselues: howe hathe he thys notable wisedome or fro whence hathe he power to shewe myracles? Is not thys Iesus the carpenter, Ioseph the carpenters sonne? Is not hys mother poore and a meanne womanne amonge vs, whiche is called Marie? Be not hys cosens with vs, Iames, Ioseph, Simon, and Judas? Do not as many as be hys nexte kinsfolkes dwell here with vs? Howe is it than that he sodaynly beyng made an other manne, retur-

neth vnto vs preachyng, & myghty in myracles: Doth he thinke that he is vnknowen vnto vs? So the kinred and the poore estate of Jesus, dyd offend the, and made them to stumble, thynkyng as yet nothyng of hym but as of a man, and one of the common sorte of people, and for the olde poorenes and lowenes of hys lyfe, enuying the newe renoune and honour. But Jesus rebukyng theyr grosse and ouer rude iudgement, esteming a man not for his vertues, but for fortune and nobilitie of birthe, sayeth vnto them: A prophete is no where lesse set by than in his owne countrey and in his owne familye, and among his own kynsfolkes. And where in other places he was redely beleued, and shewed many miracles, here he dyd weorke none, but that with layyng on his handes, he healed a fewe that were sycke. Not because hys power was straighted or diminished, or hys will chaunged, but because theyr vnbelefe did let it. For like as a phisicion cannot profite the sicke yf he refecte his medicine: not because the arte of the phisician is not effectuall, but because the sicke man is in fault: so because it is the fayth vnto the which miracles be geuen, vnbelefe is a let to him to shewe them furth, whiche lacketh neyther power nor might, but that he was letted by the defaulte of others. Therfore Jesus reprouyng them for so greate malice, saied: This is no newe thyng that ye now do vnto me. The same chaunced in times past to the holy prophetes Hely and Helisee, whose tumbes ye haue nowe in veneracyon. For whan it rayned not three yeares and a halfe, and therfore a greate famyne was throughoute all that countreye: Helias beeyng in daunger for hunger, was commaunded to go to no mother wedow, wheras there were many in Jewry, but vnto the straunger in Sarepta, in the countrey of the Sidonians. Of this womã onely was he receiued, and found faith, & wrought a miracle. Further in the tyme of Helisee, there were manye lazares in the nacion of Israell, and yet for all thys there was none healed but onely Naaman a Syrian, whose fayth in a maner forced the Prophete to shewe a miracle.

A Prophete is not without fauoure saue in hys owne countrey.

The. xiiii. Chapter.

The texte.

AT that tyme Herode the tetrarche heard of the fame of Jesu, and saide vnto hys seruantes: This is Johñ the baptyste, he is rysen from the dead, and therfore are miracles wrought by hym. For Herode had taken Johñ and bounde him, and put hym in prison because of Herodias his brother Philips wife. For Johñ sayd vnto him: It is not lawful for the to haue her. And when he would haue put him to death, he feared the people, because they counted him as a prophete. But when Herodes birth day was kepte, the daughter of Herodias daunced before hym, and pleased Herode. Wherfore he promysed wyth an othe, that he would geue her what she would aske. And she being instruct of her mother before, sayd: geue me here Johñ Baptist head in a platter. And the kyng was sory, neuertheles for the othes sake, and them which sate also at the table, he commaunded it to be geuen her, and sent tormentours, and beheaded Johñ in the prison, and hys head was brought in a platter, and geuen to the damsell, and she brought it to her mother.

AT the meane tyme Herode the Tetrarche of Galile, the sonne of hym whyche hadde slayne the children of Bethleem, hearde the rumour and fame of the doctryne and myracles and wonders of Jesus: of whom when the multitude hadde diuerse opinions, sum saiyng that he was Helye, sum that he was Hieremye, and sum that he was one of thold prophetes, and there were that said that he

that he was John, who restored again to lyfe, was becum nowe more myghty. Herode laughing them to skorne, sayd: I dyd cut of Johns head, & how thynke ye that he is aliue, and not only aliue, but also to bee myghtye wyth miracles. Furthwith when he was certifyed by diuers, of so manye and so notable wonders, that the rumour nowe coulde not appeare false, he said vnto his seruauntes. He of whome they tell suche greate wonders is not Jesus, whiche of late was kylled of my father in the noumbre of the chyldren of Bethleem, but it is John whiche is risen from deathe: and therfore he is nowe becum more diuine and godly, and is notable by myracles. For Herode had layed hãdes vpõ John Baptist, and cast hym into prison: although he had the man in estimacion, and did many thynges after hys aduyse and counsell. But this fauour of the tirãt was turned into hatred, for the vnchaste woman, whose fauoure and loue obteyned by fylthy seruyce, coulde doe more wyth the kyng, than the auctorite of John. For he hadde taken vnto hym for displeasure of hys brother that was alyue, Herodias his brother Philippes wyfe: by whome also Philippe hadde a doughter. John monished the kyng frankly and freely, and tolde hym that the mariage was vnlawfull, bothe because hys brother was alyue, and there was a doughter alyue also whiche his brother had by her. Further, Moyses lawe bade that the brother shoulde mary ỹ wyfe of the brother departed, if it chaunced hym to dye without children. Herode, louyng the woman the more outragiously, the lesse it was lawefull for hym to loue her, was greatelye offended with this lyberty, insomuche that he woulde haue slayne hym but that he feared the styrring of the people, with whom he knewe that John was greatly in fauour, because bothe he baptised manye, and had manye disciples, and was thought of many to be Messias. Truly euery man thought hym to be a man indued with the spirite of prophecy, and of greate holynes. But afterwardes excesse and ryote, and vntemperable loue towarde the mayde hys neece, shaked of this feare. For whan, after the manner of the heathens, he dyd solempnise the daye of his byrth, vpon the which there was al maner of voluptuous pleasures vsed, Herodias doughter daunsed at the kinges table, wyth wanton gesture, and so pleased Herode, which was nowe warme wyth wyne, that he swore that he woulde geue vnto the mayden whatsoeuer she asked, yea yf she woulde aske halfe of hys kyngdome. The wenche, lest she shoulde leese so greate opportunitie, and by and by to abuse this filthy lust of the kynges hart, she counselled with her mother what was to bee asked. She fearyng lest the kynges mynde beyng reconciled agayne to John, myght breake of the incest mariage, counselled her doughter to aske nothyng, but that furthwith she myght haue the head of John Baptiste geuen vnto her in a dishe. The wenche by the counsell of her vngracious mother came into the feaste, and euery man lokyng what she woulde wishe and desyre: she asked forthwyth that she myght haue geuen vnto her the heade of John in a dyshe, as thoughe her mother woulde esteme and make more of hys dyshe, than of halfe the kyngdome. Whan they heard thys, otherwyse than they loked for, the kyng counterfeyteth heuynesse in hys countenaunce, and alleageth for a cloke of hys cruelitie, the feare he hadde to breake his othe; chiefly because he made it before so many geastes, and lest he shoulde seeme lyghte or periured, he commaunded that the thyng whyche the wenche desired, shoulde be doen. By and by the executours of death were sente into the prison, and the head of the innocent man was cut of, and was brought in a dishe, and geuen to the wenche, the wenche gaue it to her mother whiche was the chiefe deuiser and doer of all this matter. And thus luckely was the birth day of Herode celebrated. This rewarde was geuen vnto him that moued and called to honest chinges. With this sight were the ipes of the geastes fed whome the king did vouchsafe to set at his table. Therefore the vnchaste woman had Johns head.

¶ And his disciples came & toke vp the body, and buried it, & went and tolde Jesus. Whan Jesus hearde of it, he departed thence in a shippe vnto a deserte place, out of the way. And when the people had hearde thereof, they folowed hym on foote, and lefte the cities. And Jesus went furth and sawe muche people, and was moued with mercy towarde them, and he healed of them those that were sicke. And when euen drew on, hys disciples came to hym, saying: This is a deserte place, and the houre is nowe past, let the people departe, that they maye goe into the townes, and bye them vitailes. But Jesus sayde vnto them: they haue no nede to goe away. Geue ye them to eate. They sayde vnto hym: we haue here but fyue loaues and two fishes. He sayde: Bryng them hither to me. And he commaunded the people to sit downe on the graile, and he tooke the fiue loaues and twoo fishes, and lift vp hys ipes towarde heauen, and blessed. And when he had broken them he gaue the loaues to the disciples and the disciples gaue to the people, and they did all eate and were filled. And they gathered vp the fragmentes that remayned, twelue basshettes full. And they that did eate were about fiue thousande men beside women and children. The texte.

But the disciples of John caried away his body and buried it. Whan Jesus by the telling of Johns disciples, knewe of this so cruel a dede (for as man he suffered it to be tolde vnto hym as though he knew it not, whereas he knew it before it was doen) he departed into a ship, that being separate from the multitude, he might go into some desert & secrete place, shewing a certain apperaunce of manly feare, but in dede cutting of occasion from the wicked king, that he shoulde not heape murder vpon murder: Chiefely sith the tyme of Jesus was not yet come, and therwith also teaching vs to geue place sumtime to the furies of pynces, leste they beyng prouoked and chafed with well doinges, both hurte the innocentes, and they themselues bee made the wurse. It is lawful to shunne the wicked, ready to doe vngraciously, that we maye profitte and helpe the good men. And this going aside declareth the notable faith of certaine. For assoone as it was hearde that Jesus had left the cityes, and was abidyng in desert, for feare of Herode as they thought, they went out of the cities into wildernes to him, whiche hid himselfe in secrete places: and because they coulde not goe to him by bote or by wagon and suche like, for the combrouse places, they folowed him on foote: neyther feared nor discouraged by the hardnesse of the way, nor by the daungier of lacke of foode. So gredely now they began to hunger for the doctrine of the gospel. Jesus perceiuing that, cummeth out of the darke corners, and came to mete them that were desirouse of hym, like as he withdrewe himselfe from the wicked. And whan he sawe a great multitude of men flockyng thither, whiche broughte with them many encoumbred with dyuers dyseases, he moued with pitye, and consyderyng and perceiuyng their faythe by the difficultie and hardnes of the waye, of hys owne accorde he healed all that were dyseased. And so greate was the feruencye of the multytude, that where as they broughte with them into wildernes sicke folkes, children, and many wome, yet they brought no vitail with them. Therefore when the nyghte nowe drewe nere, and theyr stomakes were pricked with hunger, the disciples whiche had sene so many myracles, hauing not yet throughly a perfect opinion of Jesus (for so it was thought good vnto the diuine wisdome to frame them by little and little vnto perfection, to the entent the faith of thinges that were done, might be the more firme and sure, & to teache them withal, by what meanes they should heale & helpe the infirmitie of others) put their maister in remembrance that night was at hande, & the multitude was great, and that it was high time than to take meate & to send them away, that they might goe into the nexte villages, and euery man to prouyde him of vitailes. But Jesus, to the intent the myracle might be the more euident and open, aunswered: They nede not to goe any whither, rather geue ye them to eate. But the disciples as though they had forgotten all that they had seene, nothing awaked at this saying, aunswerd very grosly, but so that they wekenes set furth the greatnes of the miracle: shall we (q they) geue a supper to so many, where as we be but thirtene in noumber: we haue very littel vytaile, truely nothing els, but fiue barely loaues, & two fishes. In case they despyse not and lothe not this supper, how shall it suffice them whiche will scarce suffice vs few: Than Jesus commaunded whatsoeuer they had to be brought vnto him. The disciples obeying simply, not disputing ꝑ matter thus: than ye kill vs with hunger if ye geue them thys lyttle that we haue, they broughte their whole vitailes. Here Jesus exhibiting an euangelicall feaste, where lyke as it behoueth to be none excesse, so it is mete there shoulde be an equalitie of al thinges: He commaunded them all to sitte downe vpon the grasse, so that fyfties shoulde sitte together, that the noumber of geastes might better appeare. And also he folowed the maner of them, whiche making a feaste or geuyng a dole to many, deuide the multitude into companies, that no man should lacke and no man haue to muche. This doen, Jesus than at lengthe takyng vpon him to be a feaster and a feder of the bodies also, whiche came to feede the soules, & to teache in dede his disciples that they should neuer lacke foode, whiche being geuen vnto the gospell, regarded litle their vitaile: tooke in hys handes the fiue barly loaues, & two fishes: first declaring vnto al men with what maner of vitaile the Apostolical ambassadoures ought to be contēt: furthermore shewing plainly before the ye, the sincere faith of the multitude, which seeing howe litle vitayle there was, and was not ignorannte howe many thousande men there were, commaunded to sit downe, sate downe. Therefore Jesus the feastemaker, holding in his handes the bread and the meate, lifted vp his yes into heauen, shewyng that whatsoeuer is nedefull to the vse of man, it cummeth from the heauenly father, and whan he had praysed his bountifulnes & liberalitie, he brake the bread and fishes, and so deliuered them vnto his disciples, that they should set thē before the people, putting them in remembrāce, as it were by a darke figure, of what sorte ꝑ doctoures ought to be, which fede with the worde, the myndes of the simple. For as Christ loking vp into heauē, declared that he taught nothing, but that came from the heauenly father, so the Apostolical men as often as they see the people to depende of their mouth, with a playne and a simple faythe, they shoulde delyuer nothyng vnto them, which they had not receiued of Christ, nor should not propose vnto thē sundry deinties out of the shops of worldly philosophie: neither bring out vnto them humaine doctrine after their owne affeccions, but shoulde distribute vnto thē, the simple and playne euangelicall doctryne, as they had receyued it of their maister: nor shoulde not otherwise cut it & mince it than he had broken it with his handes, for by suche manner of preparacion both many bee refreshed, and the glory redoundeth to Christe, and not to the dystributour. Wouldeste thou know the ende of this feaste? The disciples doubtyng nothing made distribucion: and they doubting nothing fel to their meate on al handes, not to excesse, but to sufficiency. And the feast of such a numbre lacked nothing, in so muche, that whã supper was done, the scrappes furthermore that were gathered vp, filled twelue baskettes. And the noumber of menne was fiue thousande beside women, and children.

Geue ye the to eate. &c.

And he cōmaūded ꝑ people to sit downe. &c.

The texte.

¶ And streight way Jesus made his disciples to get vp into a shippe, and to goe before hym vnto the other side, while he sent the people away. And when the people were sente awaye, he went vp into a mountayne to pray alone, and whan nyght was come, he was there alone. But the shippe was nowe in the middeste of the sea, and was toste of the wawes, for it was a contrary winde. And in the fourth watche of the nighte, Jesus wente vnto them walkyng on the sea. And whan the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying: It is some spirite, and they cryed out for feare. But streighte way Jesus spake vnto them, saying: Be of good chere, it is I, be not afrayde. Peter aunswered, and sayde: Lorde yf it bee thou, bidde me come vnto thee on the water. And he sayde, come. And whan Peter was come downe out of the ship, he walked on the water to come to Jesus. But whan he sawe a mighty winde, he was afrayde: And whan he begaune to sinke, he cryed, saying: Lorde, saue me. And immediately Jesus stretched furth his hande, and caughte him, and sayd vnto hym: O thou of litel fayth wherefore diddest thou doubte?

These thinges done, Jesus desyring to teache, that after that the necessitie of the body was satisfyed, we oughte not to goe vnto wantonnes, or slepe, but vnto prayer: vnto whiche prayer solitarynes is moste mete: he forced hys disciples (for it greued them to departe from their dere Lord) to go to the mere and to row ouer the water before, and he woulde come after, whan he had sent away the people. But they although they departed from hym against theyr will, yet they murmoure not, they make not theyr excuse that the nyghte was at hande, they aske not whan he woulde folowe, but they obey symply hys commaundementes. Therefore whan they were gon, Jesus sendyng awaye the multytude, whome he had satysfyed by all meanes, wente vp to a hyll to pray there alone. For so he taughte hys disciples to pray. Therefore in the top of the hyll, Jesus was alone a good parte of the nighte. And the disciples in the meane tyme, theyr lorde beeing absent, as they rowed in the water were in peryll. For as they entred vpon the water, by and by there arose a contrary wynde, and the ship was tossed, not without peryll of the swellyng waues of the water. The nyght made theyr feare double. What shoulde they doe? They were in daungier, and he was not there whose helpe they mighte call vpon. Jesus lefte his disciples in this peryll, almost all the whole nighte, to harden them by little and little agaynste all feares, and to teache them that the helpe of God shall neuer lacke to them that be in perill, although it come somewhat late. Therefore at lengthe aboute the fourthe watche of the nyghte, they almoste beeyng in despayre, and nowe sore amased in theyr mynde, and ready to geue ouer oute of hande: Jesus came, not in a bote, but walkyng vpon the waters. They when they sawe one walkyng in the darke, and knewe not Jesus well, they were more a fearde and sayde among themselues, it is a goste that we see, and not a man. And the common sorte of shippemen thinketh that suche manner of syghtes, dooe sygnyfye vtter destruccyon to them that rowe on the water. Therefore they were so sore afeard, that beeing almoste beside themselues they cryed out for feare. But Jesus suffered them not to be in daungier any longer, but by and by spake vnto them that they might know him by hys speche, whome in the darke they coulde not see. Be of good chere (sayd he) it is I, feare not. At thys woorde by and by theyr mynde was comforted. But Peter whiche alway had a synguler loue towarde Jesus, thynking nothing at all harde that he woulde commaunde, sayed: Lorde yf thou be he, commaunde me to come vnto thee vpon the water. For he meruelled not that Jesus walked vpon the water, but he thought that he hymselfe myghte do so likewyse, yf Jesus would. But Jesus frampng & fashioning his weakenes by all meanes vnto the strengthe of perfecte faith, bad hym come. At the whiche woorde Peter nothyng lyngeryng, leaped downe out of the bote, and began to haste to Jesus, walkyng vpon the water. And as long as hys fayth nothing wauered, the moyste element serued him. But whan he caste hys eyes a little from Jesus, and began to looke about him, and to consydre the boysterousnes of the winde, the hurling of the waues, and his owne feblenes, he was afrayed agayn, and began to sinke downe & be in danger of drowning. Feare came of the boysterousnes of the windes, peril came of feare, & feare of distruste. And agayne the greatenes of peril rayled vp the sparke of fayth, and nowe being almost ouerwhelmed with waues, he cryed out: Lorde saue me, I perish. But Jesus putting hys disciple in remembraunce, that the perill whiche he feared came not of the waues or windes, whiche before serued his tourne, but of the weakenes of fayth, reaching out his hande catched him and lift him vp, saying: O thou that yet hast little trusted me, why diddest thou wauer? For it is not inough to haue a strong faith for the time, but it must be continual and constaunt, nor thou must not loke how great the peril is, or what thy strength is hable to beare, but what I am hable to do to him that doth trust and beleue in me. Therefore furthwith as he entred into the shippe, the winde ceased. And they that were in the shippe, seyng suche a merueylouse wunder, perceyuyng that there was somewhat in him, more than man, fel downe at his feete and wurshipped him, saying: Thou art the very sonne of God. And when they came to the banke, he went into the countrey of Genezareth, where he had shewed many miracles before. They after that they had knowlege that he whom they had seene before, was come agayne, they sent throughout al the countrey to tel that Jesus was prelet. that if they had any sicke folke, they should bring them. For now theyr fayth began to increase, by the myracles that were done before. Therefore flockyng together on euery syde, they offer vnto Jesus as many as were diseased, desyryng him that at the leaste they myght touche the hem of hys garmente, if it were to paynful for him to touche them one by one, or to speake vnto them. So strong was theyr fayth, and theyr fayth deceiued them not: For as many as touched him, were healed.

Peter aunswered and sayed. &c.

O thou of little fayth &c.

¶ The .xv. Chapiter.

The texte. Than came to Jesus Scribes and Pharisees, whiche were come from Hierusalem, saying: Wherefore doe thy disciples transgresse the tradicion of the elders? for they washe not their handes whan they eate bread. But he aunswered, and sayde vnto them: Why doe ye transgresse also the commaundemente of god, because of your owne tradicion?

TO the more glory of God these thynges were done, the more the Pharisies were fret with enuie, seyng their glory to bee darkened thereby, by the which glory hitherto they had magnifyed theselues among men. They hüted in euery corner for a quarel, but the more they go agaynst Jesus, the more they blase abrode their owne blindenes, being so manifest and open, that the people also spyed it. Therfore certayn Phariseis of Hierusalem (for there were they most arrogant and proude) goe together vnto Jesus, that the numbre might make their false accusacyon to bee beleued. And where as Moyses forbade that any thyng shoulde bee taken away or put to the wordes of the lawe, the Phariseis, that they might seme to bee not onely therpounders of the lawes, but also the makers, they added certayn tryflyng thinges, as be those: That no man shoulde take meate with vnpure handes, whiche they called vnwashed, as who should say, the handes did defyle the meate or the man, or as who shoulde say, the liquor of the water shoulde washe away the filthynesse of the minde. Agayne, that no man retournyng from the market and had been amongeste the common people, shoulde eate meate, but he had firste washed hys body: as who shoulde saye, the touchyng of men filed man, or as who shoulde say, he is pure and cleane whiche is washed. Agayne, that their flagons, pottes, brasse, stoles beddes, and other stuffe which was daily occupyed, shoulde be often washed. With these and many lyke superfluouse and tryfling thinges, they burdened the simple people, which thynges they woulde haue so much made of and honoured, that for these preceptes, they neglected oftentimes the cõmaundementes of God. Therfore whē they could no wates leye to the disciples charge, the transgression of Moses lawe, they fynde faulte with their mayster, because he suffered his disciples to neglect mannes constitucions: not that they despised them, although they were worthy to bee despised, but that being geuen to seriouse and earnest matters, sometimes they passed little vpon them. Therefore they spake vnto Jesus and sayde: Why doe not thy disciples kepe the constytucions of their forefathers? For they washe not their handes whan they goe to meate. Christ not suffering so malictouse rebuking, for a thing of nothing: payeth them home with a more sharpe rebuke. Nay with what face dooe ye, which picke quarels for these trifles, make so muche of mannes constitucyons, whiche can bring nothing elles but paynfull superstycion, and yet for them, ye sticke not to breake the greatest commaundement of God.

For God commaundeth, saying: Honour father and mother. And he that shall curse father or mother, let him dye the deathe. But ye say euery one shall say to his father and mother: What aiste soeuer shoulde haue come from me, the same is tourned vnto thy profit. And so shal he not honour his father or hys mother. And thus haue ye made the commaundement of God of none effecte, because of your owne tradicion. The texte.

For God confirmyng the law of nature, commaunded earnestly that euery man shoulde honoure and succoure his father and mother, promising long life and felicitie of this life vnto the doer hereof: threatning death to him that doeth the contrary. But you folowing your auarice, that ye may tourne that to your owne gayne and aduauntage, which shoulde haue bene bestowed in helping of youre parentes: doe teache that it is holyer and better for men to enryche the temple with gyftes, than to helpe their nedye parentes: and ye haue shewed a caste, how the children may mocke their parentes asking helpe and succour of them, that is, to say thus to the father or mother: the gifte that I offer to the temple, thinke it bestowed vpon you. For that, that is offered to God the high parent, is rightely bestowed, and the godlines of the sonne shal profite the parentes: and by this crafte, vnder the coulour of false godlines, against the commaundemente of God, the father is forsaken, that the priestes may bee better at ease. The thyng cummeth to you, to the helpe and succoure of the parentes, nothing cummeth but wordes. And yet coulour a wicked dede vnder the pretence of godlines. What can be more arrogant than to preferre your constitucions before the commaundementes of God, and vnder the pretence of them, to hynder and breake the holy commaundemente of God? It is a wicked dede to burden the people with such maner of constitucions, which is ouerburdened with the burde of the law. But it is intollerable wickednes vtterly to abolishe goddes law, agreable vnto the law of nature, through your owne inuencions.

The texte. O Hypocrites: full well dyd Esay prophecie of you, saying: Thys people draweth nygh vnto me with their mouthe, and honoureth me with lyppes, but their harte is farre from me: in vayn do they worship me, teaching the doctrines, mans precepte. But he calleth the people vnto hym, and sayde vnto them: heare and vnderstande: That whiche goeth into the mouth defileth not the man, but that which cummeth out of the mouth defileth man.

This is your counterfeite religion, whiche is nothing lesse than as it appereth. O Hypocrites, Esay worthely prophecied of you, saying: This people honoureth me with their lippes, but their harte is far from me. And they worship me in vayne, teathing doctrines, which be the preceptes of men. Iesus whe he had spoken these, as though he had turned away frō the pharisees, whiche hunted for nothing, but for occasion of false accusing: commaunded the multitude to come nere, saying: Heare and vnderstāde how trifling thinges they be, whiche the pharisees prescribe vnto you, careful in little thinges, and neglecting great thinges. They with aukewarde iudgement, put the chiefe poynte of godlynes in outwarde thynges, as in choyce of meates and neglecte those thinges that be of the soule. They abhorre vnwashed cuppes, and neglecte vncleane soules: they washe their handes and their skinnes oftentimes, but they suffer their minde to be defiled with all maner of vices. That whiche entreth into the mouthe maketh not man vncleane, but that whiche goeth out of the mouth maketh man vncleane. For it is no matter what meate a man eateth, but with what minde he eateth it.

The texte Than came his disciples, and sayde vnto hym: Knowest thou not that the Pharisees were offended at this saying? But he aunswered and sayde: Euery plante which my heauenly father hath not planted, shalbe plucked vp by the rootes. Let them alone, they be blynde guides of the blinde. If the blinde leade the blinde both shall fall into the diche.

Iesus semed by these wordes to haue geuen vnto the pharisees a iust occasion to remoue him, because he toke away the choyce of meates, which gods lawe prescribed. In whiche thing also his disciples did not disagree from the pharisees, thinking it a wicked thyng to eate common and vncleane meates, which truely Christ did not yet condemne, but declared that they of their own nature were neither good nor yl, but of incident causes, and therfore lesse to be estemed than those thinges, which alway and of their own nature be godly or vngodly, & declareth also that such maner of preceptes of the law, which were

ordeined for a time, and do not so much bring holines as signify it, begin now to be obscured & darkened, & shortly shal vanysh away & perish at ỳ clere light of the ghospel. The disciples not yet vnderstanding this thing, goe vnto their lord, & monish him secretly of the daunger, saying: know ye not that the pharisees although they dissemble the matter, be offended with this cõmunicacion of yours, ỳ meate defileth no man? But Jesus minding to teache that the office of yll men, which riseth of thinges of nothing, and the doers of it also, oughte manfully to be despised: chiefly whan in obeying of thẽ, none other good riseth of it, but increasing & nourishing of their malice: not without the vndoyng of the simple people, whiche trusting to such maner of obseruacions, neglecte the deuocion of true godlines, answered thus vnto his disciples which were sumwhat offẽded also. Euery graffe that my heauẽly father hath not graffed, shall be plucked vp by the rootes: euery ordinaũce ỳ men haue inuẽted of thẽselues for theyr owne glory, & not for true godlines, shall perish and come to naught. These thinges sauour of the earth, & be carnal, made & geuen for a time, to represse & kepe vnder the excesse & outrage of grosse folke. The law of the gospell is spiritual & heauenly, nor resteth in these visible thinges, but in thaffections of the minde. These therfore ought chiefely to be regarded: For without these thother profit nothing but to vayne ostentacion. Seing therfore ye haue begũ to professe this heuẽly philosophy, ye haue nothing to doe with ỳ coũterfeiting and dissemblyng Pharisei, who promise perfect holynes through suche obseruacions, in which is no godlynes, or surely very litle. They shewe and boast themselues to be doctours and captaines to true religion, wheras they knowe not in what thinges true religion standeth. Therfore they be blinde, and leaders of the blynde. And if the blynde leade the blynde on the way, what shall happen? bothe together shall fall in the dyke. They knowe not what they teache, and they take vnto them folishe and grosse disciples. Therfore let the folishe Pharisei goe, with theyr folyshe and vnprofitable constitucions.

Regarde and care for those thynges whiche make man cleane or vncleane: that is to say, for those thynges whiche do defile or cleanse the mynde, rather than the bodye.

Euery plãt whiche my heauẽly father hath not planted &c.

¶ Then answered Peter, and sayd vnto him: declare vnto vs this parable. And Jesus sayd: Are ye also yet without vnderstanding? Do not ye yet vnderstande that whatsoeuer entreth into the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the priuie? But those thinges which goe out of the mouth, come furth from the harte, and they defile the man. For out of the harte come yll thoughtes, murders, aduoutries, whordomes, thefte, false witnesses, and sholdinges. These be the thinges whiche defyle man. But to take meate with vnwashen handes doeth not defile man.

The texte.

To these Peter made answere, not yet persuaded, because of the superstition whiche he had depely receiued of hys forefathers, that these constitucions could not be neglected without daunger: wheras he durst not resiste any more the sayinges of Jesus, required him gentilly that he would vouchesafe to declare plainly the thyng whiche he had spoken darkely to the people, concernyng thynges that goeth in and cummeth out of the mouth. Jesus minding to sharpen the desyre of his disciples with a litle chidyng, whiche should haue bene now more cumnyng in vnderstãdyng of parables, and out of one to haue diuined and gessed another, sayde: Be ye also yet without vnderstandyng? vnderstande ye not that meate whiche receiued and taken with handes washed or vnwashed, entreth into the mouthe, goeth downe into the stomake and afterwarde the grosser parte of it is caste out by the belly into the pryuye. These be bodely thinges, and affect and touche nothing but the body. As for the solle they neyther helpe nor hurt, vnlesse a man misuse them. And to misuse them is not the faulte of the meates, but of the misuser. But the thinges which goe out of the mouth bee the thinges whiche men doe speake. Talking cummeth not from the belly but from the harte. And that is in mannes harte, that in dede is pure and cleane, or els vnpure and vncleane. For from that fountaine doe spring noysom thoughtes, wherwith me go about to lye in wayte to hurt their brother, from thence do spring murder, adultry, rape, theft, fraude, deceite, enuie, arrogancie, strife, false witnes & blasphemie. These thynges though they go not out by the mouth, yet they make men vncleane and abhominable in the sight of God. If they burste out in maner of a pestilente breath out of a filthy siege, lyke as they declare man to be vncleane, so with theyr infeccion and blasting they do defile others also. But whether thou take thy meate with handes washed or vnwashed, so thou take it to the vse of nature, maketh not man vncleane. Neither drinke taken out of an vncleane cup, defileth not man, so thou take it measurably for the vse & not for the excesse. Likewyse to syt vpon an vnwashed seate, doeth not defile the minde of man, like as the washed seate doth not make pure and cleane hym that sitteth in it. Therefore whereas the Pharisees teache and obserue superstitiously these foolishe trifles, yet they dooe not abhorre those thinges, wherby the minde is defiled in dede. They lye in wayte for him that doeth them good, they do suborne and prepare false witnes, they do backbite the fame of their neighbour, and so seke for theyr owne glory, that they enuy the glory of god, falsely reporting the workes which be done by his spirite and ascribing them to Beelzebub. They should abhorre these thinges, if they woulde seme cleane in dede. But what aukewarde kinde of holynes is this, to haue washed and cleane handes, and to haue both minde and tongue defiled with so many mischeuous vices.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus goyng thence, departed into the coaste of Tyre and Sydon. And beholde a woman of Canaan whiche came from the same coaste, cryed vnto hym saying: Haue mercye vpon me lorde the sonne of Dauyd, my daughter is myserably vexed with a deuyll. But he aunswered her nothing at all. and his disciples came and besoughte hym, saying: sende her away, for she crieth after vs: But he answered and sayde: I am not sente but vnto the lost shepe of the house of Israell. Than came she and worshipped him, saying: Lorde helpe me. But he aunswered and sayde: It is not mete to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to dogges. She aunswered and sayde: Trueth lorde, for the dogges eate of the crummes, which fal from their maisters table. Than Jesus aunswered, and sayde vnto her: O woman greate is thy fayth, be it vnto thee as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that tyme.

After that Jesus had spoken these thinges, he left that countrey, and went into the coastes of Tyrus & Sydon, in maner prophecying with that dede, that the Jewes through the superstition of their lawe, should expell the doctrine of the gospel, which the Gētiles through sincerute of fayth should take vnto the. For Tyrus and Sidon were inhabited of Idolaters. Jesus went thither, not to preache as he did in Jewry, for the time was not yet come, but to be secret & hid there, for he entred into a house desiring to be secret, but the fame did vtter him. This was done for the inuincible malice of the Jewes, leste they might

complaine that the wicked and prophane Gētiles were preferred before them. Therfore he would that ꝑ miracle that he shewed there, should not seme to be sought after or done of purpose, but offered by chaunce, & in maner extorted & obteyned of him by force. Therfore when the rumour was spred abrode, that Jesus was present, whose fame increasing by litle and litle went beyond the coastes of the Jewes: a certayne woman of Canaan cūming out of her coastes durst not come nere to Jesus, lest she beyng vnclean might seme to defile him which was clean, but a far of called vpon him wt a miserable crie: haue mercy vpon me the sonne of Dauid, telling him that she had a daughter at home miserably vexed with a deuil. This Jesus so merciful and easy to be intreated, which was wont to be prompt and ready vnto al men, to thintent both that he might make open vnto al men the very constāt fayth of the woman, & also leye vnto the Jewes charge, their very stiffe & obstynate vnbeleefe, & to teache vs with all, of what efficacy and power importune and earneste prayers powred out of an humble harte, be with god: he despiseth the peticyoner whiche cryed out for sorow of her harte, insomuche that he woulde not vouchesafe to make her aunswere: shewing therby a certayn fashion of the Jewes arrogancie, because the Jewes coūted the Cananeers their olde enemies, and wurshippers of Idolles, to be abhominable, and that they be defyled if they do but talke with them. And the apostles at that time were yet of the same affection and minde. But the woman ceased not, although she were repelled. Sorowe and faythe made her importune, she foloweth at hys backe, and cryeth lamentably: haue mercy vpon me lorde, the sonne of Dauid. The disciples not yet vnderstanding what was in dooyng, moued with shame rather than with pitie, because of the importune crying of the woman, of a straunge countrey, speake vnto Jesus, not despyzing hym to haue mercye of the wretched woman, but because of her importunitie to sende her away with some aunswere. Therefore Jesus made an aunswere more sore and harde, than the former repulse & shaking of, to the intent he might make the constancie and coldenes of the straunge woman more maruellouse: & also by the example of her to charge the Jewes with their pride and arrogancie. I am not sent (q he) but vnto the lost shepe of the house of Jsraell. For the Jewes stode meruellously in theyr owne conceyte, because of this title, that they were the stocke of Jsraell. The woman was not wery̆ed with so many repulses and denials, insomuche that she durste yet drawe nere vnto Jesus, and falling downe at his knees, sayde: Lorde succoure me.

And behold a woman of Canaan

But he answered and sayde.

She did not confute the saying of Jesus, but with often repeting of her prayers she went about to wery him. She layed not for her, righte and iustice, she requireth nothyng but mercy. Jesus not contente with this, goeth on still, to trye the sobre importunitie of the woman. It is not mete (q he) to take the childrens bread, and cast it to the dogges: calling the fruite of the gospel which is by fayth, bread: callyng the children, the Jewes, which did glory that they had god to their father: calling the dogges, straungers, & aliens frō the religiō and wurshipping of God. Which of the Jewes would not haue bene stirred & angred with suche a rebuke: but the woman not refusyng the name of a dog, enuieth not the Jewes the honourable title of the children, but calleth them also lordes whome Jesus called childrē. She embraceth the aūswere, rebukeful in apperaunce, and taketh occasion of it not to be repelled, whet with it appered that she was vtterly repelled. I deny not (q she) that the Jsraelites bee

the children, and we the dogges, and therfore I am not vttrely to be repelled. I take not away from them their fyne and delycate breade, whiche they eate sitting at their fathers table: This onely I require, whiche maisters are not wont to deny to their dogges. The table is riche and plentiful of such thinges it sufficeth me if I chaunce to haue the crummes whiche fal from their tables.

O woman great is thy fayth.

Than Jesus maruaylyng at the infatygable and greate constancye of the straunge woman, in maner ouercome, sayde: O woman, I can no longer resist thy prayers, great is thy fayth, wherwith thou constrayneste me. Wherfore be it vnto thee after thy desire. And by and by euen at the same tyme it was proued, that her daughter was deliuered from the deuil.

The texte. And Jesus goyng from thence, came nigh vnto the sea of Galile, and wente vp into a mountayne and sate downe there. And muche people came vnto vym bryngyng with them those that were lame, blynde, deafe, maymed, and other many, and caste them downe at Jesus feete. And he healed the, insomuch that the people maruayled whan they saw the dume speake, the maymed to be whole, the lame to walke, and the blinde to see. And they glorified the god of Israell.

Whan Jesus in maner constrayned had wrought this one miracle in the borders of ỹ Sidonians & the Syrians, to prouoke & stirre vp his owne people, he went agayne into Jewry, to declare how more ready he was towardes his owne countrey menne, then to straungiers: if they might haue bene ouercome & wunne with benefites. And he came vnto a meere whiche is called the sea of Galile, and there goyng vp vpon an hill, sate downe, that by goyng aside and by the difficultye of the place, he might a litle and a litle plucke vp the fayth of hys disciples, and make it firme and stable. Anon there flocked about him many flockes of men, bringing with the dume, blinde, lame, weake, and diuerse other vexed with diuerse diseases, of whome there was so great a multitude, that they cast them at the feete of Jesus. He well perceyuing their fayth by the harde and cumbrouse iourney, healed them al: and so spedely healed so many, that the multitude whiche came vnto him was much amased, seyng howe sodeinly the blinde receyued their sighte, the dume spake, the lame walked, the feeble was whole of lymmes. And they glorifyed the god of the people of Israell, whiche did vouchesafe to bestowe so greate benefites vpon his people.

The texte. ¶ Than Jesus called hys disciples vnto hym, and sayde: I haue compassion on the people, because they continue with me nowe three dayes, and haue nothyng to eate: and I will not let them departe fasting, leste they faynte in the way. And hys disciples saye vnto him: whence shoulde we get vs so muche bread in wildernes wherewith we might suffyce so great a multitude: And Jesus sayth vnto them: How many loaues haue ye: and they sayd vnto him: seauen, and a fewe litle fyshes. And he commaunded the people to sit downe on the grounde, and tooke the seauen loaues and the fyshes. And after that he had geuen thankes, he brake them, and gaue to his disciples, and the disciples gaue them to the people. And they all did eate, and were suffysed. And they tooke vp of the broken meate that was lefte seuen basketfull. And yet they that dyd eate, were fower thousande men, beside women & children. And he sent away the people and tooke shyp, and came into the coastes of Magdala.

This kindenes of the people caused him to heape benefit vpon benefites of his owne accorde. For whan Jesus knewe that the multitude taryed and byd by him three dayes (such was their feruency towardes Jesus) and knew also if they had brought any vitayle with them, it was consumed and spent a good whyle before: and that many were in iopardy for hunger: Furthermore that the iorney was long, and that there were no villages nor townes nere: he called his disciples vnto hym and sayd: I haue pitie on thys multitude. For now it is thre dayes, that they haue taried with me in desert, and they haue nothing to eate, and I will not sende them away fasting, leste they fayne in the way, being longer than they be able to goe fasting.

With these sayinges he put his disciples in remembraunce of the former miracle, when he fed certayne thoulandes of men. But they yet rude and forgetting those former thynges, beyng carefull and doubtefull as though they had ben commaunded to fede suche a greate multitude of men, doe make answere: Where than can we get suche a deale of bread that may suffice suche a great multitude? This simplicitie and forgetfulnes of the disciples, dyd sette furth the greatnes of the miracle. They therefore beyng in dispayre, Christe taketh in hande, the mater of the miracle. He asketh the how many loaues they had. They answered, seuen, and a fewe fishes. And furthwith he commaunded them to sit downe vpon the grounde. And taking the seuen loaues and the meate in his handes, after that he had lifted vp his eyes vnto heauen and geuen thankes vnto his father, he brake them and deliuered them to hys disciples, and they distributed them to the people. Euery man did eate his fill, and there was nothing lacking: insomuch that seuen basketes were filled of the gatherynges of scrappes, whiche remayned. And there were of them that dyd eate, in numbre fower thousande, beside chyldren and wemen. But Jesus, so many miracles shewed in the mounte, leste he shoulde styrre the people ouermuch to haue him in veneration and honoure: chiefly when these bodely benefites be applied and geuen for none other intent, but to obtayne authoritie to the doctrine of the ghospel, whereby the soules be healed and fed: after that he had sent away the multitude, he went by boate into the lande of Magedon.

And he cõmaunded ꝑ people to sit down on ꝑ grounde

¶ The. xvi. Chapiter

¶ And the Pharisees with the Saduceis came and tempted hym, and required of him to shewe them a signe from heauen. But he answered and sayde vnto them: when the euenynge begynneth to draw nere, ye say: It will be fayre weather, for the skie is red. And in the morning: It will bee troublesome weather: for the skye is glowmyng red. O ye hypocrites, ye can discerne the face of heauen, but can ye not discerne the sygnes of the tymes? The frowarde and aduouterouse nacion requireth a signe, and there shall no signe be geuen vnto it but the signe of the Prophete Jonas. The texte.

Jesus being here, there came vnto him agayne certaine Pharisees and Saduceis being of a contrary sect, notwithstanding of one consente and agreemente to lye in wayte for Jesus. And craftely they require him to shew some token from heauen, as thoughe hereafter yf he woulde haue so done, they woulde haue beleued in hym, where as they wente about nothing els, but to seke occasyon to reproue hym. But Jesus when he perceyued that after so many miracles, they remained yet in their malice, mourned in the spirite and sayde: Ye hypocrites vttering one thyng with with your mouth, and closing another in your hart, in lesse thinges when ye marke heauen, ye can tel before what weather shal folow the day after.

O ye Hypocrites. &c. For when ye see the sunne go to glade, ye say: to morowe shall be fayre wether, for the ayer is cleare and bright. Againe when ye see the sunne rise in the morning, by and by ye geue sentence, that that shal be a foule and a boysterouse day because the lowring ayre is red. When ye see the fashion and countenaunce of heauen, ye can gesse whether the time will be mete for tourneing, rowing, sowing, or mowing, or for any other thinges apperteyning to the vse of the body: And are ye so dul and negligēt in knowlege of the time, that maketh for your soules helth? ye haue the scriptures, ye see what thynges be done, ye see howe the worlde is renewed, and vnderstande ye not yet, that the tyme spoken of before by the Prophetes, and looked for so long tyme, is nowe at hande? Of one signe ye geue sentence, of fayre or foule weather, of so many signes, whiche ye see dayly, dos ye not perceiue the thing that is present? If ye would haue bene made better by wonders and myracles, ye would haue beleued me long agon. Now ye require a signe and a token to be the worse thereby. O naughtie and adulterous generacion, which goeth farre out of kinde from her forefathers, of whose tytles, she magnifieth her selfe. She seketh craftely for a wonder out of heauen, to pycke a quarell and to reproue it: But in tyme to come she shall haue a signe that she shall feare and not reproue. In the meane time she shall haue no signe nor wonder but out of the earth, whiche shal frustrate and disapoynte all their endeuoures, when they shall see hym alyue agayne, whome they thoughte to bee dead and buryed. It seemeth a monstruouse thyng vnto them whiche chaunced to the Prophete Jonas: they shall haue a lyke monster, but more wonderfull. By this riddell and darke fygure, the Lorde Jesus signified that he should be first slayne, & buried of them, whome they thoughte to be nothyng elles but man, and furthwith should ryse agayne, through the power of God.

The texte. ¶ And he left them and departed. And when his disciples were come to the other syde of the water, they had forgotten to take bread with them. Then Jesus sayd vnto them: Take hede and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, & the Saducees. But they thought in themselues saying, we haue taken no bread with vs. Whiche when Jesus vnderstode, he sayde vnto them: O ye of litle fayth, why take ye thought with your selues because ye haue brought no bread? Do ye not perceiue nor remēbre the .v. loaues, when there were fiue thousand men, and how many baskettes toke ye away? Neyther the .vii. loaues when there were .iiii. thousande men, and how many baskettes toke ye away? How happeneth it that ye doe not vnderstande that I spake it not to you concernyng breade that ye shoulde beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and Saducees. Than vnderstoode they howe that he bad them not beware of the leauen of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees, and of the Saducees.

Jesus therfore leauing them with their blindnes, went ouer the water by ship & the disciples had forgotten to prouyde themselues of bread before they entred into the shippe. For they had but one lofe in the shippe. Jesus therefore to put them in remembraunce, saide: take diligent hede and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and the Saducees: noting and touching darkely their Jewishe superstitiō, because they thought it a great matter to eate these meates or those meates, whereas they were taughte beefore, that man was not defyled with the thynges that entred into the mouthe. The dyscyples although they vnderstoode not what it mente, were yet monished with this saying, that they had had forgotten to put vitayle in their shippe. Jesus therefore chideth them beyng carefull for thys thyng, blampng theyr dulnesse, whiche taughte so often both with sayinges and dooinges, vtterly to cast out of theyr mynde carefulnesse for vitayle, yet were incumbred with carke and care for suche manner of thynges: O (sayth he) ye that so litell truste to me, why dooe ye bere youre mynde with thys carefullnesse, that ye haue forgotten breade, as who sayeth, we shall lacke any thyng, although ye prouyde not for it? Dydde not I teache you that firste of all the kyngdome of God muste bee sought for, and that these thynges shall be cast vnto you? Haue ye not seene now twyse that such a great multytude lacked not meate? So many wayes taughte and monyshed, vnderstande ye not yet? remembre ye not yet? Is youre herte yet blynded with suche manier of cares? and see ye not after the Pharisays sashyon, that whiche ye see with youre yes? and that whiche ye heare with youre eares, ys yt as though ye hearde it not? haue ye forgot that, whiche was lately done, your selues being not onely witnesses but also ministers? When that fiue thousande men were fully fed with .v. barely loaues & two fyshes, the numbre of geastes being so greate, the preparacion so small, howe many baskettes dyd ye fyll of the scrappes whiche remayned of the feaste? They aunswere hym, twelue. And agayne when fower thousande men were fylled with seuen loaues and a fewe fishes, ye beeyng the dystrybutoures, howe many baskettes filled ye with the scrappes? they aunswere seuen: Why, dooe ye not yet vnderstande the maner of my speaking, whiche ye tourne to the care of bodely thinges, whereas my talking studieth and prouideth for the mindes, rather then the bodies?

Now ye shoulde of your selues haue conjectured what my riddel ment when I sayde: beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and Saducees. I had nowe taught you, that it little skilled what kynde of meate we eate. I had nowe diuersly declared and beaten vpon it, that they whiche haue in hande the matter of the ghospel, shoulde vtterly cast away suche vile cares.

The disciples beyng more attent and diligent by this litle chyding, vnderstode that Jesus ment that they shoulde take hede diligently, and beware of the doctryne of the Pharisees, whiche had nothyng that was syncere and cleane, but was corrupte with ambicyon, auarice enuie, and other vyces: Whereas the doctrine of the ghospell tasted of no suche thyng. For theyr doctrine doeth rather infecte man, than fede hym, and therefore it must be taken hede of dilygently, because they bee woonte for to deceiue vnware and symple men by the false cloke of godlynes, whiche is the very poyson of true godlines.

¶ Whan Jesus came into the coastes of the citie which is called Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying: Whome doe men say that I the sonne of manne am? they sayde: some say that thou arte Johan the Baptiste, some Helias, some Hieremias, or one of the noumbre of the prophetes. He sayeth vnto them: But whome say ye that I am? Symon Peter answered: Thou arte Christe the sonne of the liuing God. And Jesus aunswered and sayde vnto hym: happie arte thou Symon the sonne of Jonas, for flesshe and blonde hath not opened that vnto thee, but my father whiche is in heauen. And I saye vnto thee, that thou arte Peter, and vpon thys rocke I will buylde my churche, and the gates of hell shall not preuayle against it. And I will geue vnto the, the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen: and whatsoeuer thou byndest in earth shall be bounde in heauen, and whatsoeuer thou loosest in earthe shal be looced in heauen. The texte.

O ye of lytel faith.

Here when Jesus came into the coastes of the citie called Cesarea, whiche Philipps

Philippe the Tetrarche so named in the honour of Ceasar, folowing his brother Herode, whiche chaunged the name, and called that Cesarea, whiche beefore was named the tower of Straton, he thoughte to proue howe muche his schollers had profited by hearing so muche communicacion, and by seeing so many miracles: and whether they had any higher or better opinion of him, than the vulgare sorte. Therefore he demaundeth of them saying: whome doe men talke that the sonne of man is? They say: some say that he is Iohn the baptist: for so the Herodians did suspecte. Some say that he is Helias, because he was taken vp: & they suspect that he doeth appere now according to the prophecie of Malachy. Some say that he is Hieremie, because he was a figure of Christ, and that it was sayde of hym: Beholde I haue set thee thys day ouer nacions and kinges, to plucke vp and to distroy and to plant: which in dede should be fulfilled in Christ. Iesus hearing these, to thentent he would gette out some more certayne and hygher profession, sayeth: ye (q he) whiche shoulde knowe me better, who say ye that I am? Here Symon Peter as he loued Iesus best, as the chiefe of the Apostolicall ordre, aunswered for them all. Thou arte very Christe, the sonne of God aliue: not speaking of suspicion, but professing certainely and vndoubtedly that he was Messias promised of the Prophetes, and the sonne of god after a certayne singuler manner. Iesus delighted with this chereful and substaunciall profession, sayde: blessed art thou Symon the sonne of Iohn. The affection of man taught thee not this word, but the heauenly father put it in thy minde, by a secret inspiracion. For no man hath a worthy opinion of the sonne, but by the inspiracion of the father. which only knoweth the sonne. And I agayn, lest thou shouldest adourne me thankelesse with suche a noble testimony, assure thee of this, that thou arte very Peter, that is to say, a sound and a sure stone, not wauering hither or thither with sundrie opinions of the vulgare sorte: & vpon this stone of thy profession, wil I builde my churche, that is to saye, my house and my palace: whiche beyng sette vpon a sure foundacion, I will so fortifie, that no power or strengthe of the kingdome of hell shalbe hable to beate it downe. Sathan will come vpon you with many engines, he will rayse a coumpany of wicked spirites against you, but through my defence my buyldyng shall stande impregnable, onely lette thys sure and sounde profession abyde. The kyngdome of heauen is the churche, the kingdome of the deuil is the worlde. Of thys no man nede to bee afearde, so that he bee Peter, that is to saye, lyke vnto thee. And the keyes of this heauenly kyngdome I will deliuer vnto thee. For it is meete that there he bee firste in auctorite, whiche is firste in the profession of the faithe, and in charitie. And truely this kingdom of heauen is in earth, but it hath to do with heauen, wherof it doeth depende. Wherfore he that is entangled with sinnes, doeth belong to the kingdome of hell, nor can not enter into the kyngdome of heauen. But he shall enter yf he profesle that whiche thou doeste profesle, and be losed from his sinnes by baptisme, and so through thy leading and thy opening of the gates, he shall enter into the kingdome of heauen. This is my peculiar and proper power, to forgeue sinnes: but thys power I will geue vnto thee after a maner, that that whiche thou shalte lose, with my keyes receyued of me, vpon earth before men, shal be losed also in heauen before God. On the other side, that which thou shalte binde in earth, shall be bounde also in heauen, for God will allowe thy iudgemente cummyng from hys spirite.

And I will geue vnto thee. &c.

Then

Than charged he his disciples that they shoulde tell no man that he was Jesus Christe. From that tyme forthe began Jesus to shewe vnto his disciples howe that he muste goe vnto Hierusalem, and suffer many thinges of the elders, and hye priestes, and Scribes, and muste be killed and rayse vp agayne the thyrde daye: And whan Peter had taken hym aside, he began to rebuke him saying: Maister saueur thy selfe, thys shall not happen vnto thee. But he tureth him aboute, and sayed vnto Peter: goe after me Sathan, thou hyndrest me, for thou sauerest not the thinges that be of God, but those that be of men. The texte.

Whan Jesus had spoken these thynges, he commaunded his disciples that they should as yet kepe this godly opinion of him, secret with themselues: nor open it to others that he was Messias. For first the sacrifice of the crosse must be accomplished, and the veritie of his manly nature declared, and further by his resurrection, and the holy ghoste, his diuinitie muste bee declared. For although the voyce and sentence of Peter, was prayse of Christ, as the sctence of them whiche nowe began to profite and spring vp by little and little, vnto thinges of more perfection, yet they dreamed of a certayne kyngdome, not vterly vnlyke a worldely kingdome. And therefore Jesus darkely, and as in a riddle, promised vnto Peter the ryght of the keyes, but he delyuered them not by and by. For as yet he was not mete to vse them, as yet he was not sufficyently taught with the instruccion of the holy spirite. And therefore Jesus calleth them backe to the mystery of the crosse and of hys deathe, by the whiche misterie that kingdome must be prepared, the deuil once ouercome, and sinnes abolished, that they mighte bee the lesse troubled in their myndes whan they should se thinges chaunce which they knew should come to passe a litle after. They despyed rather to glory in the mightie and high sonne of the liuing God, but no man can truely glory in hym, but he whiche is not offended with hys humilitie and lowne. Jesus therefore began to prepare his disciples to thys storme which was at hand, shewing them that he must first goe to Jerusalem, and that he shoulde haue many griefes and displeasures of the Scrybes and Phariseis, and also of the chiefe priestes, and finally that he shoulde be killed, but on the thyrde day ryse agayne. Whan the disciples being yet carnal vnderstoode not fully this communication, because they iudged these thynges vnmete and vnworthy for him, who thorough so many myracles declared hymselfe to be the sonne of God, yet they durst not demaunde of their maister what itment to dye and ryse agayne. Therefore Peter who for the special loue that he had to his mayster, was bolder then the other, taketh hym aside from the other of the Apostles, as though he woulde tell hym a thyng more familiarly: and chyding hym, and abhorring the speaking of death and afflictions, sayd: Lorde be good to your selfe. These thinges shall not happen vnto you. For it is in you that they come not to passe: For although Peter pronounced hym to be the sonne of God alyue, rather by the instigacion of the father, then by hys owne reason or wit: yet he was farre from the vnderstandyng of that mistery, that Jesus by hys death shoulde redeme mankynde, and by his resurrecyon declare vnto the worlde the might of his diuine power. Therfore Jesus to reformne this affeccion in his disciples, turned vnto them, & behelde the whome he knewe to haue like mynde and affeccyon (albeit onely Peter durste blame the Lord,) and said vnto Peter: Come behind me Sathan. Be not against the will of my father: it is thy parte to folowe me, not to goe beefore. Nowe thou dooeste withstande, and endeuour to leat that thyng whiche bothe my father willeth to be doen, and also it behoueth me to doe, for the healthy and saluacion

of mankinde. Thou desireste to bee a felowe of the kyngdome, and thou arte againste me making spede vnto the crosse of myne owne accorde, to thentente I may winne and get thys kyngdome to my father: what way ye see me goe the same ye must goe also to the kyngdome of heauen. But thou saueroste not yet the thynges whiche be of God: but led by mannes affeccyons, reppneste against the will of God. Reliste not therefore, thou vnprofitable counsaylour, but folow after me, becum rather a scholler then a maister.

The texte. ¶ Than sayde Jesus vnto hys disciples: yf any man will folowe me, let hym forsake hymselfe, & take vp his crosse & folowe me. For whoso wil saue his life shal loose it. Againe whoso loseth his life for my sake, shall finde it. For what doeth it profit a man if he win al ꝑ whole world, & loose his owne soule? For what shal a man geue to redeme his soule agayne withal? For the sone of man shal come in the glory of his father with his angels, and then shal he rewards euery man, according to his dedes. Verely I say vnto you, there bee some standyng here, whiche shall not taste of deathe, tyll they see the sonne of manne come in hys kingdome.

When that with these sayinges Jesus had cut the combe of Peter for his importune frowardnes, turning to all his disciples began to declare at large what it was that he sayde to Peter: come behinde me. Whosoeuer (sayd he) will bee my disciple and partaker of the kyngdome of heauen, let hym folowe my steppes. And lyke as he seeth me despysyng all the goodes of thys worlde, to bestowe my lyfe also willingly for the saluacyon of menne and glory of my father: so muste he also refuse and caste of all humayne affeccions, ready to all kindes of death, for the gospels sake, and take his crosse and folow me, which am goyng to the crosse. So to suffer is a blessed thyng: so to bee rebuked is a gloryouse thyng: so to be killed is a winnyng of lyfe. I know there is nothing more dere then life: but so euery man must lose hys lyfe, if he will saue it: and except he lose it, he shall lose it in dede. He loseth it for aduauntage that loseth it for the gospels sake. He loseth it in dede whiche forsaking the ghospell, prouideth for thys temporal lyfe, and loseth the life euerlasting. There is no man so foolish that woulde winne this whole worlde with the losse of this corporal and shorte lyfe. To what purpose serue ryches se yf the owner perishe? So it is a mad mannes parte to make so muche of hys affeccions, of ryches, or els of his body, whiche within shorte time shoulde perishe, yea though no man kil it: that for mennes pleasure he will lese the lyfe euerlasting, whiche whoso hath not, hath all the other in vayne. Therefore nothing ought to be so deare vnto any man, the gain whereof he woulde chaunge with the losse of his soule. For the losse of other thinges may some wayes be recompenced, the losse of the soule cannot be recouered. He that loseth his life for my sake, dooeth not lose it, but commytteth it to me for auauntage, and shall receyue it agayne with lucre, whan the Maiestie of the kingdome of God shall appeare.

For what doth it profit a man if he wine all ꝑ world, &c

Nor ye ought not to be discouraged in youre mynde because I haue shewed you that ye must suffer muche aduersitie for the ghospel. They shall haue an ende shortely, and euerlasting glory, shall folow the temporal ignominy and rebuke. For the sonne of man whome ye shall see oppressed and troden downe of all men and counted for a wurme: shall come once in an other lykenes, and shall shewe vnto all men the Maiestie and glory of hys father, beeyng garded and accompanted with his aungels. Than he that was iudged here and condemned with a shameful deathe, shall bee the iudge of all menne bothe quicke and dead, and shall yelde a rewarde vnto euery man according to hys dedes. Than shall they bee appoynted to euerlastyng deathe, whiche here regarded more their lyfe thā me: and they shalbe rewarded with immortal life which for my sake despised ẏ life of the body for a time. Now is the tyme of strife and trauayle, hereafter shalbe the time of rewardes. And truly this felicitie shall than be made absolute and perfecte, when it shall bee seene good vnto the father. For it belongeth not vnto you to knowe the tyme. And yet in the mean seasō there shalbe geuen to you, a certain taste of this glory. For be ye assured of this: there be sum here stādyng whiche shall not taste of death, before that they see the sonne of man shewyng the maiestie of his kingdome, as it may be seene with bodily yes. Surely before death they shal see the kingdome of God shewe furth his power: and now by litle and litle vanquyshe and ouercum the whole power of this worlde.

¶ And after sixe dayes Jesus taketh Peter and James and John his brother, and bryngeth them vp into a high mountain out of the way, and he was transfigured before them. & his face did shine as the sunne, and his clothes wer as white as the light. And beholde there appeared vnto them Moses and Helias talkyng with him. Than answered Peter and said vnto Jesus: Lord here is good being for vs, if thou wilt, let vs make here thre tabernacles, one for the, & one for Moses, and one for Helias. As he yet was speaking, behold a bright cloude shadowed thē. And behold there came a voice out of the cloud, saiyng: this is my welbeloued sonne in whom I delight muche, heare him. And whan the disciples had heard these thynges, they fell on their faces, and were sore afrayed. And Jesus came and touched them, and sayd: Arise, and be not afrayed. And when they had lyft vp their yes, they sawe no man saue Jesus onely. The texte.

After sixe dales, Jesus willyng by sum meanes as it were by a dreame, to shew vnto his disciples, that sighte and apperaunce in the whiche ofice he shall cum to be iudge of the worlde: he chose out three of the numbre of his disciples, Peter, James, and John his brother: and whan he had brought them vp into a very hye hyll, farre from the sight of men, he was transfigured before them. And his face shyned lyke the sunne, and his garmentes wer bryght with whyteneſſe as whyte as snow, and as no fuller can make vpon the earth, and there appered also to them, Moses and Helias talkyng with hym of the glory of his death, whiche he should suffer at Jerusalem. This was thought good to Christ, that ẏ Apostles should be confyrmed by those auctours, whom all the Jewes magnified moſte, and that they shoulde not suspect that he would abolish the law, sith Moses stoode with hym: nor the prophetes, sith Helias was present: neither ẏ they should abhorre his death as a shameful thing, whiche so great men set forth, and shewed it to bee glorious. These thinges wer seen to the apostles as to men newely waked frō slepe: for their yes wer heauy & grieued. For mortall feblenesse was not of capacitie to receiue the greatnesse of the vision. The disciples therfore being afearde and amased with suche a wōderful and incredible sighte, Peter not yet fully wel aduised, but rauished wholly with the pleasure and maiesty of the sight, which semed to be farre from mencion of death, said: Lord let vs buylde here three tentes or pauilyons, one for thee, another for Moses, and the third for Helias. This was thought vnto Peter more wisedom than to be slain at Jerusalem. Peter had not yet ended his cōmunicatiō, but beholde a bryght and pleasaūt cloude ouershadowed thapostles, lest they should be abstorpte and ouercummed with the highnesse of the sighte. And behold the voice of the father sounded out of the cloude, witnessyng of his sonne, with the same wordes with the which he witnessed of hym, whē he was baptised in Iordane: This is my onely beloued sonne in whom my mynde hath delight, heare him. Whan the disciples heard this voice ful of diuine maiestie, and not to be borne of mannes eares, they fell doune grouelyng vpon theyr faces, and wer more afeard. For they wer afeard of theyr lyfe, because they had learned that God sayed thus: man shall not see me and liue. But Iesus receiuyng agayn his former shape, touched them with his handes, lest they shoulde suppose that he were a goste, and with his accustomed and knowen voyce he comforted them, saying: Aryse and feare nothyng. Further when they wer cum to themselues, and lifted vp their iyes, they sawe no mā there but Iesus alone, euen lyke as he came vnto the hill.

The texte. And whan they came doune from the mountayne, Iesus charged them, saiyng: Shewe the vision to no manne vntill the sonne of man be rysen agayn from the dead. And his disciples asked him, saiyng: why than say the Scribes that Helias must first cum? And Iesus answered, and said: Truely Helias shall first cum and restore all thynges. But I saye vnto you, that Helias is cum already, & they knewe hym not, but haue doen vnto hym whatsoeuer they lusted. In likewyse shal the sonne of man also suffre of them. Thē the disciples vnderstode that he spake vnto them of John Baptiste.

And whan they came doune from the hill, before they came to the cumpany of the other disciples, he cōmaūded them to tel no man of these thinges that they had seue, vntil the sonne of man wer risen frō death. For vntil that time the tale should be vnprofitable, and not beleued. And the disciples kept it to themselues, and conferred betwene themselues what it myght meane, that Iesus said: after that he be risen again frō death. Their hart was so wrapt & entangled, that that worde so often hearde, would not enter into their hart. But a certain doubt rose in their myndes of that that they saw Helias standyng with Iesus, this doubt they propose vnto hym in the way. What meneth it than (q they) that the Scribes teachyng and tellyng of the cummyng of Messias, be wonte to saye out of the authoritie of Malachie, that before the cummyng of Messias, Helias Thesbites shal cum. And he went not before thy cummyng, but this daye was seene in the hyll. Unto whome Iesus makyng answer, saied: Truly Helias shall cum lyke as Malachias sayed: and according to his prophetie shall goe before my cummyng, and shall restore al thynges, the residewe of the people of Iewes being conuerted vnto the gospell, leste the whole nacion should be condemned. But this cumming shall be in tyme to cum, when I shall be here againe with the maiestie of my father, renderyng reward vnto euery man according vnto his dedes. And yet certayn Helias went before this my cummyng also, whom the Iewes despised, euen as they dyd me, and dyd vnto him not after his desertes, but whatsoeuer it pleased them. And the sonne of man shall be handeled of them with like mekenes. Than the disciples vnderstode that he called John Baptiste Helias, for the lykenes of lyfe, and freenesse in reprouyng of kynges.

Helias is cum already.

The texte. And whan they wer cum to the people, there came to hym a certaine man knelyng downe and sayed: Lorde haue mercy on my sonne, for he is lunatyke, and sooze vexed, for oftymes he falleth into the fyer, and oft into the water. And I brought him to thy disciples, & they could not heale him. Iesus answered, and said: O feithles & croked nacion, how long shal I be with you, how long shall I suffre you? bryng hym hither. And Iesus rebuked the deuil, and he went out of hym. And the childe was healed from that tyme.

But

But nowe when Jesus went vnto his disciples, he sawe a great multitude of men about thē, and the Scribes disputyng with them. The people meruelyng whither Jesus was gone, ran vnto him and saluted him. He demaūded of them what the matter was that they disputed amonge themselues. Than one of the multitude made aunswer: Maister I brought my sonne to thee, which is miserably vexed of an vnclean spirit: which as often as he taketh him, the childe is beaten against the ground, sumtime he is dryuen into the fier, sumtime into the water, he fometh, he gnasheth with his teeth, & cōsumeth awaye. And because I could not haue you, I desired your disciples to cast out the deuil, & they could not. But Jesus to heale the vnbelefe of all men, crieth out in maner angerly: O nacion vnbeleuing and without faythe, howe long shall I be among you in vayne, howe long shall I suffre your vntractable and froward maners? I haue doen so many miracles and profitte nothyng: and therwith cōmaunded the chylde to be brought, because the miracle might be the more euident and notable to all men. Which when he was brought and seen of Jesu, furthwith euen there before thē al, the spirite toke hym, and the chylde was hurled vpon the ground, and tumbled and fomed: a miserable sight to see. Thā Jesu the more to declare ỹ greatnes of the disease, asked the father howe long it was sith the chyld began to be vexed with this disease. The father made aunswer and sayed: from his infancy, and not without daunger of his life. For oftentimes he droue him into the fier, sumtyme into the water to destroy him. I know that it is a soore disease, yet yf thou cāst do any thing haue mercy vpō vs & help vs. Jesu hearyng (yf thou canst) sumwhat reprouyng the weakenes of his faith, as who saieth any disease wer of greater might than the power of God, sayth vnto him: Aske not what I am able to do, but loke what thou art able to beleue. For if thou trust fully, nothing is so hard but it may cum to passe to him ỹ doth beleue & trust. At this word the father conceiuyng a trust, and a more sure hope, with plentifull teares cryng out, made aunswer: Lord I beleue, and if any thing wāt in my trust and belefe, supply thou it of thy goodnes, and help my vnbelefe. In the meane time when Jesus espied the multitude of people rumnyng to gase, desyrous to see whether the thyng that came not to passe to ỹ disciples should cum to passe to Jesus: he threatened the vncleane spirit, saiyng: thou deaf and dumme spirit, I commaund the go out from him, and returne not a gain vnto him hereafter. But the spirite went frō the chylde with howlyng, yet first he tore him and vexed him so vehemently that he lay for dead, and many warranted that he was dead. So strong and tough was the violence of the disease. But Jesus taking the child by the hand, lifted hym vp: & he arose. Like as the father did hardly beleue: so his sōne was hardly heled.

O faythles and croked nacion. &c.

And Jesus rebuked the deuill. &c.

¶ Than came the disciples a part to Jesus, and said: why could not we cast hym out? Jesus said vnto them: because of your vnbelefe. For verily I say vnto you: yf ye haue fayth as a grain of mustarde seede, ye shall say vnto this mountayne: Remoue from hence to yonder place, and it shall remoue: and nothing shalbe vnpossible vnto you. Albeit this kynde goeth not oute, but by prayer and fastyng.

The texte.

In the meane season the disciples wer heauy in their mindes, fearing leste thorough their default they had lost the power of doyng miracles, whereas before they had gloryed that deuilles also were obedient vnto their worde: before the multitude they kepe sylence for shame. But whan Jesus was cō

into the house, they goe vnto their maister and demaund of hym: why could not we cast out this deuill, sith this power was once deliuered vnto vs frō thee Jesus to confyrme the fayth and trust of his disciples, which ought to be so great that sumtyme it myght helpe the distruste of others, sayeth: The weakenesse of your fayth partely was the cause. For the violēce of the disease was vehement, and the fathers fayth weake and waueryng, & your fayth was not so mightie, that it was equall and hable against both these difficulties. For it is sumwhat werish with mannes affections, and faultye by the reason of the leauen of vayn glorye. And ye had fayth lyke the seede of mustarde, which beyng vile and litle, yet when it is brooised, it sheweth a sharpe quicknes of her nature, and sowed in the grounde springeth vp into a large tree nothing should be so harde, but with a word it should be brought to passe out of hande. Yea if ye should say to the hil, remoue from hence, and goe into an other place, it would doe it forthwith as it was commaunded.

If ye haue fayth as a grayne of mustard. &c

But this kynde of deuylles wherewith the chylde was possessed, is not cast out, vnlesse fayth be confirmed and strengthned by prayer and fastyng. The violence of the disease was strong and tough, and by continuaunce of time, it was tourned into nature. Agaynste suche maner of faultes we must fyght with fastynges, which do subdue the body being brought lowe, vnto ỹ spirite, and also with prayer, whiche obteyneth the help of god. By this cōmunicacion Jesus taught that greuous, vehement, and muche accustomed dyseases of the mind, must be driuen away with strong & vehemente remedies.

The texte.

And whan they were in Galile, Jesus sayd vnto them: It will cum to passe that the sōne of man shalbe deliuered into the handes of men, and they shall kyll hym, and the thirde daye he shall rise againe. And they were exceadyng sory.

But now Jesus whan he was in Galile, to the entent he might fortify, & make strong the mindes of his disciples, lest they should be ouer much troubled with his death, again he doth iterate & beate it into thē, that the sonne of man must be delyuered into the handes of men, and killed of them, & that the thyrde day he should rise agayn from death. This sayyng did grieue the mindes of ỹ disciples aboue measure, which so loued their lord (albeit theyr affection and loue was yet carnal) that their eares could not suffre any mencion of death. For they coulde not vnderstande that Moses and Helyas called the death of Jesus a glory & renoume, and that that death should bryng health and saluacion to the whole worlde. And although, like as they were heuy and sadde at the mencion of death, so they ought to haue bene chereful & glad at the mencion of the resurrection: yet their mynd abhorred so muche from the remembraunce of deathe, that surelye they vnderstode not what it ment to dye, and the thyrde day to rise agayn. For they thought it better vterly not to dye, seeyng that he was hable to doe that, whiche was hable to reuiue again from death.

The texte.

And whan they were cum to the citie of Capernaum, they that vse to receiue tribute money called a didrame, came to Peter, and said: Doth your maister pay a didrame? he saith, yea. And whan he was cum into the house, Jesus preuented him, saying: What thinkest thou Simō? Of whom datth the kynges of the earth take tribute or toll, of their children or of straungers? Peter sayeth vnto him, of straungers. Jesus sayd vnto hym: than the children be free. Notwithstanding, lest we shoulde offende them, goe to the sea and cast an hooke, and take the fyshe that cummeth first vp, and whan thou hast opened his mouthe, thou shalt fynde a stater: take it, and geue it vnto them for thee and me.

After

After that he came to the citie of Capernaum, they that demaunded tribute in Cesars name, being afraied to speake to Jesus because of his authoritie, whiche he had gotten hym now by miracles: they went to Peter whom they sawe in maner next about him: Doth your maister (q they) pay a didram for tribute? Peter wheras he had no money, and would not offende ȳ gatherers of tribute, made answer that he payeth. For Jesus hitherto had paied such maner tributes. And whan they were nowe entred into the house (for Jesus had an house there) Peter being perplexed, thought in his mind to speake to Jesus, as touching paimēt of the tribute. For he had promised, and had not to pay. Thē Jesus not ignorant what Peter had in his harte, preuented his question. Symon (q he) what thynkest thou? Of whom do kynges wonte to take tribute or subsidie, of their childrē or of strangers? Of stragers q Peter. Then (q Jesus) the childrē be free: signifiyng therby though sumwhat darkly, that he being lorde of the land and the sea, and of all thynges, oweth tribute or subsidie to no mortal prince, and that his disciples, as the childrē of the kingdome, be not bounde: but yet minding to teache that in such thynges whiche make nothing against godlines, obedience oughte to be geuen to this kynd of men, lest being prouoked they offend more greuously, he added: yet (q he) lest we offend them, go to the sea and take the fish which cummeth out first, open his mouth, and thou shalt fynd a piece of coyne called a Statere whiche is fower drāmes. Take it, and geue it for me and the. With this dede Jesus both shewed his power, wherby he was subiect to no mā, & his modestie, wherby he would geue place vnto thē, whō it is not mete to stirre or prouoke for a thing of litle value, & to be set nothyng by. For he that can geue after that sorte, is greater than he that ought to geue: and yet when he geueth that he ought not, he teacheth that it is better sumtime for to geue ouer thy right then to striue for thy right with them that be froward, chiefly in those thinges whiche diminiſhe thy substaunce, but hurt nothyng godlynes. The worlde hath his ordre which must not be troubled in no case, by occasion of libertie of the ghospell.

¶ The. xviii. Chapter.

¶ At the same tyme came the disciples vnto Jesus, saiyng: Who is the greatteste in the kyngdome of heauen? Jesus called a chylde vnto hym, and set hym in the middest of them, saiyng. Verelye I saye vnto you, excepte ye tourne and becum as chyldren, ye shall not entre into the kyngdome of heauen. Wholoeuer therefore humbleth hymselfe as this chylde, the same is greatest in the kyngdome of heauen. And wholo receyueth suche a childe in my name, receyueth me. But wholo offendeth one of these litleones whiche beleue on me, it wer better for him that a millstone wer hanged about his necke, and that he wer drowned in the depe of the sea. Woe to the world because of offences. Necessary it is that offences cum, but woe vnto the man by whome the offence cummeth. The texte

After that these thynges were thus doen, there entered into the myndes of thapostles, a certain worldlye affection, and a pricke of enuy and ambicion. They hearde of the kingdome of heauen, they sawe three Apostles led a parte into the mountayne, they heard that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen were delyuered vnto Peter, and that it was sayde vnto hym: blessed art thou Symon Barriona, and vpon this stone I wyll buylde my churche, they saw him talkyng with their maiſter of certain thynges bothe familiarely and boldely, and euen now they ſawe hym preferred before thother Apoſtles in paimēt of tribute, and in maner made equall vnto Chriſte, therfore they ſum what enuied Peter, vnto whome the principalitie of the kyngdom of heauen ſemed to be appointed, where as he was yonger in yeares. Therefore they go vnto Jeſus, and demaunde who ſhoulde be chyefe in the kyngdome of heauen. For yet they dreamed vpon ſuch certaine dignities, as we ſee in princes courtes. But Jeſus to plucke this affection vtterlye out of theyr myndes, called to hym a certayn child, and ſette hym in the middes of his diſciples, a litle one, and yet farre from all affections of ambicion and enuie, ſimple, pure, and liuyng after the onely courſe of nature. Be ye ſure of this (ſaye he) vnles a man be wholy chaunged, and caſt away vtterly all ſuche affections, and be transformed into ỹ faſhion & ſimplicitie of this chyld, he ſhal not once be receiued into the kyngdom of heauen. So that in no wyſe preeminence and ſouerantie ought ambiciouſly to be deſyred. Wherfore whoſo doth ſubmit himſelf and becum lyke vnto this babe, in that he humbleth himſelf to be as the leaſt of all, he ſhalbe greateſt in the kingdome of heauen. For whoſo through modeſtie and ſobrenes, maketh hymſelfe as leaſte, the ſame is greateſt in vertue. Princes loue them that be lyke vnto them, and amonge them is he moſt eſtemed, that preferreth hiſelf before others. I delight in my lyke. In courtes of this worlde the prince thinketh it to redound vnto his rebuke, if a man vſe any of his nobles cōtumeliouſly: & he taketh the gentilnes to be beſtowed vpon hymſelf whiche is beſtowed vpō them. But the fauour of true, ſimple and humble mē is ſo great with me, that whoſoeuer receiueth any one of theſe for my ſake, I would it ſhould be counted as done to my ſelf, euen as though he receiued me. Contrariwiſe, whoſo hurteth or offēdeth any one of theſe litle ones which truſt in me, and depend wholy vpō me, he ſhalbe more greuouſly punyſhed, than if he ſhould be drowned in the depe ſea with a milſtone at his necke. For what is more wicked than to offend thē, which beare to no man yll wyll, whiche enuie no man, which prefer themſelues about no man, whiche loue all men indifferently? But alas, woe be to the worlde for offendyng and greuyng of like litle ones. The frowardnes of menne is cauſe that offences muſt nedes chaunce. There ſhalbe men, whiche ſtirred vp with ennie and hatred, wil perſecute them that doe for them, wyll ſay yll by them that wyſh them well, will kill them that bring euerlaſtyng health. And truly theſe offences and griefes ſhal profit them that ſhal ſuffer them, yea they ſhal be profitable to all the world. But yet it ſhall turne hym to diſpleaſure, thorough whoſe defaulte this offence ſhall riſe.

Except ye turne & becum as chyldren. &c.

Woe vnto the worlde becauſe of offices. &c.

The texte. Wherfore if thy hand or thy foote hinder the, cut it of, and caſt it from the. It is better for the to enter into lyfe halt or maymed: rather then thou ſhouldeſt hauing two handes or two feete, be caſt into euerlaſtyng fyer. And if thyne eye offend the, plucke it out, and caſt it from the. It is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than hauing two eyes to be caſt into hel fyer. Take hede ỹ ye diſpiſe not one of theſe litle ones. For I ſay vnto you that in heauē theyr aungels do alwayes beholde the face of my father whiche is in heauen.

Therfore they that deſire to enter into the kingdom of heauen, let them diligently auoid the offences & griefes of litle ones, but rather let thē helpe one an other. And it is not ynough to beware that a man offend not another, but alſo to take hede that he offend not himſelf. For then they be offēces in dede, whan a man is an offence vnto himſelf. Therfore let not affection be ſo dere

vnto any man but that forthwith it be cut of, yf it bean offence and a lette to hym that hasteth to the kingdom of heauen. Euen so muche that if thy hande or thy foote, that is to say a membre most necessary, be offensiue vnto the, it must be cut of and cast away. For it is better for ther to be receined into the life euerlasting maimed or lame, than with perfit membres and feete to be cast into euerlasting fier. The eye is not onely a necessary membre to be vsed, but also very pleasaunt vnto man. Yet yet in case it offend the, plucke it out, and cast it away. It is better for the to be receiued into euerlasting life with one eye, than to be cast hedlong into hell fyer with both eyes perfect and whole. But Iesus speakyng thus, meant not that any membre of the body should be cut of, but that all affeccions should be cut of, whiche withdraw vs frō the care of euerlastyng saluacion. For a frend whom thou canst vneth forbeare, is as it wer a mans hand. Thy father yea whom thou hatest, is thy foote: thy wife or thy child whom thou louest tederly, is thine eye. Therfore as there is nothing that ought to be so precious, and nothing that ought so highly to be esteemed of man, wherby he ought to be withdrawen frō the kingdom of heauē: so no man be he neuer so poore, so base, and humble, ought to be despised but holpen rather to cum forward to better and better. Ye haue an example, see therefore that ye despise none of these litle ones. Although with ỹ world they be abiectes, yet with God they be greatly regarded. For this I tel you certainly, angels which as their ministers haue charge of them, do continually behold the face of the father whiche is in heauen. Hereof ye may esteme how muche they be regarded with God, sith he hath appoynted them suche keepers and guides. They be yet rude and rawe, they may fall, they maye be deceyued, but their simplicitie is worthy helpe, and not punishement.

And if thine eye hynder the pluck it out, &c.

¶ For the sonne of man is cum to saue that whiche was lost, what thinke ye (if a man haue a hundred shepe, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leaue rest in the mountaines & goeth and seketh it that was gone astray: And if he chaunce to find it, verely I say vnto you: he reioyceth more of that shepe, than of nintie and nine which wer not astray. Euē so it is not the will of your father in heauen, that one of these litle ones should perish.

The texte

For the sonne of man came not into the erth to destroy any man, but what in him is to saue al mē. But many will not be saued, and persecute him which is willing to saue. These be they whom the worlde hath in great veneracio. They be hygh in autoritie, they be mighty with ryches, they seme to excel in learnyng, they be commended and set forth with a certaine marueylous counterfeityng and colour of false holynes. Truely suche must not be prouoked willyng lye, but muste be despised stoutely, yf they fearyng lest their owne power decay, oppresse the power of god: if they sekyng their own glory, enuye the glory of the ghospell: yf they folowyng their lucre, be agaynst the profytes of all men: yf they boastyng their vayne learnyng, do corrupt the doctrine of the ghospel: if vnder the pretence of false religion, they go about to extinct true religion: yf they were fyerce and cruel by benefites and good tymes: These manet of men must thanke themselfes for their owne destruction. But this ought to be our study and endeuour that we suffer none to perish of these litle and weake ones, which so do erre that they be in the way of recouery, beyng more lyke to shepe than woulfes. Coniecture by your selfes what great care the father (whiche is naturally good) doeth take, lest auye man should perysshe, whom he made to the entente they should bee blessed. For yf there be a true and faythfull sheapherd, lorde ouer an hundred shepe, and one should be lost of so great a noumbre, would he not leaue the nintie & nine in the hylles, and seke her which is wandered from the flocke? and is so greued with the lack of one lost sheepe, that he would put the whole flock besyde in daunger. And if he should chaunce to finde her, certainly I saye vnto you, that he will reioyce more for that one gotten again, than for all the other whiche were not lost. Wherefore if a man beyng a shepherd beare such affection toward his flock which he both possesse only, but created not, how much more is it my fathers wyl whiche is in heauen, that none of these litle ones, whom he hath created, should perishe, whom he regardeth so that he hathe appointed his aungels to the kepyng of them, and hath bestowed his owne sonne to call them to saluacion.

The texte. ¶ Moreouer yf thy brother trespasse against the, goe and tell hym his faulte betweene hym and thee alone. If he heare thee thou hast wonne thy brother, if he heare thee not, take with thee one or two, that in the mouthe of two or three witnesses curry matter may be stablysched. If he heare not them, tell it vnto the congregacion. If he heare not the congregacion, let hym be vnto thee as an Heathen man, and as a Publican. Verely I saye vnto you whatsoeuer ye bynd in earth, shalbe bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer ye loose on earth, shalbe loosed in heuē. Agayn I say vnto you, that if two of you agree in earth vpon any maner of thyng, whatsoeuer they desyre, they shall haue it of my father which is in heauen. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middest of them.

Therfore away with differences from youre cōpany, which breake brotherly peace, but let there be mutual charitie, whereby ye may louingly helpe and heale others faultes if any chaunce: and the way to heale shalbe this. If thy brother do any thing against the which is worthy to be loked vpon, lepe not out forthwith to vengeaunce, neyther agayn suffer hym not by thy silence to be lost, whiles that he sinneth freely and at large, drunken with his own affeccions: but first trey him with a very gētle remedy whiche shall not so muche as put him to any shame. Go vnto him alone, & debate ỳ matter betwixt you, none other beyng by. If he do not acknowlage his fault, reproue hym & laye it before his eyes, how muche he hath erred frō the dutie of brotherly charitie. And let thy monicio be such ỳt may declare the to seke nothing els but his health, & the restoryng of olde amitie. And if he be so curable that he turn to himself at this secret monicio, there is no cause why thou shouldest reuēge or put him to open blame: it is inough for the, that thou hast wun thy brother. And in ỳ meane season thou hast gained by it. For thou shouldest haue lost a frende, and God should haue lost a soule. But yf the disease be so grieuous that it cannot be healed with this light medicine, yet thou muste not vtterly dispayre, nor forthwith run to the extreme remedies. But yf that he will not heare the alone, go to hym again, takyng with the i. or ii. eyther that he may be amended with sum litle shame which shalbe no infamy vnto him, or els that he may be confuted & ouercum by the testimonie of two or three. But yf he be so vntractable that he wyll be moued neyther with shame, nor with feare of iudgement, bring the matter to the congregacio, ỳ he may be reformed either by the cōsent of the multitude, or by thauctoritie of them which be rulers ouer the multitude. But if he be so far past cure ỳ he will not be corrected neyther by secret & brotherly monicion, neither by the knowlage & cōsent of two or three, neither by the shame of his fault vttered and disclosed, nether by the auctoritie of the chief rulers, leaue him to his disease. Let hym be cut of frō the congregacion, & take in none other wise but as an Heathē or Publicane.

If he heare the, thou hast wunne thy brother.

If he heare not the congregacion.

Let this

Let this be the greuousest punishment emong you, whiche notwithstãdyng is vsed for none other purpose, but that the brother eyther should cum vnto hymself by shame, conliderynge that he is shunned and fled of all men, leste he beyng mingled in the flocke, should hurt other with his infection. No man ought to say vnto me, the iudgementes of thy kyngdome be but werish and weake, nay they be very seuere and sore, yf a man wyll contemne thẽ obstinately. For mans lawes, when they punish a greuous offence with death, they do nothyng but kill the body, & sumtime they kill hym whom god doth not condẽne, and they kil onely and amend him not, for he is not alyue to be amended. But this condẽnation although it procedeth leysurely to punyshmẽt, yet for this cause it is very seuere and sore, that he that is cõdẽned, vnlesse he do repente, is punyshed with euerlastyng payn, which by no meanes he can escape. Whom Cesar doth condemne, god sumtime doeth assoyle: and whom the prince doth assoyle, god sũtyme doeth condemne. The prince whõ he doth assoyle, he leaueth in the cumpany of mẽ, to make other like hymself: whom he killeth, he taketh from the cumpany of men, not onely not healyng him, but making him in case that he cannot be healed. These be mans iudgementes, rather necessary than praise worthie. But your sentẽce so remoueth a man that is vncurable, that he cannot infecte them that be good: and yet he is in case that he may repent: because that ye haue power to saue, and not to destroy. And yet they shal not sinne vnpunished, whõ ye suffre to haue theyr lyfe. He shalbe punyshed eternally, god beyng his iudge, whose sentẽce shal approue and confirme your sentence, vnlesse the condemned person repente. For he that seketh not reuẽging, but the amendment of his brother, he that is ready to forgeue the iniurie doẽ against him, he that willingly cũneth vnto the sicke to heale him, beyng offended himself, he that once or twise repelled, yet ceaseth not to help & heale, he that trusteth not to his own iudgemẽt, but taketh one or two vnto hym, not to reuenge, but to heale: this mans sentence because it cummeth from an euangelicall minde, god wyll allowe and neuer wil breake it, vnles the condemned person will condemne that that he hath doen. Although therfore your iudgement hath not in apperãce such seueritie and sharpnes as the iudgemẽtes of princes haue, yet it is more to be feared than their sentence, wherewith oftentimes the best be condẽned & the most sinful assoiled. It is a terrible thing to be condemned of god: and he is condemned of hym, whosoeuer is condemned of you, agreing together with a sincere mind. For that that ye iudge by the spirit of god, is not your iudgement, but his by you: but if ye cõdemne a man by the spirit of man, than it is mans iudgemẽt & not gods: & he that by your iudgemẽt is caste out of your cũpany, is not forthwith banished frõ the cumpany of heauen. Therefore the strength of your auctoritie resteth in affections, which only god doth behold & see. Truly these be the keyes whiche I will geue vnto Peter professing me: wherwith that that shalbe bound in earth shall be bound also in heauen: and that yͭ shalbe losed in earth shalbe losed also in heauen. This power though it be specially mete for the heades and chief, yet I will geue it to al men, if so that they haue a consente and agremente among them, not of man, but in my name. yea and moreouer I will say vnto you, your consent shal not haue auctoritie only in pardoning and condemnyng offences, if ye with me and among your selues do agree: but also yf any two bee found in earth which do truly agree in my spirite, that is to saye, not moued with the affeccion of man, but louyngly louyng the thynges that be of god: whatsoeuer they aske they shall obteyne it of my father, whiche is in heauen. Suche loue hath the father toward the euangelicall and holye concorde. Therfore forasmuch as ye may doe so muche with the prince that is almightye, ye nede not to repent you of your power and authoritie: although before men ye appeare feble & weake. That whiche is asked of Ceasar, is not forthwith obteyned, nor he is not able to performe whatsoeuer is asked of hym. For he cannot put away the age we, or make the dumme to speake again. But there is nothyng so hard or incredible whiche my father will not geue you, yf ye aske of hym with one consent and agrement.

The texte. ¶ Then came Peter vnto hym, and sayde: Lorde howe often shall I forgeue my brother yf he sinne against me, vyll seuen tymes? Jesus sayeth vnto hym: I saye not vnto thee vntyl seuen tymes, but seuenty times seuen tymes. Therfore the kingdom of heauen is lykened vnto a certain man that was a king, whiche would take accompte of his seruauntes. And whan he had begun to reckē, one was brought vnto hym whiche ought hym ten thousand talentes, but forasmuche as he was not able to pay, his lord commaunded him to be sold, and all that he had, and payment to be made. The seruaunt fell downe and besought hym, saying: Sir haue patience with me, and I will pay the all. Than had the Lorde pitie on the seruaunt, and loosed hym, & forgaue hym the det.

After that Peter had hearde these thynges diligentlye, supposyng that all that Jesus had reasoned of condemnyng and assoylyng, pertayned chiefly vnto hym: he conceyued in his mynde a certayne doubte, because that Jesus saying (after the thyrde reprouyng, let hym be vnto thee as an Heathen, or a Publican) semed to appoint a certain nūbre: which who so passed, although he that had offended did repente, yet he should not bee receyued vnto grace. Therfore to be more exactly taught in this thyng, he went vnto Jesus: lord (sayd he) how often shall I pardon my brother if he offend me, and after what numbre of faultes shal he be repulsed from pardon? After the seuenth fault? This noumbre Peter dyd propose as greate ynoughe, whereas Jesus made mencion, but onely of the thyrde reproue. Than Jesus shewyng that in these thynges whiche be done against vs, we must be very gentill and easie in forgeuenes: I doe not saye (sayd he) that ye must forgeue vnto the seuenth fault, but vnto the seuenty times seuen: shewing that no noumbre ought to be prescribed to a christian forgeuyng: but as often as he that hath offended doeth repent, so often euen with the hart his offence is to be forgeuen: vtterly pluckyng out from a christen mynde all desyre to reuenge. And leste that any mā should thynke it hard and vniust, Jesus teacheth it to be very equall and iust by a similitude. For this is not so muche a clemēcy as a recōpence. For whā we offende sumtyme agaynst our neybour, but muche more both oftner and more greuously against God: whō as often as we offend, the more greuously we sinne, the greater that he is against whom we sinne. And ye greater benefites that we receyue of hym, the more vnworthy we be to obteyn pardone either of our neybour, or of God (who doth pardon him that sinneth a thousand tymes yf that he repent) if we thinke it muche to pardon our brother offendyng much lesse, chiefly sith god doeth forgeue vs our trespasses on this condicīō, that we moued by his example, should be gentle and easie to be intreated towardes our neybour. Therfore (sayd he) the kyngdome of heauen is lyke a riche and a myghtye man: who hauyng a great familie, thought to take a count of his seruauntes.

And

And whan he began to counte, he founde one that ought hym ten thousande talentes. And whan the sum was greater then the detter was able to pay, ỳ lord commaunded both him and his wyfe and children, and al that he had to be sold, that the creditour might be cõtented with the money that was made. But the seruaunt falling doune with meke suite at the lordes knees: I pray the (q he) to graunt me sum respite, and in processe of tyme I wil pay the al. And the lord hauyng compassion of the seruaunte whiche humbled himselfe before hym, graunted more than he desyred. For he did not onely not bringe hym into the lawe, but forgaue hym the whole summe.

The same seruaunt went out, and founde one of his felowes, whiche ought him an hundreth denaries, and he layed hande on hym, and wrythyng his necke, drew him, and sayde: pay that thou owest. And his felowe fell doune, and besoughte hym, saying: haue pacyence with me, and I will pay the all. And he would not, but went and caste him into prison, tyll he shoulde paye the dette. So when his felowes sawe what was doen, they were sore, and came and tolde vnto theyr Lorde euery thyng that was doen. Than his lorde called hym, and sayd vnto hym: O thou vngracious seruaunte. I forgaue the all that det whan thou desiredst me, shouldest not thou also haue had compassion of thy felowe, as I had pitie on the? And his lorde was wrothe, and deliuered him to the tormentoures tyll he payed all that was due vnto hym. Soyl ewyse shall my heauenly father doe also vnto you; yf ye from your hartes forgeue not euery one his brother their trespasses. The texte.

But that seruaunt beyng now free and at libertie, whan he was goen out of his maisters sight, by chaũce met with one of his felow seruaũtes which oughte hym a lyttle money, that is an hundreth denaries: he forgettyng his maisters clemency toward hym, forthwith layed hand vpon hym, and begã to plucke the miserable man, saying: pay thy det. This felow seruãt fallyng doune at ỳ knees of his felow seruaũt, besetched hym, with as many wordes as the other besought his lord & maister: deale pacyently with me, and I wil pay you al. But the creditour would not be intreated, but repelled the humble sutour, and plucked him into prison, tyll he had payed his det. Now the other felow seruauntes whiche had seene the meruaylous clemency of their maister toward the seruaunt, whan they sawe so great crueltie of their felow seruaunt, moued with great grief and sorow, declared vnto their maister all the matter toward his felow. Thã the maister stirred with anger called vnto him his seruaunt, whom he had pardoned al. Thou naughty seruaunt (q he) dyd not I beyng thy maister forgeue the suche a great summe, for none other cause but that thou madest humble suite vnto me: was it not mete therfore that thou beyng a seruaunt, shouldest forgeue thy felow seruaũt a litle money, and haue compassion vpon the humble sutoure, lyke as I had compassion on the? Surely so great gentlenes of mine towarde thee, oughte to reache the gentlenes toward thy felow seruaunt. And now the maister being sore angrye, deliuered him to the tormentours to be kept in prison vntyll he repayed the whole sum that was forgeuen before. After this example your heauenly father wyll deale with you. Euery of you is in det vnto him much more, whom euery man often doeth offende. Men also do trespasse agaynst men, but yet farre lesse. But vnlesse euery man forgeue his brother, and that with all his harte, lighter offences doen against hym, the father wyll not only not forgeue you the greater trespasses doen against him, but also wyll reuoke and call backe those whiche he had forgeuen.

The.xix.Chapter.

¶ And it came to paſſe that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe ſaiynges, he departed from Galile, and came vnto the coaſtes of Jewry beyonde Jordan, and muche people folowed hym: and he healed them there.

Fter that Jeſus with this communicacion had inſtructed & trayned his diſciples vnto well doing towardes the ſimple, and vnto gentlenes toward the offenders, he lefte Galile and went ouer Jordane, into the coaſtes of Jewrye, as goynge towardes his death to cum, which the Phariſeis ſecretly went about. And thither alſo folowed many flockes of people, bearyng with them diuerſe ſicke and diſeaſed: and he healed them there.

The texte. And the Phariſeis came vnto him, and tempted him, and ſaid vnto him: Is it lawful for a man to make a diuorcement with his wyfe for any maner of cauſe? He anſwered and ſaid vnto them: haue ye not red how that he whiche made man at the beginnyng, made them mā and woman, and ſayde: For this cauſe ſhall a man leaue father and mother, and ſhall cleaue vnto his wife, and they twayne ſhalbe one fleſhe. Wherfore now they are not twayne, but one fleſh. Let no man therfore ſeparate, that god hath coupled together. They ſaied vnto him: why did Moſes then commaund to geue a teſtimoniall of diuorcement, and to put her away? He ſayed vnto them: Moſes becauſe of the hardnes of your hertes, ſuffered you to put away your wiues, but from the beginnyng it was not ſo. I ſaye vnto you: whoſoeuer putteth away his wife (except it be for fornicacio) & marryeth another, he cōmitteth aduoutrie. And who ſo marieth her whiche is diuorced, doeth committe aduoutrye.

And agayne the Phariſeis ſeyng ſo many wonders, and the loue of the multitude towarde Jeſus, beganne to renewe theyr enuye agayne. Who craftilye and ſubtillye came vnto hym, takyng occaſion of the communicacion wherewith he taughte before that the wyfe ought not to bee repudiate and caſt of. Therfore they propoſe a queſtion with two pykes: whether it wer lawful for a mā to caſt of his wife for euery cauſe. And if he had anſwered: It is lawfull, he ſhould ſeme contrary to hymſelfe, wheras he taught that diuorce is not lawfull: yf he had denyed it, he ſhould ſeme to haue bene agaynſt Moſes lawe, whiche doeth permitte for euery cauſe to geue a boke of diuorce, and to ſende her away. But Jeſus ſo doeth tempre and ordre the anſwere, that he hurteth not the authoritie of Moſes, nor recanteth not his doctrine, and ſtoppeth the mouthe of the Phariſeis, whiche were ſkilful in the law, by the authoritie of the lawe. Haue ye not red (q he) that whan god made mankynde, he ordered the fyrſte matrimonie ſo, that one was coupled vnto one with a knot that could not be broken. For he made bothe the man and woman of one piece, that by the imbracyng of theſe, mankind ſhould ſpryng further, and by and by expreſſyng the indiſſoluble knotte of the man and of the wyfe, not Moſes, but God himſelf the maker of the mariage, ſaid: For this mutuall charitie, man ſhall forſake father and mother, and bee faſtened and coupled vnto his wyfe. And this couplyng ſhalbe ſo ſtrayt and faſt, that of two, in maner, ſhalbe made one perſon, which before wer two. Therfore onte ioyned in matrimonie, they be not now two, but one bodie: in ſo muche, that it is as farre agaynſt nature to ſeparate the wife from the manne, as to cut awaye a membre from the bodye. Therfore that whiche God hath knyt once together with ſo ſtrayte a bonde, let no man ſeparate.

Here

Why dyd Moses the cõmaũd.&c.

Here the Pharisei̇s, thinkyng that they had caughte nowe an occasion to catche Jesus: yf god (as they) meant this that thou doest say, why than dyd Moses geue husbandes leaue to caste of theyr wyfe for euery cause, so that they geue her a boke of diuorce: how durst he permit that which god would not to be doen? Jesus answered: He dyd not permit you this because it was ryght and good of nature, but knowyng the hardnes of your hart, he suffered the lesser ill, that ye shulde not commit the greater. For he doeth not allow diuorce whiche had rather suffer that than murdre. And the boke of diuorce doeth not make that the diuorce is right & good: but it witnesseth thy hardnes, whiche wilte cast of thy wyfe for euery light cause, and prouydeth her of a new husband, takyng away libertie from the, that thou shalt not cal her agayn once cast of. But from the beginnyng whereas the malice of man was not yet increated, nor the nature of manne was not yet infected with so many vices: because there was not so cruell hatred, that poysonyng or murdre should be feared, there was no lycence of diuorce: and the same law shall not nowe be loted and let at libertie, after that the doctrine of the Ghospell doeth renewe and make perfecte the synceritie of nature. Moses wisshed the same that I doe teache, but your maners bent ouer muche vnto murdre, put hym in feare, that he durste not require this of you. I who doe not abolisshe the lawe, but make it more perfette, playnely saye vnto you, that it is vnlawfull and agaynste the mynde of God, and agaynste the wyll of Moses, whiche ye doe commonlye: refusyng your wyues for euery cause. And it is not therefore ryghte that ye doe, because ye doe it without punyshemente: There be many myscheuous thynges before God, whiche be not punyshed bymannes lawes. Therefore ye shall vnderstande that whosoeuer casteth of his wyfe for euery cause, and maryeth an other, both committeth aduoutrye hym selfe, and geueth also a cause of aduoutrye to his wyfe, vnlesse she whom he doeth leaue of, hath deserued diuorcemente by aduoutrye. For she that hath geuen an other manne lybertie ouer her, ceasseth nowe to be wife, and hath taken awaye from her selfe the ryghte of matrimonye, the flesshe beyng deuided, whiche God woulde haue to be one and vndeuided. But he that for suche causes leaueth his wyfe, for whiche ye oftentymes doe caste her of, yf he couple hymselfe to an other, it is not matrimonie, but aduoutrye. And who so maryeth her so caste of, he maryeth not his owne wyfe, but an other mannes, and therfore he doeth not marye, but committeth aduoutrye. But the whole of all these mischiefes doeth redounde to hym that is the refuser and caster of. For first he is stubburne and cruell, whiche neyther could beare his wyues faulte, nor would goe about to amend it. Furthermore he geueth her that is driuen out of his house, whiche cannot lyue without a husband, an occasion to commit aduoutrye.

The texte.

His disciples said vnto him: if the matter be so betwene man and wife, than it is not good to mary. He said vnto them: All men cannot comprehende this saiyng, saue they to whom it is geuen. For there are sum chaste which are so borne out of their mothers wombe. And there are sum chaste whiche be made chaste of men. And there be chaste whiche hath made themselfes chaste for the kyngdome of heauens sake. He that can take it, let hym take it.

The disciples hearyng these thynges, say vnto Jesus: If maryed mennne be in this case that they cannot be dispatched from theyr wyfe, yf she displease pleaſe them, it is better to forbeare matrimonie. For it is an harde bondage to ſuffer at home a waywarde, a brawlyng, and a dronken woman, or elles paynfull and greuous with ſum other lyke fault. Jeſus did not reprooue the anſwer of his diſciples, whom he deſired to be free from the bondage of matrimonie, becauſe of preachyng of the ghoſpell: but he doeth them to vnderſtand, that it is no ſafe and ſure thyng to flee from matrimonie, vnleſſe a man be of ſo fyrme and ſtable mynde, that he is able vtterly to abſtayn from the acte of matrimonie. But there be very fewe that can doe ſo becauſe that this affection of the body is ſo common to all men, that there is none affection more violente, or more inuincible. Therfore though it be a greater fredome not to be tyed in matrimonie, yet is it more ſure to be kepte within the bondes of matrimonie, than to be defyled with lyyng here and there. Therefore Jeſus ſhewyng what was beſt, and prouokyng this waye with the reward of libertie, dareth not yet exactely require that, whiche in maner exceadeth mannes power. All men (q he) be not able to receiue this woorde, but they onely vnto whome it is geuen of God: who haue ſo great a feruencye toward the holynes of the goſpell, that of theyr own accorde and willyngly caſt neglecte this affection. For chaſte ſyngleneſſe hath no prayſe vnleſſe it be taken for loue of the euangelicall godlynes. For there be three kyndes of Eunuches. One of them whiche be ſo borne, and abhorre from wyues thorough the defaulte of a colde nature, or ſum other ſecrete affection of nature. Another kynde of them, whom men hath gelded. The chaſtitie of theſe men deſerueth no prayſe, becauſe it cummeth of neceſſitie, not of the loue of vertue. But the goſpell alſo hath his Eunuches very bleſſed, whiche be not geldynges of nature, nor gelded of men, but they gelded themſelfes, for the kyngdome of heauen: not cutting of the membre of the body, but for loue of the ghoſpell, ouercummyng the deſire of matrimonie. Ye ſee victorie ſet out before you, let hym trye that wyl, and knoweth his owne ſtrength: Let him beare awaye the game that can: They that contend valyauntlye and willyngly, ſhal not want the fauour of the maiſter of the game. Becauſe cõmunication was of the puritie of virgins, and of the highneſſe of that noble vertue, whiche chaunceth to fewe: as by occaſion there is brought in alſo an exaumple of perfecte cleannes, and great modeſtie: without the whiche, virginitie deſerueth no prayſe.

Al men can not comprehende this ſaiyng.

The texte.

Than wer there brought vnto him yong chyldren that he ſhould put his handes on theym and pray, and the diſciples rebuked them. But Jeſus ſaid vnto them: Suffre the chyldren & forbid them not to cum to me: for the kyngdome of heauen belongeth to ſuch. And whan he had layed his handes on them, he departed thence.

There wer preſent fathers and mothers, whiche deſired to offer their babes vnto Jeſus, that he might lay his handes vpon them, and pray for the: thinking that lykewyſe as they ſaw diſeaſes driuen away through his touchyng, ſo the touchyng of Jeſus ſhould preſerue them from diſeaſes, from fallyng of houſes or walles, or other lyke thynges vpon them, from euyll ſpirites, and from other hurtes, whereby that age oftentymes miſcarieth. But the diſciples, (who though they had oft tymes heard many a good leſſon of great modeſtie and coldnes, yet had not vtterly shaken of from them mans affections) thinkyng it not mete that the greatnes or dignitie of theyr maſter ſhould be letted or wered with the importunitie of babes, & of their mothers, kept them of, whan they deſired to cum nere. Jeſus marking this, to the intent that he might the better imprinte euangelicall moderacion in the myndes of his disciples, whiche doeth loth no manne, be he neuer so lowe, suffre (sayth he) the children to be brought vnto me: nor let them not, to cum to me. For they that be lyke vnto these, bee moste acceptable vnto me: whome though the world doth hate and despise, yet I vouchsafe to haue none other in the kingdome of heauen. What nature doth geue vnto these, the same must godlines geue vnto you, if ye will be receiued into the kingdome of heauen. Therfore the litle babes wer brought vnto Jesus, and he put his handes vpon them, inspiring into the litle babes (for ỹ simple faythes sake of their parentes) a secret power through the touching of his holy body. Which doen, Jesus departed from thence, geuyng a lesson by the same facte of his, that the litle babes must be satisfied, but yet that we ought not to tary long with them, but to make spede to thynges of more perfection.

And when he had layd his handes. &c

¶ And beholde one came, and sayed vnto hym: Good maister what good thyng shall I doe, that I maye haue eternall life? he sayed vnto hym: why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, and that is God. But if thou wylt enter into lyfe, kepe the commaundementes. He sayeth vnto hym, whiche? Jesus sayed. Thou shalte not commit manslaughter. Thou shalt not commit aduoutrie. Thou shalt not steale. Thou shalt not bear false witnes. Honour father and mother. And thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy self. The yong mā sayth vnto hym. All these thinges haue I kept from my youth vp: what lacke I yet? Jesus sayd vnto him: if thou wilt be perfect, go and sell al that thou hast, and geue it to the poore, and thou shalt haue threasure in heauen, and cum and folowe me. But when the ponge man heard that sayyng, he went away sorye. For he had great possessions.

The texte.

And loe, as soone as he had doen with the children, there cummeth nexte after them a yong man which talketh of perfection. But Jesus, like as in the litle babes he shewed his disciples an exaumple of simplicitie and modestie: so in the yong man being in deede desirous of perfect godlines, but ouer sore burdened with riches, he setteth before their iyes, how harde it is for them that be geuē to riches, to cum forward to ỹ perfectiō of the euangelical godlines: and how muche more ready they be to the cause of the gospell, whiche possesse nothyng, or els very littell of the goodes of this world: and yet pouertie and riches stande not so muche in possessions, as in the affectiōs of the mynde. The yong man had a deuout mynde: but because he heard of Christ certayne newe and straunge preceptes, he went vnto him, and fallyng doune at his knees asketh him, saying: good maister what good shal I do to obtayn euerlastyng lyfe? The yong man called Jesus good to obteyn his good wil by fayre speakyng: whereas yet he toke him to be nothing els but a very mā, although of more excellencie than other men were. Afterward whereas he demaūded of good, he meaneth not of euery good thyng, but of a certain notable good thyng, whiche may deserue euerlastyng lyfe. But no mortal man is absolutely good: and there is no worke of men which can be so good, that it maye deserue the reward of euerlastyng lyfe. Jesus therfore pricking forwarde the yonge manne, to haue a better opinion of him, and to call hym frō the trust of his workes, and to cause him to put the trust of life rather in the free gifte and benefite of God, who is naturally good, and freely beneficial towardes al menne, aunswered in this maner: why callest thou me good, or why doest thou aske me of good? But yet if thou desirest to be receiued vnto the eternall lyfe, kepe the commaundementes. And whan the yong mā asked what the commaundementes were, (for he had heard hym teache that the preceptes

preceptes of Moses lawe bee not enough to obteyne the kyngdome of heauen) Jesus to plucke awaye from all men the truste of the lawe, aunswered: Thou shalt not kyll, thou shalt not commit aduoutrye: Thou shalte not steale: Thou shalt not beare false witnesse: Honoure thy father and mother: and loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe. Than the yong manne beyng sumwhat chered, sayd: All these haue I kept from my chyldehode: what lacke I besyde? He loked that Jesus should haue aunswered him: Thou lackeste nothyng. But the Lord shewyng what difference there was betwene the Jewishe righteousnesse, and the righteousnesse of the ghospel: betwene a good Jewe, and a good Christian manne, sayed: If thou wylte be perfecte, goe and sell all that thou haste, and geue the money to the poore: thou shalt not lese thy money, though it be dispersed among many. So to disperse it, is to laye it vp: For in the stede of worldly riches, thou shalte haue a better treasure in heauen. When thou hast doen this beyng now at libertie, and dispatched of all heauy cariage, bare and poore, cum and folow me beyng also bare and poore. When Jesus sayth: yf thou wylt, he shewed that it was a great matter: but he added the rewarde. Thou shalte haue a treasure in heauen. Anon he moued hym to the loue of perfecte godlinesse: Cum, folow me. Whan the yong man heard this communicacion, he wente awaye with a discouraged and heauye mynde, because he was a Lorde of muche possessions, and he thought it hard to leaue thē all at once. He desired to get euerlasting lyfe, he desired the honour of perfection: but the thornes of richesse ouerwhelmed & choked this affection whiche was a good seede. Therfore he departed home heuily, not vnderstanding that Jesus did not condemne riches, but the affection, and loue, and carefulnes of riches: to which they cā scarcely be any lesse then bonde, that haue them. And he woulde not that alwaies they shoulde be forsaken: but yet alwayes set lyttell by: yea and forsaken also, yf they at any tyme withdrawe vs from the loue of the ghospell.

All theke thi ges haue I kept frō my youthe. &c,

The texte.

¶ Than Jesus sayed vnto his disciples: verelye I saye vnto you, it shall bee harde for the ryche to enter into the kingdome of heauen. And agayne, I saye vnto you: it is easier for a Camell to go thorough the ye of a nedle, than for the ryche to enter into the kyngdome of God. Whan the disciples heard this, they were exceedyngly amased, saiyng: who than can bee saued? But Jesus beheld them and sayed vnto them: with men this is vnpossible, but with god all thynges are possible.

It shall bee hard for the ryche. &c.

Whan the yong man was gone, Jesus tournyng to his disciples (for he shewed this sight for them, because they shoulde at no tyme repente them of their pouertie, nor bee entangled with the loue of moneye:) howe harde a thyng it is (sayd he) for a ryche manne to enter into the kyngdome of heauen. Signifiyng, that the desyre of moneye, and the desyre of the Euangelicall philosophye, hardely agree together: because the one requireth the whole man, the other taketh vnto it almost the greatest part of mā. And to make the difficultie of the thing the greater, his disciples musing muche, he said more: yea (sayd he) I say more vnto you: It is more easy for a Camel to go through the ye of a nedle, than for a riche man to enter into the kyngdome of heauen. For the gate is lowe and straight, & it receiueth no Camels laden with burdens of rychesse. For so he reproued the couetous riche men, vnto whom riches be rather a burden, than profit, which they beare for others, rather thā for themselfes. This saying because it was not well vnderstande of the Apostles,

Apostels, put in their myndes a certayne heauynesse, because they were sory ꝑ so many men for riches sake, should be shut out from the kyngdome of heauen. Therfore whan the disciples maruayled muche what it shoulde meane that Jesus spake of the Camell, and the ye of the nedle, they aske him: If it be so, who than can be sauede For howe many men are there, whiche can cast awaye the ryches that they haue, or not wysh for them yf they haue none? But Jesus beholdyng them, to thintent he would asswage the heauines that they had conceyued in their mynde, declareth that there is sum hope for ryche menne also to cumme to the kingdome of heauen. To men (ꝙ he) this is impossible, no lesse than for a Camell to goe through the ye of a nedle: but to God nothinge is impossible. Onely he chaungeth the myndes of ryche men, that they wyll therefully eyther cast awaye that whiche they do possesse, or els possesse thē as cōmon and not proper, euen ready to haue them, yf the matter of the ghospell at any tyme require the same. For why should it greue them to despise ryches, whom it greueth not to be lowe they? lyke.

With men this is impossible, &c

¶ Than aunswered Peter, and sayed vnto him: Beholde, we haue forsaken all, & folowed the, what shall we haue therfore? Jesus sayed vnto them: Verely I saye vnto you, that whan the sonne of manne shall sitte in the seate of his maiestie, ye that haue folowed me in theregeneracion, shal sit also vpon twelue seates, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israel. And euery one that forsaketh house, or brethren, or systers, or father, or mother, or wyfe, or children, or landes, for my name sake, shall receyue an hundred folde, and shall enherite euerlastyng life: but many that are first, shall be last, and the last shalbe first.

The texte.

This communication whiche Jesus had with the ponge man (sell that thou hast and folow me,) made Peter to haue sum good hope, whiche although he were not riche, yet that that he had, he left it therefully, bothe his shyppe and his nettes, and folowed the Lorde. Lorde (ꝙ he) beholde we haue doen that that thou requyredst of the ponge man: we haue lefte all thynges and folowe the, what reward shall we haue therfore? But Jesus willing to shewe that this highe prayse was not offered to riche men onelye, but also to poore men: whiche gladly forsake whatsoeuer they haue for the gospell sake, for as much as this vertue is more estemed of thaffection of the leauer, than of the greatenes of the thyng that is left: did not reiecte the saying of Peter although it was to high and stoute for so symple a matter: but teachyng that no small reward shall be rendered for such small thinges, lefte of and forsaken with a good will, sayethe. This I warraunte you, that ye whiche haue forsaken nothyng for my sake, but your boates and your nettes, but yet with suche a will that ye would haue forsaken very greate richesse for my sake, and hitherto you beeynge bare and poore haue folowed me lykewyse bare and poore, if ye persheuer and continue, in the worlde to cum when the dead shall ryse, and euerye man shall receyue reward after his deserues, and whan that the sonne of mā, (his humilite that ye nowe see, set aparte) shal sitte in the seate of his maiestie, ye fyshers than beyng partakers of honor, whiche are nowe partakers of afflictions, shall sit in twelue seates, and shall iudge the twelue trybes of Israel: because they cumming of the same stocke, hauyng knowledge of the same lawe, prouoked with the same miracles, and benefytes, yet by no meanes coulde be brought to beleue: whereas ye meane persones, and vnlerned, by and by at my simple bidding, haue lefte, yea those thinges whereby ye sustey-ned your life. And this reward shal not be yours onelye, but whosoeuer for the profession of my name, forsaketh his house, his brothers or sisters, his father or mother, his wyfe or children, his landes, or anye other possession: he shall not lose that whiche he lefte for my sake, insomuche, that he shall haue a greate gayne therby. For in this worlde he shall receyue an hundred folde for the thinges that he hath lefte, and in the tyme of resurrection, he shall possesse euerlastyng life. For in the stede of the thinges that he hath left, the whiche bee casuall and vyle possessions, he shall possesse here in the meane tyme that precious Margaryte of the euangelicall mynde, whiche is to be estemed and compared with no marchandise of this worlde: In the stede of one house that ye haue left, the doctrine of the ghospell shall make open vnto you a numbre of houses thorough out the worlde. For one piece of grounde manye grounds shall serue your necessities: for one father or mother ye shall haue so manye as there shalbe olde men and olde women whiche ye shall conuert vnto the ghospell. Ye shall haue so many brothers, systers, sonnes and daughters, as your equals or yongers shalbe, whiche by your preachyng ye shall bryng to euerlasting life. These shall geue vnto you euery where of theyr owne accorde, yf ye shall neede anye thyng, and theyr affections shall far passe thaffections of the, whom onely kinred of bloud hath ioyned vnto vs. For the kinred of the fellowship of the ghospell, is more nere than fleshly affinitie, and they loue more vehementlie, whom godlines hath coupled together, than they whom carnall byrth hath ioyned together. Unto this great rewarde, that shalbe added also, whiche is the greatest of all, that for thynges whiche shortely shall perishe, ye shall possesse euerlastyng life. I say not this that the profession of the ghospell doth teach vs to despyse them, whom nature hath ioyned vnto vs: but suche maner of affections muste be neglected as often as they withdrawe vs from euerlasting saluacion. This great felicitie is set furth indifferently to all men. There is no difference of fortune, condicion, age, or person. But in this estimacion and iudgement which shalbe made of God the equall iudge, many shalbe last, whiche seme nowe to be first. Contrariwise many whiche seme now vile, and of no reputacion with men, shal there be counted chiefe. There shalbe preferred a common woman before a Scribe, a Publican before a Pharisie, an heathen before a Iewe, a poore manne before a ryche, a plough manne before a king: and they that semed nexte to the kyngdome of heauen shall enter in last and they that semed farre of, shall enter in firste. The heathen men thrughe fayth shall goe before, the Synagoge thrugh vnbeleefe, shalbe set beside.

Euery one that forsaketh house, or brethren &c.

But manye that are first shalbe last, &c

¶ The .xx. Chapiter.

The texte. For the kingdome of heauen is like to a man that is an housholder, whiche went out earely in the morning to hyre labourers into his vineyarde. And whan the bargayne was made with the labourers for a denary a daie, he sent them into his vineyarde. And he wente out about the thirde houre, and sawe other standyng yole in the market place, and sayed vnto them: go ye also into the vineyarde. And whatsoeuer is right, I will geue vnto you. And they went theyr waye. Agayne he went out about the sixte and ninthe houre, and did lykewyse. And about the eleuenth houre he went out, and founde other standing yole, and sayed vnto them: why stande ye here all the daye idle? They say vnto him: because no man hath hyred vs. He sayeth vnto them: go ye also into the vineyarde, and whatsoeuer is right that ye shall receyue.

And

AND because it semed a darke riddell that he spake concerninge the first and the last, he declareth the thing that he spake with a parable, whereby he sheweth that men were called to the kepyng or obseruing of righteousnes in diuers ages: and yet al the seruauntes of righteousnes haue one and the same reward of euerlasting saluacion, so that they whiche be called, labour diligently in the vineyarde of righteousnes. For they haue no lesse, whiche be called in the time of Christ, than they whiche be called in the time of Abraham, or Moyses, or Dauid. And they haue no lesse whiche be called and drawen to the seruice of the gospell being aged, than they whith be children or yong men. The one and the same denary and reward of euerlasting lyfe, is geuen vnto them al. And yet they ỹ came late, seme to haue greater honour by this that the liberalitie of the lorde maketh them equall to them whyche came before. The Iewes were firste called, but yet the Gentiles called afterwarde, be not onelye made equall vnto them, but also preferred before the vnbeleuing Iewes. The parable is after this sorte: The kingdom of heaue (ỹ he) is like vnto an housholder, whyche went abrode early in the morninge to hire workemen into his vineyarde. And getting certayne and bargayning with them that they shulde haue eche of them a denary a piece for theyr dayes worke, sent them into his vineyarde: He went out agayne aboute three of the clocke, and when he saw certayne stande idle in the market, saide vnto them: go ye also into my vineyard, and I shall geue you that shall be mete: he went oute agayne about sixe of the clocke, and agayne aboute nine, and did likewyse as he did at one, and three of the clocke. Againe going out aboute three of the clocke toward night, he founde certayne other in the market, to whome he sayed: why stande ye here all day idle? They saye: because no man hath hired vs. He sayeth to them: go ye also into my vineyard.

The texte. Che when euen was cum, the lorde of the vyneyard sayeth vnto his stewarde: Call the labourers, and geue them theyr hyer, beginning at the laste vntill the firste. But when they were cum that came about the eleuenth houre, they receyued euery man a denary. And when the firste came also, they supposed that they shulde haue receyued more, and they also receyued euery man a denarie. And when they had receyued it, they murmured against the housholder, saying. These last haue wrought but one houre, and thou hast made them equall with vs, whiche haue borne the burden and heate of the day. But he answered one of them, saynge: Frende I do the no wrong. Diddest thou not couenaunted with me for a denary? Take thine, and go thy waye: I will geue vnto this laste, euen as to the. Is it not lawfull for me to do as I will with mine owne goodes? Is thyne ye euil because I am good? So the last shall be firste, and the firste last. For many be called, but fewe are chosen.

Further toward night the lorde of the vineyarde geueth commaundement to his hayly: Call all the workemen and pay them theyr hyer: so that thou begin with the last and cum to the firste. Therfore they that came last, that is aboute eleuen of the clocke, and laboured in the vineyarde the leaste parte of the daye, were called firste of all, and a denarye was geuen to eche of them. When they that were called early in the morninge perceyued this, because they came longe before into the vineyarde, they thought that after the rate of the time, they shulde receyue greater wages. But a denary was geuen vnto eche of thē. Therfore when they sawe that they which were not like in space of time, yet were made lyke in wages, they departe murmuringe agaynste the lorde of the vineyarde, and saye. These whiche came at eleuen of the clocke haue laboured but one houre, and yet thou makeste them lyke vnto vs in wages, who haue continued the whole daye in labour, and haue suffered the heate of the daye whereas they came a lytle before nyght, when the heate was nowe paste. But the householder made aunswere to one of them for all: Frende, why hast thou enuy that I am liberall vnto others? Why fre liberalytie towardes other, hurteth not the. For I doe the no wrong. Did I not bargayne with the, so that thou shouldeste haue a denarye for thy dayes labour? Thou haste done thy labour, thou haste thy couenaunte: I haue no thinge more to doe with the. Take that that is owed vnto the, and departe. Thou werte hiered hither for wages to doe thy labour, not to appoynte me what I shall doe. Thus it is thought good vnto me, to geue him that came last as muche wages as I geue the. Thou doest lese none of thyne, if I geue this man any thyng of my liberalitie. Shall I not be at libertie because of the, to do with my own what I will? Is thy ye therefore dyed with enuy because thou seest me liberal toward whom it pleaseth me? This similitude Jesus brought, willing depely to graffe in theyr myndes that God, naturally beneficiall towardes al men, ceaseth not by diuers wayes and in diuers ages, to prouoke and moue al men to the seruice of true godlines: In whiche they that haue exercised themselues diligently, shall haue for rewarde euerlasting lyfe, from the which none is excluded geuing eare whan he is called. This reward like as it is in no case due vnto our merites but is of ye goodnes of god, yet it cummeth not without our endeuour: yet we be bounde to the rather for this also, that we cum to the seruice of godlynes, and that we continue in it vnto the euentide of the day. For they that be called and refuse to go into the vineyarde, they disapoynte themselues of theyr wages. And although among saynctes there is neyther enuy nor murmuryng against god: yet with these sayinges he expressed the high honoure that was shewed to the last, whiche had the first place in rewarde. Whiche dignitie is so noble, that a man might haue cause to enuy. Yet the good Jewes also at the beginning murmured against the Gentiles, because they cumming of idolaters, straungers from Moyses law, finally vncircumcised, should sodenly be made equall vnto them in the grace of the gospel, and be admitted to the same saluacion, beeyng incumbred with no burden of the lawe, whereas they long exercised in the ordinaunces of Moyses, were nothyng better than Gentiles, which were now admitted to the profession of the gospell, being a litle before of a wicked life. Therfore the Gentiles had more forgeuen them, but the Jewes haue no cause to brawle with God therfore, sithe they also maye attayne to like felicitie. And if they had rather enuy than folowe, let them thanke themselues that they be cast of for theyr vnbelefe, the Gentiles in the meane tyme obteining for the redines of theyr faith, that thyng which the Jewes thought that they onely ought to haue. Therfore whoso is called, let him further make haste, or els he shall be called in vayne, except he take hede that he be also elected. And all be called, but few deserue to be counted among the elect. Therefore Jesus ended his parable with the same clause that he began with. So shall they be last that were firste, and firste that were laste. For many be called, and fewe chosen.

For many are called but few are chosen.

The texte. And Jesus goyng vp to Hierusalem toke his twelue disciples aside in the waye, and sayeth vnto them: Beholde, we do goe vp to Hierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe betrayed trayed to the chiefe of the prieſtes, and to the Scribes, and they ſhall condemne him to death, and ſhall deliuer him to the gentiles to be mocked and ſcourged, and crucified, and the thirde day he ſhall ryſe agayne.

After this Jeſus beyng a whyle in Galile, began to drawe nere to the place of his death, going towarde Hieruſalem. And now whan he had inſtructed and framed his diſciples many wayes, as concernyng deſpyſing of ryches, neglecting of parentes and kinſfolkes, of chaſtitie, of great modeſtie, of the rewardes that they ſhould haue alſo in this lyfe: he leadeth ſecretly aparte his twelue apoſtles, whom he had choſen and thoughte mete to commit the miſtery of the croſſe vnto, whiche the multitude was not yet able to beare: And yet he tolde of his deathe vnto the people, when he ſpake of Jonas, and of the pulling downe of the temple, and the making vp of it againe in three daies: but ſo he tolde them of it that they vnderſtode not what was ſayed, before that they ſawe it done. He had opened the miſtery of the croſſe vnto his diſciples, as to them that were more ſtrong and able, now once or twyſe ſpeaking vnto them playnly. But becauſe men forget lightly that, whiche they be not glad to heare of, and doe not lightly let ſinke into theyr hartes the thing whiche the mynde abhorreth e: the Lorde Jeſus to confyrme hys apoſtles agaynſte the ſtorme that was at hande, openethe vnto them more playnely and diſtinctly, not onelye that his death was nere, but alſo telleth them of the mockes and afflictions whiche oftentymes be more greuouſe than deathe it ſelfe. Beholde (ſayth he) we go to Hieruſalem, and the ſonne of man ſhalbe betrayed to the chiefe prieſtes and Scribes, whiche nowe goe aboute to laye in wayte for him. And they will not reſt to blame and accuſe him vntill they haue broughte hym to condemnation of deathe, and they ſhall deliuer him vnto the Gentiles to mocke him, to ſcourge him, to ſpit vpon him, and to nayle him vpon the croſſe, and whan that he is deade and buried, the thyrde daye he ſhall ryſe agayne. Behold we doo go vp, &c.

Than came to hym the mother of Zebedes children, with her ſonnes, worſhippinge and beſeyng a certayne thinge of him. And he ſayethe vnto her: What wilt thou? She ſayde vnto hym: Graunte that theſe my two ſonnes may ſit, the one on thy right hande, and the other on thy lefte hande in thy kingdome. But Jeſus aunſwered, and ſayed. Ye wote not what ye aſke. Can ye drinke of the cuppe that I ſhall drinke of, and be baptiſed with the baptiſme that I ſhalbe baptiſed with? They ſaye vnto him: We can. He ſayde vnto them: Truely ye ſhall drinke of my cuppe, and be baptiſed with the baptiſme, that I am baptiſed with: But to ſit on my right hande and on my lefte hande is not myne to geue: But it ſhal chaunce vnto them, for whom it is prepared of my father. The texte.

In the meane ſeaſon James and John the ſonnes of Zebede, becauſe they had heard that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen were geuen to Peter, and had heard alſo of the honoure of twelue ſeates, beyng yet rude and dreaming of worldely thinges, and ſuppoſinge that this kingdom and theſe honoures ſhoulde cum immediatly after the reſurrection, becauſe he ſayde, the thyrde day he ſhall riſe: to get theſelues nowe ſome excellẽt dignitie, they ſente further their mother to be a ſuiter vnto Jeſus for her ſonnes. She after that ſhe had done her dutie and worſhipped him, requiring him not to deny her ſuite, being required what ſhe would, ſayeth: Geue commaundement that theſe my two ſonnes may ſit in thy kingdome, one on thy right hande, the other on thy lefte hande. Jeſus turning vnto the children, of whom he knewe that the mother was sent furth, aunswered them: ye know not what ye aske. Ye delight in the speaking of a kingdom, whiche is far of an other sorte than ye dreame, but at this presente we muste rather talke and debate of affliction, and of the crosse, which is the way to the kingdome. Ye require the rewarde oute of ordre, whereas first ye muste trauelle and stryue. I haue opened vnto you nowe what I muste suffer. Can ye drinke of the cuppe that I shall drinke of: Can ye be baptised with the baptisme that I shall be baptised with? They as yet litle knowing their strengthe, but for the gredines that they had to obteyne their petition, they answere rashely rather than valiantly, we can. But Iesus was content that they sayde they wer ready to folow his crosse, but as touching the rewarde, because they vnderstode not what they asked, and because it was not for that tyme to commone of it, he sayeth that it is not in him to geue them: but that such dignitie shoulde not chaunce but vnto them, vnto whom it was geuen of the father, for to deserue the chiefe place through notable and excellente vertue. Truely to encourage al men to clime vnto the highest, he sayeth: ye shall drinke of my cuppe, but to sit one on my right hand, and the other on my left hand, it is not in me to geue, vnto thone or to the other, but this shall chaunce vnto them to whom it shall be geuen of my father. Euery man as he doeth trauell, so he shall be rewarded.

The texte. And whan the ten hearde this, they did dayned at the two brethren. And Iesus called them vnto him, and sayed: Ye know that the princes of nacions hath dominion ouer them. And they that be great men exercyse power ouer them. It shall not be so among you, but whosoeuer will be greate among you, let him be your minister, and whoso will be chiefe amonge you, let him be your seruaunte: as the sonne of man came not to be ministred vnto, but to minister, and to geue his lyfe a redemption for many.

Whan thother ten afterwarde heard these thinges, they were agreued at the two brethren, because they required so great dignitie. They had not yet receyued the holy goste: they were ledde yet with certayne affections of men being ambicious and enuying one an other. And Iesus suffered his disciples to be troubled longe with these affections, to thintent he would plucke them vtterly out of the mindes of them all, whiche shoulde succede in the roumes of thapostles. And they thought, and were glad, that therfore the lorde did reiect the request of John and James, not because they dreamed of carnall thinges, where as the spirituall kingdome was in hande, but because they required honoure aboue their merites, whiche other thought that it ought rather to be geuen to them. Therefore Iesus lyke as he dyd represse the ambicion of the folish sutours, because they knew not what it was that they asked: so he repressed the enuy and indignacion of the other, which illewed out of the same fountayne of ambicion, opening vnto them that ther was a farre diuerse kinde of the worldely kingdome from the kingdome of the gospell. For there in the worldly kingdom he that is lesse, is oppressed with the tranny of the mightier. Here, the primacie is nothing elles, but the greate desire to do good vnto all men. There the prouder a man is, the greater he semethe: here nere is more meke in harte, than he that deserueth chiefly to be the highest. That he might faster this doctrine in all mennes hartes, he called vnto hym the other of thapostles. Ye knowe (sayd he) that they that beare rule amonge the Gentyles, vse lordlynes and tyrannye vpon them, whome they rule: and they that be chiefe, exercyse their power vpon their subiectes. For with the hurt of the people, they prouide foꝛ theyꝛ owne authoꝛitie, and care foꝛ thole thinges, whiche do not pꝛofite the multitude, but make foꝛ the stoutnes and flouꝛishing of theyꝛ welth and gloꝛy. But it is not mete to be so emonge you, but whosoeuer will beare rule emong you, let him be the minister of all men, not bling honour foꝛ his owne commoditie, but foꝛ the commoditie of the people, whom he ruleth. And he that emong you will haue the first place, let him be the seruaunt and the lowest of all. Foꝛ he taketh vpon him the chefe place foꝛ no nother intent, but to loke foꝛ the commoditie of al men, hunting and seking therof neyther honour noꝛ pꝛofit. And if ye thinke it harde, loke vpon me, foꝛ wheras I am your Loꝛde and Maister and the sonne of God, as ye truly pꝛofesse, yet I take not vpō me dignitie and honour, noꝛ I abuse not my power to myne owne commoditie. But foꝛ this I am cum, to serue al mennes turnes, and to wayte theyꝛ commodities, insomuche that it greeueth me not to bestowe my life, that by the losse of one lyfe, I maye redeme many. Emonge them therfoꝛe that be thus minded, there is no cause why any man shoulde seke after honour, neyther why any should be enuious at an other mannes dignitie: foꝛ who can enuye him whiche studieth no nother thynge, but to do an other man good, and that if nede be with the losse of hys lyfe: Also if honour be geuen vnto them, they take it not vnto themselues, but yelde it vnto God.

And to gene his lyfe a re dēption foꝛ manye.

And when they departed from Jerico, muche people folowed hym. And beholde two blinde men sitting by the way, whan they heard that Jesus passed by, they cryed saynge: O lord the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on vs. And the people rebuked them, that they shuld holde theyꝛ peace. But they cryed the moꝛe, saying: Haue mercy on vs o loꝛde the sonne of Dauid. And Jesus stoode still and called them, and sayde: What will ye that I shall do vnto you? They say vnto him: Loꝛde that our yes maye be opened. And Jesus had compassion on them, and touched theyꝛ yes, and immediately theyꝛ yes receyued sight, and they folowed him.

The texte.

And whan he went with his disciples out of Jerico, a great multitude of men folowed him. And behold two blind men sate by the wayes side, whiche whē they perceyued by the noyse, that it was a great multitude, and askynge what it shoulde be, knew that it was Jesus whiche passed by: whē they could not see him, and if they had sene him, coulde not go vnto hym foꝛ the multitude, they spake vnto Jesus with a loude voyce, saying: Loꝛd Jesu the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy vpon vs. Jesus made as though he hearde them not, to thintente that theyꝛ fayth and feruentnes might be the moꝛe manifeste to all men. The people seyng that Jesus made no aunswere at their crying, and supposing that it was paynefull to him, that twoe blinde common beggers made such a clamoure at his eares, rebuked them, and bad them holde theyꝛ peace. But they through a constante truste in Jesus, whom they knewe to be beneficiall towardes all men, cried out louder, and sayde again: Loꝛde the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy vpon vs. Jesus therfoꝛe when he had sufficiently declared theyꝛ fayth to them all, & had taught vs by theyꝛ exaple that we should beate at the eares of God feruently and constantly, yf we will obtayne anye thynge: stode still (foꝛ they could not folow but onely with crying) and commaunded thē to cum to him. At his woꝛde they cum. Jesus axkethe them what they would with theyꝛ great crying, and what they moulde that he shoulde do foꝛ them. Jesus was not ignoꝛaunte what they desired, but he would that the disease that they were troubled wyth, should be knowen to all menne by theyr owne confession, that the kaythe of the miracle mighte be the more certayne. Lorde (q they) we desire that oure eyes maye be opened by your helpe. They speakyng these thynges with a great affeccion, declare that blyndnes was a great grieke vnto them. And he is nexte vnto light, whiche is very wery of his blindenes. Than Jesus shewyng his pietifull affeccion both in countenaunce and eyes, with whiche affeccion euery gospeller ought to bee sory for other mens harmes, touched theyr eyes: and forthwith their eyes beyng opened, they saw, and with others they folowed Jesus. So Jesus with his touchyng healeth the mynde blinded with worldly desyres, and lighte is geuen to this ende, that we maye folowe his steppes.

The. xxi. Chapiter.

The texte. And when they drewe nye vnto Hierusalem, and came to Bethphage vnto mounte Oliuete: Than sent Jesus two disciples, saying vnto them: Go into the towne that is ouer agaynst you, and anone ye shall fynde an asse bounden, and a colte with her, loose them, and bring them to me. And if any man saye ought vnto you, saye ye: The lord hath nede of them, and streyght waye he wyll let them go. All this was done that it might be fulfilled, whiche was spoken by the prophete, saying: Speake ye to the doughter of Syon, beholde thy kyng cummeth vnto the, meke, sitting vpon an asse, and a colt, the sole of the asse vsed to the yoke.

Therfore Jesus goyng forwarde to Hierusalē, laboured about this diligently, with his disciples, to fasten in theyr mindes, that he went to his death wittingly and willyngly, and that no man shoulde hurte him, yf he woulde resiste. Therfore he beate it into them so often, that he must go to Hierusalem and there suffre death. And whereas sumtyme he semed to withdrawe himselfe from perill, it was not for feare, but to kepe himselfe vnto the tyme apoynted of the father. The whiche when it was than at hande, he dyd not onely not hyde hymselfe, but willyngly put furthe hymselfe, and so putte furth himself, that with the noueltie of his pompe, he styrred the mindes of the whole cytie against him: and in the meane season he ceaseth not from myracles: he ceaseth not from preachyng of the trueth, also he reproueth the lyfe of the Pharisets more freely or frankely: he casteth the marchauntes out of the temple, by the whiche thinges he knewe that all theyr myndes woulde bee the more vehemently styrred against him. Whome because he had prouoked against him with well doyng, he made them not vnfaultie, but gaue them lybertie that they might do the thing that they would do. Therfore now being nere to the cittie of Hierusalem, he came into the mount of Olyues, where he thought good to frame a new maner of pompe of his cumming, by the which in maner he mocked the pryde of this worlde, and by this spectacle he somewhat comforted his disciples, beyng yet but weake, that they might the more quietly beare the death of theyr Lorde.

Therfore from this hill he sente two of his disciples, saying: go ye into the village that is ouer agaynste you, and as soone as ye enter in there, ye shall fynde a female asse tyed, and her sole with her, whereon neuer hath any manne yet sitten, loose them bothe, and bring them hither vnto me. And if any manne saye any thing vnto you, demaundyng why ye loose them,

whither or to whom ye leade them, make none other answere, but that the Lorde hath nede of them. At this worde they will suffer them furthwith to be brought. These thinges were doen, partlye because they shoulde understande that nothing is to hym unknowen, and that he hath power to commaunde whom he will, and what he will, if he woulde use his power: partely that the Jewes might know, at lest wise by this very token, that he was Messias, because they sawe this straūge kinde of entring prophecied in tyme paste by the prophete Zacharie. For thus he did prophecie: Saye ye doughters of Syon: beholde thy kyng cummeth to thee, meke and humble, sitting upon a she asse, and upon a colte the fole of a yoked beaste. All thys was done. &c.

The disciples went, and did as Jesus commaunded them, and brought the asse and the colte, and put on them theyr clothes, and set him theron. And many of the people spred theyr garmentes in the waye. And other cut downe boughes from the trees, and strawed them in the waye. Ferther the people that went before, and they that came after cryed, saying: Osanna to the sonne of David. Blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lorde: Osanna in the higest. The texte.

The disciples departed, they found true whatsoeuer Jesus had tolde them before. By and by at the mencion of the lord, the beastes wer let loose, where as neyther the Lorde was there presente, nor the disciples made any countenaunce of any autoritie that they had. In dede the owners of the beastes knewe no suche thing: but yet in theyr hertes they perceyued that he whiche was lorde ouer all, commaunded this. The disciples because the Lord should sit the more at ease, cast on theyr clokes, and so set him upon the coltes backe, whiche colte did beare the figure of the heathen nacion beyng uncleane, and filthy folowyng all yll desyres: whiche whan it was once couered with bertues apostolicall, and Jesus received upon her backe, ceassed any longer to bee uncleane: ceassed to folow her old vices, beyng made the bearer of him who purgeth and sanctifieth all thinges. This she asse is the daine of the fole, (because healthe and redempcion cummeth oute of the Jewes) but thesame asse was fast tyed to the lettre of the lawe: Bare she was of euangelicall bertues: but at the lordes biddyng they are both untied, and couered with the Apostles clothes. The Apostles as yet understoode not these thynges, but yet this it was whiche was signified thereby, and shoulde more playnely be understanded afterwarde. When Jesus was now come to the foote of the hill, a great multitude of men came out of Jerusalem to mete hym. Yea and the multitude had suche a fauour unto him, that the mooste parte of them strawed the waye with theyr garmentes, some cut downe boughes from the trees, and strawed them in the waye. Ferther the company that went before, and also that folowed, declaryng themselues to bee glad of his cumming, sang unto hym this saying out of the prophecie of the psalme. Osanna to the sonne of David, blessed be he that cummeth in the name of the lorde. Osanna on high. Others cryed: blessed be the kyngdome of our father David, the whiche is come. Others cryed. Blessed be the kyng of Israell whiche is come: and they praysed God for the myracles whiche they sawe done by Jesus. Osanna to the sonne. &c

This honoure the Lorde Jesus, who hadde euer to fore liued humble and lowe, suffred to be geuen unto hym, whereby he declared that he shoulde not bee without the glorye of this worlde, in case he were mynded to haue it: but that he had rather to despise it, than to embrace it, to the ende it might bee so muche the more shame that it shoulde be sought for of suche as pro-profesſe themſelues to be his diſciples, where as he deſpyſed it which onelye deſerued it. Yet this honor was mete and ſemely for the cummynge of hym, who by his death ſhoulde redeme the whole worlde.

The texte. And whan he was cum to Hieruſalem, all the citie was moued, ſaying. Who is this? And the people ſayd: This is Jeſus, that prophete of Nazareth in Galile. And Jeſus went into the temple, and caſt out all them that ſolde and bought in the temple, and ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaungers, and the ſeates of them that ſolde doues, and ſayd vnto them: It is wrytten. My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye haue made it a den of theues. And the blynde and lame came vnto hym into the temple, and he healed them.

Therfore when Jeſus entred into Hieruſalem with this ſtraunge and vnwoonte pompe, the whole citie was moued with this vncouthe ſyght, ſaying: What man is this? The multitude whiche folowed him, aunſwered: This is Jeſus the Prophete of Nazareth, the citie in Galile. This they thought a goodly prayſe, although that it was farre vnder his maieſtie. For the people as yet coulde ſuppoſe nothyng of hym aboue man. And Chriſte dyd purpoſely ſo order his lyfe, that he vttered not openly his godlye nature, whiche he ſhoulde haue perſwaded in vayne, yf they had ſeene hym afterwarde ſuffer deathe. Therefore with this ruffelyng, Jeſus entered into the temple and there furthwith began to vſe a certayne kyngdome. When he ſawe in the temple a faſhion of a market, ſum ſelling, ſum byeng, and the changers of money ſitting, Jeſus moued with the vngoodlines of the thing, accordynge to the ſayinge of the Prophete: The zeale of thy houſe hath eaten me, he made a whip of litle coardes, and droue all the byers and ſellers with theyr marchandiſe out of the temple, he caſt downe the tables of the money changers and ſcatered theyr money vpon the grounde: he caſt downe the ſeates of the doue ſellers, alleging furth of Eſay a iuſt cauſe of his grieke, who ſayeth in the perſon of God: My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye haue made it a den of theues. By this act Jeſus mente an other thynge. For that the temple was polluted with marchandyſe of bullockes, ſhepe, goates and doues, did not ſo greatly moue hym, but it was hys mynde to ſhewe that auaryce and lucre would be a deadly poyſon vnto his church in time to cum, whiche was figured by that temple, whoſe religion ſhould ſhortlye after be aboliſhed. For at ſuche tyme is the temple which is conſecrate to offer vp to God ſpirituall ſacrifice, turned into a denne of theues, whan vnder the pretenſe of religion and prieſthode, the people is robbed. For nothing can be ſincere and holy, where the loue of money doethe reigne. And this miſchiefe is than a thynge vntollerable, when it is vſed vnder the roofe of the temple, when rauine is couered with the ſhadowe of religion. There was no ſorte of men, agaynſte whom Jeſus at any time ſhewed any more rigour, then he dyd towardes theſe, and yet hath he reſerued the ſame vnto himſelfe to be caſt out, when himſelfe ſhall thinke beſt. Then vnto Jeſus being in the temple, there came the blynde and lame, whome the lawe barred from entryng into the temple. But the temple of Jeſus receyueth all whiche make ſpede vnto healthe. For the blynde came, that hauinge theyr ſight they might ſee Jeſus, whome they hearde ſo ſpoken of. The lame came, that folowing his ſteppes, they might come into the kyngdome of heauen. As manye therfore as came to hym, he healed them.

My houſe is the houſe of prayer.

Whan

¶ Whan the chiefe priestes and Scribes sawe the wonders that he did, and the childzen crying in the temple, and saying: Osanna to the sonne of Dauid, they disdayned, and sayed vnto him: heares thou what these saye? But Jesus sayeth vnto them: Why not? Haue ye neuer rede, Out of the mouth of infantes and sucklinges thou hast ordeyned prayse? And he lefte them, and went out of the citie vnto Bethania, and abode there. The texte.

The chiefe Priestes and the Scribes thorough those thinges wherby they ought at last to repente, were the more kyndled with burning in enuye, when they sawe the people reioysing so louingly on euery syde, and sawe the greate power in healing of the lame and blinde, and authoritie in casting out of marchandise, no manne beeyng so bolde to resist, and the childzen also crying in the temple, Os Anna to the sonne of Dauid. Thei taking these thinges greuously, monished Jesus to cease that crying, els it would cum to passe that he shoulde seme to acknowleage suche honour, of which they iudged him vnworthy, wher as it shoulde haue been theyr partes rather more greatly to prayse hym, and to speake well of him, whiche beyng auncient men and skilfull in the law and the prophecies, seeyng so many miracles, myght vnderstande that this is Messias whom they loked for so long tyme. Nowe the childzen by the instigation of nature, or rather by the inspiration of God, spake that thinge, whiche they could not vnderstande for lacke of age. Therfore they blinded with enuy, and drunken with anger, saied vnto him: hearest thou what these childzen saye? But Jesus stopping their mouth with a testimonye of scripture, dyd ye neuer reade (sayeth he) of the mouthe of infantes and sucklinges thou hast made perfecte thy prayse? will ye therefore that I should shut their mouthe, whiche God hath opened to prayse his glory? I say vnto you: God will not suffer his prayse to be had in silence thorough your enuye, in so muche that if these holde their peace the stones will crye, whose hardenes ye exceede. Therfore Jesus leuyng them with their enuy, departed, and goyng out of the citie of Jerusalem, went vnto Bethania, and there tarryed.

¶ In the morning as he returned into the citie agayne, he was an hungered: and whan he had spied a figtree in the waie, he came to it, and founde nothing theron but leaues only, and saied vnto it: Let neuer fruite growe on the hence forward. And anon the figtree wythered away. And whan his disciples sawe it, they maruayled, saying: how soone the figgetree is withered. Jesus answering, sayed vnto them: Verely I saye vnto you. If ye haue fayth and doubte not, ye shall not onely do this, that is happened vnto the figgetree, but also if ye shall saie vnto this mountaine, remoue and cast thy selfe into the sea, it shall be doen. And all thinges whatsoeuer ye aske in prayer (yf ye beleue) ye shall receyue them. The texte.

In the morning by the waye as he returned vnto the citie, he beganne to wexe hungry. And when he sawe a figtree nere the waye, he came towarde it, as hoping to haue sum foode. And when he came at it, he founde nothyng on it but leaues. Therefore as beeyng greued that he was deceyued of his hope, he cursed it, saying: Never man see fruite of the hereafter. And whan the disciples returned agayne the same way, seeing the figgetree whiche Jesus cursed, that so he withered, and the leaues fallen of, marueiled and saied vnto him: behold the figge tree whiche thou diddest curse, is now withered. Jesus suffered this to be doen for this purpose, that he might inculcate diligently saythe vnto his disciples, without the whiche he knewe that his death shoulde be vnprofitable to menne. For he thyrsted marueilously after the healthe and salvation of mankinde, and now desired and longed for his death. But whereas he founde an apperance of religion in the Jewes, he found not the fruite of fayth, which only he hungered for. Vnto his disciples therfore marueiling at the figge tree so sodenly withered, he made answere on this wyse: why marueyle ye at this whiche is no greate matter, a figge tree to wyther: the might of faythe can doe more, whiche yf ye possesse both stronge and constante, ye shall not onelye doe, whiche ye sawe chaunce vnto the figge tree, but also yf ye saye to this hill, remoue the from thy place, and go into the sea, youre commaundemente shall be doen forthwith. And whatsoeuer ye shall aske in your prayers, so that ye haue a sure trust, ye shall obteyne.

The texte. ¶ And when he was cum into the temple, the chiefe priestes and elders of the people came to hym as he was teachyng, and sayed: By what auctorite doest thou these thynges? And who hath geuen the this auctorite? And Jesus answering, sayed vnto them: I also will aske you a certayne thyng, whiche yf ye tell me, I will also shewe you with what authorite I do these thynges. The baptisme of John whence was it? from heauen or of men? But they thought with themselues, saying: If we say, from heauen, he will saye vnto vs: Why than did ye not beleue hym? But if we say of men, we feare the people. For all men take John as a prophet. And they answering to Jesus, sayed: we cannot tel. And he sayed vnto them: Nay I do tell you with what auctorite I do these thinges.

And when he entred into the temple and taught the people, the chiefe priestes and certayne of the Seniours of the people, not suffering him to be there in his kyngdome freely, go vnto him and saye. By what authorite doest thou these thinges? And who gaue the this authorite? For sith no manne gaue hym this authorite, either he must say that it was geuē him of God, or els of Belzebub. If he had saied of God, he shoulde haue saied trueth, but he shoulde haue doen nothing but prouoked theim. For they aske not that they will beleue, whiche might appere by the thing it selfe, but falsely to reproue and blame. Jesus therfore not ignorant of this thing, requited their question with an other, as though a man shoulde dryue out one nayle with an other. I will aske you (sayd he) a certayne thyng, and if ye answer me to that, I will answer to your question. The authorite whereby John did baptise, from whence came it vnto him? from heauen or from men? They toke deliberacion with themselues, what they should answere. For they sawe it was a question with two pikes, and that they must nedes fall vpon the one. They thought in their mindes, yf we say from heauen, he will forthwith say vnto vs: why than did ye not beleue him? for he preached the kingdome of God, and witnessed with me. But yf we saye, of men, it is to be feared leste the people will make a sedicion, because all menne toke John for a Prophete. Therfore leste they shoulde be reproued they made answere that they coulde not tell. Than spake Jesus: And I will not tell you (sayd he) from whence I haue this authorite.

The texte. ¶ And what thynke you? A man had two sonnes, and came to the firste, and sayed: Sonne go to day, and worke in my vineyarde. He answering, sayd: I will not. But afterwarde, he repented and went. Than came he to the seconde, and sayed likewyse: And he answered and sayed: I will sir, and went not. Whether of them twayne did the will of the father? And they say vnto him, the firste. Jesus sayeth vnto them: verely I say vnto you, that the publicans and harlottes goe before you into the kyngdom of God. For John came vnto you by the waye of righteousnes, and ye beleued hym not, and the publicans and harlottes dyd beleue hym. And ye when ye had seen it, were not moued afterwarde with repentaunce to beleue him.

But

But because a simple and playne question could not wryng oute the confession of truth, Jesus putteth forth an other question by a riddell, that vnwares they shall geue sentence against themselues: what thynke ye (quod he) of that I will propose nowe? A certayne man had two sonnes. He came to the one and sayed: Sonne, go and worke this day in my vineyard. He answerd frowardly, I will not. But strayt afterward repenting himselfe, he went into the vineyarde. The father likewyse came to the other sonne and sayed: go, and labour in my vineyarde this day. He answereth redily, loe I goe sir, and yet he wente not. Therfore of these two, whether thinke ye fulfilled his fathers will? They not vnderstanding to what ende these went, answered: The firste sone, whiche repenting forthwith, wente into the vineyarde. Than Jesus turning the parable vpon them, sayed: certaynlye I tell you truethe, that the publicanes and common women shall go before you in the kyngdome of heauen. They beyng rebelles agaynst God before with theyr wicked life, yet by and by touched and moued by penaunce obeyed the doctryne of the ghospell. Ye whiche be the people of God by title and profession, and ye whiche sayed in times paste, and this daysay, we will do all thinges whatsoeuer the Lorde sayeth vnto vs, whiche also haue euer in your mouthe the preceptes of God, and the Lordes temple, the Lordes temple, the Lordes temple, beyng so many wayes prouoked, cannot be moued to penaunce. For John came shewyng you the waye of ryghteousnes, and that the wrathe of God was at hande, and the axe set at the tree rootes, vnlesse forthwith ye would repent. Ye sawe the publicanes and common women (desperate folkes after your iudgement,) obedient vnto hym. Ye could not be moued vnto penaunce neyther by the great holines of John, neyther by his holsom doctrine, neither by his threteninges, neither by the example of the publicanes and common women. So it cummethe to passe, that they throughe fayth take from you the kyngdome of God: ye baynelye professing God with your mouthe, be shut out for the vnbelefe of your mynde.

¶ Declaren an other similitude. There was a certayne man an housholder, whiche planted a vineyarde, and hedged it rounde about, and made a wine presse, and builded a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went forthe into a straunge countrey. And whan the tyme of fruyte drew nere, he sente his seruauntes to the husbande men to receyue the fruites of it. And the husbande men takyng his seruauntes, one they beate, another they killed, and stoned another. Agayne he sente other seruauntes mo than the firste, and they did vnto them lyke wise. But last of all he sente vnto them his owne sonne, sayeng: They will haue my sonne in reuerence. And the husbande men whan they sawe the sonne, they sayed in them selues: This is the heyre, come let vs kyll him, and let vs enioye his heritage. And they toke him, and caste him out of the vineyarde, and kylled him. Than whan the Lorde of the vineyarde cummeth, what will he do vnto those husbandmen? They saye vnto him: Surely they bee ill he will cruelly destroy them, and will let out his vineyarde to other husbandmen, whiche shall deliuer him the fruite in due season. The texte.

He put them another parable euen as darke, where with he doth recite secretely, and leyeth before their eyes, their notable vnkindenes, whiche beeyng prouoked by so manye benefites of God, did not onely not amende, but also cruelly killed the Prophetes one after another, which were sente, that at their preachyng they myght once repente. And not content herewith, finally they would kyll the sonne of God hymselfe, and that after that he was caste out of the vineyarde, shewyng as it were by the waye the place where he shoulde be crucified. By the whiche communicacion he declareth both ỹ their inuincible malice is vnworthye pardon (seeyng that nothyng was omitted that myghte call them backe to a better mynde) and that he shoulde suffre nothing of them, whiche he knewe not of before. This was the parable. There was (ỹ he) a certayne householder, whiche planted a vineyarde, and hedged it aboute and digged in it a cesterne, to receyue the swete wine that was pressed out of the clusters of grapes, and buylt in it a lodge for the kepyng of the vineyarde, and so whan it was well garnished, he set it out to husbande menne: that they should trustely tyll it, and rendre the fruites vnto the lorde. This doen, he went fat of. Nowe when the tyme of gatheryng the fruite approched nere, he sente his seruauntes to receyue the fruite of them. But the husbande men dyd not onelye not deliuer the fruites that were due, but also layed handes vpon hys seruauntes, and bette sum, killed sum, and stoned sum to death. This knowen the householder did not furth with punishe them, but loking that they should repente and amende, sente vnto theim a greater number of seruauntes than he dyd before: trusting that they beeyng kept vnder and in awe with the multitude, they woulde do their duetie. But they handeled theim also no more gentely, than they handeled the other before. The householder suffered this displeasure also, and finally to ouercum them with lothnes and gentilnesse, he sent vnto them his owne sonne, saying with himselfe: although they haue been cruell toward my seruauntes, yet at the leaste they wil vse my sonne reuerently, whan they see that he is cum. But the husbande menne the more they were prouoked to repentaunce, the more they were stirred vnto cruelties. For whan they sawe the sonne, they did not reuerence him, insomuche that furthwyth they consulted to slea him, saying: this is the heyre, cum let vs kill him, and we shall take his inheritaunce. And by and by they layed handes vpon him, and plucked him out of the vineyarde and killed him. Therfore (ỹ he) when the Lorde of the vineyarde shall cum, what shall he do to those husbande menne? The Pharisees answered: those ill men he shall ill intreate and destroy, and set out his vineyarde to others, whiche may trustely render the fruite in tyme vnto the Lorde whiche lette it out. So they deceyued by this ryddle, condemne them selues with theyr owne mouth: pronouncing, that they themselues by the inuincible frowardenes of their mynde be worthy punishmente, and that the gentiles be worthy to be receyued to the grace of the ghospel, whiche will till the vineyarde more trustely than they dyd.

The texte. ¶ Jesus sayeth vnto them: Dyd ye neuer reade in the scriptures? The stone which the builders refused, the same is made the head of the corner: this is doen of the lorde, and is marvellouse in our eyes. Therfore saye I vnto you, the kingdome of God shalbe taken frō you, and geuen to a nacion, whiche shall do the fruytes therof. And whosoeuer falleth on this stone, shalbe broken in pieces. But on whomsoeuer it falleth, he shalbe all to bruised.

After these thinges, Jesus shewed that through their frowardenes he beeyng condemned and reiected, should dye a spitefull deathe, but by his resurrection through the power of the father, he should be made notable throughout all the worlde and shoulde be so founde and strong, that whoso stumbled against him, should be his owne destruccion. And that in declaryng of this he might lesse offend them, he bryngethe a prophecie out of the psalme. Neuer rede ye in the scriptures (ỹ he) the stone whiche the builders dyd refuse and caste

away, the same is made the head of the corner: This is doen of the lorde & it is wonderfull in our iyes: signifying that they builded the Synagoge, but castig out Christe, without whom no building was sure: but yet ỹ stone reiected of thẽ, should be in great estimacion & price in the church of ỹ Gentiles. And therfore Jesus dyd adde: therfore I say vnto you, the kingdō of god shall be taken frō you, which ye despise being offered vnto you, and it shal be geuen to other people, which shal bring furth fruites meete for the gospel. And as this stone shal bring health to them that obey the ghospell, so it shall bryng destruccion vnto them that be disobediente throughe vnbelefe. For whoso stumbleth at thys stone, shalbe broken. Agayne vpō whō this stone falleth, he shalbe bruised.

¶ And whan the chiefe priestes and Pharisees had heard hys parables, they perceyued that he spake of them. And they went about to laye handes on hym, but they feared the people, because they toke hym as a Prophete. And Jesus answered, and spake vnto them again by parables, and sayd.

At lengthe, of the conclusion of thys communicacion, fyrste the chiefe priestes and Scribes vnderstode that he spake the former parables also againste thẽ, in the whyche they beyng deceyued, gaue sentence agaynst themselues. And therfore theyr madnes was so set a fyer, that they woulde furthwith haue layed handes vpon him: But they feared the people, because Jesus was made muche of, of many, and taken for a Prophete.

¶ The kingdome of heauen is lyke vnto a man that was a kyng, whiche made a mariage for his sonne: and sent furth his seruauntes to call theym that were bydde to the weddyng, and they wouldne not cum. Agayne he sent furth other seruauntes, saying: Tell thẽ whyche are bidden. Beholde I haue prepared my dinner, myne oxen, and my fatte wares are kylled, and all thynges are ready, cum vnto the mariage. But they made lyght of it, and went theyr wayes, one to his farme place, another to his marchandise, and the residue toke his seruauntes, and intreated them shamefully. And whan the kyng hearde therof, he was angry, and sent furth his men of warre, and destroyed these murderers, and brent vp theyr citie.

Agayne Jesus added an other parable, to print the more surely in ỹ mindes of the Jewes, ỹ it came to passe by theyr owne obstinate malice, ỹ they were reiected frō saluacion of the gospel, and ỹ the Gentiles shal take & enioye, that that they made them selues vnworthy of. There is none excluded frō the kigdom of God, but this honoure was geuē to the naciō of Jewes, that they were called fyrste of all, & gently called, not vnto lower or vyle thynges, but vnto a maryage, ỹ is to honour, delicates, & libertie of ỹ gospel. And they wer not inuited onely by the prophete John, & by Christ himselfe, but also after his death, they shoulde be called by the Apostles: and the preachers of the ghospell shoulde not go to the gentyles before that for theyr diligence and well doyng, they had bene prayed long of the Jewes with many mockes, & punishmentes: that they can ascribe it to no man, that afterward they shal be punished with so many miseries, whiche despised Goddes goodnes, so often offered vnto thē. This doen, he went far of. Nowe when the tyme of gatheryng the fruite approched nere, he sente his seruauntes to receyue the fruite of them. But the husbande men dyd not onelye not deliuer the fruites that were due, but also layed handes vpon hys seruauntes, and bette sum, killed sum, and stoned sum to death. This knowen the householder did not furth with punishe them, but loking that they shoulde repente and amende, sente vnto theim a greater number of seruauntes than he dyd before: trusting that they beeyng kept vnder and in awe with the multitude, they woulde do their duetie. But they handeled theim also no more gentely, than they handeled the other before. The householder suffered this displeasure also, and finally to ouercum them with softnes and gentilnesse, he sent vnto them his owne sonne, saying with himselfe: although they haue been cruell toward my seruauntes, yet at the leaste they wil vse my sonne reuerently, whan they see that he is cum. But the husbande menne the more they were prouoked to repentaunce, the more they were stirred vnto cruelties. For whan they sawe the sonne, they did not reuerence him, insomuche that furthwyth they consulted to slea him, saying: this is the heyre, cum let vs kill him, and we shall take his inheritaunce. And by and by they layed handes vpon him, and plucked him out of the vineyarde and killed him. Therfore (q he) when the Lorde of the vineyarde shall cum, what shall he do to those husbande menne? The Pharisees answered: those ill men he shall ill intreate and destroy, and set out his vineyarde to others, whiche may truely render the fruite in tyme due to the Lorde whiche lette it out. So they deceyued by this ryddle, condemne them selues with theyr owne mouth: pronouncing, that they themselues for the inuincible frowardenes of their mynde be worthy punishmente, and that the gentiles be worthy to be receyued to the grace of the ghospel, whiche will till the vineyarde more truely than they dyd.

The texte. ¶ Jesus sayeth vnto them: Dyd ye neuer reade in the scriptures? The stone which the builders refused, the same is made the head of the corner: this is doen of the lorde, and is marueilouse in our eyes. Therfore saye I vnto you, the kingdome of God shalbe taken frō you, and geuen to a nacion, whiche shall do the fruytes therof. And whosoeuer falleth on this stone, shalbe broken in pieces. But on whomsoeuer it falleth, he shalbe all to bruised.

After these thinges, Jesus shewed that through their frowardenes he beeyng condemned and reiected, should dye a spitefull deathe, but by his resurrection through the power of the father, he should be made notable throughout all the worlde and shoulde be so founde and strong, that whoso stumbled against him, should be his owne destruction. And that in declaryng of this, he might lesse offend them, he bryngethe a prophecie out of the psalme. Neuer red ye in the scriptures (q he) the stone whiche the builders dyd refuse and caste away, the same is made the head of the corner. This is doen of the lorde & it is wonderfull in our eyes: signifying that they builded the Synagoge, but castig out Christe, without whom no building was sure: but yet ỹ stone refected of thẽ, should be in great estimacion & price in the church of ỹ Gentiles. And therfore Jesus dyd adde: therfore I say vnto you, the kingdō of god shall be taken frō you, which ye despise being offered vnto you, and it shal be geuen to other people, which shal bring furth fruites meete for the gospel. And as this stone shal bring health to them that obey the ghospell, so it shall bryng destruccion vnto them that be disobediente throughe vnbeleefe. For whoso stumbleth at thys stone, shalbe broken. Agayne vpō whō this stone falleth, he shalbe bruised. The texte.

¶ And whan the chiefe priestes and Pharisees had heard hys parables, they perceyued that he spake of them. And they went about to laye handes on hym, but they feared the people, because they toke hym as a prophete. And Jesus aunswered, and spake vnto them again by parables, and sayd.

At lengthe, of the conclusion of thys communicacion, fyrste the chiefe priestes and Scribes vnderstode that he spake the former parables also againste thẽ, in the whyche they beyng deceyued, gaue sentence agaynst themselues. And therfore theyr madnes was so set a fyer, that they woulde furthwith haue layed handes vpon hym: But they feared the people, because Jesus was made muche of, of many, and taken for a prophete.

¶ The kingdome of heauen is lyke vnto a man that was a kyng, whiche made a mariage for his sonne: and sent furth his seruauntes to call theym that were bydde to the weddyng, and they wouldē not cum. Agayne he sent furth other seruauntes, saying: Tell thē whyche are bidden. Beholde I haue prepared my dinner, myne oxen, and my fatte wares are kylled, and all thynges are ready, cum vnto the mariage. But they made lyght of it, and went theyr wayes, one to his farme place, another to his marchandise, and the residue toke his seruauntes, and intreated them shamefully. And whan the kyng hearde therof, he was angry, and sent furth his men of warre, and destroyed these murderers, and brent vp theyr citie. The texte.

Agayne Jesus added an other parable, to print the more surely in ỹ mindes of the Jewes, ỹ it came to passe by theyr owne obstinate malice, ỹ they were refected frō saluacion of the gospel, and ỹ the Gentiles shal take & enioye, that that they made them selues vnworthy of. There is none excluded frō the kīgdom of God, but this honoure was geuē to the nacīō of Jewes, that they were called fyrste of all, & gently called, not vnto lowe or vyle thynges, but vnto a mariage, ỹ is to honour, delicates, & libertie of ỹ gospel. And they wer not inuited onely by the prophete John, & by Christ himselfe, but also after his death, they shoulde be called by the Apostles: and the preachers of the ghospell shoulde not go to the gentyles before that for theyr diligence and well doyng, they had bene arayed long of the Jewes with many mockes, & punishmentes: that they can ascribe it to no man, that afterward they shal be punished with so many miseries, whiche despised Goddes goodnes, so often offered vnto thē. This is the similitude, tude. The kingdome of heauen (q he) is throughe you made like to a certayne kyng, who makyng a bridale to his sonne, sent out his seruaunte, to inuite and call many to his sonnes mariage. But they once called, would not cumme. Then the kyng sent mo seruauntes to bid them more diligently to make haste vnto the weddyng now in a redines, and to say to them in his name: Beholde the diner is ready, my oxen and my pultrie be killed, and al other thinges be in a readines. Now nothyng lacketh but cumming of the geastes, that the preparation be not made in vaine. But they againe neglected the bidder. And whan the bidders called vpon them, euery man made his excuse: one sayd, he muste goe e his manour or farme place, that he had lately bought: another sayde, he must go loke vpon his oxen, which he had bought: Another saied, he had late maryed a wyfe, from whome he could not departe. And these men were onlye madde to themselues whiche preferred certayne vile and fylthy cares of frail thinges, before a feast of suche felicitie. But other ioyned cruelnes vnto their vnkindnes. For the kinges seruauntes, whiche dyd once or twyse inuite them vnto so great honour, they handeled and vsed very sore with many rebukes,

And whan the kyng, & and at length killed them also. The whiche doyng when the kinge heard of, he toke it very greuously: and turnyng his gentilnes, whiche they had so despised, into a rage, and sendyng furth men of his garde destroyed these murderers: and not content with that, set their citie a fyer also. These thinges spake Iesus prophecying vnto them couertly the destruccion of the citie of Ierusalem: and by and by he geueth intelligence that the gentiles shalbe called on euery syde vnto the gospell, as those wiche wer better than the Iewes.

The texte. ¶ Than sayed he to his seruauntes: The mariage is prepared, but they that were inuited were not worthy. Go ye therfore to the hygh wayes, & as many as ye fynde, cal to the mariage. Thā his seruauntes wente out into the high wayes, and brought together as many as they coulde fynde, both good and badde, and the weddyng was furnished with geastes. The king came in to see the geastes, and whan he spyed a mā there which had not on a wedding garmente, he sayeth vnto him: Frēde how camest thou in hither not hauing a weddyng garmente? But he held his peace: Than said the kyng to the ministers. Binde hym handes & feete, and caste him into the vtter darkenes, there shalbe weppyng and gnashing of teethe. For many are called, but few are chosen.

¶ Than he sayed vnto his seruauntes, the bridale is redy: but because they that were called, declared thēselues for to be vnworthy for this feaste, whiche not withstandyng I prepared chiefly for them: runne abrode euery where in stretes and crosse wayes, and call to the bridale indifferently, whomsoeuer ye fynd, worthy, vnworthy, feble, maymed, blind, and lame, till my house be full. The seruauntes went foorth and broughte together a multitude of all sortes gathered together from all places, and the feaste was replenished with geastes. After this, Iesus because he had shewed before, that the Iewes shoulde be greuously punished, whiche afflicted the apostles, callyng theim so often, and at length killed them, declareth also that they shalbe sore punished whiche once professing the lyfe of the ghospell, returne againe to the filthines of their olde lyfe. The king (q he) went in to see the geastes sittyng at the table, and among others he sawe one there, which had not on his weddinge garment. Frende (q he) how camest thou in hither, sith thou hast not thy wedding garmente? But he beyng put to shame was dumme, and had nothing to say. Than the king commaunded his seruauntes that they should binde him handes and feete, remoue him far from the feast, and caste him into great darkenes, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth, the honour and the lyght of the feaste beyng chaunged into a vile pryson, a great pleasure beyng chaunged into great torment. Further though many be called, yet few be chosen: al be called freely, but none be chosen but they that obey their calling, and they that vnto the gode answere vnto the goodnes of God towardes them, continuyng in the study and loue of the euangelicall godlynes.

Than went the Phariseis and toke counsell how they might tangle him in his wordes. The fo.
And they sente furth vnto hym theyr disciples with the Herodians, saying: Maister, we knowe that thou art true, and teachest the waye of God truly, neither regardest thou any man, nor thou haste respecte of persones. Tell vs therfore, howe thynkest thou? Is it lawfull that tribute be geuen to Ceasar, or not? But Jesus perceyuing their malice, sayd: why tempt ye me, ye Hipocrites? Shewe me the tribute money: and they toke vnto him a denarie, and he sayed vnto them: whose ymage is this, and superscripcion? They sayed vnto hym: Ceasars. Than sayed he vnto them: Geue therfore vnto Ceasar, the thynges whiche are Ceasars, and vnto God those thynges that are goddes. When they had heard these wordes, they meruayled, and left hym, and went awaye.

When the Jewes perceyued that they were touched with these parables, they were not yet moued vnto penaunce, insomuche that nowe they mused in theyr myndes nothing els but howe that Jesus myght be killed. So great a mischiefe is enuy and ambicion. They had a wyll to murder, but they lacked opportunitie. They feared not God, the reuenger of suche mischiefes, but they feared the people. They thought therfore to goe a contrary waye, and to doe the thyng with suche secrete undermining, that the enuy of the dede should redound and reste vpon Ceasar and his officers. Therfore for the tyme, they dissembled theyr anger and went awaye. But consulting among themselues, it was thought good, that certayne should be suborned and set forth to propose a question vnto Jesus, and to take hym in his answere, and to bryng hym into the princes daunger, that by them, as beeyng giltie of treason, and the author of sedicion, he myght be putte to death, the Phariseis hauyng nothyng to doe with the matter. And theyr inuencion was this. When Jewry began nowe to be tributarie to the Romaynes, king Herode the sonne of Antipater was made officer of August to gather the tribute: And of this thyng euery man had not like opinion: for some thought it not meete that the people dedicate vnto God, should pay tribute to princes that were Idolatours. And in this opinion were they whiche helde with the Phariseis. Agayne there were sum the fauorers of Ceasar, which saied that tribute ought to be payed: & the maynteners of this opinion were called Herodians, because Herode was the officer to gather the tribute. A lytle before there were two, Theudas and Judas, which whilest they did defende openly that the Jewes, a people dedicate vnto god, ought no tribute to any prophane prince, were put to death like seditious persones. Now the Phariseis trusted that Christe fauoring religion more than Ceasar, beeyng prophane and wicked, woulde pronounce and iudge according to his accustomed libertie against ỹ Herodians, that tribute should not be payed to Ceasar: and furthwith by them should be accused vnto Herode, and should be punished like as Theudas and Judas were before. And yf he had pronounced that tribute shoulde be payed, than they woulde haue layed to his charge that he had flattered wycked princes, and not fauoured gods religion. Therfore they doe suborne, and sende furth certayne of theyr disciples, whyche, the Herodians beyng present with a great numbre

And they sent furthe to him. &c.

of men, that the thyng should not lacke witnesses, colourably with fayre speakyng should entise him into theyr net. So great was theyr blyndnes, that the thyng so often attempted in vayne, they would not rest. Neyther be they ashamed of theyr inconstancye, nowe calling him maister, where before they layed to his charge that he was possessed with the spirite of Beelzebub. And they commende his libertie, that he should not feare to offende the Herodians.
Maister (q they) we knowe that thou art true, thou flatterest no manne, thou liest nothyng: But thou doest teache with great libertie the pleasure of god, not the phantasye of men. For thou fearest no mortall man, and regardest no person. Tell vs therfore what ye thynke: Is it leefull for the people of Jewes whiche is dedicate to the religion of God, to paye tribute vnto Ceasar, or no?
And shall we geue it hereafter, or no? But Jesus to shewe that theyr craftye flatterynge could not deceyue him, so ordered his aunswere with woonderfull wysedome, that he endaungered hymselfe to neyther of the factions: but monished them what dyd moste appertayne vnto their saluacion: that is, to pay Is it lawful that tribute &c. vnto God the high Prince, the tribute of godlynes. Ye Hypocrites (q he) why do ye tempte me? Shewe me a coyne of the tribute. For they went about to catche Jesus in his woordes. He agayne catcheth them in theyr answeres.
Therfore they shewed hym a Denarie, whiche had the Image and name of Ceasar. And to declare that he came not for this purpose to make lawes of these thynges, whiche pertayne nothyng vnto Godlynes, and the whiche for the tyme maye be well or yll doen, when he sawe the coyne, as though he knew no suche letters nor Images, who went onely about heauenly thynges: he asked whose title and Image it was. Aunswere was made: Ceasars. Than sayed Jesus: Rendre therfore vnto Ceasar, yf any thyng appertaine vnto Cea-
And vnto God. &c. sar, but fyrste of all rendre vnto God, the thynges that appertaine vnto God:
meanyng that it is no hurte to godlines, if a man beeyng dedicate to God, doe geue tribute to a prophane prynce, although he owe it not, desiring rather to be obedient, than to prouoke and stirre him: chiefly in that thyng whiche ma-keth a man poorer, but not vngodly. Otherwise yf he doeth exacte that which maketh vs vngodly, it is not nowe the tribute of Ceasar, but of the deuill.

When they had this aunswer they maruayled: Fyrste because they perceiu-ed that their suttell deuise was not hid from him: Furthermore for his won-derfull wisedome, whom mannes craftines went about to deceiue in vayne.
They marualled truely, but they were not chaunged. And forsaking him, they left of to prouoke him, syth thei could not ouercome him: but they did not leaue of to hate hym, whom they ought to loue.

The texte. The same daye came vnto hym the Sadducels (whiche saye that there is no resurreccion) and asked hym, saying: Maister, Moyses sayed: yf a man dye, not hauyng a chylde, that his brother should marry his wyfe, and rayse vp seede to his brother. There were with vs seuen brethren, and the first maried a wyfe, and dyed without issue, and lefte his wyfe to his brother: likewise the seconde, & the thirde, vnto the seuenth. Laste of all dyed the woman also. Therfore in the resurrection, whose wyfe shall she be of the seuen? For they all had her. Jesus aunswered and sayed vnto them: ye do erre not knowyng the Scripture, nor the power of God: For in the resurrectiō they neyther marry, nor be marryed, but are as the aungels in heauen.

Therfore whan the Pharisees and the Herodians were departed, the Sadducels came vnto him. That faction emong the Jewes, is more grosse and lesse learned, disagreing from the Pharisees in this, that they denye the resur-

reſurrection: In ſomuche that they beleue not the Aungels to bee, nor the ſoules to bee, after they bee ſeparate from the body, thynkyng nothing to bee but that whiche they ſee. They whan they heard Chriſte make often mencion of euerlaſting life, and of the worlde to come, and of the reſurrecciō of the iuſt, they come vnto him to trye whether he agreed with the Phariſeis, or taught contrary to them, that they might reproue him if he were againſt them, orels laugh him to ſcorne, if he agreed with the Phariſeis. Therfore they do obiect vnto him this hard queſtion. Maiſter (q they) Moyſes made this lawe: If a man hauing maried a wyfe, departe without chyldren, that the brother of the dead ſhould marry the widowe lefte of his brother, and couplyng wyth her ſhould rayſe vp iſſue to his brother departed. There were emong vs ſeuen brethren, of whom the firſte married a wyfe, and departed without children. The nexte brother married her, who alſo died without iſſue. Lykewyſe it chaunced to the thirde, & the fowerth, vnto the ſeuenth, all dyed without iſſue. At laſte the wyfe dyed alſo, whiche was married to ſeuen brethren. Therfore in the reſurrection, whiche of all them ſhall haue her to his wife? For ſhe cānot be a common wyfe for them all, and all married her indifferently. To this queſtion becauſe it was more of ignoraūce than of malyce, Jeſus did vouchſafe to make aunſwere. For he that erreth by ignoraunce is woorthy to be taught. But they that propoſe queſtiōs of mere malice, be not woorthy to be aunſwered. Ye erre (q he) whiche rede the ſcriptures, but ye vnderſtande them not: and imagining nothing aboue bodily thinges which ye ſee, ye knowe not the power of god, who is more wonderfull in thinges, which be not ſeen. Here where men by courſes be borne to dye, wedlocke is vſed for propagacion and bryngyng furth of mankynde. But where nowe mortalitie ſhalbe ſwalowed vp and conſumed, and men ſhalbe ſpirituall, whiche thyng ſhall come to paſſe in the reſurrection, the whiche ſhall reſtore vs agayne, beyng the ſame in dede that we were, but yet chaunged after another ſorte, there ſhall no man marry, nor no woman ſhalbe married. For there ſhall nede no generacion where no death ſhall be. Further, they that pertayne to the reſurrection of the iuſt, lyue without matrimony lyke the aungels of God in heauen: recording now here and mynding to theyr power, that they ſhall come to in the reſurrection. For they had rather get ſoules to God, than bodyes to the worlde.

There were with vs ſeuen brethren.

¶ But as touching the reſurrection of the dead, haue ye not red that which was ſpoken to you of God, who ſaith: I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Iacob. God is not the God of dead, but of liuyng. And whan the people heard this, they were aſtonied at his doctryne.

The texte.

After this, Jeſus notyng ſecretely this ſo folithe a queſtion to ſpring of a falſe perſwaſion, for that they beleued not the reſurrection: diſdayned not to wede this opinion alſo out of theyr myndes, teachyng them alſo that this is taken out of the bokes of Moyſes, by whoſe authoritie they apposed Jeſus. Why haue ye an yll opinion of the reſurrection of the dead as though Moyſes taught it not openly, whoſe wrytinges ye reade groſſely, and nothing diligently? Haue ye not red in his bokes what god ſayth: I am the god of Abraham, and the god of Iſaac, and the god of Iacob. If they had peryſhed wholy by the deathe of the bodyes, he would not ſaye that he is theyr god, but that he was their god. But yf he be theyr god, truly theyr ſoules doe lyue, and they wholy do lyue in maner by the hope of resurrection that shall be. God is lyke, and he is not God of the dead whiche nowe be not, but of the liuyng. So he taught them resurrection to be, but not to be after suche sorte, as they imagined it to bee, whan they proposed a folyshe question of seuen brethren. The people when they sawe euery mannes mouthe stopped with wyse aunswers, they merueiled at his effectuall and redy doctryne.

The texte. ¶ But whan the Pharisees had heard that he had stopped the mouth of the Sadducees, they came together, and one of them being Doctor of lawe, asked him a question, temptyng him, and saying: Maister, whiche is the great commaundement in the lawe? Jesus saied vnto him: Thou shalt loue the lorde thy God with al thy harte, and with al thy soule, and with all thy mynde. This is the first and great commaundemente. And the second is lyke vnto it. Thou shalt loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe. In these two commaundementes hang all the lawe and the Prophetes.

The Pharisees were not displeased that the Sadducees were put to sylence, chiefly in a matter wherin they were clane cõtrary one against another. Therfore whan the Pharisees sawe them put to sylence, and rebuked also for ignorauce of scripture, they taking harte of grace againe, gather together, and set forwarde a certayne Doctour of lawe, whiche should goe vnto Jesus with a clerkly question, that eyther he myght reproue hym of ignorance, or els he hymselfe beare awaye the prayse of learnyng. Maister (sayd he) whiche is the chiefe commaundemente in the lawe? Jesus purposyng to shewe that they which take of the profession of the lawe, be furthest from keping of the greatest commaundement in the lawe, which wholy flame with enuy and hatred of their neyghboure, and with other vices whiche haue none affinitie with Christian charitie: and that no man loueth God, whiche is vniust to his neyghbour, aunswered: Thou shalt loue the Lorde thy God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and all thy mynde: This is the chiefe and greatest commaundemente. The whiche no manne doeth perfourme and kepe, vnlesse he kepe also the seconde lyke vnto that: For this: Thou shalt loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe, doeth depende of the other. And whatsoeuer is commaunded in the whole lawe, whatsoeuer the Prophetes teache, all that is comprysed in these two commaundementes. For whosoeuer loueth God with all his harte, will neglecte nothyng that he hath commaunded: And he that loueth his neyghboure as himselfe, he will not steale, he will not commyt aduoutry, he will not beare false witnesse, he will not desyre his neyghbours substaunce. Finally he will do nothing to an other, which he would not to be doen to himselfe. Than the Pharisey which was become nowe almoste of a tempter a disciple, sayed: Maister, thou hast spoken truely and rightly, that there is one God, and no nother but he and that he onely ought to be loued aboue all thynges, with all our power, and that we must bende all our affections towardes hym onely: and that to loue our neyghbour as our selfe, is more than all the holocaustes and sacrifices. Jesus seyng that he had aunswered wyselye, and went not forwarde to lye in wayte, sayeth vnto him: thou arte not farre from the kyngdome of God. For he perceyued what was best, he lacked onely this, to folowe in affeccion and harte that that he vnderstode. And in the meane tyme he touched secretly the conscyence of certayne Pharisees, whiche layed deadly wayte for Jesus. And therfore whereas they demaunded onely of the chiefe commaundement, the kepyng of the whiche they falsly toke vpõ them: he purposely added the seconde, concernyng the loue of their neyghboure, for as yet they supposed not that Christe was God, but to be theyr neyghbour, and one that had doen muche for them, they could not deny: agaynste whome notwithstandyng they did deuise that, that no man would should haue come vnto hymselfe.

Whan the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them, sayng: What thinke ye of Christe, whose sonne is he? They sayed vnto him. The sonne of Dauid. He sayed vnto them: Howe than doth Dauid in spirite call hym Lord, sayeng: The Lord sayed vnto my Lord: sit thou on my ryghthand, till I make thine enemies thy footestoole. If Dauid than call him Lord, howe is he his sonne? And no man was able to answer hym any thing, neyther durst any man from that daye furth, aske hym any mae questions. The texte.

But nowe whereas a greater company of Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus beyng tempted of them with so many questions, proposed vnto them againe a question, signifying vnto them sumwhat obscurely and darkely that whiche he lefte to be declared afterward by his Apostles in tyme conuenient: that he had not onely the nature of manne whiche they sawe, and vpon which they would shewe their crueltie, but also that he had the nature of God, the which sumwhat they myght haue cõiectured of his dedes, vnles enuy, hatred, ambition, auarice and other vices, had blinded their mindes. Therfore he demaudeth of them being gathered together, what they thought of Messias, whose sõne he should be, that is, of whose stocke he should come. They answer furthwith: of Dauid. Than saied Jesus: what meaneth it that Dauid in the misticall Psalme inspired with the heauenly ghost, calleth him Lord, wheras he is his sonne? For it is wrytten: The Lorde sayed vnto my Lorde, sitte on my ryghthande, vntyll I make thyne enemyes the stoole of thy feete. Howe agreeth it yf he be the sonne of Dauid, that the father calleth his sonne Lorde? And there was not one of them that couldelooce this knot, because that they coulde as yet thynke nothyng of the godly nature of Jesus. For Christe as he was the sonne of Dauid, touchyng the body of man: so touchyng the diuyne nature, he was Lorde of all, and not of Dauid onely. And after this no manne durst question with hym when they sawe that the baytes and snares whiche were layed for hym, redounded vpon theyr owne head.

The xxiii. Chapter.

Than spake Jesus to the people and to his disciples, sayng: The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moyses seate. All therfore whatsoeuer they bid you kepe, kepe and do: but do not after their workes, for they saye and do not. For they bynde together heauy burdens, and hard to be borne, and laye them on menues shoulders, but they themselues will not lyfte at them with one of theyr fyngers. And they do all their workes to be seen of men. The texte.

Therfore whan Jesus had put them so often to sylence, in the presence of the multitude, lest their authoritie should vtterly decay with the people, ouer whom they were sette to be doctours and teachers, he declared that they ought to be heard, but not to be folowed. For although it is moste agreable, that he that taketh vpon him the office of a teacher, should get credite and autoritie to his doctrine, by vertuous liuyng: yet it is not expediente vtterly to despise the holsome doctryne for the naughtie lyfe of the doctour. The reuerence whiche their maners doe not deserue, muste be geuen vnto the authoꝛ, whose commaundementes they recite, and preache. Foꝛ the lawe of god is not polluted, though it be vttered by the mouth of a naughty preacher. Truly vnto hym it is vnprofitable, but it is profitable to the taker. Therfoꝛe Jesus tournyng awaye from the Phariseis, in whom he sawe no hope of better lyfe, he speaketh vnto the people, and the disciples on this maner. The Scribes & the Phariseis vtter themselues what coꝛrupte myndes they haue, how enuiouse, how couetouse, how gredy of vayne glozy they be. But yet foꝛ the authoꝛitie of their office they must be hearde. They occupye the chayre of Moyses, whose lawe they teache. The thinges that they teache are holy: foꝛ they teache the doctryne of other and not their owne, but their lyfe is farre and wyde in distaunce from theyꝛ doctryne. Wherfoꝛe whatsoeuer they prescribe and pointe vnto you by thautoꝛitie of Moyses, kepe it and do it: but beware that ye frame not your maners after theyꝛ lyfe. If they liued as they teache, ye ought wholy to folowe them. Nowe they do not as they teache. They exacte moꝛe than the lawe of other men with great seueritie, and they pardon themselues. They be very rigoꝛouse towarde others, and gentle to themselues. Foꝛ they bynde together heauy and intolerable bundels of cõmaundementes, and laye them vpon other mennes shoulders, whiche they wyll not vouchesafe to touche with their finger. Foꝛ they lode the lawe heuy enough of it selfe, with their constitucions, to get them a fame of learning and holines. And if they perfourme any thyng accoꝛdyng to the commaundement of the lawe, they do it not with their hart, but foꝛ prayse and fame of the people. They be players, and as disgised persons they playe their parte, with a counterfayte visor of religion, to be seen of men. But no man kepeth the lawe but he that doeth as the lawemaker would, he requireth chiefly a pure and sincere mynde. But these men whatsoeuer they do, do it to hauke foꝛ a vayne opinion of holynes, with the simple people.

Al therfoꝛe whatsoeuer thei bid you kepe, kepe & doe &c.

The texte. And they set abroade their Philacteries, and enlarge the boꝛders of their garmentes, and loue the vppermoste seates at feastes, and to sit in the vyleste place in counseis, & greetinges in the market, and to be called of men Rabbi. But be ye not called Rabbi. Foꝛ one is your maister, that is Christ, and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father vpõ the earth. Foꝛ one is your father whiche is in heauen: neyther be ye called maisters, foꝛ one is your maister, that is Christ. He that is greatest among you, shalbe your seruaunt. But whoso exalteth himselfe shalbe brought lowe, and he that humbleth hymselfe, shalbe exalted.

Foꝛ whan God (after that the commaundementes of the lawe were geuen) added: Thou shalt tye them in thy hande, and they shall not bee remoued from thyne iyes: meanyng therby, that we ought neuer to foꝛgette the commaundemẽtes of God, but after their rule to frame all the doinges of our life: these men neglectyng vtterly to kepe the commaundementes of God, yet they magnifie themselues among the people with a false apperaunce. They walke vp and doune bearyng about brode Philacteries, they go with brode & gorgiouse imbroderinges, and shewe furth the commaundementes of the lawe written in them, where as in their lyfe they neuer appeare. These should haue been written in theyꝛ hartes, and expressed in theyꝛ lyfe. So they should please the iyes of God, vnto whom onely our lyfe should playe her pageaunt. But this beholder and loker on despised, they seke after vile praise of the rude multitude. And whereas it becummeth a teacher euery where to expresse noble vertue in his maners and sayinges, and also in his countenaunce, these men do nothyng

els but that that is very vayne, and also scant worthy and mete for manne. If they be called any where to supper, there they place themselues ehyldishly and ambitiously, because the more honorable place is offered vnto them: In Synagoges and common councels, they loue the honour of the high seate. When they be in the market, they reioyce to be saluted honorably. They set vp their combes as often as they heare of the people that honorable title, Rabbi: as who saith, they only be worthy of honour, or be only wyse: where as for this they be least estemed with god, because they seme to themselues greatest: and in this they be most folishe, because they seme to themselues most wise. Honor is due only to God, who only is great in dede, and to be honoured: The praise of wisedome is due onely to God, and authoritie is due only to God. If any of these thynges be in men, it is but a certayne shadowe only, yf it be compared to the greatnes of God, and it cummeth also from the bountefulnesse of God. Therfore yf men yelde any honour vnto menne for the gyftes of God, whiche they suppose to be in them, he to whom it is geuen ought not to chalenge it to hymselfe, but to yelde the whole vnto hym from whom he hath all, yea and that freely, yf he hath any goodnesse. But I would not that ye my disciples should be like vnto them: but rather remembring my exaumple and doctrine, flee the arrogant name of wisedome, nor please not your selues yf any manne call you Rabbies, that is to saye, our maisters. For there is one vnto whom this name truely agreeth, and this is your common maister. But you in comparison of hym be nothyng els but felowe scholers and brethren together: among whom mutuall charitie maketh all lyke. And it is not cumly that any man prefer himselfe before another: but the contencion is farre contrary, that is to saye, that one geue honour to an other, and one with gentlenes and duetie preuente an other. Therfore call no man maister in earth, seyng that whatsoeuer holsome doctrine ye haue, ye haue it all of God, and be bounde to hym for it. By hym he teacheth, whosoeuer teacheth rightly. By his inspiracion he profiteth, whosoeuer truly profiteth. Nor yelde not hereafter vnto manne in yearth, the honorable name of father, sith ye haue once professed the heauenly father, vnto whom ye be bounde both for lyfe, and for whatsoeuer ye haue, and vpon whom ye do wholy depende. Let no manne therfore chalenge vnto hym the honour due vnto God only, let no man geue that to man which is due to God only. To whom only all prayse, honour, and thankes, must be geuen. If any man teache well, let the wisedom of God be praised in him, which doth the woe furth and communicate herselfe by him. If any man doth the parte of a father in diligence and carefulnes, let the goodnes of God be praysed in hym, which doeth prouide for you by him. But the lorde Jesus spake not these thinges as though it were a wicked thing to call a maister by the name of maister, or call a parent by the name of a parent: but by this communicacion he endeuoureth to plucke out vtterly from the mindes of his, their pharisaicall ambicion, whiche chalenge vnto them that, that was Gods, & requireth honour of the people for the doctrine, which was not theirs, but Gods: as though they were the authours, and not rather ministers. Furthermore he noted the simplicitie and flatterye of the people, whiche praysed them immoderately, as though they were more bound to men than to God. And because he perceyued that there sprang of suche ambicion, poyson and destruccion of the congregacions, therfore he finisheth his communicacion with this clause: he that is greatest among you, he shalbe your minister. For what he hath, he hath receyued it els where, and hath receyued it freely: and hath receyued it for this, that he should geue it to other. Therfore the greater he is by the gyftes of God, he shall not be the more arrogaunt, but the more carefull to bestowe them, and the more lowly and humble: leste he should leese at once by arrogācy that, that goddes liberalitie hath geuen vnto him. Let him geue all the glory vnto God the authour, chalengeyng nothing vnto himselfe, but the diligence of an humble minister. He is great in dede, whiche is least in his owne conceyte. And he begynneth now to be least with God, which is great in his owne conceyte. And if a mā crake and auaunce himselfe of the free giftes of God, being spoyled of them whereof he maketh himselfe vnworthy, of the greatest, he is become the leaste. Contrarywise he that doeth submit & humble himselfe, knowlegyng and setting furth his weakenes, and knowlegyng the gyftes of God, wherby he is great, or els shewing and vttering them to the profite and commoditie of his brethren: he because he prouoketh goddes liberalitie through his modestie, the gyftes beyng increased, of great, he is made greater.

And to be called of me Rabbi.

Whoso exalteth himselfe, &c.

The texte. ¶ But woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye shut vp the kyngdom of heauē before men, for ye neither go in your selues neither suffer ye them þ come to enter in.

After these, Jesus turnyng to the Scribes and Pharisees, inueyeth, and speaketh against theyr malice openly, and very frankly, threatnyng them with the vengeaunce of God: that eyther they might repent for shame, or els might turne to better for feare of punishment: and the cōterfeityng of holines set aparte, might beginne to be the seruauntes of the euangelicall godlynes. Woe be to you (q he) ye Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, who professyng the knowlege of the lawe, and therfore in maner kepe the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen: ye do not onely not enter your selues, but ye shut the doores against them that would come in, vnto whom ye ought to open the doores: and ye resiste them that be in a redinesse of themselfe, whom yf they were slacke, ye ought to pricke forwarde. For whereas ye see that the lyght of the ghospell is nowe present, yet for your glory and for your auauntage, ye kepe the people in the shadowes of the lawe, excludyng them from the trueth.

The texte. Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites. For ye deuour widowes houses, and that vnder a pretence of long prayer. Therfore shall ye be the more greuously punished.

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, who vnder the colour of religion, deuour wydowes houses, whom ye deceyue with a false cloke of holynes. For ye counterfeyte long prayer openly, whereas your myndes in the meane time loke for naught els, but for a praye of the folyshe women, whiche styll beleue that in the meane season ye talke with God.

The texte. ¶ Woe be vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, for ye wander about the sea and lande to make one proselyte, and when he is become one, ye make hym two folde more the chylde of hell, than ye your selues are.

Woe be to you Scribes and Phatiseis, Hipocrites, because ye walke about the landes, and seas, to intice sum one of the Gentiles to the profession of the lawe, who, whan he is brought in with hope to learne the lawe, is brought in suche case through your superstitious doctrine, and peruerse maners, that he is not only not made a pure worshipper of God, and heyre of the kyngdom of heauen: but also a more wicked Jewe then he was beyng heathen, and more in daunger of hell, than ye be. For it commeth to passe in maner, that the schol-lers oftentymes passe theyr naughtie masters.

Woe be to you, ye blynde guides: For ye saye. Whosoeuer sweareth by the temple, it is nothyng, but whosoeuer sweareth by the gold of the temple, he is giltie. Ye fooles and blinde. For whether is greater, the golde, or the temple, that sanctifieth the golde? And whosoeuer sweareth by the aulter it is nothyng, but whosoeuer sweareth by the gyft that is vpon it, he is giltie. Ye fooles and blinde: For whether is greater, the gyft or the aulter, which sanctifieth the gyft? Whoso therfore sweareth by the aulter, sweareth by it, and by al thinges that are vpon it. And whosoeuer sweareth by the temple sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth in it. And whoso sweareth by heauen, sweareth by the seate of God, and by hym that sitteth vpon it. The texte.

Woe be to you ye blynde guydes, whiche take vpon you to be teachers, and knowe not what ye teache, swaruing from the scope and ende of the lawe: and wresting all thing to no other ende, but to your owne lucre. For ye saye, whosoeuer sweareth by the temple of the lorde, is not bounde by his othe: but whoso sweareth by the golde, that is in the temple, he is bounde by his othe, leste esteming, through a corrupt iudgemēt, those thinges that be holy of themselfe, than those thinges that make for your auarice. Or els ye folyshe and blynde, answere me: whiche is holyer the golde that doeth garnyshe the temple, and is turned to your lucre, and into matter of your excesse and riote, or the temple it selfe? whose holynes causeth that the golde being prophane in other places, is there counted holy. Also ye saye: he that sweareth by the aulter is not bound by religion: but he that sweareth by the gyft that is sette vpon the aulter, is bound by his othe. O blynde teachers, for whether ought more to be esteemed the gyft, or the aulter whiche sanctifieth the gyft? For the gyft is holy by no nother meanes, but because it is set vpō the holy aulter. And here through corrupte iudgemente, ye wyll haue the gyftes esteemed holyer than the aulter, because they turne to your profite, whereas the temple and the aulter be buylte to the worshyp and glory of God, whiche ye lytle regarde. With these your inuencions what els do ye, but subuerte the lawe of God, whiche forbiddeth all periury? For lyke as by a glosse ye subuerte the commaundement of the honoryng of father and mother: so here ye teache periury. It were high perfeccion vtterly not to sweare, but yet whosoeuer sweareth by any thyng, whiche is esteemed holy with him to whom he sweareth, he is periured, vnlesse that he doth perfourme his othe. Whosoeuer sweareth by the aulter, sweareth also by the thinges that be on the aulter. So whosoeuer sweareth by the temple, sweareth also by God, who dwelleth in the temple. Whosoeuer sweareth by heauen, sweareth by the seate of God, and so it folowerth that he sweareth by hym that sitteth in it: whosoeuer sweareth by an other maynes head, sweareth by a thyng consecrate vnto God, wherof he that sweareth hath no power.

The texte.

Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye tythe mynte, and anyse, and cummyn, and haue left the weyghtier matters of the lawe: Iudgement, mercy, and fayth. These thinges ye ought to haue done, but not to leaue the other vndone. Ye blinde guides whiche streyne out a gnat, and swallowe a camell.

Woe be to you Scribes and Phariseis, Hipocrites, whiche do exacte the leste thynges that pertayne vnto your gayne, whiche make but lytle vnto true godlynes: ye be so superstitiouse in requiring of tythes, that ye wyll gether your tythes of herbes, of moste byle pryce in estimacion: as of Mynte, Rue, Anyse, and Cummyne: and in the meane season, ye sette lytle by those thynges that be of moste value, and whereupon dependeth true iustice, that is to say, iudgement, mercy, and faith: iudgement, that ye do iniury to no man:

mercy, that ye helpe the oppressed and nedy: Faith, that ye deceiue no man with periury. These thinges the lawe so requireth, that it would haue them chiefly regarded, where as for the other thynges the lawe added them, as of lesse valur, because of the other. Therfore these thinges firste of all ought to be regarded ernestly, syth it was thought good that those small thynges should not be omitted. If ye obserued & kept all thinges to the vttermost, it might appeare a religion, nowe for as muche as ye let passe these thinges, without which there is no righteousnesse, and care for those thinges which be light and litle worthe, it is hypocrisie, not religion, yea the destruccion of religion. For before the tenthes were ordeyned, yet vprightnes, well doyng, and fayth were required, and pertayned vnto the prayse of righteousenesse. O blynd guydes, whiche beyng of an awkwarde religion, do streyne out a gnat and swalowe vp a camell, superstitiouse in a litle thyng, and negligent in a great thyng.

The texte. Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye make cleane the vtter part of the cup and platter: but within they are full of bribery and excesse. Thou blynde Pharisey, make cleane first that which is within the cup and platter, that the out sydes of them also may be cleane.

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, because ye be carefull for cleanlynes disorderly. For ye clense your cuppes, dishes, and candelsticks, with often washinges, which because they be outwarde thinges, do not defile the mynde of man: and that that is within, ye leaue vnwashed, that is to saye, your mynde. For it defileth not the mynd of man, yf he drynke of an vnwashed cuppe, but if he drynke wine gotten with fraude: yf he drynke wine for excesse and not for necessitie: likewyse ye washe the body, and the thinges whiche appertcyne vnto the body: but ye purge not the minde vncleane and defiled with rauine, filthy lustes, and with other very fylthy thinges. Thou Pharisey, I speake to the, I say, thou blinde Pharisey, which by thy title and religion doest boast thy selfe to be a maister ouer the people: Thou blynde, fyrst procure for this whiche onely perteyneth vnto the matter: if thou fainly true cleanes, clense first that which is within, & than yf thou thynke good, cleanse the vtter thinges, the body, the apparell, the pottes, the cuppes, the seates, and the other stuffe: or els to shewe furth cleanesse in these thynges, and to neglecte those which onely make vs cleane or vncleane before God, is not cleanes, but Hipocrisye, and the destruccion of true cleanes. For with these your constitucions ye corrupte the myndes of the symple, that they trusting vpon this cleanes, despyse those thynges, whiche onely ought to be regarded

The texte. ¶ Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye are like to payned sepulchres, which appeare beautifull outwarde, but within are full of dead mennes bones, and all filthines. So ye also outwardly appeare righteous vnto men, but within ye are full of dissimulacion and iniquitie.

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, which be so farre from true cleanes, that ye be more lyke vnto whyted graues, and a fayre couering shewyng outwardly a counterfeyted cleanes, where as inwardly they be full of bones of dead karkases, and all filthynesse. Euen so ye with long prayers, brode Philactaries, large gardes, palmes and fasting, and lyke coulours and counterfeytinges, seme outwardly religiouse and perfect, where as your minde is full of Hipocrisye on euery syde, betrayed with all kynde of vice.

The texte. Woe be vnto you Scribes and Pharisees: for ye builde the tumbes of the Prophetes, and garniche the lepulchres of the rightcous, and lay: If we had been in the dayes of our fathers, we would not haue been felowes with them in the bloud of the Prophetes. And so ye be witnesses vnto your selues, that ye are the children of them which killed the Prophetes. Fulfill ye also the measure of your fathers. Ye serpentes, ye generacion of vipers, howe will ye escape the damnacion of hell?

Woe be to you Scribes and Phariseis hipocrites, because through false boasting of holines, ye build vp honorably the tumbes of the Prophetes, and garniche the graues of the iust men, whom your forefathers hath slayne: and making as though ye fauoured the vertue of them that were slaine, and detest the cruelnes of them of whom they were slayne, ye saye: if we had liued in the tyme of our elders, we would not haue consented to the death of innocentes; whereas nowe ye goe about more cruell thynges agaynst hym that excelleth the Prophetes: and in tyme to come, ye will endeuour no lesse agaynst them, whiche shall open you the waye of euerlasting healthe. For as muche as ye be of this minde, truely ye declare that ye be the verye naturall children of them which killed the Prophetes, of whom they were monished frankly and freely: and ye would haue been no better than they, yf it had chaunced you to lyue in theyr time. Go to, be like vnto your elders: & what is lacking to their extreme crueltie, fulfill ye the same that nothyng maye wante. They killed the Prophetes, ye kyll him, whom ỹ Prophetes prophecied. O serpentes, the offspring of vipers, o murtherers, the children of murtherers. Sith our malice is so inuincible, sith ye can be amended by no benefites, by no miracles, by no gentle nor rough communication, by no promises nor threatninges: in case ye maye escape in the meane season the iudgement of men, howe wyll ye escape the iudgement of hell? The which ye heape the more vpō you, because ye be not frayed from the desire of killyng, by the wicked example of your elders. So many Prophetes were sent, of whom ye haue slayne many. At last I came my selfe, agaynst whom, ye knowe what ye haue endeuored.

The texte. Wherfore behold I sende vnto you Prophetes and wyselemen, and Scribes: and sum of them ye shall kill and crucifie, & sum of them ye shall scourge in your Synagoges, and persecute them from citie to citie: that vpon you maye come all the rightcouse bloud, whiche hath been shed vpon the yearth: from the bloud of rightcouse Abell, vnto the bloud of Zacharie the sonne of Barachias, whom ye slewe betwene the temple and the aulter. Verely I saye vnto you: all these thynges shall come vpon this generacion.

And I not contente with this (that it maye be the more euidente vnto all men, that ye be moste worthy moste cruell condemnacion) behold I will sende againe vnto you other Prophetes, wyselemen, and Scribes, which with great gentilnes, maye reuoke you from this crueltie vnto a better mynde: and the murder of the former tymes shall not be layed vnto your charge, yf ye doe penaunce at their preaching. But ye will not fauour them, but some of them ye will kill with the swearde, sum ye wyll beate downe with stones, sum ye wyll crucifie, sum ye will whyp ye in your Synagoges: and will receiue them in no case, insomuch that ye will persecute them frō citie to citie, vntill ye compell the through your vncurable malice, to go to the Gentiles. With the which thyng ye shall prouoke the ye of God agaynst you, that whatsoeuer manslaughter hath been committed of your elders, from the firste murther where Cain killed his brother Abel, vnto the slaughter of Zachary the sōne of Barachias, whom ye killed betwene the temple and the aulter, beeyng nothyng afrayed from murder, by religion of the place, the punishement of all them beeyng put of and differed, shalbe powred vpon your head, who haue not onely followed, but also farre passed the crueltie of all your forefathers. Therfore your misery shal be so notable, that the whole worlde shal vnderstand what great cruelnes this nacion hath vsed against euery good man: and howe stiffe their rebellion hath been agaynst God, sufferyng them so long with suche gentilnes, and prouokyng them so often with suche benefites vnto better thinges.

The texte. O Hierusalem, Hierusalem, thou that killest the Prophetes, and stonest them which are sent vnto the: how often would I haue gathered thy children together, euen as the hen gathereth her chickens vnder hir wynges, and ye would not? Beholde your house is lefte vnto you desolate. For I saye vnto you: Ye shall not see me hence furth tyll that ye say, blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the lorde.

After that these thynges were spoken, the moste meke Lorde Iesus, who of his goodnes would no manne vtterly to perysshe, considerynge the miserable destruccion nowe at hand of the citie of Hierusalem, (for all thinges were present vnto his iyes) and therewith also their inuincible stubbernes wherwith they should turne goddes gentilnes into fury and rage, doeth bewayle lamentably the destruccion of the nacion of the Iewes, geuyng an inckling of his seconde cumming: when at last the Iewes shall repent them ouer late, and acknowlege Christ, whom nowe they deny: where as it were more for their profite, nowe to confesse their sauiour sent them from God, and to syng the same hartely vnto him, whiche they disdayne that the children should syng: Blessed be he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde. Hierusalem (ye he) Hierusalem, whiche killest the Prophetes, and stonest to death them that be sent vnto thee, howe often haue I trauayled to gather thy children together lyke as the carefull henne fearing her chickens doth clocke them together, and norysshe them vnder her wynges, and thou wouldest not? Nothyng is let passe of my behalfe, whereby thou mightest be saued, but contrarywyse thou haste done what thou canst to bryng destruccion to thee, and to excluide saluacion from thee. But to whom free will is once geuen, he cannot be saued agaynst his wyll. Your wyll ought to be agreable vnto my wyll. Behold a miserable calamitie is ouer your heades. Your dwelling place shall be lefte to you desolate. Ye shall be left to your blyndnes, vntyll that beyng once taught with so great miseries, ye fall to repentaunce. For I saye vnto you: hereafter ye shall not see me vntyll the tyme come, wherin ye beholding me with the iyes of your fayth, shall say: blessed be he that cummeth in the name of the lorde, whom now ye falsely accuse, that he cummeth in the name of Beelzebub.

¶ The .xxiiii. Chapter.

The texte. And Iesus went out and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to shewe hym the buildinges of the temple. Iesus sayed vnto them: See ye not all these thinges? Verely I say vnto you: There shall not be here left one stone vpon another, that shall not be destroyed.

But Iesus to represente with a certeyne fygne and token that the temple and all the religion of the Iewes lawe should shortly be abolished, departing out of the churche began to go awaie. And the disciples because they heard sum mencion of destruccio, they shewe their lorde the bougenes of the temple, being suche a meruelous piece of worke, that it semed pitie it should be destroied, and further so fyrmely buylte, that it seined not possible to be hurled downe. But Jesus aunswered: see ye (q he) all these? This be assured of, there is none of all these, so strong, so goodly, or so holy, which shall not be throwen downe, and so hurled in pieces, that one stone shall not stande on an other.

¶ And as he sate vpon mount Oliuete, his disciples came vnto him secretly, saying: tell vs whan shall these thinges be: and what shalbe the token of thy cumming, and of the end of the worlde. And Jesus aunswered, and sayed vnto them: take hede that no man deceiue you. For many shall come in my name saying, I am Christe: and shall deceyue many. Ye shall heare of warres, and tidinges of warres, be not troubled. For all must come to passe, but the ende is not yet. Nacion shall rise against nacion, and realme against realme. and there shall be pestilence and hunger, and yeartthquakes in all places. All these are the beginninges of sorowes. The texte.

These thinges spoken, Jesus went into the mount of Olines. Here, as he sate, hauing the temple in his sight, fower of his disciples whome he called first of all, Peter, James, John, & Andrew, went vnto him seuerally to knowe more certainly of the time whan suche great miseries should fall, for they supposed that byandby after the destruccion of the citie of Hierusalem, and the hurlyng downe of the temple, Christe would come agayne in his maiestie. But Christe to make them the more bigilante and ware, so tempereth his communicacion, that he willeth not that they should know the tyme of the latter cummyng, and yet thorough the rehersyng of miseries, he maketh them carefull, and in a redines against the cumming of miseries. The disciples therfore saye: Tell vs when these thinges whiche thou speakest of, shall come to passe: and by what signe and token we maye knowe thy cummyng and the ende of this worlde is at hande. But Jesus not aunsweryng to that whiche they demaunded: turneth rather to those thynges whiche should prepare theyr myndes to continuall watche in the ghospell. I shall come in dede (q he,) but beware leste anyman making a lye as touchyng my cumming, deceyue you. For many shal come, which shall take vpon them my name, and say that they be Christe, and shall fynde some to deceyue, folishe and lyght of belefe. The tumult and hurlyburly of all thynges shall shewe a certayne apperaunce, that the ende of the worlde is at hande. For ye shall heare of warres, and of sundrye rumours of warres more sore and cruell (as it is wonte to be) than the thinges theyr selfe. Nacio shall arise against nacion, and realme against realme. &c.

But let not these thinges byandby discourage your myndes, that ye should thinke the latter time is nowe at hande. This troublesome worlde must nedes arise but the ende of illes shall not be furthwith. This storme shall sprede farder abrode. For not onely Hierusalem shall be destroyed, but the whole world shall buckell together with warres and slaughters. Nacion shall rise agaynst nacion, and kyngdom shall skirmishe with kyngdom, and the greatest parte of mischiefe and miserie, men shall suffer of men. Furthermore, God taking vengeaunce, shall put vnto his scourges, pestilence, famine, and in diuerse places earthquakes. And these thinges be yet no certayne argumente of the worldes ende, but only signes and tokens of the ill and misery, and as it were a breding of that last and greatest storme wherwith the worlde shall perysshe.

¶ Then shall they put you to trouble and shall kyll you, and ye shall be hated of all nacions for my names sake. And than shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and hate one another. And many false prophetes shall arise, and deceyue many, and in quiete shall haue the vpper hande, and the loue of many shalbe colde. But he that endureth to the ende, the same shalbe safe. And this ghospell of the kyngdome shalbe preached in all the worlde for a witnesse to all nacions, and than the ende shall come. The texte.

And

And ye shal be hated of all nacions for my names sake. &c.

And ye in the meane season shall not be free from suche maner of illes and miseries. For in this tumulte & hurly burly of thynges, men shall plucke you into diuerse afflictions, and finally kyll you: and in the meane season ye shall be hated not onely of the Iewes, but of all the Gentiles, not for your ill dedes, but because ye professe my name. In the meane time many being offended and greued with aduersities, and ouercummed with punishmentes, shall swarue from the professing of my name, and one shall betraye an other, one kinesman shall betraye an other, one frende an other, & whom nature hath coupled with the bandes of charitie, they shall hate eche other. There shall be also another kynde of ill more greuouse and intollerable. There shall arise false Prophetes and false teachers, who counterfeiting to preach my ghospell, shall see to and prouide for their owne glory, their owne lucre, and their owne belly: and in stede of my spirite they shall inspire their owne disciples with the spirite of Sathan, and in the stede of the kyngdome of heauen, they shall teache the kingdome of this worlde. They whom punishmentes and tormentes could not ouercome, shall be caught in the snares of these menne. For there is not a more deadly enemy than a familiar and a fayned frende. In these mischifes and miseries a man shall not loke for muche comfort of his brothers and frendes. For the multitude of sinnes beyng so great, the charitie of many shall ware colde. But yet as for you there is no perill, so that ye perseuer and continue vnto the ende with a constant and a valiant courage. No greatnes of aduersitie, can destroy any man, but him that lacketh the ryght mynde. And I wyll not suffer you to perysshe, nor the ghospell to be oppressed. Nay, by these tumultes and troubles, the strength of the ghospell shall encrease more and more: and the storme of ylles shall be able to doe no nother thyng agaynst you, but to make your godlynes to be the better tried, and the more to appeare. For the ende of the worlde shall not come before that this ghospell of the kyngdome of heauen, be preached throughout al the kyngdomes of the worlde, and hath come to all nacions, leste they that would not obey, myght pretende ignorauncе. When this shall be doen, than shall come the ende of the worlde.

The texte. When ye therfore shall see the abhominacion of desolacion, that was spoken of by Daniell the prophete, standing in the holy place, whoso readeth it, let hym vnderstande.

Wherof if ye seke a token, this is it. When ye shall see the abhominable Idoll whiche shall endeuour vtterly to subuerte the religion of the ghospell, of the whiche Daniell in tymes past prophecied vnto you, saying: and in the middes of the weeke, the sacrifice & offeryng shall be taken awaie: and the abhominacion of desolacions shall be in the temple vnto the ende of the worlde: when ye shall see (I saye) this abhominable Idoll set in the temple, that is, in the towre of holynes: he that readeth the prophecie of the Prophete, let him vnderstand. This woorde is misticall, and requireth a spirituall reader.

The texte. Than let them that be in Iewry flee vnto the mountaynes, and let not hym whiche is in to the house toppe come downe to take any thyng out of his house. And let not hym that is in the fieldes, retourne backe to fetche his clothes.

Therfore when this storme shalbe at hand, they that be in the cities of Iewry let them forsake the cities, and flee into the mountaynes: and they that be in the toppes of the houses let them leape downe, & not come downe to take any thyng awaie with them, out of their houses: & they that be found in the fielde at that tyme, let them not runne backe to their house to fetche their apparell.

For

for than there shall be no leysure to prouyde for theyr goodes, for it is a great matter yf they can saue theyr lyfe with spedy flyght. For thother thinges may be recouered, but the lyfe once lost, cannot be restored.

¶ Woe shalbe in those dayes to them that are with childe, and to them that geue sucke. The texte. But pray ye that your flyght be not in the wynter, or on the Sabboth day. For than there shalbe great tribulacion, suche as hath not ben from the beginnyng of the worlde vntyll this time, nor shalbe. And except those dayes should be shortened, there should haue ben no flesche saued: but for the electes sake, those dayes shalbe shortened.

Therfore women with childe, and women that geue sucke shalbe in an yll case in those dayes. For they that be great cannot take of the burden of theyr belly to flee awaye spedely: nor they that geue sucke cannot caste of theyr children, whom they loue more tenderly than themselues, lyke as they doe caste of money or apparell. But as for you, who shall not be lette neyther with house, neyther with possessions, nor with childzen, ye must onely pray that it chaunce not so, that ye be compelled to flee in the wynter, or on the Sabboth day. For ye must flee spedely and farre. But the wynter by the reason of roughnes and shortnes of dayes, is not commodious for them that iourney, & on the Sabboth day the religion of your lawe letteth you, that ye cannot flee farre. For, at that time, there shalbe so sore and behement affliction, as was neuer synce the worlde was made vnto this daye, and hereafter neuer shalbe. And yf the calamitie should be so continuall as it is behement, no man should be left alyue. Theyr malyce did deserue bitter destruccion, but for the electe (be they neuer so fewe) those dayes shalbe shortened.

¶ Than yf any man saye vnto you: Lo here is Christe or there, beleue it not. For there The texte. shall aryse false Christes and false prophetes, and shall shewe great signes and woonders insomuche that (yf it were possible) the very electe should be brought into errour. Beholde I haue tolde you before. Wherfore yf they say vnto you: loe, he is in the desertes, go not forth: Beholde he is in the secrete places, beleue it not. For as the lightnyng commeth out of the East, and appeareth vnto the west, so shall the cummyng of the sonne of man be. For wheresoeuer the dead carcas shall be, thyther will also the Egles be gathered together.

In this confusion and hurly burly of thynges, whan my cumming shall be loked for, men must take diligent hede, that they be not deceyued through the craft of deceyuers. For there shall ryse many false Christes, whiche shall boaste themselues to be Christe, and be not: but be rather myne aduersaries: whiche also shall saye that they be Prophetes, and be not, but rather be the teachers of errours. They shall not be only furnished with crafte, and a false cloke of holynes, but also they shall counterfeyte my power with woonders, and magicall meruailes: and they shall take vpon them my person with so many marueylouse inuiglynges, that the electe also (yf it were possible) should be brought into errour. Ye therfore being monished beware, for I haue told you before to the intent ye should be ware. Than if they say Christe is in the desertes, goe not out: loe, he is in the inner parlers, goe not in: loe, he is here or there, beleue it not. The seconde cumming shall not be after such sorte, as ye terme it, that is to say, softe, milde, and humble, but sodayne & compassing the whole world with the sodayne light of maiestie. For lyke as the lightnyng shynyng forth flasheth sodayuely from the East to the west: so shall be the cummyng of the sonne of man. And ye nede not to feare, that he shall not be with mein suche a confusion and hurly burly of thynges. Wheresoeuer the body shalbe, thyther shal the Egles storke and gather. The head shall not lacke his membres.

Immediatly

¶ Immediatly after the tribulacion of those dayes, the sonne shalbe derkened, and the
The texte. moone shall not geue her light, and the starres shall fall frō heauen, and the powers of heauen shalbe moued. And than shall appeer in heauen the token of the sonne of man, and than shall all the kynredes of the earth mourne, and shall see the sonne of man cumming in the cloudes of heauen with great power and glory. And he shal sende his angels with a great voyce of a trumpet, and they shall gether together his chosen frō the fower wyndes, from the highest parte of heauen vnto the endes of them.

The heauenly bodyes also shall feele the greatnes of this calamitie. For both the sonne shall be darkened, and the sonne beeyng darkened whereof the moone borowed her lyght, the moone shall shewe no lyght. The starres shall fall from heauen, and the powers of heauen shall shake, beeyng in daunger of fallyng. Than among the great and thycke darkenesse, the signe of the sonne of man shall shyne from heauen, the signe I saye, wherby he ouercame Sathan, and consumed al his tyrannye: the signe, wherby Sathan craked in vayne that he had the hygher hande.

The which once seen, the nacions of the whole worlde shall strike their brē-stes when the Iewes shall see whom they haue offended, when the Gentyles shall see the maiestie of the crosse, whiche they laughed to skorne. For they shall see the semie of man, whom they nowe despise, humble & simple, cummyng on hygh in the cloudes of the ayer with a great army of aungels, with a wonder-full maiestie and glory. Than he shall sende furthe his aungels, to gather together with a sounding trumpe, all his elect from the fower wyndes, from the hygh toppe of heauen to the vttermoste coaste of the same.

Learne a similitude of the figgetree. When his boughes be yet tendre, and the leaues
The texte. sprowte out, ye knowe that Summer is nigh. Solykewyse ye when ye shall see all these thynges, be ye sure that it is nere euen at the doores. Verily I saye vnto you: this generacion shall not passe, vntyll all these thinges be doen. Heauen and yearth shall passe, but my woorde shall not passe. But of that day and houre no man knoweth, no not the aungels of heauen, but my father onely.

But at what tyme these thinges shall come to passe, it is not in me exactly to determine. But yet of those aduersities whiche I haue recited, as of certayne preambles and tokens before, ye maye gesse that the tyme is not far of. Lyke as the figgetree doth declare before by certayne tokens that Sommer is at hande, as whan at the blowyng of the westerne wynde the boughes begyn to wexe tender, and the buddes spryng furth, & the leaues desire to spredе a brode:
so ye also whan ye shall see all these thynges whiche I haue spoken of, knowe ye well that the cummyng of the sonne of God is at hande. I assure you, this generacion shall not passe, but that all thynges whiche be spoken before, shall come to passe. Heauen and yearth shall perishe rather than my woorde shalbe vayne. Therfore it is inough for you to knowe the signes whiche do portende and shewe the daye of my cummyng, lest it come vpon you vnwares. But it is not your parte to searche out exactly the daye or houre whan the sonne of man shall come, forasmuche as the knowledge of these thynges is not geuen to the aungels of heauen, no the sonne of man knoweth them not. The father hath reserued this vnto hymselfe alone. And so it is expediente for you, to the intente ye may be alwaye in a redines.

¶ But as the dayes of Noe were, so shall also the cummyng of the sonne of manne be.
The texte. For as in the dayes that went before the flud, they did eate and drynke, marry, and were maryed, vntyll the daye that Noe entred into the shyp, and knewe not tyll the flud came, and toke them all away: so shall also the cumming of the sonne of man be. Than shall two be in the feelde, the one taken, & other refused. Two women shalbe grynding at the mil, the one receiued, the other refused. Two in a bed, the one shalbe receiued, & the other refused.

That

That day shall cum sodaynly, and vnwares vnto others. Lyke as in the tyme of Noe, whan the fludde was tolde them certayne yeares before, yet they thinkyng that it should not cum to passe, dyd eate and dryncke, and married furthe theyr doughters, and marryed wyues vntill the last day in the whyche Noe entred into the arcke, and beleued not that the fludde shoulde cum to passe, vntill they sawe it nowe at hande: wherewyth all they were destroyed, who by example of Noe, woulde not prepare themselues agaynst that day. Lyke as than a fewe that were taken into the arcke were preserued, the other whyche were lefte without, perysshed: euen so at that tyme when the sonne of manne shal cum, they that shall perysshe, shall sodainly be deuided from them that shall be saued. There shallbe two labouring in one field, felowes in worke & wages, of whom the one shall be taken, and the other shall be forsaken. There shall be two grynding in one myll, whereof the one shalbe taken, the other shalbe forsaken. Yea and of two that lye in one bed, the one shalbee taken, the other shalbee forsaken. For it is not the woorke, or the place, or the manner of lyfe, but the affection and good desyre, shal make man blessed.

Watche therfore, for ye knowe not what houre your Lorde wyll cum. Of thys yet be sure, that if the good man of the house knewe what houre the theefe would cum, he would surely watche, and not suffer hys house to be broken vp. Therfore be ye also ready, for in suche an houre as ye thynke not, wyl the sonne of man cum. The texte

Wherfore seing that these thynges vndoubtedly shal cum to passe, and it cannot certainly be knowen vpon what daye they shal cum: wake and watche cõtinually, leste that daie cum vpon you vnwares and vnprepared. If menne watche that theyr money perysshe not, muche more oughte you to watche that your soule perisshe not. For what householder is so negligent whych yf he knew that the thiefe would breake into hys house in the nyght season woulde sleepe all nyght, and suffer hys house to be broken downe? Therfore ye muste wake all your lyfe, because ye be certayne that the daye wyl cum, whan ye looke not for it. For so ye must liue, that whansoeuer the day dothe cum, it may finde you doing your duty, that furthwyth ye may be receiued vnto your rewarde.

Who is a faythful and a wyse seruaunt, whome hys lorde hath made ruler ouer hys household, to geue them meate in season? Blessed is that seruaunt, whome his lorde (whan he cummeth) shall fynde so doing: Verely I saye vnto you, that he shall make him ruler ouer all his goodes. But and yf that euil seruaunt saye in his hert, my lord wyll be long a cummyng, (and so begyn to smyte his felowes, yea, and to eate and dricke with the dronken) the same seruauntes Lorde shal cum in a daye, whan he loketh not for him, and in an houre that he is not ware of, and shal hewe hym in pieces, and geue hym hys porcion with Hypocrites: there shall be weppyng and gnashyng of teeth. The texte

Wyll not a wyse and a faythfull seruaunt do the same, whome his maister going farre from home, hathe made ruler ouer hys familie, to geue them meate in due season? The maister doth not poynte hym when he wyl retourne home, leste he shoulde bee slacke in hys office: but whansoeuer the mayster shall returne, shal not the seruaunt be happy yf hys maister finde him doing his duty? Certaynely I saye vnto you, that the maister hauing a triall of his trustinesse, will bee bolde to truste hym with greater thynges, and wyll make hym ruler ouer all hys goodes. Contrary wise yf the ill and vnfaithfull seruaunt wil saye in hys harte: my mayster is longe awaye, and perchaunce he wyll neuer returne: and vpon this hope begynneth to beate hys felowe seruauntes, and neglecting the famylye, eateth and drynketh with dronckardes, howe vnhappy shall he be, when hys mayster shal cum at the daye when he loketh not for hym, and the houre when he thought that he would not returne? For he shal not onely set hym beside his office, but he will also cut him a sonder in the myddest, and ioyne hys parte with the Hipocrytes, which hath the title and name of the office of the ghospel, where as in their doinges, they be contrarye to the ghospell. And there for hys sensuall pleasures of wrongshaped sweetenesse, wherewith beyng inebriate and drounken he had not awayted for the cummyng of hys mayster, he shall be punished with intolleratable torment: his laughyng shalbe turned into weppyng, and hys songes into gnashyng of teethe.

The .xxv. Chapter.

The texte. Than shall the kyngdome of heauen be like vnto ten virgins, whiche takyng theyr lampes, wente furthe to meete the spouse. But fyue of them were foolyshe, and fyue were wyse. They that were foolyshe, takynge theyr lampes, tooke no oyle with them, but the wyse tooke oyle with them in theyr vessels with the lampes. Whyle the spouse taryed, they all slumbered and slepte. And at midnight there was a crye made: Beholde the spouse cummeth goe furth to meete hym. Than all the virgins arose, and prepared theyr lampes. And the foolishe sayed vnto the wyse: geue vs of your oyle, for our lampes are out. But the wyse answered, saying: Not so, lest there be not ynoughe for vs and you, but goe ye rather to the sellers, and by your selues. And whyle they wente to bye, the bridegrome came, and they that were ready went in with hym, to the mariage, and the doore was shutte. Afterwarde cum the other virgins, saiyng: Lorde lorde open vnto vs. But he answerynge, sayeth: Verely I saye vnto you: I knowe you not. Watche therfore, for ye knowe not the day nor the houre, in the whiche the soune of man shal cum.

AND Iesus to put in the myndes of hys disciples surely, that they shoulde not slacke or sleepe in thys like, but that throughe the continuall seruyce of godlinesse and duties towarde theyr neyghboure, they shoulde get and prepare them thynges for the waye to euerlastyng lyfe: (for in the resurrection, we shoulde seke it to late, vnlesse we shoulde prepare in tyme) he sette furthe a parable of tenne virgins, who takyng theyr lampes, wente to meete the spouse. But of these, fyue were fooles, whych prouided them not of oyle agaynste the cummyng of the bridegrome, because they thought he woulde not cumme so sodenly, but that they myghte haue had space to gette them oyle sumwhere. But the wyse virgins knowyng that the tyme was vncertayne whan theyr spouse shoulde cum, lest they myght bee found vnredy, caryed out with them in theyr vessellis, oyle for theyr lampes, whereby they myght refreshe the lampes as they began to kayle. Therefore when the spouse differred hys cumming longer all the virgines beganne to nappe, and at length fel a slepe. In the dead nighte sodainly rose a clamour and a noyse emong the seruauntes callyng them oute to meete the spouse: beholde the bridegrome is at hande, goe furthe and meete hym. Than al the virgines wakyng from slepe prepared their lampes. But the fooles when they sawe they muste departe sodainely at middenight, and hadde no oyle, theyr lampes nowe kaylyng of lyght, they desyred the wyse virgines to geue them parte of theyr oyle. But they made answere: we feare that we haue not inough both for vs and you. Go ye rather to the oyle sellers and by of them.

And

And in the meane tyme as they went to bye, the brydegrome came and they that were ready, entred in with him to the mariage, and furthwith the gate was shut. At last come the foolysche virgins also, and knocke at the gate, and saye. Lorde, lorde, open the gate for vs. Unto whome the brydegrome made answere: truely I knowe you not. Wherfore after the example of the wyse virgyns, and of the faythfull seruaunt, and the politike householder, watche ye, and prepare in time the store of good workes, because ye knowe not the daye, nor the houre of hys cummyng, and when he shall sodenly appeare, there shalbe nowe no lenger time of well doyng: but euery manne shall haue rewarde accordyng as he hath done before.

The texte. Likewise a certaine man taking his iourney into a straung countrey, called his seruauntes and deliuered vnto them hys goodes: and vnto one he gaue fyue talentes, and to another two, and to another one, accordyng to hys habilitie, and streyght way departed. And he that had receiued fyue talentes, went and occupyed wyth the same, and gayned other fiue talentes. Lykewise also he that had receyued two, gayned other two. But he that had receyued one, went and digged in the yearth, and hyd his lordes moneye.

Jesus added also another parable, stirryng hys disciples to the continuall desyre of good woorkes, that they shoulde not suffer the doctrine and gyftes that he gaue them, to bee barren and vnfruitfull through theyr negligence, but through theyr diligence and carefulnesse, shoulde turne them to the profite of theyr neyghboure, and so make themselues mete for greater giftes, because they hadde bestowed that thyng which they hadde receyued after theyr measure and capacitie, for theyr maisters aduauntage, who desireth to be enriches with suche gayne. A certayne man (ye he) goyng farre from home, called his seruauntes, and deliuered them hys goodes, not to spende them and lauysche them oute for their owne pleasure, but to gette sum bauntage therof to theyr mayster, of whome they had receyued the stocke. And to one he gaue one talente, vnto another two, agayne to another fyue, as he thought euery man meete. Thys done, furthwith he toke hys iourney: He therfore that hadde fyue talentes committed vnto hym, ceased not, but wente furthwith and lente furthe the moneye that he had taken, to vsurye, so often that at laste by vsurye he gayned almuche as hys stocke came to, and of fyue talentes he made tenne. In lyke maner he that had two talentes committed vnto hym, soe occupied them, that by vsurye, he made his gaine as good as his stocke. Further he that had one talente deliuered him, went hys wayes for slogitsshenes, and hyd the talente, that he had receyued, in the grounde, thynkyng it ynoughe, yf he restored agayne the stocke to his maister.

The texte. After a long season, the lorde of those seruauntes came and reckened with them. And he that had receiued fiue talentes came, and brought other fyue talentes, saiyng: Lorde thou deliueredst vnto me fyue talentes: Behold I haue gained with them fyue talentes mo. His lorde sayed vnto hym: O good and faythfull seruaunt, thou haste been faithfull ouer few thynges, I wyll make the ruler ouer many thynges. Enter thou into the ioye of thy lorde. He also that had receyued two talentes, came and sayed: Lord thou deliueredst vnto me two talentes: Lo I haue wonne two other talentes with them. His lord saied vnto him: O good and faythfull seruaunt, thou haste been faithfull ouer fewe thinges, enter into the ioye of thy lorde.

Therfore after long iourneying, the maister returned home and required accoumpte of hys seruauntes, of that he had deliuered them, and of that, that they had layed out. Than came furth he whiche had receiued fyue talentes, and brought other fyue whiche he had gayned by vsury, makyng his accoumpt after this sorte: Ye gaue me a stocke of fiue talentes, lo, I haue gayned as muche more to them. The maister praisyng the diligence of hys seruaunte, saieth: O good and trusty seruaunt: because I haue founde the trusty in a litle money, I wyll truste the with mo thynges: enter into the ioye of thy maister. After him came he also vnto whome the maister had committed two talentes, and beyng commaunded to make his accoumpt, sayethe: syr ye committed vnto me the stocke of two talentes, lo, I haue gayned as muche agayne by vsury. The maister commendyng the diligence of this seruaunte also, sayeth: O good and trustye seruaunt, because I haue founde the trusty in a litle, hereafter I wyll truste the with greater thynges: enter into thy maysters ioye.

The texte.

And he whyche had receyued one talente, came, and sayed: Lorde I knewe the that thou arte an hard man, reapyng where thou haste not sowen, and gatheryng where thou hast not strawed, and therfore I was afrayed and went and hyd thy talent in the yearth: Lo, there thou hast that is thyne. His lorde answered, and saied vnto hym. Thou euil and slouthfull seruaunt, thou knewest that I reape where I sowed not, and gathered where I haue not strawed, thou oughtest therfore to deliuer my moneye to the exchaungers, & than at my cummyng, should I haue receyued my owne wyth gayne. Take therfore the talente from hym, & geue it vnto hym whyche hath ten talentes: For to euery one that hath shalbee geuen, and he shall haue aboundaunce. But he that hath not, from hym shalbe taken away that whyche he hath. And caste the vnprofitable seruaunte into vtter darkenes. There shalbe weepyng and gnashyng of teeth.

Finally came he also, whyche hadde hyd in the grounde the talente that he hadde receyued, and beyng commaunded to render accoumpte, doethe not onelye not acknowelege the faulte of slowthefulnesse, but also accusyng hys maister of roughnes, and greate couetousnes, doeth double the faulte of hys duetye neglected. Syr (q̄ he) I knewe ye were a roughe and a soze manne, ye take haruest there where ye sowed not: and gather gayne there, where ye did no coste: Therefoze fearyng leste yf my stocke by anye chaunce shoulde haue been lost, ye wouldе haue been cruell and soze agaynste me: I wente and hydde youre talente in the grounde. Thys hadde I rather doe, than to goe aboute to gette gayne by vsury, and in the meane season to be in daunger of the stocke. Lo thou haste that that is thyne owne. If I deserue not prayse foz increase of game, yet I haue prouided that the stocke shoulde bee safe and sure. This communication the maister turneth into hys owne heade saiyng: Thou naughty and slouthfull seruaunte, thou knowest as thou sayest, that I am desirouse of gayne: and that I take my haruestе there, where I haue not sowen: and gather gayne there where I bestowed no coste. The moze therefoze oughteste thou to haue committed my moneye vnto the exchaungers, and I that hunte foz gayne whereas I haue done no coste, shoulde haue cumme and requited my moneye with gayne, and haue taken auauntage there, where as I hadde sowen and doone coste. The stocke was myne, not thyne: Thou were bounde to be a diligent seruaunt vnto thy maysier. Than he turnyng vnto the other seruauntes, sayed: take awaye the talente from thys vnprofitable seruaunte and geue it to hym that hath tenne talentes. And as they meruayled that he commaunded moze to be geuen vnto hym whyche had alreadye aboundantlye, the maister sayeth: so it shall cumme to passe in thys kynde of ryches. Whoso hath, he is wozthye to receyue moze, that he maye abounde and haue plenty: but he that by slouthefulnes hathe gotte hym no maner of gaine, shall be robbed also of that, that he semeth foz to haue, because he is vnwozthye to haue it. Furthermoze take awaye that vnprofitable seruaunte from my syght,

and caste hym into the outewarde darkenes. There in the stede of the ioye of hys maister, whych he would not deserue, he shall be pained with wepyng and gnashing of teeth. With suche parables the Lorde Jesus pricked forward his disciples bothe with the greatnes of rewardes, and with the feare of punishementes, vnto the desyre of the euangelicall godlines, and also to doe for theyr neyghboures: and to feare them from slouthfulnes and from boldenes of yll doyng.

The texte. When the sonne of man cummeth in hys glory, and all hys holy angels with hym, than shall he sit vpon the seate of hys glory, and before hym shall be gathered all nations. And he shall separate one from another, as the shepeherde doeth seperate the shepe from the goates, and shall set the shepe on the ryght hande, but the goates on the lefte hande.

The whyche thyng he dyd also farre more manifestly and clerely in his last narracion, where he layeth before theyr iyes, bothe the maiestye of his cummyng, and the separacion of the good from the yll, whyche nowe lyue in the churche mixte together: and also the dyuerse desertes and rewardes of bothe partes: shortly he setteth before theyr iyes the whole maner of the latter iudgemente: knowyng and consyderyng that the day of his deathe was nowe at hande, to the intente his disciples beyng instructed with so many lessons, should in no case discourage theyr hartes for the shamefull death of the crosse: but should comforte and solace this present affliccion and shame, with the consideracion of the felicitie and glory to cum. And also that thei should not go about or withe any vengeaunce to the yll and wicked men, forasmuche as they knew that according to theyr desertes, in that iudgemente they shoulde bee punished eternally. When the sonne of man (q he) whome ye shall see shortely most low and abiect, shall cum in his maiestie, the companies of al angels gardyng him, than he shall sit as iudge ouer all in the seate of hys maiestie, and al the nacions of the whole worlde shal be called before hym. For no man, be he high or low, can escape that iudgemente. Thys shalbe done not by mans coniectures, but by the exact iudgemente of god, vnto whose iyes all thynges be open. And firste he shall seperate the good from the yll, lyke as the shepeherde when he numbreth hys flocke, dothe shed the shepe from the goates. And he shall sette the shepe, that is, the innocentes and well doers, on the ryght hand: and he shall set the goates, that is, the hurteful and yll doers, on the lefte hand. And so the whole number of men deuided into two rayes or sortes, as a iust iudge he wil shewe vnto bothe a iuste cause of his iudgemente, that the good mate know by what well doynges they haue attained vnto so great felicitie, and the yll may heare with what offences they haue deserued euerlastyng punishemente.

The texte. Then the kyng shall saye vnto those that be on hys ryght hand: Cum ye blessed of my father, possesse ye the kyngdome prepared for you, from the begynnyng of the worlde: for I was an hungred, and ye gaue me meate, I was athyrste, and ye gaue me drinke, I was harbourlesse, and ye toke me in, I was naked, and ye clothed me, I was sicke, and ye visited me, I was in prison, & ye came to me. Than the iuste shall answere, saiyng: Lorde, when dyd we see the hungry, and fed thee? or athyrst, and gaue the drynke? And when did we see thee harbourlesse and tooke thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? or when dyd we see thee sycke, or in prison, and came vnto thee? And the kyng answeryng, shal saye vnto them: verely I saye vnto you, in asmuche as ye haue done it vnto one of the leaste of these my brethren, ye haue done it to me.

And salutyng the sorte on the ryght hande, with a mylde and a merye chere, shall saye: Cum my frendes, whome the worlde tooke for vyle and execrable, but whom my father taketh for honourable and prayse worthye. Now for the illes and displeasures whych ye haue suffered for my sake, take the inheritaūce of the heauenly kyngdome, whiche by the diuine prouision and counsell, was prepared for you of God the forekmower of all thynges, before the world was made. With this so great rewarde it is thought good to recompence the workes of your greate loue towarde me, leste ye myght thynke that they were lost. For in tymes paste when I was hungrye, ye gaue me meate: whan I was thyrsty ye gaue me drynke: whan I was a straunger, and nedye of harboure, ye toke me into your houses: whan I was naked, ye couered me: whan I was sycke, ye dyd visite me: whan I was in prison, ye came to comforte me: ye gaue me youres suche as they were: nowe I on the otherside do communicate and geue vnto you my whole kyngdome, whiche is common to me and my father. Whan these thynges shalbe heard of the iust menne, whiche doe the so vse the workes of charitie that in maner they knowe not that they haue doon them, they shall aunswere hym, saiyng: Lorde when sawe we thee hungrye, and fed thee? thyrsty and gaue thee drynke? whan saw we thee a straunger, & brought the into our house? or whan dyd we couer the beyng naked? Whan dyd we visite thee beyng sicke? Whan dyd we cum vnto thee beyng in prison? Than the kyng shall saye openly, that he would it to be accounted doen to hym, what soeuer is geuen to any one of them, whome the worlde despiseth for they? pouertye and lowne: yet he despyseth them not, insomuch that he did vouchsafe to honour them with the name of brethren. Certaynely (shall he saye) I saye vnto you, although I haue no nede of mans helpe, whiche am lorde ouer all, yet whereas ye haue doen these thynges for my sake to anye of these my poore litle brethren, ye haue doen them to me.

The texte. ¶ Than shall he saye to those that shalbe on the lefte hand: Depart from me ye cursed, into fyer euerlastyng whyche is prepared for the deuill and hys angels. For I haue hungered, and ye haue not geuen me meate, I haue thyrsted, and ye haue not geuen me drynke, I haue bene harbourlesse, and ye haue not taken me in, I haue been naked, and he haue not clothed me, I haue bene sicke and in prison, and ye haue not visited me. Than shal they also answere to hym, and saye: Lorde when did we see thee hungrye or thirsty, or harbourles, or naked, or sycke, or in prison, and did not minister vnto thee? Than shall he answere vnto them, saiyng: verely I saye vnto you, in as muche as ye did it not to one of the least of these ye dyd it not to me. And they shal go into euerlastyng punishement, but the iust into life euerlastyng.

Than with an horrible loke turnyng to them that shall stande on the lefte hand, he shall geue a terrible sentence: Goe awaye from me ye whome the worlde flattered and praysed, but execrable and cursed of my father and me: go into the fyer that neuer shall bee quenched, whiche was prepared from the begynnyng of the worlde, for the deuill and his angelles, vnto whom ye hadde rather sticke then vnto me. For whan I was hungrye, ye gaue me not meate: whan I was thyrsty, ye gaue me not drynke: I wandred and lacked harbour, ye toke me not in: I was naked, ye couered me not: I was sicke and in prison, and ye did not visite me. Than shall they aunswere the iudge with as manye wordes, as the iuste menne answered: Lorde whan sawe we thee hungrye, or thyrsty, or wanderyng, or naked, or sicke, or in prison, and serued the not? Than the kyng shall aunswere them also: Whatsoeuer of these dutyes is denyed to any one of these litle ones, litle regarded of the woꝛlde, and yet my bꝛethꝛen, I counte it denyed vnto me. I was nedy in them, I woulde haue been refresshed in them. This sentence once geuen, from the whiche there shall be none appeale, they that be on the left hande, shall goe into euerlastyng fyer, and the iust men into euerlastyng lyfe.

The.xxvi.Chapter.

The texte. And it came to passe whan Jesus had finished all these sayinges, he sayed vnto hys disciples: ye knowe that after two dayes shall be Paasse daye, and the sonne of man shall be deliuered vp to be crucified.

THan whan Jesus had ended this communication, where with so many wayes he establisshed the myndes of his disciples agaynst afflictions now beyng at hande, that they should not vtterly be dismayed whan they should shoꝛtly after see theyꝛ loꝛde caryed awaye to a shamefull punishmente: at laste he was bolde to open vnto them the daye and the manner of hys deathe. The mention whereof he doth inculcate and beate into his disciples myndes, leste whan they should see it, they should be so amased at it, as a thyng vnwares & not loked foꝛ, that they should be vtterly discouraged: chiefly whan they should perceyue that Jesus came vnto hys deathe willyngly, whiche he mought haue escaped, noꝛ coulde not be kylled befoꝛe the day came, whiche he had hymselfe apoynted foꝛ his death. And that was the Paasse daie, which emong ỹ Jewes was kepte wyth great deuotion, tenewyng the yearely remembꝛaunce of that daye, in the whiche in tyme paste amonge the Egyptians, the postes beyng spꝛinkeled with the bloude of the lambe, they were deliuered from the kylling aungell, and passed ouer safely the red sea. In remembꝛaunce of thys thyng, they offered yearely a lambe of one yeare withoute spot: and of the passyng by of the angel, and of the lucky passyng ouer the sea, they called it Paasse. But this was a figure of Jesus Chꝛiste, whiche shoulde redeme the whole woꝛlde with hys moste holy bloud, from the tyꝛannye of synne, who alone was cleane from the spottes of all synne. Jesus puttyng his disciples in remembꝛaunce of this thyng, sayth: ye knowe that after two dayes the Paasse shall bee offered, and the same daye the sonne of man shalbe deliuered to be crucified.

The texte. Than assembled together the chiefe pꝛiestes and Scribes, and the elders of the people into the palace of the chiefe pꝛiest, which was called Cayphas, and helde a counsell to take Jesus by decepte, and kyll hym. But they sayed, not on the holy daye, leste there be an vpꝛoꝛe among the people.

Therfoꝛe when that holy and chereful daye was nere, foꝛ the keping of which it was mete foꝛ menne to pꝛepare themselues with godlye woꝛkes, the chiefe pꝛiestes and seniours of the people wer gathered together, whose authoꝛitie, yf there hadde bene any rage emong the people, oughte furthwith to haue pacified it. And they were gathered together in the courte of the chiefe of the pꝛiestes, whiche was called Caiphas: foꝛ these chiefly conspired agaynst Jesus, because they feared leste (yf he shoulde bee pꝛeserued) they shoulde leese theyꝛ lucre and authoꝛitie. Therfoꝛe it was decred there thꝛough wicked counsell, that they shoulde laye handes vpon Jesus and kyll hym, not openlye and violently, but by deceite and guile.

Therfore when these greate men agreed emong themselues vngraciously of the murder, they consulted of the tyme. For although they thyrsted sore for the innocent bloud, beyng madde with enuye and hatred, yet they thoughte beste to differ the deathe to an other tyme, because the daye cheefelye holye and festiual emonge the Jewes was at hande. For they feared if they shoulde sette vpon hym on that day, that the people be wonte to resort together, leste any tumulte or busynesse shoulde rise, because there were manye emong the people, whiche seing hys miracles, and hearyng hys meruayloule doctrine, and markyng the great soberues, and gentilnes of hys manners, had a greate opinion of hym. They feared the people, whyche feared not god: nor feared not to defyle the holy daye with murder, whyche durst not eate leauen breade. Sathan gaue them this counsell, desyring to kepe close that sacrifice whiche shoulde bryng health and saluacion to the worlde. But it pleased otherwyse to the deuyne counsell. For it was not semely that the sacrifice shoulde be priuely caste awaye, whiche the father would to be offered not onely for the saluacion of the Jewes, but for the saluacion also of the whole worlde.

The texte. Whan Jesus was in Bethanie in the house of Simon the leper, there came to him a woman, hauyng an alabaster boxe of precious oyntment, and powred it vpon hys head as he sate at the bourde. But the disciples when they sawe it disdayned at it, saiyng: what nede this waste? For this ointment might haue been wel sold, and geuen to the poore. Who Jesus knewe thys, he sayed, What trouble ye the woman? For she hathe wrought a good worke toward me. For ye haue alwaies poore folke with you, but me ye haue not alwaies: and in that she hath caste this oyntmente on my body, she did it to burye me. Verely I say vnto you: Whersoeuer this gospel shall be preached in all the worlde, that also that she hath done, shalbe tolde for a memoriall of her.

Therfore whan Jesus was in Bethania, nere vnto Hierusalem, where he shoulde be crucified, and sate at meate in the house of one Simon called Leper, a certayne woman came vnto hym, hauyng an alabaster of precious oyntement, who broke the alabaster, and powred the oyntment vpon hys heade. The disciples seeyng a thing of so great price powred and caste oute at once, they disdayned and murmured at it. For they knewe that Jesus was not wont to vse suche delicacies, and that it shoulde haue bene more for his appetite, yf the woman had deliuered her alabaster whole, that the oyntmente beyng solde, the poore men myght be relieued with the value hereof. To what purpose is it (say they) to leese suche a precious thyng? For it myghte haue bene solde for muche, and the value therof geuen to the poore? Thus sayde the disciples not vnderstandyng to what purpose Jesus suffered this to be done. For he was not in loue with suche delicacies, but he woulde haue his deathe to be adorned with suche honour, whiche death he would suffer of no necessitie, but of hys owne wyll, for the health of the whole worlde. For whereas in all hys lyfe he behaued hymselfe most lowlye, yet he honoured hys deathe with a certayne magnificence, by the which deathe he should ouercum the deuil. And therefore once he was caryed into Hierusalem with a greate tryumphe: and than, as preuentynge the honoure of hys buryall, he was embaumed with a swete oyntmente: and whan he was deade, he woulde bee buryed in a newe sepulchre grauen in stone: and he woulde bee wynded in a cleane shete: and he would be buried with the busy care of a noble man. The barbaries of ryche and honorable men: be wont to be embaumed with precious oyntmentes, eyther for honour, or elles to preserue theyr bodyes from corruption. And because he

shoulde reuiue and ryse agayne, before that hys frendes shoulde do hym thys honoure, he suffered this pompe of buriall to bee bestowed vpon hym before hys death: to the intente he myght imprinte by manye meanes in his disciples myndes the mention of his deathe, and by honoure, to mitigate the horribilnes therof.

Therfore when his disciples beyng ignoraunt of these thynges murmured and grutched at the costes and expenses, Jesus restrayned them saiyng: Why be ye grieued with this woman? She hath done a godlye office and a louyng benefite to me, whiche shall shortly dye. It is not meete that ye should haue enuy at thys my last honoure. Poore men of the common sorte ye haue alwayes with you, to whom ye maie doe good, but ye shall not euer haue me. This oyntment is not lost, but this woman gessing that I should shortely dye, with her office and duetye hath preuented my buryall, and hath powred vpon me beyng alyue, that that is wonte to be powred vpon the dead. Therefore depraue not her godlinesse, whiche is so acceptable vnto God, that whereas the gospell of my deathe shalbe preached throughout all the worlde, this woman also shall be mentioned: whiche with a godly and an holy duety, hathe preuented my sepulture.

Than one of the twelue which was called Judas Iscarioth, went vnto the chiefe priestes, and sayed vnto them: What will ye geue me, and I will deliuer hym vnto you? And they appoynted to hym thirty denaries. And from that tyme forth, he sought opportunitie to betraye hym.

Where as this communication hadde repressed the disdayne of others, which erred of a simplicitie, not knowyng the misterye: yet it pacified not Judas Iscarioth, whiche falsely pretended care for the poore, where as lucre and gayne were more pleasaunte vnto him. For he bare the purse, and was wount to stele sumwhat of ỹ thynges which were geuen of the liberall frendes of Jesus, to be distributed emõg the poore, hereof by litle and litle he encreased his money. Therfore whan he was wholy geuen to the filthy disease of auarice, myndyng to recompense that, whiche he counted lost in the oyntmente, with the pryce of the Lorde, he wente vnto the chyefe prystes and officers, whome he knewe, with bent myndes had conspired the deathe of Jesus, and that there was nothyng to lette them, but that he myght be taken without tumulte or businesse. To bryng this to passe there wer none more mete, thã sum of the number of thẽ whiche were familiare with the lord, and nexte aboute hym, who knewe certaynely whyther Jesus was wont to go. For he had hys secret places to praie in. And there was one found in that chosen and piked humbre of twelue, whõ Christ toke vnto hym to bee the chiefe ouer all: whiche loued better wycked gayne, than so mylde and so beneficiall a lorde. So greate a poyson is auarice, if it possesse wholy the mynde of man. But Jesus would signifye by thys example that there should be mẽ, which beyng corrupt with the desyre of money, would betraye the woorde of the gospell, and this mischiefe shoulde chiefly cum of them, who beyng the chiefe and heades of the religion of the churche, semeth to be priuy of the secretes of theyr lord: with whom they be so familiar that with wrong interpretacion they betray his doctrine to the wicked & prophane rulers, whiche seke for nothyng elles, but the destruccion of the truethe of the gospell. Judas therfore goyng vnto the officers, sayd: what reward will ye geue me, if I delyuer you hym into your handes? And thei bargayned wyth

hym for thirty denaryes. With so litle wages could he be hyered to so beastely and cruell a dede: so lyghtly and vilelye was that precious bloude estemed, whiche was sufficient to redeme whole mankynde. Therefore Judas gredye and gapyng for the money that was promysed hym, byandby from that time forwarde sought for occasion to betraye Jesus.

The texte. But the fyrst day of the vnleauened bread, the disciples came to Jesus, saiyng vnto hym: where wilt thou that we prepare for the to eate the Paasse? And he sayde: Go into the citie to suche a man, and saye vnto hym: The mayster sayeth, my tyme is at hande, with the doe I kepe my Easter with my disciples. And the disciples dyd as Jesus had appoynted them, and made ready the Paasse.

Therfore whan the first daye of leuen was at hand, in the whiche the Jewes were accustomed to abstayne from leauen breade, after the eatyng of the paschall lambe, the disciples go vnto Jesus, saying: Lord where wyll ye that we shall prepare you a place to feaste and kepe youre Paasse? so greate was the scarcenes, that neyther he, nor his disciples had any house of theyr own to go to. But Jesus to shewe that this whole matter was mistical, and not doen by chaunce or necessitie, but that all thynges were done by the prescience and counsell of God, he answered them: Go into the citie, and anon as ye entre in, there shall meete you a certayne manne beatyng a potte of water, folowe hym, and whersoeuer he goeth in ye shall go in, and saye to the housholder, the maister sayeth: My tyme is at hande, at thy house I kepe my Paasse with my disciples. He shall shewe you a great and a fayre parler, there prepare my Paasse. The disciples went and founde all thynges, as Jesus had tolde them before, and prepared hym a feaste in the place that he commaunded.

The texte: Whan the euen was cum, he sate downe with the twelue, and as they were eatyng, he sayde: Verely I saye vnto you: One of you shall betraye me. And they were exceadyng sorowful, and beganne euery one to saye: Lord is it I? He answered and sayde, He that dippeth hys hand with me in the dyshe, the same shal betraye me. The sonne of man goeth as it is written of hym. But woo vnto that man, by whom the sonne of man is betrayed. It had ben good for that man, yf he had not bene borne. Than Judas whiche betrayed hym, answered and sayed. Mayster, is it I? He sayd vnto hym: Thou hast sayed.

And towarde nyght Jesus went thither, and sate downe to suppe with his twelue disciples. And now as they were at supper, Jesus sayeth vnto the: one of you shall betraye me. This he sayed to declare that nothyng at all was hyd from hym, and also that the conscience of the traytour beyng touched, myght be turned vnto penaunce. At this woord al theyr hartes began to be very heuy. Euery man suspected and distrusted hymselfe knowyng the weakenes of man. They desyryng therfore to bee deliuered from this beauues, began for to aske seuerally: is it I Lorde? Than Jesus sumwhat to confirme and establyshe the others, almoste dead for feare, and to touche the conscience of Judas more sharpely, yf perhappes he myght be moued vnto penaūce, pointed the authour of the dede with a more certayne sygne, and withal put hym in remembraunce of the greate familiaritye, whiche ought to haue withdrawen him from such a mad mischiefe, saiyng: He that putteth his hand with me in the dishe, and is my felow not onelye of the table, but also of the dishe, shall betraye me, and for the office of familiaritye, he shal rendre vnto me the office of extreme enmitie, whereas the communion and felowshypp of breade and salte bee wonte for to ioyne men vnknowen and vnacquaynted, with the bonde of amitie. And that these thynges should chaunce to the sonne of man, it was ordeyned heretofore of the father, and prophecied before of the prophetes. But yet woo be to that man, through whose wickednes, the sonne of man is betrayed.

The

The diuine wisedome doth vse hys wickednes to the saluacion of mankynde, but yet he is no lesse in fault, which through his owne malice was brought to this dede, whereas I omitted nothyng whereby I myghte heale hys mynd. Wherfore for so wicked a deed, he shalbe cruellye punished, vnlesse he repente, that it had bene better for him neuer to haue been borne. This communication whiche with shame might haue healed an yll man, or with payne myght haue feared a wicked manne, made Iudas nothyng the better, insomuche that he ioyned impudencie and vnshamefastnes to hys wicked deed, and as thoughe he had knowen himself to be nothing culpable, asked the Lord: Is it I? And here Iesus not forgettyng his wont tentines, answered: Thou hast sayde, geuyng an inckling rather than expressyng playnly that it was he, and maketh as though he had a suspicion, and not knowledge of it.

The texte. Whan they wer eatyng. Iesus toke bread, and when he had geuen thankes, brake it, and gaue it to the disciples, and sayed: Take, eate, this is my body. And he toke the cup, and gaue thankes, and deliuered it to them, sayyng: drynke ye all of this, for this is my bloud whiche is of the newe testament, that is shed for many for the remission of sinnes: But I say vnto you: I wyl not drynke hencefurth of this fruit of the vyne tree, vntil the day when I shall drynke it newe with you in my fathers kingdome.

Therfore in this latter supper ỹ he made with his disciples, before his death, he dyd institute that most holye remembraunce of hys death: that beyng often renewed, it should be a perpetuall memorial emong them, of his great charytie, whereby he sticked not to bestowe his lyfe to redeme mankinde: that the remembraunce of that godly sacrifice should neuer out of our myndes, wherein that most pure and immaculate lambe the newe and trewe paasse, offered himselfe in the aulter of the crosse for vs to God the father, whom beyng angrye, he hath made mercifull to vs by hys bloud, sufferyng paynes himselfe for our offenses, whiche were due to our sinfulnes: Iesus dyd institute and consecrate this secrete signe and memoriall in two thynges, by the which amitie emong men is wont to be intertayned: that the charitie by the which Christ gaue himselfe to his, should couple vs together also: who oftentymes eate together of one breade, and drynke of one cuppe. And also shewyng by a certayne spiritual figure, the rites and manners of Moses his lawe, in the whiche was no purgacion of sinne, but by bloude of the sacrifice: Furthermore signifiyng that he did consecrate a new league of the euangelicall profession by this misterie. For whan Moses had recited the roll of the lawe, wherin the preceptes of the law were conteyned, and the people had aunswered: We will do al thynges that the lorde hath spoken, and wyll be obediente, wyth parte of the bloude of the sacrifices whiche they had kylled receyued in a vessell, he sprinkeled the people sayyng, this is the bloude of the league, whiche the lorde hath made wyth you touchyng these wordes. And truely all these thynges signifyed with certayne figures and shadowes, this most holye sacrifice, wherin the lorde Iesus deliueryng his body willingly vnto death, and shedyng his bloud, went aboute to clense the synnes of the whole worlde, reconcilyng vnto God all men freelye, whosoeuer would professe this league of the newe testament. And he would that this sacrifice and this league should be commended, and set furth to the myndes of hys disciples with certayne misticall sygnes, before that it was offered, to thyntente that they should vnderstande that his death was not a common or an idle, but an effectuall sacrifice to purge the synnes not onelye of the Iewes, but also of al nations and of al tymes.

But (because the deathe of Christe oughte not to bee iterated) leste so greate a benifite myght go out of mennes myndes, or leste they myghte forget the holye league once entred, and the authour of theyr healthe also, he did institute and ordayne, that with often communion of ỹ holye breade, and the cup, the memorie should be renewed among the professours of the euangelicall lawe. And he would that this sygne should be very holy among hys souldiers, and to be had in such veneration, that lyke as much godly grace shoulde bee geuen to them, whiche shoulde receyue the body and bloude of the lorde purely and worthely: so they that should take them vnworthely, should be the cause of their grenous dãnation. Therfore Jesus toke the breade into hys handes, and when he had offered the sacrifice of prayse vnto God, he breake it and distributed it vnto his disciples saiyng: Take ye, eate ye, thys is my body. Afterwarde he toke the cup into hys handes, & when he had geuen thankes vnto the father, he dranke before, and reched it vnto them, saying: Dryncke all ye of thys cuppe. For thys is my bloud of the newe testament, which shalbe shed for many, for the forgeuenes of synnes. As often as ye shall do thys, doe it in the remembraunce of me. For as often as ye shall eate of this breade, and dryncke of this cuppe, ye shall declare the lordes death vntil he cum, not now as a sauiour, but as a iudge. In the meane time none other sacrifice for synnes shal be loked after. For this one is sufficient for to take awaye the synnes of the whole worlde. And I saye vnto you, I wyll not eate of this bread hereafter, vntil I shall eate it with you complete and perfect in my fathers kyngdome: and I will drinke no more of this fruite of the vine, vntil I shal drinke it new with you in my fathers kingdom. And the moste meke and gentil lorde did not exclude Judas the traytour from thys holy memoriall, that by thys so great clemencie and gentilnes, he myght be reformed. But because he receyued the sygne of the league and testament, hauyng treason in hys harte, he departed more vncleane than he came.

Whan they were eatin &c.

I wyll not dricke hence furth. &c.

The texte. And whan they had song the hymne, they went out vnto the mount Oliuete: Than sayd Jesus to them. All ye shall be offended because of me this nyght. For it is written: I wyll smite the shepeherde, and the shepe of the flocke shalbe scatered. But after I am rysen again, I wil go before you into Galile. Peter answered and saied vnto him: Though al mē be offended because of the, yet I wyl not be offended. Jesus sayd vnto hym: Verely I saye vnto the, that in this nyght before the cocke crowe, thou shalt deny me thryse. Peter sayed vnto hym: Yea, though I should dye with the, I wyll not deny the. Likewise also saied al the disciples.

And after that they hadde song an hymne in the prayse of god, they arose and went into the mounte of Oliues, whiche place he knewe to bee well knowen vnto the traytoure, leste he should seme to desyre to be hyd, as fearyng deathe: but purposelye he withdrawed hymselfe into a solitarye place, that he myghte bee taken without tumulte of the people, which thyng they went about and loked after. There he telleth his disciples agayne how it should cum to passe, that byanby they should be sore troubled, seing the punishemēt of their lord: but lest they should be vtterly discouraged, he doethe coumfort them with a prophecie, and with the resurrection that shoulde folowe furthwith, poynting also the time and the place nere at hande, where they should see hym agayne: all ye (ỹ he) shall be troubled thys nyghte for my cause. For so God ỹ father prophecied by the mouth of hys Prophete zacharye: I wyll strike the sheperde, and the shepe of ỹ flocke shal be scatered abrode: But ye nede not to despayre. Deathe shall trouble your myndes, but byanby the resurrection shal comforte you.

for I will rise agayne the thirde daye, and after that I am ryssen, I wyll goe before you into Galile. There I will offer my selfe to bee seene of you. Jesus suffered al his disciples to be thus troubled, to thintent he myght teache the by the very dedes, howe great the weakenes of mans nature was, and how folish a thing it is for a man to trust to himself, that hauing experience of themselues, they myght learne to helpe other mennes weakenes. Peter therefore not well knowyng hymselfe, with a certayne manly and worldly boldnes, promiseth that it shall cumme to passe, which Christe by the Prophecie sayed shoulde cumme to passe, and (whiche was a poynete of more rashenesse) he preferreth hymselfe before all other: If all bee troubled (sayth he) in thy cause, yet I will not bee troubled. To whome Jesus aunswered: what sayest thou Peter, wylt thou alone not be troubled? Nay this I tell the of a suerty, before that the cocke crowe twyse this nyght, thou shalt denye me thryse, Yet Peter not knowleagyng hys weakenes for all thys, aunswered stoutly: yea yf I shoulde dye with the, I wyl not denye the. And the other of the Apostles folowed the rashenes of Peter, who would haue denied Christ also, yf they had bene brought to a lyke streight as Peter was.

The texte. Then came Jesus with them vnto a village whiche is called Gethsemany, and sayed vnto the disciples: Sit ye here vntyl I go and praye yonder: and he toke with hym Peter, and the two sonnes of zebedee, and began to wexe sorowfull and heuy Than sayde Jesus vnto them: My soule is heuy, euen vnto the death. Tarry ye here, & watche with me And he went a litle farther, and fell downe on hys face, and prayed, saiyng, My father yf it bee possible, let thys cup passe from me: Neuertheles not as I wyl, but as thou wilt.

Than Jesus knowyng that the tyme drewe nere, that the laste storme shoulde cum, he led aparte his eleuen disciples (for Judas was gone oute from supper) into a village called Gethsemany. Here he commaunded eight of them to tary, whiche yet were loth to departe from theyr maister, whom they loued hartely, but as yet with a worldly affection. Tary (sayth he) in this place, whiles I goe into my accustomed place, and praye there. For he durst not make them prouue of his conflicte, sith they were yet but weake, leste they shoulde be discouraged, and taketh with hym but only three, Peter, and the two sonnes of zebedee, that he myght haue them to be witnesses of hys extreme manly weakenesse, whome he tooke with hym into the mounte to beholde hys maiestie: and to teache with all, that as often as any greater storme of suche troubles than mans strength can abyde, is at hande, that we vtterly distrustyng our selues, commit vs wholy to the helpe of God. And the feare of deathe, whan it cummeth vpon a man, is more bitter than deathe it selfe: Therfore this horryblenes beganne than to cum vpon Jesus, and he felte great sorow and heuines of mynde, For he would not that hys chosen frendes should be ignorant of the griefe of his mind, that they myght playnly see that he was very man, troubled with affections bothe of body and mynde: my soule (sayth he) is heuy euen vnto deathe. Tarry here and watche with me. For this time requireth not slepe, but wakyng and earneste prayer. Therfore Jesus goyng forward a litle, from hys three disciples, hangyng downe his heade, bowed his face to the yearth: and so prostrate, prayed vnto his father, saiyng: My father, yf it be possible, take away this cup of death from me, for I feele the affecton of the body much abhorring from death. Notwithstanding let it be, not as I wyl, after the weakenes of the body, but as thou wilt, to the healthy and saluacion of mankynde.

Tary here and watche with me.

My father if it be possible, &c.

And

The texte. And he came vnto hys disciples, and founde them slepyng, and sayed vnto Peter: could ye not watche with me one houre? Watche and praye, that ye entre not into temptacion. The spirite is ready, but the flesche is weake.

When he had thus prayed, he returned vnto his disciples, and found them slepyng, and sayeth vnto Peter: Thou that diddest crake a litle before that thou wouldest dye with me, couldest thou not wake with me one houre? I wake and praye for you. Wake you with me, and praye to the father that ye fall not into temptacion and be ouercum. The victorye chaunceth not but vnto them that wake. Therfore we must wake, leste the flesche ouercum the spirite, and the spirite muste be sustayned with the helpe of God.

The texte. Againe he went the second tyme and prayed, sayyng: My father, if this cup can not passe away from me, but that I drinke it, thy wyll bee done. And he came and found them agayn slepyng. For theyr eyes were heuy. And he left them, and went agayn, and prayed the third time, sayyng the same woordes. Than cummeth he to hys disciples, and sayeth vnto them: Slepe now & take your rest. Behold the houre is at hande, & the soune of man is betrayed into the hãdes of sinners: Arise, let vs be going. Behold he is at hand, that doeth betray me.

So hys disciples beyng rayled, Jesus went agayne, and prayed agayne with as many woordes vnto hys father: My father, yf it bee not possible that thys cup shall passe from me, but that I shall drynk of it, thy wyll bee doone. Afterwarde he returned agayne vnto hys disciples, and found them again slepyng. For theyr eyes were very heuy, by the reason of sorowe increasyng theyr slepe. Therfore leauyng them, he wente alone the thyrde tyme to praye for hys disciples, for the weakenes of the flesche ouercame them. And he prayed likewise the thirde time, to teache vs to praye continually and vehemently, as often as the storme of temptacion is at hande. For than the Angels be present and geue strength to the spirite. Afterwarde he returned vnto hys disciples, and rebuked them for theyr slepyng out of tyme, sith the tyme required great watching. For nowe (sayth he) the tempest is at hande whiche shall fynde you vnreadye, and therfore vnmete and vnprouided: nowe (q he) slepe and take your rest. Lo the houre is cum, that the innocent sonne of manne shall be deliuered into the handes of the wicked. Therfore arise, let vs go meete the hurte and displeasure that cummeth agaynst vs. Beholde he is at hande whiche betrayeth me.

The texte. Whyle he yet speake, lo, Judas one of the numbre of the twelue, came, and with hym a great multitude with swerdes and staues, sent from the chiefe priestes and elders of the people. But he that betrayed hym, gaue them a token, sayyng: Whomesoeuer I kysse, the same is he, laye handes on hym. And furthwyth he cummeth to Jesus, saying: Hayle maister, and kyssed hym. And Jesus sayed vnto hym. Frende, wherefore art thou cum? Than came they and layde handes on Jesu.

Jesus had not ended this communicacion, but lo, Judas Iscariote one of the numbre of the twelue came, folowyng Jesus his capitayne a lytle before, and now become ouer a wicked cumpany a more wicked captayne. For a great cumpanye of souldiers folowed hym with sweordes and clubbes, whome the chiefe of the priestes, and the seniours of the people, had sent for thys intente, that Jesus myght be taken without tumult of the people. For althoughe they hadde purposed to differ this matter vnto another tyme, yet hauyng opportunitie of the traytour, they chaunged theyr myndes. And therfore Judas chose bothe the nyghte and the place, in the whiche Jesus was wonte with a fewe to praye. Finally leste they should fayle of the persone, the traytoure taught them by what token they shoulde knowe Jesus: whomesoeuer (q he) I shall kysse, he it is: laye handes vpon hym. Therefore Judas Iscariote went before and went vnto Jesus as though he woulde salute hym, saiyng: Hayle Rabby, and therwith kissed hym, whiche in tymes paste was vsed in salutacions, because of honour and duty. Now Jesus to geue a perfect exaumple of meknes in euery place to hys disciples, dyd not repell the wicked disciple from kyssyng, nor dyd rebuke hym for hys madnesse, but wyth gentle speakynge touched hys conscience, saiyng: Frende, for what cause art thou cum? For he came wyth a kysse after suche sorte as though he woulde haue tolde hym sum newes. At this token the multitude came runnyng, and layed handes vpon Jesus, and helde hym fast. The disciples myndes were sore amased at this ruffling, whome Jesus suffered to fall into this affeccion, because he woulde vtterlye plucke oute of their myndes, all gredy desyre to reuenge and to defende themselues.

And beholde, one of them which was with Jesus stretched out his hande, and drewe oute hys swerde, and stroke a seruaunt of the hygh priestes, and smote of hys eare. Than sayed Jesus vnto him: put vp thy swerd in his sheath. For al they that take the swerd shal perishe with the swerd. Thinke ye not that I can praye to my father, and he shal geue me more then twelue legions of angels: Howe than shal the scriptures be fulfylled. For thus muste it be. The texte

And Peter, eyther because he was more feruente euery where than the other, or elles because he hadde made stoute promyses of hymselfe before, lest he shoulde seme not to doe for hys maister, plucked out his swerde, and stroke Malcus the seruaunte of Caiphas, and cutte of hys ryghte eare, Jesus so orderyng the stroke, that bothe it was a lyght wounde, and whatsoeuer the hurte was, he healed it, and restored the eare agayne. But Peter erred by the reason of a certayne good loue towarde the Lorde, and this errour he tooke in maner of the wordes of Jesus not well perceyued. For he commaunded them to sell their coate and to by swerdes: and whan thei aunswered, there wer two swerdes, he sayed: it is sufficiente. But they thynkynge that he spake of a swerde of yron, whereas Jesus mente a spirituall swerde, after supper they tooke further theyr swerdes with them readye to defende theyr Lorde, yf the matter hadde so required, or yf he had commaunded. Therefore to plucke this affeccion vtterly out of the myndes of all hys disciples, he dyd chyde Peter sharpely, saying: put vp thy swerde into his place. They that dooe stryke wyth the swerde, perysshe with the swerde, the recompence of vengeaunce turnyng backe vpon their owne heade. We haue no nede of this fence, whyche doe get the victory better by sufkering than by killing. Or els thincke you that I coulde lacke helpe if it pleased me to haue this defence? Could not I make suite vnto my father, and could not he send to helpe me in the stede of twelue disciples, twelue legions of angels? But thus it is thoughte good to my father, thus it was spoken before of the Prophetes. And none of these thinges is done by chaunce or fortune.

In that same houre Jesus sayed to the multitude: ye be cum out as it were to a theefe with swerdes & clubbes for to take me. I sate dayly wyth you teachyng in the temple, & ye toke me not. But al this is doen that the scriptures of the Prophetes might be fulfylled. Than al the disciples forsoke him and fled. And they toke Jesus and led him to Caiphas the hygh priest, where the Scribes and elders were assembled. And Peter folowed him a far of vnto the hyghe priestes courte, and went in, and sate with the seruauntes to see the ende. The texte

Than Jesus turnyng to the multitude, sayed: now we weponed with swerdes and clubbes, ye cum furth to take me. But whan I sate dayly emong you teachyng in the temple, and healyng the sicke and diseased, ye layed no handes vpon me. Nowe in the dead nyght, ye seke me out beyng quiet and styl in a secrete

place. But al these thinges be done not by your violence, but by the ordinaunce of goddes counsell, whereof the scriptures of the Prophetes hathe prophecied long before. The disciples hearyng thys, and seing that there was no hope, for Thā all the disciples. &c. almuche as Jesus offred him vnto deathe, they left theyr maister and ran away. But the mynisters nothyng mitigate with remembraunce of the doctryne and benefite of Jesus, ledde him awaye lyke a prysoner, to the house of Cayphas the chiefe of the priestes, whyther the Scribes and sentours dyd resorte. But Peter alone (for the other disciples beyng afrayed, were fledde euery man hys waye) although hys skirmische came not well to passe, yet he coulde not leaue of vtterly the care of hys maister, whome he loued hartely: and yet again he durst not be present with hym, notwithstanding he folowed as it might be a farre of, and at length, in the darke as vnknowen, he entred into the court of Cayphas. Finally entryng in he sate among the ministers warming him at the coles, that whereas he coulde not defende Jesus, yet at the least he myght see what shoulde be the ende of the iudgemente. For as yet Peter had sum hope in hys mynde.

The texte. ¶ The chiefe priestes and elders, and al the counsell, sought false witnesse against Jesus for to put hym to deathe, but founde none: yea whan manye false wytnesses came, yet they founde none. At laste came two false witnesses, & sayed: he sayed, I am able to destrope the temple of God, and builde it agayne in three dayes. And the chiefe priest arose, and sayed vnto hym: Answerest thou nothyng? why do these beare witnes agaynst thee? But Jesus helde hys peace. And the chiefe priest answered and sayed vnto hym: I charge the by the lyuyng God, that thou tel vs whether thou be Christ the sonne of God. Jesus sayeth vnto hym: Thou hast sayed: Neuerthelelle I saye vnto you: hereafter ye shall see the sonne of man, sittyng on the ryght hande of power, and cummyng in the cloudes of the skye.

Further the chiefe priestes and the whole counsel, to make sum apperaunce of a lawfull and iust iudgement, went about to suborne, and set furth false witnesses agaynst Jesus, whose innocecie was so greate, that it was very harde so to lye of him, that the lye myght haue any colour of truth. And after that many

The chiefe priestes and the elders. &c. false witnesses came furth, but of suche sorte that theyr testimonies & saiynges were so yll framed together, that they confounded themselues, insomuche that they were not thought meete, neyther of those iudges, neither of that cumpany. At length cummeth furth two false witnesses, whiche sayed: He sayed, I canne destrope the temple of God & after three dayes make it vp. They toke occasion of this lye by the wordes of Christe, who sayed: Looce thys temple, and in three dayes I wyll rayse it vp, meanyng thereby that he shoulde be slayne of them, but within three dayes he should lyue agayne. The witnesses to make the thing more odious, dyd depraue and mystake these woordes whiche they vnderstoode not. For he sayed not I can destrope, but looce ye: and he sayed not, I wyll build agayne, but I wyll rayse vp, applyng it to hys body whiche should be slayne, and lyue againe. Therfore at thys testimonye because it semed to bee of some weyght, and no nother was found more meete and conuenient, the chyefe of the priestes roose vp, and counterfeityng the person of a iuste iudge, as thought he woulde geue Jesus liberty to defende hymselfe, sayed: Doest thou make no answere to these testimonies whiche be brought agaynst thee? But Jesus helde his peace, knowyng that whatsoeuer he sayed, should be reproued & mistaken. Than the chiefe of the priestes desyrying to wreste out sum what, wherby Jesus myght be condemned (for nowe hys madnes was such that al tarying semed to long) sayeth vnto hym: I conjure the by the liuing God, tel vs whether thou be Christ the sonne of God. This was a crafty question of the wicked byshop.

If he

If he had denied that he was the sonne of God, he would haue cryed out: why than takest thou vpon thee, the thing that thou arte not? If he had affirmed it, he woulde haue falsely accused hym for blasphemy. If he had holde hys peace being required and adiured, he shoulde seme to despise God, and the authoritie of the highe preste. And what was he that dyd adiure hym? A wicked bishop, whiche had boughte of Herode for money the annuall honoure: and he which did assault the sõne of God, adiured him by God. Yet Jesus, as it were shewing a reuerence to the honour that he did beare, beyng demaunded whether he was Christ the sonne of God, aunswered: Thou hast spoken: so confessing himselfe to be that he was, that yet he auoyded the faulte of arrogancie. And he added a thing whiche oughte to haue reuoked the wicked bishop from his purposed wickednes: yet (q he) thys I say vnto you, hereafter ye shall see the sonne of man sittyng on the ryghte hande of the power of God, and comming with maiestie in the cloudes of heauen. He gaue to vnderstande, that he being than lowe and condemned of the wicked, shoulde once come with the power of God to be iudge ouer all the worlde.

Jesus sayth vnto hym, thou hast sayde.

¶ Than the high priest rent his clothes, saying: He hath spoken blasphemie, what nede ye of any moe witnesses? Lo, now ye haue heard hys blasphemie, what thinke ye? They aunswered and sayde: He is worthy to dye. Than dyd they spitte in hys face, and buffeted hym with theyr fystes. And other smote hym on the face with the palme of their handes, saying: Tell vs Christe, who is he that smote thee?

The texte.

The chiefe prieste beyng the more prouoked with this saying, to thyntente that through the counterfeyted zeale of religion, he myghte make the cryme of Christe the more sore, he rente hys garmentes, and sayde: he speaketh blasphemously. He doeth vsurpe and take vpon him diuine honour, wheras he is but man. What nedeth there any more witnesses? Beholde nowe ye haue heard manifeste blasphemie. What thynke ye? They aunswered: he hath deserued deathe. Than they began to handle hym cruelly with mockes and skornes, as though he had bene lawefully condemned, whiche also Jesus suffered moste meekely, to geue vnto his a perfect example of patience. They did spette in his face, and coueryng hys face, they gaue hym buffettes and blowes. Agayne, some stroke hym on the face with theyr handes, saying: prophecye and tell vs Christ, who is it that stryketh thee? With these skornes and rebukes they caste him in the teeth, because he woulde bee taken for Messias, and because he was honoured of the people, by the name of a Prophete.

Lo, now ye haue heard his blasphemie. &c.

¶ Peter sate without in the courte, and a damsell came vnto hym, saying: Thou also waste with Jesus of Galile: but he denied it before them all, saying: I wot not what thou sayest. Whan he was goen in to the porche, another wenche sawe hym, and sayde vnto them that were there: This felowe also was with Jesus of Nazareth. And he denied it agayne with an othe, saying: I dyd not knowe the man. A whyle after came they that stode by, and sayde vnto Peter: Surely thou art one of them, for thy speche doth bewraye the. Than he began to curse and sweare, that he knewe not the manne, and immediately the cocke crewe. And Peter remembred the saying of Jesus, whiche he spake vnto hym: before the cocke crowe, thou shalt deny me thryse, and he went out, and wept bitterly.

The texte.

In the meane season Peter sate without in the courte, beholding a farre of the heaute sight, and lokyng for the ende of the matter, for he durste not come nere, lest he shoulde be knowen of the ministers. And a certayne wenche came vnto hym, whiche partely knewe hym, and sayde: Thou also waste one of the folowers of this Galilean. Here Peter beyng amased at the wenches woorde, and forgetting that stout woorde that he spake to Christ: (and if I should dye with thee, I wil not deny thee:) denied his lorde before the al, saying: I cannot tell what thou sayest. And furthwith the cocke did crowe. And as he prepared to goe out, euen in the doore an other wenche spyed him, which vttering hym to the ministers standyng by, sayeth: Thys man also was with Jesus of Nazareth. And agayne he denyed it, swearing that he knew not the manne. And a • litle after, certayne of them that stoode by, knowing Peter, sayd: Truely thou arte one of this numbre. For not onely thy face but also thy speche doeth vtter thee to be a Galilean. Than Peter being more afrayde, began not onely to abiure and forsake Jesus, but also to execrate and ban himselfe, if euer he knewe the manne. And furthewith the cocke crowed agayne. After these, Jesus dyd beholde him, and speaking (as it were) vnto him with his yes, monished him. Than at length Peter cumming to himselfe, remembred that Jesus tolde him before, when he craked of hys boldenes and valiantnes: before the cocke crow twise thou shalt denye me thryse. But because he sinned thorough the weakenes of man, being amased with feare, and not of purposed malice, he deserued mercy. Christe suffered this in hys chosen apostle, that no man, offende he neuer so sore, shoulde dispayre of pardon so that he repent, and washe the spot of his mynde with teares. For Peter, whiche was as it were beside hymselfe, at the looke of Jesus, by and by came to hymselfe agayne and repented, and goyng furth wepte bitterly.

¶ The xxvii. Chapiter.

¶ Whan the morning was come, all the chiefe priestes, and elders of the people helde a
The texte. counsel against Jesus to put him to death. And broughte hym bounde, and deliuered hym to Pontius Pilate the debitie.

THerfore that night was thoughly watched of the heades of religion, with these wicked & cruell deedes. And when day drew nere, againe the chiefe priestes and the sentours of the people, went to counsayl against Jesus, to put hym to death. Therfore they deliuered him bound vnto Pontius Pilate president, to take punishment of the condemned man. Here Judas that betrayed hym, seeing that he was now condemned, and that they went to extremities, moued with repentaunce, broughte agayne the thirtie pieces of syluer to the heades of the priestes and sentoures of the people, saying: I haue synned because I haue betrayed the innocente bloud. Truely this mannes confession should haue moued the prynces myndes. He confesseth that it was doen by the infection of auarice, and he confesseth that he hath betrayed an innocent. But they vtterly raging, and thirsting after nothing els but innocent bloud, answered: what is that to vs, whether thou hast betrayed an yll doer or an innocente? Looke thou to that.

¶ Than Judas whiche had betrayed him, seing that he was condemned, repented hymselfe, and brought againe the thirtie plates of siluer to the chiefe priestes and elders, saying: I The texte.
haue sinned, betraying the innocente bloude, but they sayde: what is that to vs? See thou to that: and he cast downe the siluer plates in the temple, and departed and hong himselfe.

Judas now repenting of his gayne, desired to breake of his bargayne, but their crueltie coulde by no meanes be mitigated. Judas therefore casting the pieces of siluer at their feete, departed away, heaping and increasing his wicked dede with a more wicked dede. He knowledged the greatnes of his sinne, but he knowledged not the greatnes of goddes mercy. Peter wepte bitterly, and obtayned mercy. Judas wept also, but with a desperate minde, rather tha a conuerted minde, and therefore he went aside, and hanged himselfe and burst in the middes, and his bowels fell out.

And the chiefe priestes tooke the pieces of siluer, and sayde: It is not lawfull to put them The texte.
into Corbon, because it is the price of bloude. And they tooke counsel, and bought with them a potters fielde to burye straungiers in. Wherefore the fielde is called the fielde of bloude vnto this day. Than was fulfilled that whiche was spoken by the Prophete Hieremye, saying.
They tooke thirtie siluer pieces, the price of hym that was valued, whome they bought of the children of Israell, and gaue them for the potters fielde, as the lorde appoynted me.

After this the heades of the priestes went to counsayl agayne, and that their crueltie might be the better knowen to all menne, they dyd nothing without a common counsell. They consulte to what vse the thirtye pieces of syluer shoulde goe, whiche Judas had cast at their feete. And being menne of auke-warde religion, hauing no religion nor feare in killing of an innocente, who had doone so muche for them: It is not lawfull (sy they) to put this money into Corbon, that is, emong the gyftes of the temple, whiche they woulde haue estemed and regarded religiously. For it is the price of bloude. But the holines of the temple must not be poluted with bloud. And in the meane season, they dysclose their vngratiouse conscyence, confessyng hym to bee inno-cente, whose betraymente they had boughte. Therefore becaus that they all shoulde bee partakers of the synne, they counselled together, and with that money they bought a grounde of a certayn potter for godly vses, that straungiers might be buried there, as though they woulde haue recompenced the sinfull dede that they had in hande, with thys good dede. And yet by thys meanes they prouyded very yll for their good name. For they coulde not by any other meanes, more blase abrode their wickednes. For the thyng is come to suche a common saying, that at this daye that grounde is called of the Syrians, Acheldema, that is to saye, the grounde of bloude. Neyther was thys thing done by chaunce, for Hieremie prophecied that it shoulde come to passe:
and they tooke thirtie pieces of siluer, the price of him that was prised, whome they boughte of the children of Israell, and they gaue them for the grounde of a potter, as the lorde appoynted me.

Jesus stode before the debitie, and the debitie asked him, saying: Arte thou the king of Jewes? Jesus sayeth vnto him: Thou sayest. And whan he was accused of the chiefe priestes The texte. and elders he aunswered nothing. Than sayde Pilate vnto him, hearest thou not how many witnesses they laye agaynste thee? And he aunswered hym to neuer a worde, insomuch that the debitie maruayled greatly.

Therfore whan Jesus stode before the president as giltie, they accused hym busely of many thinges, speaking nothing in the meane season of blasphemy, of the relygyon of the temple defyled and broken, and of the cummyng of the sonne of man, with the whiche thinges they knew that Pilate, passing lule of suche superstition, woulde be litle moued: They leye in other fayned faultes whiche mighte stirre the presydentes minde agaynste Jesus, saying: we haue founde this man goyng about to subuert our nacion, and forbidding tributes to be geuen vnto Ceasar, and saying that he is Christe the kyng. Pylate hearing mencyon of the kyng, because thys semed to touche Ceasar, demaunded of Jesus: Arte thou the kyng of Jewes: Jesus leste he shoulde seeme proude yf he shoulde make no aunswere, sayeth: Thou sayeste: not vtterlye denying that he was king, but yet adding that hys kingdome is spirituall, & not worldlye, that it pertayneth nothyng to Ceasar or Herode. Agayne whan hys accusers called vpon the matter, Pilate desiryng to get out of hym, wherby he mighte bee delyuered: Heareste thou not (q he) howe sore faultes they laye agaynst thee? But vnto these Jesus aunswered vtterly nothyng, insomuche as the president marueiled greatly, that an innocent man in daungier of deathe, did kepe silence with so greate meekenesse. Pylate perceiuyng by the countenaunce and behauiour of Jesus, that he was farre from suspicion of desiryng of the kyngdome, sayeth vnto the heades of the prestes and theyr folowers: I fynde no deadly offence in this man. But they were the more hote and vehemente, saying: he is a seditiouse manne, he hath styrred the people with hys doctrine, walkyng ouer all Jewry, begynnyng from Galile vnto thys place. Pilate perceiuyng that Jesus was innocente, but that the prestes and the Scribes went about that theyr purpose of enuie and malice, and therfore seekyng occasyon to delyuer Jesus, or at the leaste to sende hym from the courte: whan he hearde the name of Galyle, he asked hym what countrey manne he was: and when he knewe that he came oute of the coastes of Galyle, where Herode had rule and imperie, he sente hym agayne vnto Herode, who than, as it happened, was at Hierusalem. Truely Herode seeyng Jesus, was very glad. For of long time he desyred to see Jesus, because the fame wente that he did wonderfull thynges. Therfore he hoped wel that he woulde worke some miracle before hym also. And whan Herode asked hym questyons of manye thynges, Jesus aunswered hym nothyng, who came not for this purpose to delight the curiositie of princes, but to see and prouyde for the health of men. And wheras he was accused before hym for many causes, and aunswered nothing, Herode contemned him, with his garde: and putting vpon him a white garment in skorne, sente hym agayne to Pilate. And by this occasion Pilate and Herode were made frendes wheras before they were at stryfe. Therfore Pylate callyng together the heades of the prestes, the magystrates, and the people, protested that he had founde none offences in Jesus whiche they obiected againste hym: and that Herode also had sente hym away as innocente, whiche he woulde not haue dooen, yf he had iudged him in daunger of a capitall crime. And to pacifye the enuie of the Jewes, I will reforme him (q he) and let him goe.

Jesus stode before the debitie. &c.

The texte. At that feaste, the debitie was wont to deliuer vnto the people a prisoner, whome they woulde desire. He had than a notable prisoner, called Barrabas. Therefore whan they were gathered together, Pilate sayde: Whether will ye that I geue loose vnto you Barrabas, or Jesus whiche is called Christe? For he knewe that for enuie, they had delyuered him.

And

And whan he could nothing preuayle by these woordes, he seketh an other occasion to delyuer Jesus. There was a custome emong the Jewes that vpon that holy day, for religions sake, the president shoulde set at libertie some one of them whiche were kept in holde. He had fast in holde at that tyme a certayne notable and famous theefe, named Barrabas, whiche name he knewe was hated of the people. Therfore calling the Jewes vnto him, he asked them whether they woulde haue geuen them, and pardoned, Barrabas, or Jesus: hoping that in comparison of so famouse, and so strong, and violente a theefe, they woulde rather deliuer Jesus.

¶ Whan he was sette downe to geue iudgement, his wife sente vnto him, saying: Haue thou nothyng to dooe with that iuste man. For I haue suffered manye thynges thys daye in my slepe, because of hym. And the chefe preestes and elders perswaded the people, that they shoulde aske Barrabas and destroy Jesus. The presidente sayed, and aunswered vnto them: whiche of the twoo wyll ye that I lette loose vnto you? They sayde, Barrabas. Pilate sayde vnto them: what shall I dooe than with Jesus which is called Christe? They all sayde vnto him: Let him be crucified. The president sayde, what euill hath he done? But they cryed the more, saying: Let him be crucified. The texte.

But the president sitting agayne in iudgement, his wife sendeth vnto him one that shoulde saye to hym in her name, that he shoulde not contampnate hymselfe with the bloude of the innocente, saying that she was vexed that nyghte with horryble visyons for Jesus sake. And thys chaunced not without cause, but by the ordinaunce of god, that there should yet be some of whome Jesus should haue testimonie of his innocencie. For that was very expedient for all men to knowe, that hys deathe was freely bestowed to redeme vs. And whereas the people were in doubte, whether of both they might desire to be geuen vnto them, it came to passe by the counsell of the preestes and the senyoures, that they asked Barrabas, that Jesus in his place myghte bee kylled. Suche is the iudgemente, and thys is the kyndnes of the people: thys is the counterfeyted religyon of the preestes, and the elders. It was a matter of religion to them to enter into the courte of Pilate that they mighte eate theyr paschall Lambe beeyng pure and cleane, and it was no matter of relygyon with suche ragyng madnes to put hym to deathe, whiche was innocente, and throughly tryed with so many vertues and benefites towarde them. Pylate therefore proposed vnto them agayne, whether they woulde haue Barrabas or Jesus sette at libertie. They cryed vnto hym: Barrabas. Pylate agayne sayde: Than what shall I doe with Jesus whiche is called Christe? Trustyng that they woulde bee content with some more gentle punishement. But they cryed with a greate consente of voyces, let hym bee crucifyed. Thys kynde of punishmente, was bothe cruell and very slaunderouse, and shamefull. Agayne (q Pylate) shall I crucifie an innocente? what hath he deserued? I fynde nothing in him woorthy death: Therefore I will chastice hym, and let hym goe. With these woordes the madnes of the people was more styrred, crying out: vp with him, vp with him, crucify the man.

¶ Whan Pilate sawe that he coulde preuayle nothyng, but that more bulynes was made, he toke water and washed his handes, before the people, saying: I am innocent of the bloud of this iust person, see you to it. And all the people aunswered and sayde: Hys bloud be vpon vs, and oure children. Than let he Barrabas loose vnto them, and scourged Jesus and deliuered hym to be crucifyed. The texte.

Pylate perceyuyng that prouyng all wayes and meanes he preuayled nothyng, but that the tumulte of the people was styrred vp more, he assoyled Jesus before that he condemned hym. For in the presence of the people he toke water and washed hys handes, saying: I am innocente from the bloude of this iuste manne, ye be the authours of his deathe, and not I: the vengeaunce of the innocent bloude shall lyght vpon youre head. Yet the vnhappie Jewes were not feated with thys saying, but the whole people cryed out altogether. Let hys bloude lighte vpon vs, and vpon our chyldren. They wished destruction vpon them and to theyr successoures. But Chryste more gentile towarde them than they were themselues, hath repelled none from pardone and forgeuenes so that they doe repente. For many afterwardes dyd wurshyppe the Crosse of Chryste, whiche than cryed in the multytude, vp with hym, vp with hym, crucyfie hym. Therefore Pylate ouercome with theyr stiffe madnes, gaue vnto them Barrabas the authour of sedicyon, and a murderer, and condemned by all mennes iudgementes, yea, before iudgemente. But after the maner of Rome, whan Jesus was scourged, he deliuered him to be crucifyed.

The texte. Than the souldiers of the president toke Jesus in the common hall, and gathered to him al the coumpany. And they stripped him, and put on him a purple robe, and platted a crowne of thornes, and put it on his head, and a reede in his ryghte hande, and bowed the knee before him and mocked hym, saying: All hayle the kyng of Jewes. And whan they had spit on hym they tooke the reede, and smote hym on the head. And after they had mocked hym, they tooke of agayne the robe, and put on him his owne garmentes, and toke him away to crucifie him.

Than the souldiers of the presidente, after that they had receiued Jesus in the courte, gathered the whole garde about hym, cruelly to take theyr pleasure by mocking of the innocent, partely folowyng theyr owne naughtye dispositon, partely prouoked by the Jewes. And because they hearde, that he made himselfe king of the Jewes, they in manner hitting him in the teeth, because being such an abiect he woulde proudely clyme vp to a kyngdome, they spoyled him of hys owne garmentes, and put vpon hym a purple garmente, that is to saye a kyngly robe. After that in the stede of a dyademe, they sette a crowne vpon hys heade made of thornes. In the stede of a scepter they gaue hym a reede in hys right hande. And nowe as salutyng theyr newe kyng, they kneele downe before him and mocke hym, saying: Hayle king of Jewes. Not beyng contente with these despites, they spit vpon hym and stryke hys heade crowned with thornes with the reede that they gaue hym in stede of a mace. And whan they omytted no manner of despyte, he suffered all thynges with great meekenes, to shewe vnto hys a perfecte exaumple of pacience. Therfore after that the souldiers had satisfyed the myndes and the yes of the company with all kindes of mockes and skornes, they plucke of his robe agayne and put on hys owne apparell, that he mighte be the better knowen of all menne.

The texte. And as they came out, they founde a man of Cyren named Symon, him they compelled to beare hys Crosse. And they came to the place, whiche is called Golgatha, that is to saye, a place of dead mennes sculles: and gaue him vineger to drinke, mingled with gall. And whan he had tasted therof, he woulde not drynke.

Than they bring furth Jesus out of the courte, bearing his crosse. And as they wente, they founde one Symon a Cyrenyan, whome they forced to beare the crosse of Jesus, and they came into the place where he shoulde be crucified, whiche of the Syreans is called Golgatha, that is, the place of Caluarie, because it was horrible with bones and sculles of them that were put to death.

here that no parte of hys body ſhoulde bee free from tormentyng, or that no mocking or ſkornyng ſhould be let paſſe, they offered him a cup of drynke tempered with vineger and gall, that it myghte be fulfylled whiche is written in the prophecye: They gaue me gall to eate, and in my thyrſte they gaue me vineger to drynke. And whan Jeſus had taſted, he wolde not drynke.

The terte. Whan they had crucifyed hym, they parted his garmentes, and caſt lottes, that it myghte be fulfilled whiche was ſpoken by the prophete. They deuyded my garmentes emong them, and vpon my veſture dyd they caſt lottes. And they ſate and watched hym there, and ſet vpon her his heade the cauſe of his deathe written. This is Jeſus the kyng of the Jewes. Than were there crucified with him two theues, one on the righte hande and another on the lefte.

But after that they had crucified him, they deuided emong them the garmentes of Jeſus. As for hys coate whiche was ſo wouen that it coulde not bee rypped, they caſt lottes: that the ſaying of the Prophet might be fulfilled. They deuyded my garmentes emong them, and vpon my coate they caſte lottes. And ſyttyng by the crolle they kepte hym, that no man ſhoulde take hym awaye. Alſo a title in mockage was ſette vpon the crolle: Thys is Jeſus the kyng of Jewes. The whiche notwithſtanding was more honourable than the Jewes coulde ſuffer. For they were in hande with Pilate that this title might be corrected, and it ſhoulde not be put, kyng of Jewes, but he made hym ſelfe kyng of Jewes. And in thys thyng onely they ſuffered Pylate to haue the higher hande. Alſo this was procured of the Jewes, that two theues ſhoulde bee crucifyed with hym, ſo that Jeſus beyng in the myddeſt, ſhoulde haue one on the righte hande, and an other on the lefte hande: that he might be taken of all men, both vayne himſelfe, and a deceiuer, and lyke vnto them with whome he was matched.

The terte. They that paſſed by, reuyled hym, waggyng their heades, and ſaying. Thou that deſtroyeſte the temple of God, and buyldeſt it in three dayes, ſaue thy ſelfe. If thou arte the ſonne of god, come downe from the crolle. Likewiſe alſo the hygbe prieſtes and the Scrybes, and elders mocked hym, ſaying: He ſaued other, hymſelfe he cannot ſaue. If he bee the kyng of Iſraell, let him come downe nowe from the crolle, and we will beleue hym. He truſted in god, let hym deliuer hym nowe, yf he will haue hym. For he ſayde, I am the ſonne of God. The theues alſo whyche were crucified with him, caſt the ſame in his teeth.

The cruelte of the Jewes was not yet ſacyate and filled with theſe ſo greate miſchieues. They ſcorne and reuile him beyng crucifyed, and paſſing by, they railed on him, and ſhaking their heades, they mocked him, ſaying: Ie on ther, art thou he that hurleſt down the temple of God, and in three dayes makeſt it vp agayne? Thou dideſt promiſe healthe to others, now ſaue thy ſelfe. Thou dideſt boaſt thee to be the ſonne of God, now than come down from the crolle. Likewiſe alſo the heades of the prieſtes, with the Scrybes and the ſenioures of the people mocked him and reuyled him: he gaue healthe vnto others, nowe he cannot preſerue himſelfe. If he be the kyng of Iſrael, as he wolde appere, let him declare now what he can doe, let him come downe from the crolle, and we will beleue hym. He truſted in god, whome he craked to be hys father, if he loue him, let him nowe deliuer hym. And that of euery ſide the moſt innocente Jeſus myghte be arayed with reuylynges, the theues alſo felowes with hym in punyſhmente, in lyke manner rebuked hym. The whiche all Jeſus ſuffered with ſtiffe and ſtrong pacience, to bring to paſſe and offer for al me that healthfull ſacrifice. He kepte ſtill the diuine power, and ſette further the whole nature humaine to al maner of paynes and tormentes. And he did not requite or reuenge ſo cruell reuylyng beſtowed vpon hym, as he was dying, beyng more bitter then the crosse it selfe. insomuche that he prayed vnto hys father for the souldyers and the Jewes that skorned hym: and one of the theuys repentyng himselfe, he receyued into his paradise.

The texte. From the firt houre was there darkenes ouer all the lande, vntill the .ix. houre. And aboute the .ix. houre Jesus cryed with a loude voyce, saying: Hely, Hely, Lamazabathanye, that is to saye: my god, my god, why hast thou forsaken me? Some of them that stoode there when they hearde that, sayde: This man calleth for Helias. And furthwith one of them ranne, and toke a sponge, and whan he had filled it full of vyneger, he put it on a reede, and gaue it hym to drinke. But other sayde: let be, let vs see whether Helias will come, and delyuer hym. Jesus, when he had cryed agayne with a loude voyce, yelded vp the ghost.

The very Sonne felte the punyshment of the innocente, and coulde not abyde to beholde so wycked a dede. He couered hys face with a blacke cloude, and all that countreye was couered with darkenesse, from syxe of the clocke, vntyll nyne. And yet in the meane season, the darkenesse of the Jewes hartes coulde not bee shaken of. Further aboute nyne of the clocke, Jesus cryed with a greate voyce, saying thys sentence oute of the psalme. Hely, Hely, Lamazabathany, my God, my God, why haste thou forsaken me? And certayne that stode by, and hearyng afarre of, Hely, and supposyng that he had called to Hely for helpe, sayde: Thys felowe calleth for Hely. Let vs see whether he wyll helpe hym. Than Jesus to shewe that it was a true deathe whiche he suffered for all menne, cryed: I am athirste. For thys is wonte to folowe vpon woundes and shedyng of bloude, whiche oftentymes is a punyshemente more sore and paynfull than death. And one runnyng to hym, put vnto his mouth as he hanged, a sponge full of vineger, putte vpon the toppe of a reede. Jesus thirsted sore for the health of menne, but the Jewes offered hym nothyng but vineger and gall. Therefore he dyd forbeare from it when he had tasted, saying: It is consummate and fynyshed, sygnyfying that nothyng was omytted whiche did pertayne to the manner of the sacrifyce. And anone to declare that he lefte his life of hys owne accorde, after that he had commended hys spyryte vnto the father, he cryed with a loude voyce, and bowing down his head, died.

The texte. And beholde the vayle of the temple did rente in two partes, from the top to the bottom, and the earthe quaked, the stones dyd rente, and graues dyd open, and manye bodyes of saynctes whiche slepte, arose and went oute of the graues after hys resurrecyon, and came into the holy citie, and appered to many. Whan the Centurion, and they that were with him watchyng Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those thynges which happened, they feared greatly, saying: Truely thys was the sonne of god.

And furthwith all thynges dyd testifye the effectuall death of the lorde Jesus. For the vayle of the temple whiche deuyded the holye place from the other parte of the temple, of his owne accorde, was cut in two partes, declaring that the shadowes of Moyses lawe, hereafter shoulde vanyshe awaye at the bryght light of the ghospell. Furthermore the earth did quake, and the stones brake a sunder, reprouing the Jewes for theyr inuincyble hardnes of hearte. The graues did open, and many bodyes of holy menne whiche were dead, did reuyue and liue agayne, and goyng out of the graues after the resurrecyon of Christe, came into the holye citie of Jerusalem, and appered vnto many, beeyng the preachers and folowers of the resurrecyon of Jesus. Furthermore the Captayne and hys seruauntes whiche were there to keepe Jesus, perceyuing the earthquake, the darkenesse, the breakyng of the stones and other wonders, were greatly afeard, saying: Truely this was the sonne of god.

The texte. ¶ And many women were there, beholdyng a farre of, whiche folowed Jesus from Galile, mynystryng vnto hym, among whiche was Marie Magdalene, and Marie the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of the chyldren of Zebedee. When the euen was come, there came a riche man of Aramathia named Joseph, whiche also was Jesus disciple. He wente vnto Pylate, and begged the holy bodye of Jesus. Than Pylate commaunded the body to be deliuered. And whan Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a cleane clothe and put it in his new toumbe whiche he had hewen out of the rocke, and rolled a great stone to the dooze of the sepulchze, and departed. And there was Marie Magdalene, and the other Marie sitting ouer against the sepulchze.

There were also many women lookyng a farre of, vpon the thynges that were doen, whiche had folowed Jesus from Galile, mynystryng vnto hym necessaries, among whome there was Marie Magdalene, and Marie the mother of Jacob and Joseph, and also the mother of the sonnes of Zebedee, and diuers other with them. And when the nyghte drewe nere, a certayne ryche Captayne of Aramathia called Joseph, who also was the dyscyple of Jesus, wente vnto the presidente, askyng of hym the body of Jesus. Pylate marueylyng if that he were dead, a man of lustie age, and not hauyng hys legges broken, as soone as he knew certaynely of the captayne that he was dead, he commaunded the body to be geuen vnto him.
He receyued it, and wrapped it in a cleane shete, and layde it in a newe graue, the whiche he had grauen in an whole stone. And rollyng a greate stone to the dooze of the graue, he departed away: And thys was done by the prouidence of God, that they shoulde vse no crueltie vpon the dead karcas, or that no man shoulde dygge vp the graue and steale hym awaye. And when the other were departed, Marie Magdalene, and an other woman contynued there syttyng ouer against the sepulchze, and markyng the place whete they layde the body, that at conuenient time they myght doe the dutie of annoynting to it, and the lozde had styred vp theyr great dilygence to this intente that the beliefe of his resurreccion might be moze certayne.

The texte. ¶ The nexte daye that foloweth the Paraskeue, the hyghe priestes and Phariseis came together vnto Pilate, saying: Sir we remember that this deceyuer sayde while he was yet aliue: after thzee dayes I will rise agayne: commaunde therefoze that the sepulchze bee made sure vntyl the thyzd daye, leste his disciples come and steale him away, and say vnto the people he is risen from the dead. And the last errour shall bee wurse then the firste. Pilate sayde vnto them: Ye haue a watche, goe your waye, make it as sure as ye can. And they wente and made the sepulchze sure with watche men, and sealed the stone.

But the daye after the Paraskeue, whiche is the daye of preparation, agayne the heades of the prieftes and the phariseis come vnto Pilate, confirming the trueth of the resurreccion, whiles they goe about to lette it, and they saye vnto the president: Sir we remember that this deceiuer being yet alyue, sayde that he would rise agayne after thzee dayes. Therfoze commaunde the sepulchze to be kepte vnto the thyzde day, leste his disciples come, and steale away hys body, and perswade the people that he is risen agayne. Which if it come to passe, we shall preuayle nothyng, but the latter errour shalbe wurse then the fyrste. Pylate sayeth vnto them: ye haue a watche, goe and kepe as ye knowe. But they, whiles they goe about to stoppe hym that woulde tyse agayne, they encrease the miracle, and the fayth of the resurrecyon. They sette kepers and made sure the sepulchze, they sealed the stone also, whiche dyd shut the mouth of the Sepulchze, leste there mighte be any decepte in the kepers also.

The texte. And vpon the euen of the Sabbothes whiche springeth in the first day of the Sabbothes came Marie Magdalene and the other Marie came for to see the Sepulchre. And beholde there was a greate earthequake. For the Aungell of the Lorde came downe from heauen, and came and rolled downe the stone from the doore, and sat vpon it. And hys countenaunce was like vnto the lightening, and his garment white as snowe. And for feare of him, the kepers were astonied, and were made as dead men.

ANd when the euen of the firste Sabbothe daye was come, after the ende of the whiche, was the morning of the daye folowyng. whiche was the fyrste daye of the weeke next ensuing, Marie Magdalene, and the other Marie, theyr swete spices prepared ouer night, went agayne in the morning to the Sepulchre, to see what was doone, and to embaulme the bodye of Jesus. And there was a great yearthquake. And whan the women deuysed emong themselues, howe they mighte remoue the stone from the doore of the graue (for it was to greate to bee remoued by the strength of women) beholde the aungel of the lorde came downe from heauen, and remoued the stone from the doore of the graue, and than sate vpon it. And the countenaunce of the aungell was lyke vnto the lyghtening, and hys garmentes shinyng as white as snowe. The kepers of the Sepulchre loking vpon him, were afrayde and so amased that they laye astonied like dead men.

The texte. And the aungell made aunswere vnto the women, and sayde: Feare ye not: For I knowe that ye seeke Jesus whiche was crucified, he is not here, for he is risen as he sayde. Come see the place, where the Lorde was layde. And go quickely, and tell his disciples that he is risen agayne from deathe. And beholde he goeth before you into Galile, there ye shall see hym. Loe I haue tolde you.

But the aungell comforted the women, saying: These men worthyly be amased at the glory of the resurreccion, whiche doe persuer and continue styll in theyr vnbeliefe: But feare not ye, for I know that ye seeke Jesus who was crucifyed. Nowe he hath left hys sepulchre, and hath performed that he promised to do. This is the morning of the third day. Therfore he is risen. Come and see the place, whiche beyng voyde of the bodye, hath yet a sygne where the body laye: It hath also the apparell of the bodye, the lynnen wherein he was wrapped. Lette these thynges make you beleue, yf ye beleue not me. But spedely departe hence, and tel these thinges that ye haue seene to the other disciples, being sadde for the deathe of the lorde, that he is risen agayne. Whome if ye desire to see, beholde, he will goe before you into Galile, like as before his death he promised. There ye may see hym alyue, for whome ye mourned when he was dead. Loe I haue tolde you before.

The texte. And they departed quickely from the sepulchre with feare and great ioye, and did runne to bring his disciples worde. And as they went to tel his disciples, beholde, Jesus met them saying: Al hayle. And they came and helde his feete and worshipped him. Than Jesus sayd vnto them: be not afrayde: goe and tel my brethren, that they goe into Galile, and there they shall see me.

And whan they had looked in the voyde graue, whiche they had founde shut, spedely they returned, partely fearefull for the greatnes of the miracle, partely rauyshed with greate ioye, for the desyre and hope to see theyr Lorde alyue agayne, and they runne to communicate thys ioye to the dyscyples of Jesus.

And

And as they wente, Jesus met them, that they myghte tell the more certayne tidinges. And to encourage them being fearefull, he sayde: All hayle. They seyng and knowing the lorde, went vnto him, and embracing his feete, wurshipped him. Agayne Jesus to take from them all feare, that they mighte the better perceiue the thynges that shoulde be spoken, he sayeth: feare not, goe and tell my brethren the thinges that ye haue seene, and bid them go forward into Galile, there they shall see me.

¶ Whan they were gone, behalde some of the keepers came into the citie, and tolde the chiefe of the priestes all thynges that had happened: And they assembled together with the elders and tooke counsell, and gaue muche money to the souldiers, saying: Saye ye that hys disciples came in the nyghte, and stole hym awaye, whan ye were asleepe. And if thys come to the presidentes eares, we wyll perswade him, and saue you harmeless. But they tooke the money, and did as they were taught, and this saying is noysed amõg the Jewes vntil this day. The texte

And when they were departed, to thintent the trueth of the resurrection myght be confirmed also by the testymonie of the aduersaries, certayne of the keepers, leuing the Sepulchre, went vnto Jerusalem, and tolde the heades of the priestes, what thinges had bene dooen, howe the sepulchre beyng shut and sealed, the body was not founde. And howe the aungel being of meruellouse beautie, remoued the stone, and of the earthequake, and howe they were amased for feare. And how they hearde the aungell talking with the women. Whan the priestes hearde these thinges of the keepers, they went to counsel agayne with the Seniours: forasmuche as the thyng was to manyfeste to bee doubted, they bye a lye of the keepers for money, lyke as beefore they boughte the helpe of the traytour for money: but that they paye more for the laboure of the lyers, than of the traytoure: keepe close (sy they) the thynges that ye haue seene, but make a brute abrode, that hys disciples came in the night & stale him away, whan ye were asleepe. And if thys inuencyon and sleyght be brought vnto your president, we will perswade hym, and deliuer you from all daunger of this matter. Therefore the souldyers receyuyng money, dyd as they were instructed, and thys trieflyng and vayne sleight was beleued of the people. For thys rumoure is bruted abrode vnto this day emong the vnbeleuing Jewes.

¶ Than the eleuen disciples wente away into Galile, into the mountayne where Jesus had appoynted them. And whan they sawe hym, they wurshipped hym. But some doubted. And Jesus came and spake to them, saying: all power is geuen to me in heauen and yearth. The texte

Nowe the eleuen disciples monished of the women, wente forewarde into Galile, and went vp vpon the hyll whiche Jesus had appoynted them. There he shewed hymselfe. They sawe and knewe hym to be theyr Lord, and honoured him, as now being on high and in heauen. Notwithstandyng, some yet doubted, vntil they were made to beleue, with many and very certeyn argumentes. Albeit theyr doubting was profitable for the certaintie of oure belefe. Therfore Jesus drawyng nere vnto them, dyd not onely offer hymselfe to bee seene and touched presently, but also spake vnto thẽ with hys knowen and accustomed voyce: declaring that by his death, he had obteyned a kingdome & authoritie both in heauen and in earth. In heaue, where euer he reigned with the father: in earth where hereafter he shoulde reigne, not by tiranneal powers and aides, but thorough fayth of beleuers: and that he shoulde dispose the office of this euangelicall kyngdome vnto his disciples, who shoulde folowe his steppes, committing vnto them the office to preache the Gholpell, not onely to the Jewes, but also to all nacions: and also authoritie to baptise, and by the holy ghoste, to forgeue synnes to all menne, that wyll profesſe an euangelycal lyfe with a sincere hearte: and to enstructe and frame them, not after the lawe of Moyses, nor after the constitucions of the Pharisеis, but after his preceptes, vntyll they wered and grewe vp vnto the perfeccyon of the wysedome of the ghospell. And that they should nothing dystrust, for that he should not be continually conuersaunt with them, he promiseth that they? felowshyp shal neuer fayle, and that he will neuer forsake hys, but be alwayes presente with hys in spirite and power vnto the laste ende of the worlde: All power (q he) is geuen me in heauen and earth. Ye haue sene me by the reason of the weakenes of the flesh, hungrie, thyrstie, weary, nedy, despised, taken, bounde, spetted vpon, condemned, beaten, crucifyed, couered with all kyndes of spytefulnes, and in maner detect vnder the loweste sorte of menne. Because I haue suffered all these thinges willingly and of myne owne accorde for the health of man: my father hath rayſed me from deathe, and rewarded me with the glory of immortalitie, and hath lifted me vp to the felowshyp of hys kyngdome, and hath submytted vnto my power and rule, all thinges that be in heauen and earth. Ye haue an authour whome ye ought not to distrust, ye haue a Lorde, of whome ye ought not to repente.

The texte. Goe ye therefore and teache all nacyons, baptise them in the name of the father and the sonne, and the holye ghoste, teaching them to kepe all thinges whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you.

Lyke as I dyed for the healthe of all men: so there is no nacion whiche belongeth not to my righte. It shall be youre parte to get vnto me, as muche as lyeth in you, all kinde of men. But ye shall not gette them by weapons or war, but by the same meanes that I got vnto me this right, by wholsome doctrine, by a lyfe woorthy and meete for the ghospell, with free well doyng, with pacyent suffering of illes. Goe ye therfore as trustie Ambassadoures, & trusting me your authour, teache firste the Jewes, than the nerte neighboures vnto them, afterwardes all the nacions of the whole worlde. Teache what they ought to beleue of me, and what they ought to trust of me. First to knowledge the heauenly father, the maker, the orderer, and the restorer of al thinges visible and inuisible. Whose power no man can resist, because he is almightie, whose knowledge no man doeth deceiue, because hee seeth all thynges: whose iudgemente no man shall escape: from whome, as from the fountayne, cummeth all goodnes in the worlde. To whome is due all honour, prayse, and thankes geuing. They must knowledge also his sonne Jesus, by whome through hys eternall and vnsearchable counsell, he hath purposed to deliuer mankinde from tiranny of sinne and deathe, and by the doctryne of the ghospell, to open the waye vnto euerlasting felicitie. Who for this cause by his will, came downe into the earth, and was borne very manne, of the virgyn Marie, and beyng man long conuersaunt emong menne, taught the heauenly philosophy, which only maketh menne blessed.

And being an innocent, was afflicted and punished for the sinnes of the whole worlde, and put to death vpon the crosse. And layde in his graue, the third day he arose agayne according to the prophecies of the Prophetes. After that, beyng conseruaunt many dayes with his disciples, and the trueth of his resurrection delared by sure argumentes, he wente vp agayne into heauen, whereas partaker of the kyngdome and glory of his father, he sitteth on the righte hande of his father almightie. Once he shall come agayne into the worlde, not lowe and abiecte as before, but with the diuine maiestie: not a sauioure, but a iudge, bothe of those whome that day he shall finde aliue, and of those whome nowe being dead, the trumpe of the ghospell shall sodainly call agayne to life: that by his ineuitable iudgemente, euery man may receiue rewarde worthy and mete for his doinges. They must knowledge also the holy ghoste, whome I haue nowe partely geuen vnto you, and will geue more plentiously, after that I come into heauen, whose secrete inspiracion shal coumforte, teache, and strengthen the mindes of them that trust in me: and being powred into the hartes of all men, shall glue and confeder them together with mutuall charitie, as many as profesle hartely the fayth of the ghospell, of what nacyon soeuer they come of. And if a man doth sinne any thing through the weakenes of mā, he shal obteyne forgeuenes of his sinnes, so that he doth not seuer himselfe frō the league & felowship of the holy cumpany. And whosoeuer ioyneth himselfe vnto this league, all the sinnes of his former life shall be forgeuen him freely. Finally lest any man shoulde thynke the rewardes of good dedes to be desyred in this life, or shoulde goe aboute vengeaunce agaynst yll doers, let them knowe that this hereafter shall come to passe in them, whiche ye see dooen in me. The dead shall liue agayne, and euery soule shall be restored to her owne body. The whiche as soone as it shall bee doen, whosoeuer shall belong to this holy felowship, and sticke constantly vnto me, shal be translated with me vnto euerlasting life, to be partakers of felicitie, which were felowes and partakers of afflictyons. After that ye haue taughte these thynges, yf they beleue the thinges that ye haue taught, yf they repent them of their former lyfe, if they be ready to embrace the doctrine of the ghospell, then dippe them in water, in the name of the father, the sonne, and the holy gost, that by this wholy signe, they may trust themselues to be deliuered from the filthines of al their sinnes, freely through the benefite of my death, and nowe to be chosen to the number of the children of God. Lette no manne be circumcysed, let no manne bee baptized in the name of Moyses, or of any manne. Let them all knowe to whome they be bounde for their health, vpon whome they oughte wholy to hang. Let them not bee burdened with the ceremonyes of Moyses, or of manne. Lette this token be sufficient for all menne that cumme to the profession of the ghospell, whiche is easye to bee had in euery place. But leste any manne myghte thinke it sufficient to saluacion, once to be baptysed, and to profesle the faythe of the ghospell, they must be taughte agayne by what meanes they may kepe their innocencie, by what meanes they may goe forwarde to perfeccyon of the euangelicall godlines: I haue omitted nothyng whiche may make to the obteining of euerlasting health. And that heauenly spirite whiche ye shall receiue, will not suffer you to forget that whiche ye haue learned of me. Therefore whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you, deliuer ye the same to be kepte of them. I haue not prescribed vnto you the ceremonies of Moyses law, whiche like shadowes must now vanishe away at the light of the euangelicall trueth. I haue not prescribed vnto you pharisaicall constitutions, but those thinges, whiche onely bringeth true innocencie and godlines, and whiche onely maye make you derely beloued of God, and truely happy.

Baptising them in the name of the father, &c.

Therefore teache these thynges to them that profesle my name not onely in woorde, worde, but also in life, as I, whatsoeuer I taught, I persourmed it in dede. While ye be doyng of these thynges, and whyles ye bring mortall menne to heauen, the worlde will ryse agaynste you, lyke as it rose agaynste me. For my spirite agreeth not with the spirite of thys worlde, and my doctryne is wholy agaynst the affeccions of them, whiche loue the thinges that be of this world. They will ryse agaynste you with greate tumultes, but there is no cause why ye nede to distrust, though ye be but lowe and abiecte, vnlearned, weake, and fewe. I haue ouercome the worlde, and ye shall ouercome through my helpe, & by myne example. Ye shal ouercome through my might, and not your owne, whatsoeuer is terrible in this worlde.

The texte. ¶ And loe, I am with you alway, vntill the ende of the worlde.

And although I shall take vp this body into heauen, because it is so expediente for you, yet I wil neuer forsake you. For after that I shall ceasse to bee with you in body, than I shall be more effectually with you in my spirite. And I will be with you vnto the worldes ende, but whan the worldes ende shalbe, it profiteth not, nor behoueth not you to know. In the meane season do what is commaunded you, euer ready agaynst that daye. Whiche whansoeuer it shal come, than ye also, your mortalitie layed aparte, shal bee wholy with me, fellowes of my fathers kyngdome, whiche shall neuer haue ende.

FINIS.

To the moſt excellent and ver=

tuous princeſſe quene Catherine, wyfe to our moſte gra=cious ſoueraigne Lorde, Henry the eyght, Kyng of England, Fraunce and Irelande, defendour of the faythe, and of the Churche of Englãd, and alſo of Irelande, in earthe ſupreme heade, Thomas Key, her dayly Oratoure, wiſheth perpetuall felicitie.

Mõge the innumerable benefites whiche we haue receiued of almighty God, moſt worthye and excellent Princeſſe, there is none in myne opiniõ for the whiche we are more bounden vnto his merciful good=neſſe, then for that it hath pleaſed hym more clearely to illumine vs of this age with the knowledge of his ho=ly woorde, then our forefathers and elders. For who knoweth not how long this realme hath bene miſera=bly ſeduced through ignoraunce of the Scriptures? Who, euen amonge the vplandiſhe, perceyueth not what intollerable abuſes haue bene vnder pretence of true religion, and Godlyneſſe, mayntayned in this Churche of Englande, tyll ſuche tyme ỹ God of his infinite mercy, ſent vs a newe Joſias, by whoſe righteous adminiſtracion, and Godly policie, the light of Gods worde that ſo many yeares before was here extincte, began to ſhyne agayne: to the vtter extirpacion of falſe doctrine, the rote and chiefe cauſe of all ſuch abuſiõs? This Joſias is our mooſte redoubted ſoueraigne Lorde Kyng Henry theyght, a Prince garniſhed with ſo many excellent gyftes of grace, nature, & Fortune, that he is in very dede, & therfore mooſte worthely called, the perfite mirroure, & pearle of all Chriſten Princes. To wade here in the prayſe of his princely qualities, & noble actes atchieued to Gods honoure, and the publique weale of this realme, is not my purpoſe, for that I knowe it to be an enterpryſe farre exceadyng the compaſſe of my ſymple learning, and barrayne eloquence: But onely to declare howe muche we are bounden, chiefly vnto God, and nexte vnto his moſte excellent Maieſtie, ỹ we haue the Scriptures in our mother tõgue, & are cured of our olde blindneſſe by the medicine of veritie. For nowe hauing our ſpirituall iyes opened, and daily receyuing into the ſame the cleare light of Gods worde, we begyn to ſee, & perfectly to knowe our onely ſauiour Jeſus Chriſt: whome to knowe is euerlaſting lyfe and ſaluaciõ. But ſo longe as the ſaide Scriptures were hyd, and kept from the knowledge of the people, fewe knewe Chriſt aryght: and none leſſe then they, who appeared to be the chiefe profeſſours of chriſtian religion. For what els is it to knowe Chriſt, but to knowe and confeſſe that of him onely, and by hym cummeth oure ſaluacion: that by hym oure good dedes are acceptable vnto almyghty God the father: that by him the fathers wrathe is appeaſed: that by him we be enfraunchiſed from the captiuitie and thraldome of the deuell: and to be ſhorte, that by hym

we are adopted and chosen to be the children of God, and enherytours of the kyngdome of heauen. Whoso knoweth Christ aryght, surely beleueth to attayne saluacio by him onely, who sayth: Cum vnto me all ye that do trauaile, and are charged, and I shall refresh you. The very office of Christ is to saue: & therfore he was called by the high wisdome of God (Jesu) that is as muche to say, as a sauiour, because (so sayth the angell in Mathew) he shall saue the people from their sinnes: So that it appeareth hereby how greatly they are deceiued that thinke to be saued by any other waye or meane then by Christ, or that make theselues quarter sauiours with him, ascribing any parte of their saluacio vnto their owne workes and deseruinges. Nowe howe could Christ be knowen aright, that is to say, to be our onely sauioure and iustifier so long as the scriptures were shut vp, & kept from the people: And Legenda aurea, with such like trupery lay open for them to passe the time withall, and reade in stede of the byble. For this cause chiefly, and also for lacke of good preachers, to preache and teache the truthe, it came to passe, that he was almost cleane out of knowledge in this realme, insomuche that (during the tyme of this great ignorannce and blyndes) many a thousand putte more confidence of soule healthe in workes that were but of mennes phantasying, as in pardons, in pilgrymages, in kyssing of relyques, in offeryng to saintes, in halowed beades, in numberyng of prayers, in mumblyng vp of psalmes not vnderstand, in the merytes of those that called them selfes religious, and in other lyke thynges, disalowed by god, and his holy word, then in Christe thonly auctor, as is afore sayde, of mannes saluacion. But nowe that by the gracious permission of our sayde soueraigne Lorde, the scriptures are open for euery man to read soberly, and reuerently for his owne edifying in vertue and godly lyuing, it is right well knowen that the foresayd abusions were doctrines of Antichristes inuencion, and not of god: and that al such as teache any other waye or meane to attayne saluacio, then by hym who sayth: I am the waye & veritie, are false teachers, seducers, and liers. Nowe do the commaundementes of God no lenger giue place, as they were wonte to do, vnto mans tradicios. Now haue we learned what is our dutie to God, & what obedeice we owe vnto our price, gods chief minister, and supreme head in earth of our churche & congregacion. Now is idolatry, hipocrisy, and superstition, cleane plucked vp by the rootes, and true religion euery where planted. Nowe is false doctrine exiled, & Gods worde truely set forthe and preached. Nowe hathe England cleane forsaken Antichrist of Rome, the greatest enemy of gods holy worde, with al his moste vngodly deuices, and diuilyche inuencios. And all this came of the mere mercy and goodnes of almygty god towardes vs, who vndoubtedly for thassercio of his holy word, and the delyueraūce of vs his people out of captiuitie, ignorannce, and blydnes, hathe raysed vp in oure tymes thi Christen Josias, and ioyned vnto the same by most lawful matrimony youre noble grace, a Lady, besydes other speciall gyftes, and singuler qualities, wholy geuen to ꝑ study of vertue and godlynesse. Wherfore all England hathe iuste occasion to reioyce at this youre graces honorable aduauncement, yea rather hyghly to thanke god that our moste gracious soueraigne hathe matched himselfe with so vertuous a Lady, in whome is the very expresse resemblance of all his maiesties excellent vertues, but specially of that his graces ardent zele, and deuocion in fauouryng and setting forthe of Gods word, the mother of all ioyful prosperitie.

rete. A manifest argument wherof besydes many other, is that your grace so muche desyreth to haue the Paraphrases of the renoumed clerke Erasmus of Roterdame vpon the new testament (a worke very fruitefull and necessary for the true vnderstandyng of this parte of holy scripture) tourned into Englishe: and for the exploiture and spedy accomplishement of this your graces most Godly desyre, hath (as is sayde) commaũded certein welllearned persõs to translate the sayde worke, the paraphrase vpon S. Marke excepted, which the right worshypfull maister Owen (a man of muche lerning, & no lesse honestie, and therfore worthyly Physician to the kynges moste royall persõ) moued me, your graces pleasure fyrst knowē, to go in hãd withall, affirming that I should do a thyng right acceptable vnto your hyghnes, if I would diligently trauell therin. The whiche thing, being very desyrous to gratify your highnes, and with my poore seruice and diligence to further, as much as in me lay, ỹ godly purpose of the same, I right gladly promised him to do, trusting rather vpon the benigne acceptacion of your gracious goodnes, then vpon the sleudernesse of my wytte & lerning farre vnable worthely to atchiue so weyghty an entrepryse. For thauctour hereof was a man of incomparable eloquẽce: and therfore it is not possible for a person scarcely of meane learning (as I am) to set out euery thing specially in our English tongue being very barrain of wordes and phrases (I will not saye barbarous withall) so lyuelye, & with like grace as he wrote it fyrst in the Latine. Wherfore I mynded nothyng lesse then to contend with him in ornate speache, and eloquence: but haue done my diligent endeuour so to interprete the sayde worke, that it shoulde be bothe plaine and pleasaunte vnto the reader: and not onely that, but also to discharge the chiefest office of an interpretour, whiche is faythfully to translate, and expresse euery thing according to the true sence & meaning of thauctoure. If I haue, most vertuous Princesse, any where fayled thus to do, it hath bene rather for lacke of learning, and better knowledge, then of any good will and diligence. To speake here any thyng eyther in praise of thauctour of this present worke, or of the worke selfe, in myne opinion shall not be nedefull, for that thauctour is so muche renoumed for his excellency in lerning, that my prayses can no more illustrate and set forthe his glory, then a candell (as the common prouerbe is) giue light vnto the sunne: and the great vtilitie of thother cannot so well be set out by any mans prayse and commendacion, as it shall euidently appeare vnto them that wyll diligently reade and peruse it. If this my good will and endeuour maye be acceptable vnto your highnes, as the great fame of your bountye, and gracious goodnes putteth me in comforte it shalbe, I wyll hereafter, god assisting me, employ my whole study and labours in suche wise, ỹ the fruite thereof shalbe more worthy to be presented vnto your noble grace, then this rude translacion, the whiche I am bolde at this present throughe thaffiaũce of your natural gentlenesse to dedicate vnto the same.

I beseche almighty God long to preserue our sayde soueraigne Lorde, your grace, and that moste comfortable flower of all England, noble Prince Edward,
in continuall honour,
ioy, and prosperitie.

¶ To the moste chriſtian prince Frauncis the Frenche kinge, the firſt of that name, Eraſmus of Roterodame ſendeth greting.

THat I haue not tyll this day (moſt Chriſtiã kyng Frãcis) enioyed the commoditee of your maieſties ſpeciall fauour and beneuolence towardes me, hathe neither ben thorowe my defaulte or negligẽce, neyther yet can ỹ cauſe therof iuſtly be aſcribed vnto your excellency: but among ſondry lettes and impedimẽtes that hytherto hath chaunced, there hath none ſo muche enuied me this felicitie, as hathe this troublous and vnquiet worlde. For I haue euer loked when that in theſe long ſtormes and tempeſtes of warres, there woulde ſome fayre wether or clerenes of peace ſhyne vpon vs out of one quarter or other. Neither haue I thought my ſelfe at any time the leſſe bounden of an hear vnto your bountefull goodnes, then if I had accepted whatſoeuer your grace of your princely liberalitie offered me. And I truſt ere it be lõge to haue an occaſion more euidently to teſtifye the earneſte zeale and good mynde I beare towardes your hyghnes.

In the meane whyle vntyll opportunitie ſhall ſerue me ſo to dooe, I haue thought good to ſende your grace the Paraphraſe vpõ the ghoſpell of Sainct Marke as an earneſt penny of this my promiſe. And where I was of my ſelfe very prone and ready thus to dooe, and as it were runnyng forwarde of mine owne accorde, the very fitnes of the matier did alſo not a lytle excite and moue me therunto. For after I had dedicated Mathewe vnto myne owne naturall liege lorde Charles themperoure: and Iohn (vpon whome by and by after I had finiſhed Mathewe I made lykewyſe a Paraphraſe) vnto Ferdynande his maieſties naturall brother: & Luke (whiche was the thyrde that I wente in hande withall) vnto the kyng of Englande: then remained there Marke, who ſemed to be lefte behynde for your grace, becauſe the fower goſpels ſhoulde be dedicated vnto the fower chiefe princes and rulers of the worlde. And god ſende grace that the ſpirite of the ghoſpell maye lykewyſe ioyne the heartes of you all fower together in mutuall amitie and concorde, as youre names are in this ghoſpell boke aptely conioyned. Some there be whiche extende the byſhoppe of Romes dominion euen vnto hell or purgatory: other ſome geue him impery and power ouer the aungels. And ſo farre am I frõ enuying him this preeminente auctoritie, that I woulde wiſhe hym to haue a great deale more, but yet woulde I deſyre withall, that the worlde might once fele this his power, good and holſome, in ſettyng chriſtian princes at one, and in conſeruing the ſame in peace and amitie, whiche haue a lõg ſeaſon with no leſſe diſhonoure, then ſlaughter and effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, warred one agaynſte a nother to the vtter decay of Chriſtes religion.

And all this whyle we curſe and banne the Turkes. But what pleaſaunter ſight can there be vnto the Turkes, (or yf any other natiõ there be of the miſcreauntes that are greater enemies vnto Chriſtes religion) then to ſee thre of the moſte flouriſhing and moſte puiſſaũt princes of all Europe, thus by reaſon of miſche-

of miſchieuous diuiſion, to purſue eche other with mortall battaille. It will ſcarcely ſincke in my brayne that there is any ſo cruell a Turke who wyſheth more miſchiefe vnto Chriſten menne, thē theſelues worke one an other. And all this whyle ariſeth there no peace maker which wt his authoritie maye appeace this vngodly buſines and ruffling of the worlde, where as there lacketh not prouokers and ſetters on ynowe, and ſuche as poure oyle (as it is in the olde prouerbe) vpon the fyer. It is not my parte to make any ones title either better or worſe with my forevndgement. I knowe ryght wel that euery one thinketh his owne cauſe moſte rightful and iuſte: I knowe alſo that in all ſuch iudgementes that ſame partye is euer woonte to haue more fauoure that defendeth himſelfe from iniury offred him, then he that offreth the wreng: but yet would I very fayne that all chriſtian princes, woulde debate the matter ryght, and would well conſider with themſelues, how much he hathe gotten hereby, whatſoeuer he be, that had lieffer haue and embrace an vniuſt peace, then wage battaile be it neuer ſo iuſt and lawfull. What is more brytttle, more ſhorte, or more full of miſery and wretchednelle, then is this preſent lyfe of ours? I will not here ſpeake of ſo many kyndes of diſeaſes as reigne in the worlde, ſo many iniuries, ſo many caſualties, ſo many fatall calamities and miſauentures, ſo many peſtilences, ſo many diuers kyndes of lyghtninges, ſo many yerthquakes, ſo many ſortes of fiers, ſo many fluddes and inundacions of waters, with other like calamities out of all meaſure and numbre. For amōge all the euils that mannes life is vexed or troubled withall, there is none where of more miſchiefe and hurte enſueth, then of battaile, the which yet doeth muche more miſchiefe vnto mennes maners, then it doeth vnto theyr ſubſtance or bodyes. For he doeth the leſſe harme of bothe, that bereaueth a man of his life, then he that bereaueth him of his vertuous and good minde. Neyther is battayle euer the leſſe deteſtable & leſſe to be abhorred, becauſe the moſte parte of the euils there of lyghteth vpon poore folkes neckes, & ſuche as are of lowe ſtate and degree, as of huſbandmen, craftes menne, and waifaryng men. For the Lorde of all Jeſus Chriſte, ſhedde no leſſe bloude for the redemption of ſuche, be they neuer ſo vile raſcals & abiecte perſons, then he dyd for ỹ greateſt kynges and princes that be. And when at the dreadfull daye of dome we ſhall cummie before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt (where muſte ere long be preſented all the potentates and rulers of this worlde, howe mightie and puiſſaunte ſoeuer they be) that rigorous iudge will require as ſtreyght an accompte for thoſe ſely poore wretches, as he will doe for the rulers and great menne. They therfore that thynke it but a ſmall loſſe vnto the cōmon wealthe when theſe poore ſoules and vnderlinges are robbed, afflicted, dryuen out of their houſes, burned, oppreſſed, and murthered, doe plainly condemne of folythnes Jeſus Chriſte the wyſdome of the father of heauen, who for to ſaue ſuche, as the ſayde perſons are, dyd ſhed his precioufe bloud, and ſuffred paſſion. Wherfore in mine opinion no kynde of people is more pernicious to the common weale, then ſuche as put into princes heades thoſe thynges that maye ſtyre and moue them to warre, who the more highe ſtomaked and courageous they be, the ſoner are they deceyued. And amonge all princely vertues, highe ſtomake and noble courage of mynde is reckened the chief. For this vertue was Julius Ceſar of olde wryters hyghly commended. And for the ſame is noble kyng Frauncis lykewyſe extolled in oure tyme, with the full consent and testimonie of all nacions. Nowe what greater argument is there of a very lokti̇e and couragious mynde, then to be able nothinge to passe vpō iniuries? The doughtynes and valiaūtise of the olde Capitaines who warred for empire, and not for defence of lyfe, is muche renoumed and praysed, but in Gentyle wryters, and of Panyms or Gentiles. Certes it is a muche more honourable and glorious facte for a christian prince to bye peace and tranquilitie of the common weale with the losse of some parte of his dominion and enheritaunce, then for victory obteyned to be receyued with muche goodly triumphe, bought with so great displeasures of the people. Therefore such as haue incēsed the myndes of princes with a desyre to enlarge their empire, what els haue they inuented but a continual fountaine and quicke spryng of warres. Agayne as much mischiefe doo they in the worlde that minister vnto the same princes occasion and matter of wrathe, bearyng them in hande that it is a thyng appertainyng vnto princely manhod or couragiousnes, to be auenged by force of armes for some folyshe worde spoken, whiche happely was vntruely reported, or at the leste wyse made a great deale worse, and more haynous then it was spoken in very dede. But howe muche greater a pointe is it of a noble courage, for consideraciō to haue the peace and tranquilitie of the common wealthe conserued, nothyng to passe vpon a rayling woorde? For yf any hurte cumme therof, it is but a priuate hurte, yea, to say the truthe, it hurteth not at all, if it be neglected and not passed on. And in other matters concerning worldly affaires, kynges peraduenture maye take summe vacacion, and nowe and then sequestre them selues from busynesse, at leste wyse if it be lawfull for them to be any where idle and without busynesse, vnto whose office it specially belongeth to watche, for the preseruacion and safegarde of so many. But in takyng vpon them the daungerous enterprises and aduentures of warre, forsomuche as the same bryngeth with it a whole floude of great euylles and mischiefes, they ought with all theyr iyen in their heades to watche, and to be as circumspect as is possible to be, leste they decree and determine any thyng vnaduisedly. Neither speake I these thynges (moste christen kyng) of any entente to plucke the sworde out of the handes of princes. For peraduenture it is the parte of a good kyng sumtymes to make warre, but that muste be at suche tyme, when all other thynges hauyng been assayed in vaine, extreme necessitie compelleth him so to doo. The lorde Jesus tooke away the vse of the sworde from Peter, but not from princes. Saincte Paule also confirmeth their authoritie, commaunding suche as in the citie of Rome professed Christes religion, in no wyse to contemne thauthoritie of their soueraigne rulers, although the same were Gentiles and misbeleuntes, in so muche that he woulde not haue taken from them, being as the very ministres of God, neyther theyr customes, theyr tares or talages, nor theyr honoure. Taketh he the sworde from them, who sayeth: For he beareth not the sworde for naught? The selfe same thyng doethe Peter also teache beyng one of ỳ chiefe Apostles, saying: Submitte your selues therfore vnto all maner of ordinaunce of manne, for the lordes sake, whether it be vnto the kynge, as vnto the chief heade: eyther vnto rulers as vnto them that are sente of hym, for the punishment of euil dooers, but for the laude & prayse of them that doo well. &c. Christe woulde haue Peter to haue no weapon saue the sworde of the ghospell, whiche is the heauenly worde, the whiche as

saincte Paul teacheth in the epistle to the Hebrewes, is quicke and mightye in operacion, and sharper then any two edged sweord: and entreth through, euen vnto the deuiding a sondre of the soule and the spiryte. For he that commaundeth the sweorde to be put vp into the scaberte, and taketh it not away, doeth more then yf he toke it awaye. For why doeth he commaunde it to be put vppe? Truely because the euangelyke pastoure shoulde in no case make warre. Why doeth he neither commaunde it to be layde aside, nor yet forbid it to be? Verayly to doone vs to vnderstande, ỳ we ought not so much as then to go aboute to be auenged, when we are of power to reuenge the iniuries doone vnto vs. Wherfore I conclude, that the euangelyke pastoures haue the sweorde of the ghospell deliuered them of Christ, wher with they sleagh vices, and cutte awaye mans carnall lustes and desyres. Kynges also and temporall rulers haue theyr sweorde by his sufferaunce and permission, to make cuillmen afearde, and to preserue good men accordingly. The sweorde is not taken from them: but the vse therof is prescribed. They haue it for a defence and conseruacion of the publike tranquilitie, and not to bolster, and mayntayne therwith theyr owne ambicousnes. There are two maner of sweordes, a lyke wyse two maner of kyngdomes: The priestes and bishops haue theyr sweorde, and also theyr kyngdome. In stede of Diademes and helmettes they haue theyr Mytres: In stede of a scepter they haue a crosyers staffe: they haue theyr burgandyne, theyr souldiers girdle, and to be shorte, al that complete harnes whiche that valiaunt warriour Saincte Paule ascribeth vnto them in sondry places. These euangelyke kynges are called pastours, so lyke wyse are temporall kynges named of the Poete Homer, pastours of the people. They bothe doone one thyng, and yet is theyr office and ministery diuers, euen lyke as we se that in the same enterlude and play, some play one parte, and some an other. But yf they both hadethe of theym theyr owne sweord in a readines, I meane, yf ethe of theim would vse the power geuen them aryght, and as they ought to doo, I thynke verily that we (who are rather christen men by name, then in dede) would not so often times drawe out our wicked sworordes to thruste theim into the bellies of our christen brethren. Nowe whiles they bothe nothing regardyng theyr owne duetie, haue the one a desyre to entermeddle with that, whiche in no wyse appertayneth vnto theyr vocacion, it cummeth to passe that neyther of them both do maintayne theyr owne dignitie accordyngly, nor yet construe the publike tranquilitie. Whē hath a kyng more kyngly maiestie, then at suche tyme as he sitteth in iudgement, and ministreth iustice: then when he represseth iniuries, endeth controuersies, helpeth the oppressed: or when he sitteth in counsayle studying how to aduaunce the common wealth? On the other syde, when hath a bysshop more of hys dignitie, then at suche tymes as he preacheth the doctrine of the gospel out of a pulpit? For then is that euangelike king in his seate royall.

Loke how vnsemyng a thyng it was for the Emperour Nero to contende with the maisters of Musyke and myth harpers in the stage, or to proue maisteries with wagoners in the lystes or turneying place, called in latyne Circus: so vnsemely a thyng it is for a kyng to meddle wyth lawe and pleitie matiers that perteine vnto his own priuate affectiōs, and hurt the prosperous state of the common wealth. Agayne loke how vncomely a thyng it were if a Philosophier would with his cloke & long beard skip about the stage, & play a parte in an enterlude: or els holde a bill or a net in his hande in the place where the swordplayers are wonte to fyght at bitterraunce, and syng theyr accustomed song: I would not haue the, I woulde haue a fyshe, cocke why flyest thou from me: euen no lesse vnsemely a thyng it is for the euangelike kyng to playe the warryer, to bye and sell, I will not speake of other thynges more vnhoneste, and lesse agreable with his vocation. Howe chaunceth it that there is anye one byshop in our dayes that thinketh it a goodlyer thyng for hym to haue in his trayne. CCC. horsmen well appointed with crosbowes, launces, and handegunnes, then to bee accompanied with a good numbre of learned and vertuous deacons, and to carry about with hym bokes of holy scripture? Why dooe they thynk them selues great by the pompous shewe and setting foorth of those thynges, by contemnyng wherof, suche as they sucreded were accompted great and worthy persons? Why haue trumpettes and hornes a sweeter sounde in theyr eares, then the readyng of holy scripture? Well then, what if a kyng in steade of a Diademe, and a robe of estate, put on a Myter and a priestes attyre? and contrary a bishop in stede of a Myter and priestes attyre weare a Diademe, and a kynges robe or kyrtel: will it not appeare a monstreous sight vnto vs?

Nowe if the vnright and disordered vse of suche thinges as are but signes of theyr office and ministeries dooe so greatly moue vs, why then are we not a greate deale more moued to see their offices turned cleane cam, & misordered? Certes if either kyng or bishop dooe any thing priuately, they must haue respect to nothing els, but to the health and conseruacion of the people. For yf they dooe theyr dutie aright, either they admonishe such as are out of the way, correct suche as haue done amysse, or coumforte the dismayed, or kepe vnder the proude and hye mynded, or styrre vp idle persons, or make those that are at variaunce frendes and louers againe. This is the very office of kynges but specially of the euangelike kynges, who in no wyse ought ambitiously to desyre this worldly kingdome. And forasmuche as the Lorde Jesus was in very dede both a spirituall and a temperall kyng (although he expressed in perfyth but a spirituall kyngdome alonely) it is both theyr partes to dooe what in them lyeth to counterfaicte and followe theyr prince.

He wholly gaue himselfe for vs. And how then for shame dare any that calleth hymselfe Christes vicar, lyue onely to his owne priuate wealth and commoditie? Christe whether he were in the temple, or in the Synagoges, or went abrode, or taried at home in his seuerall house, or were carried by water, or continued in the wildernes, dyd nothyng elles all his lyfe long but playe the parte of a sauiour, of a coumforter, of a well doer. He taught the multitude, he healed the diseased, he cleansed the lepers, he restored the syght of the palsey, the lame and the blynd. Further he chased awaye hurtefull spirites, raysed the dead, deliuered those that were in peryll, filled the bellies of the hungry, reproued the Pharisees, defended his disciples, and also the synner that so lauishely poured out her oyntmente vpon hym.

He coumforted the synfull woman of Canaan, and her that was taken in aduultery: Peruse all the whole lyfe of Jesus, and it shall euidently appeare that he neuer harmed any bodye, notwithstanding he had so manye hurtes and displeasures done to hym of others, and that he coulde easily haue bene auenged yf it had pleased hym.

He

he euery where played the sauioure, euerywere the well doer.
He restored Malchus eare agayne whiche Peter cut of with his sweord. He would not haue his safegarde defended wyth ꝑ least hurte or displeasure that might be to any body. He made Herode and pilate at one. Hangyng on the crosse he saued one of the theues. Wo han he was dead he drewe the capteine of the garison vnto the christian profession. This was the very office and parte of a kyng, to do all men good, and hurte no bodye. His example all christian princes ought as nygh as they can, to folowe. And forasmuche as your grace is called the moste christian kyng, the very name and title selfe that is geuen your highnes, ought specially to moue you to expresse in all your doinges, as nere as ye can possible, the prince of all princes, Christe. But what sparcle of shame remayneth there in those persons, who albeit they haue a pleasure to be called the vicars of Christe, doe notwithstandyng require to haue (I saye not theyr lyfe or dignitie) but theyr auarice and pryde defended with greate effusion and shedyng of christian bloud? And this wryte I (ryght noble prince) not for to defame or reproue any bishops (albeit I wolde wishe of God that there were not some christian bishops of whome these wordes might be iustely spoken) but onely to shewe wherein ꝑ true dignitie of kynges and bishoppes consisteth, to the ende that bothe of them knowyng and maynteining theyr owne dignitie, maye happily passeouer this transytorye lyfe to Goddes pleasure and contentacion. But muche farder are those euangelike pastours from doyng theyr dutye, who, where it had been theyr parte to make princes be eyng at debate and variaunce at one agayne, do of their owne accorde incense them to warre, and as it is an old prouerbe, do cast brandes vpon the eyers or flames of battayle. Surely yf euer it were nedefull for a good pastour or shepherde anywhere to prouide for the safegarde of his flocke with the lolle and spendyng of his lyfe: if the example of that chiefe shepherde Christe, in whose stede they are, were any where to be expressed and folowed, here chiefly ought they to haue doone theyr duetie, where so greate a sea of mischiefes gulleth and floweth out into the worlde. But howe chaunceth it that amog so great a noumber of Abbottes, bishops and Archebishops, and Cardinals, not one stepped forth that dare putte, yea euen his verye lyfe in hasarde, to make an ende of this greate stirryng and troublous busynes of the worlde? Howe happily dyeth he, whose by his deathe causeth so many thousande mennes lyues to be saued? There is no crueller a thyng, then is that fyghting hand to hande, and bucherly mangyng and cuttyng of sweard players: And yet was antiquitie so fondly delyted with this syght, that the moste naughtie and detestable example remaynyng of the vse of the Gentiles, continued a long season, euen emong christen men, namely in the Citie of Rome, whiche could not yet forget her old paganitie. But that this manoure of fyghteyng is vtterly set aside, we maye thanke (as wytnesseth the historye called the tripartite history) one Telemachus a manne of theyr order and profession, who for christian simplicitie, and a desyre they had to leade a solitarye lyfe, and to eschewe the companye of the synfull multitude, were commonly called monkes or solytarye persons. This Telemachus came for this purpose out of the easte parties to Rome, and entryng into the place (whiche was called of them Theatrum, that is to saye, a place ordayned to beholde shewes and pastimes in) when he sawe two armed men

come into the fighting place; and about to slee one another, he leaped be-twixt them as they were in their furye and rage, crying and saying with a laude voyce: What dode ye brethern? why go ye about like wylde beastes to murther one another? Tamake short tale, whiles the good man went about to saue both the kynges, he lost his owne, beyng stoned to death of the people: So muche dyd the dotyng multitude set by thys cruell kynde pastime and pleasure. But what came of this? Honorius the Emperoure, assone as he was enformed herof, commaunded this maner of fe wyng the people pastyme by coupling or matchyng together of sworde players, to be lefte and vtterly abolyshed. Nowe marke me well howe behouefull a pastyme it was, and how many thousandes had by reason therof ben miserably slayne and murthered, and then shall it euidently appere how much the world is bounden vnto this one mannes death. And for this facte was Telemachus iustely canonized and made a sainct. How much more then by all ryght and reason shoulde he deserue to haue lyke honoure gyuen hym, that woulde aduenture his lyfe to parte so mightye and puissaunt princes, that thus warre and fyght continually one agaynst another. For the common welth suffereth no great losse yf a sworde player kyll a sworde player, and one vngracious varlet sleyeth another: And yet as princes cannot be enemyes together without the vtter detriment and annoyaunce of the whole worlde: so contrariwyse may they with lesse ieopardy be parted, then Telemachus parted the sworde players: fyrste because they are christen men, and secondarily because the more noble courage and stomacke they be of, the more tractable they are, yf any bishop, or els any other prelate of the churche go about to perswade them without craft or dissimulacion. Nowe yf anye chaunce vpon suche a prince as can by no meanes be intreated, but is of a tyrannous and cruell nature: then let him consyder how the greatest hurt and displeasure that the cruellest tyranne in the worlde is able to do, is but death.

And where I praye you shall the successours of the Apostles shewe an exaumple of an Apostolyke spyrite, yf they shewe it not in this case? Some will here saye: What shall my death preuayle, yf I haue not my delyte? I answere: Christe the rewarde gyuer wyll not see his champion to lose his rewarde. Albeit many tymes death obtayneth, what lyfe could neuer bring about. For the death of vertuous men is of no small power and efficacie.

I wyll not here standein the recitall of olde exaumples whiche are innumerable. John Baptist was beheaded for his franke speakyng: but al princes are not Herodes: nor all haue not suche peramours as Herodias was. Ambrose bishop of Myllayne shranke not to suspende Theodosius the Emperoure out of the churche, for his cruell and rashe sentence agaynst the Thessalonians, and after he had sharplye rebuked hym, and commaunded hym to make satisfaction, he put hym to his penaunce. And forthwith the mayestye of so myghtye a prynce gaue place, and was obedient vnto the auctoritie of a bishop.

The holy man Babylas Bishoppe of Antioche attempted to vse lyke seuerities againste a kynge whiche had murthered an innocent, and he was slayne for his laboure: but anon as he was deade, he began to be feared not onely of the heathen Emperour, but also of the deuyles, whiche were as yet in these dayes worshypped for Goddes. I haue (ryght excellent prince) suche an opinion of the Emperours maieſties nature, of your Graces diſpoſicion, and of the kyng of Englandes good nature, and vertuous inclinacion, that I put no doubtes but you all would long ere this haue folowed good aduertiſementes, if there had been any ſuche counſaillour, whiche would haue been plaine and franke with you all with diſcretion, and diſcrete with franke plaines.

And all this whyle there lacketh not great plenty of ſuche as incenſe the myndes of princes to battayle, namely of thoſe perſones whome it behoueth, forasmuche as theyr profit and lyuing dependeth therupon, to haue all the worlde in an vproze, and vnquieted with warres. One ſayeth: he ſetteth your maieſtie at naught: he gaue your grace ſuche a mocke. Another, yf your highneſſe ioyne this part vnto your dominions, you may alſo at your pleaſure eaſely ioyne that. O vnaduiſed and raſhe counſaylour. Why doeſt thou rather put into his head howe farre he may extende the boundes of his dominions, then put him in remembraunce with howe narrowe lymites the ſeignozie, whiche he hath nowe at this preſent was in olde tyme bounded. Why doeſt thou not ſhewe hym whiche way that he hath may be well gouerned, rather then enlarged. The extending of boundes is endleſſe: and therefore moſt true it is that Seneca repozteth: Many Emperours and princes haue encroched vpon others, and taken theyr marches from them: and yet neuer none tyl this daye hath appointed hymſelfe any lymittes to be content withall. But the verye true commendacion of a prince ſtandeth in well gouerning. Alexander the great when he was come to the Occian ſea, wiſhed there had been another worlde for him to conquere, as who ſaye this, worlde was to litle to ſatiſfye his ambicioufnes, & deſyre that he had to enlarge his Empier. Hercules neuer went beyond the pyes called Gades. But no Occian, no Gades can bound our inſaciable ambicion. Howbeit againſt the peſtilent wordes of ſuche perſones, chriſtian princes ought to haue their myndes diligently fortyfied afore hand, with the decrees and ſayinges of Chriſte, as it were with triacles or preſeruatiues againſt poiſon, and in all their counſayles to haue ſpeciall regarde vnto the rule of the goſpell, as vnto a marke.

Peraduenture your maieſtie will aſke what I meane to ſyng ſo long a ſong vnto your highneſſe, ſence the ſame is moſte occupyed about the weightye affaires of the common wealthe. yea, my deſyre was to haue this ſong ſonge to all menne, for no cauſe els, but for that this vniuerſall calamitie of the worlde greueth me very ſore, and alſo for that I muche deſyre to ſee more tranquilitie and quietnes in euery parte of Chriſtendome, but ſpecially in the realme of Fraunce, then whiche kyngdome I wote not whether there be anye more excellent eyther in true chriſtianitye and good lyuing, or els in worldly aboundaunce and proſperitie. Now yf ſuche rufflyng and troublous buſynes dyd ſeldome when chaunce, lyke as great fluddes, earthquakes, or famine are wont to do, then were it a thyng more tollerable: but ſo it is that the worlde is continually troubled, and neuer at quiet by reaſon of ſuche diſorde and diuiſion. The phyſycians whenſoeuer there chaunceth any newe bodely diſeaſes, do wittely ſearche out the cauſes of the maladie, the whiche once known, then do they eaſly cure it: And not onely contented thus to do, they alſo inuent wayes to let that the ſame plague maye not often tymes begyn to rage afreſhe, or reigne agayne. Why therfore in theſe ſo great euils,

and so many tymes chaunceng, do not men of great wisedome and experience semblably searche out the welles that all this troublous busines so oft springeth out of into the worlde, to the ende that the rootes therof beyng cleane cut vp and destroyed, they maye perfitely cure and remeady thesame. Why are we quycke syghted in thynges of litell weight and importaunce or none at all, and in the weightiest thing of all more then halfe blynde. Myne opinion is, that battaile for the moste part springeth of vayne wordes or titles as it were inuented to nourishe mās pryde & vayne glory, as who saie, there were not ambicion ynoughe in the worlde, vnlesse we fed & maintened this naughtie vice with newly inuented titles, the whiche vice of it owne propre nature groweth to fast in vs. These, and suche other lyke rootes and chief causes of battaile beyng once cut awaye, then should it be easie to cōclude and establiche a peace among christian princes, with such lawes and condicions that woulde neuer suffre suche ruffling businesse and hurly burly to begyn agayne. By this meanes should the princes encrease in richesse, now beeing common betweene them by reason of amitie and frendship: and the christian people should lyue in louely peace and tranquilitie vnder their moste wealthye princes. So would the lorde Jesus, that true king of the whole worlde, be fauorable vnto vs: and cause all thinges to prosper & goe forwarde with vs. So should wee be feared of the enemies of Christes religiō against whom we haue much a do at this daye to defend our owne, much lesse than are we able to discoumfite them and chase them away far from vs: Albeit I had rather haue them reformed of their misbeliefe, then by force of armes chased away and put to flyght. But howe is it possible for vs to reforme other, yf our selues be (I had almoste sayed) worse and more vicious in our conuersacion then they are. For I doe not here esteme christian menne by the articles of the fayth whiche we profesle with mouthe, but by theyr maners and lyuing. Wherefoeuer ambicion, couetousnes, pryde, wrathe, reuengemente, and a desyre to hurte reigneth, there (say I) lacketh the fayth of the ghospell. Nowe albeit this pestilence haue infected, euen those vnto whose office it chiefly appertained to see a remedy for the decay of christen religion, yet haue I some good hope of reformacion, because I see the bookes of holy scripture, but specially of the newe testament so taken in hande, and laboured of all men, yea euen as muche as of the ignorāunt and vnlettered sorte, that many tymes suche as profesle the perfyte knowledge of Goddes worde, are not able to matche them in reasonyng. And that there be very many readers of the bookes of the newe testamente, this one thyng maketh me to beleue, because notwithstanding the printers do verely publishe and put forth so many thousande bokes, yet all the bookesellers shoppes that be, are not able to suffice the gredines of the byers. For nowe a dayes is it well solde ware whatsoeuer a man attempteth vpon the ghospell. This so strong a medicine once receiued and dronken came not but worke and put forth his strength. Wherfore me thynketh the worlde is in case lyke to a mānes body vexed with grieuous diseases, after it hath receyued an herbe called Elleboze, or some other strong purgacion. For then is it all together distempered and out of quyet, and fareth as though it woulde yelde vp the ghoste. And God sende grace that this euangelike Elleboze, after it haue once searched and entred into all the veynes of our soule, maye so come vp agayne, that (the seedes of vices beyng ther-

by cast

by caſt out and auoyded) it maye reſtore vs made whole and purged of all our ſynnes, vnto Jeſu Chriſte, and maye alſo after this greate ruffelyng and almoſte vncurable diſeases of the worlde, bryng agayne vnto all menne that ioyefull and muche deſyred tranquilitie. And verily I would hope better that the common prayers of all good men to that ende and purpoſe ſhoulde not be made in vaine, if the chiefe eſtates of the worlde, woulde lyke truſtie and faythfull phyſycians, do theyr endeuour to helpe the worlde in this euill caſe, that is to ſaye, yf the princes, in whome it chiefly lyeth to rule the worlde as they wyll, would call vnto theyr remembraunce that they ſhall ſhortlye (for what thing is there in this preſent lyfe of any long continuaunce) gyue an accoumpt vnto that moſte ſoueraigne and high prince, how they haue gouerned their dominions: Agayne yf the biſhoppes, diuines, and all eccleſiaſticall perſones woulde lykewyſe remember, howe they haue not ſucceded in the places of Annas & Caiphas, or of the Scribes and Phariſeis, (who whyles they wickedly defended theyr owne kyngdome, wente about to oppreſſe the kyngdome of the ghoſpell: whyles they vpheld and defended theyr owne glorye, dyd theyr endeuour to bury and ouer whelme Chriſtes glorye: and finally, whiles they laboured to approue theyr owne righteouſneſſe, made God vnrighteous) but rather in the place of the Apoſtles, who had a pleaſure euen with the leeſyng of theyr owne bloude and liues to defende Chriſtes kyngdome, Chriſtes glory, and Chriſtes righteouſnes. Chriſte hath once ſuffered, once aryſen agayne from death to lyfe, and neuer wyll dye agayne. But he ſuffereth the ſame paſſion afreſhe, ſo oft as the truethe of the ghoſpell is condemned, beaten, ſpytte vpon, crucified, and buried. To be ſhort, he reckeneth done vnto hymſelfe, whatſoeuer euell or diſpleaſure is done vnto his membres. Peraduenture (moſte Chriſtian kyng) I haue ſpoke here more frankely, and more at large then it became me to do: howbeit the great loue I beare towarde your grace hath made me both lauiſhe of my woordes, and alſo more bolde to vtter my minde vnto your highneſſe: I beyng a Chriſtian man, do wiſhe well vnto all Chriſtian menne generally: but yet haue I a certaine ſpeciall loue and affection to the moſte noble and flouriſhyng realme of Fraunce. I beſeche Jeſu thimmortall kyng of the whole worlde, vnto whome the heauenly father hath geuen all power in heauen and in yearth, to geue his holy ſpirite both to the people, and alſo to the princes and rulers: to the princes, that they may haue grace happely to paſſe ouer theyr lyues in mutuall amytie and concorde vnder theyr common kyng and prince Jeſu: vnto the other, that they maye lyue in reſte and peace vnder their moſte godly and wealthy princes: and the ende of all to be this, that chriſtian vertue and godlineſſe beyng well planted among vs, maye be enlarged and ſpreda brode as muche as is poſſible to be, not by inuadyng or waſting of others dominions or countreys (for ſo our enemies become the power, but neuer the better and more godly) but by preaching euery where the doctrine of the goſpell ſyncerely and truely, by theyr miniſtery that haue in them the ſpirite of the ghoſpell: and by ordering our liues after ſuche ſorte, that verye many may be allured to profeſſe our religion euen by the ſwete ſmell or ſauour of our good lyuing. So beganne the chriſtian empire, ſo encreaced it, ſo was it greatly enlarged, ſo was it eſtabliſhed: and by the contrary we ſee how it is now almoſt at a point and come to nothing, if we conſidre the greatneſſe of the whole

worlde. Wherfore loke by what aydes it first beganne, by what meanes it was encreaced, and established, by the same must we repaire it beyng decaied, enlarge it being brought into narrowe roume, and finally establishe it againe beyng vnstable and at no sure staye. These thinges wryte I (most christian prince) of a pure zele and good mynde, neyther reprehending any man, since I beare all men my good wyll, neyther flatteryng with any, or cozying fauoure, because I seke naught at no mannes handes. Almightie God graunt your highnesse well to fare. Yeuen the first of December, in the yere of our lorde,

The lyfe of S. Marke written by S. Hierome.

MArke the disciple and interpreter of Peter, beyng desired of the brethren at Rome, wrote a shorte ghospell accordyng as he hearde Peter preache & shew euery thing by mouth. The whiche ghospell the same Peter, after he had heard it, dyd allow and publishe by his authoritie, because it should be red of the congregacion, as recordeth Clement in ỹ sixt boke of his worke entitled, Disposiciones. Of this Marke, Papias also, bishop of Hierusalem, maketh mencion. And Peter in his first Epistle, where vnder the name of Babylon by a figuratiue maner of speakyng he vnderstandeth Rome, hath these wordes: The congregacion of them which at Babylon are companions of your election, saluteth you, and so doth Marke my sonne. Wherfore he toke the ghospell that hymselfe had written, and went into Egipt, and first of all men preached Christ at Alexãdria, where he ordeyned a churche or congregacion of suche pure doctrine and perfite lyuing, that he made all that professed Christ to folowe his exãple. To be shorte, Philo the eloquentest wryter of the Iewes, perteynyng the first congregacion of Alexandria yet to perseuer in the Iewishe religiõ, wrote a boke of their conuersacion, as it were in the praise of his nacion: And as Luke sheweth how all thinges were common among the beleuers at Hierusalem, so dyd he put in wryting all that euer he sawe done at Alexandria during the tyme that Marke there taught and preached. He dyed in the eyght yere of Neros reigne, and was buried at Alexandria, in whose place succeded Anianus.

The Paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gospell of Sainct Marke.

The first Chapter.

IT is naturallye gyuen to all men, to desyre felicitie. This felicitie many worldly men right politique and wyse, as touchyng a certain kynde of wisdome, haue hitherto promised: some, by suche lawes as they haue made and written: other some, by rules and preceptes that they haue giuen, to teache men how to leade a vertuouse and a godlye life. But for as much as they were mẽne, they were not able to performe their promise. For they neyther wist themselfes what was the true, & perfyte felicitie of man, nor wherin it stoode. And for this cause it came to passe, that in stede of true felicitie, they embraced a certain deceyuable image or shadowe therof, and infected other with their errour, beyng bothe deceyued them selfes, and deceyuers. Therfore bothe the lawe makers, and philosophiers, brought vs a certaine gospell of their owne inuencion, but suche a one as was partely false, and deceyuable, and partly werishe and of no efficacie. Moyses and the Prophetes wrote a more certain and pithythie gospell than they, but to one nacion alone: and as that tyme required, wrapped with figures and shadowes, disposing men onely to ỹ knowleage of veritie, but vnsufficient to giue perfite saluacion, neuertheless sum what promoting therunto, wherin goddes wisdome resembleth nature, whiche bringeth vs, and as a mã would say, leadeth vs by the hande, from the knowleage of thynges that are vnder our corporall sight, vnto the knowleage of thinges inuisible. And yet they gospell conteineth in it more feare then glad and ioyful promise, and hath muche more bewrayed the wickednes of man, than taken away the same, rather beaten into mennes myndes goddes might and power, than set out his mercie and goodnesse, caused more rather dreade, then emplanted loue.

For what could man do but feare, tremble, and despayre, after he had learned by the law, that he was alwayes in bondage and subiection of sinne, and not able to refrayne therfro, and also did knowe how no manne coulde escape the iudgement of God, a very rigorous & sore auenger of synne and vngodlinesse. Who is he that can finde in his harte to loue hym whome he feareth. Now ỹ dreade of goddes iustice, although it be many tymes the beginning of saluacion, euen as a bitter medicine that vexeth the whole bodie of manne, is the entrey to health, yet is it not the thyng whiche maketh man to haue perfite felicitie. The grace and beneficiall goodnes of God, causeth man to loue God, and loue to godward is the thing that auaunceth hym to happie state and felicitie. Therfore after ỹ whole worlde was sumwhat prepared, as wel by the prophecies and foresayinges of the prophetes, as by the commaundementes and figures of Moyses, in these laste dayes was opened and preached vnto ỹ same, that verye ioyefull gospell, that all mẽne ought to embrace, and most louingly to receyue: whiche of the owne accorde, or without any deseruyng on mans behalfe, bringeth not onely to the Iewes, but also to all nacions of the worlde remission of all sinnes. And lest haply any manne put doubtes in ỹ cer-

taintie of this promiſe, it is God that maketh it, and no manne: neyther is his ambaſſadour Moyſes, or anye of the Prophetes, but the verye ſonne of God hymſelfe, Jeſus Chriſte, who for oure ſaluacion came downe from heauen, & toke vpon him our corruptible fleſhe, to thintent that he beyng giltleſſe, and without all ſynne, might by hys paſſion and death, freely geue innocencie and lyfe to all that beleue his promyſes, and put theyr whole affiaunce in hym.

For God, who is of his own proper nature gracious and beneficial, would by this meanes, ſhewe that exceedyng great and ineſtimable kindneſſe that he bare & owardes mākynde: which was ſo great, that greater can neyther be deſyred, ne ought to be looked for. He could not ſende a more honorable meſſenger than his owne onely begotten ſonne, nor ſhewe more kyndneſſe, than through faythe onely, freely to releaſe all mennes offenſes were they neuer ſo many, neuer ſo great and heynous: yea and ouer this, through his holy ſpirite, chooſe thoſe that were before ſlaues and bondmen of the diuell, to be felowes with his ſoonne, by whome he hath geuen vs al thinges both in heauen and in earth.

And bycauſe nothyng could be more ioyfull then this meſſage, or tydinges, it is by right good ſkyll called of the Grekes, Euangelion, that is almuche to ſaye in Engliſhe, as glad and ioyfull tydynges, to comfort you, that you ſhould no more feare the yoke and burthen of Moyſes lawe.

The texte. ¶ The beginning of the ghoſpell of Jeſu Chriſte, the ſonne of God as it is written in the Prophetes. Beholde I ſende my meſſenger before thy face, whiche ſhall prepare thy waye before the. The voyce of a cryer in the wilderneſſe, prepare ye the waye of the Lorde, and make his pathes ſtreight. Johan did baptiſe in the wilderneſſe, and preached the baptiſme of repentaunce, for the remiſſion of ſynnes: and all the lande of Jewrye, and they of Jeruſalem, went out vnto him, and were all baptiſed of him in thy ryuer of Jordan, confeſſing theyr ſynnes.

And albeit ſumme menne had leuer make a further reherſall of thiſtorye of the goſpell, and begynne the ſame with the natiuitie and birth of Jeſu Chriſte: yet me thinketh it ſufficient, for that I woulde be briefe, to take my begynnyng of Johan Baptiſtes preachyng: For lyke as the day ſtarre goeth before the Sunne, ſo came he, and appeared vnto the worlde before Chriſtes preachyng, not by chaunce and fortune, but by Goddes determinacion, to ſtyre vp the myndes of the Jewes, to looke for Meſſias that would ſtreightwayes cum, yea and to poynte hym vnto theim wyth his finger, when he came: the whiche John, the Prophetes ſo many hundred yeares ſythens, prophecied and told before ſhould cum. For the ſame prophetes whiche prophecied and ſpake of Chriſtes cummyng, ſpake and prophecied alſo of John, the forewalker of Chriſte. For in Micheas the prophete, God the father ſpeaketh vnto his Sonne in this wyſe: Lo, ſayeth he: I ſende my eſpeciall and cleere meſſenger before thy face, who ſhall make a waye for the, that anon after ſhalt cum, and take on the thoffice of preachyng the ghoſpell. Lykewyſe the Prophete Eſaye ſygnifying the preachyng of John, ſayeth: The voyce of a cryar in wilderneſſe: prepare ye the waye of the Lorde, make ſtraycht his pathes. In ſemblable wyſe the paciente is moniſhed before the cummyng of the Phiſician, to knowlage hys diſeaſe, and reuerently to receyue hym whan he cummeth, and in all thynges to do after him, and folowe his counſayle. When therfore the tyme approched, that Jeſus Chriſte the ſonne of God, who was not yet knowen vnto

the worlde, should begin to take vpon hym this ministracion, for the whiche he was sent downe from heauen into earth. John according as the prophetes had prophecied and tolde before, played the forecurrour, baptizing in wilderneſſe: not that he dyd therby waſhe awaye ſinnes, but onely ſtyrre and exhort men to be repentaunt for their former lyfe, that they knowleaging their diſeaſe ſhoulde gredely deſire his cumming whiche onely baptizeth with ſpirite and fyre, takyng awaye at once through fayth in him, all ſinnes: endowyng mens ſoules with heauenly grace, whiche he poureth out of hymſelfe, as out of the well and fountayne therof: freely deliuerying from vnrighteouſneſſe, freely geuyng ryghteouſneſſe, freely delinerying from death, and freely geuyng lyfe euerlaſtyng. The greater that this loue and kyndes was which God ſhewed vnto mankind, the greuouſer ſhall their punyſhment be that haue ſet nought by the ſame when it was offred them. And leſt any ſhould ſo do, John came before to prepare and diſpoſe all men by his carnall baptiſme, to the ſpirituall baptiſme of Chriſt: to cauſe them by exhorting, and making them afrayde, to forthinke, and hate their former lyfe: and fynally to geue them forewarnyng, that meſſias, and the kyngdom of God, were at hande. John was not the light that ſhoulde lighten euery man, whiche cummeth into this worlde, but a meſſanger of the light that anon after ſhould appeare. He was not the phyſitian whiche ſhould take awaye mennes ſinnes, and geue health, but made them inwardly to tremble in their conſcience, in that he declared vnto them the great daunger they ſtode in: Finally he ſtyred vp all mennes hartes, to the greate deſire of euerlaſting ſaluacion, by preachyng vnto them, how he was not farre of, the whiche only ſhould deliuer from ſinne. He was not the bridegrome but a forewalker of the bridegrome, to wake and call vp all men, to meete the bridegrome cumming. He was not the ſonne of God, but a voice forethewing the ſonne of God, who anon after ſhould be diſcloſed vnto the worlde. Moſes lawe was a fearefull lawe, in ſomuche that the children of Iſraell could not abide the voyce of God, when he ſpake vnto them. John being a limitte or bordre ſet betwene the lawe and grace, and as a man mengled of both, dyd herein vſe a poynte of the olde lawe, becauſe in his preachyng he manaced all men with euerlaſtyng death and damnacion, vnleſſe they wouldē tourne in ſeaſon from their ſynfull lyuing. And againe this had he of the new, that he moued not the people to ſacrifices, burnt offringes, vowes, or faſtinges, but to baptiſme, and repentaunce of the former lyfe: and ſhewed moreouer how the moſte mercifull Meſſias was already cum & preſent, who ſhoulde freely forgiue all men their offences, that would put their whole truſt and confidēce in hym. The former lawe was written or publiſhed in wilderneſſe, and from thence alſo cummeth the beginning of the newe. He muſt cleane forſake all the worlde, that will be worthy to be partaker of the grace of the goſpel, whiche compendiouſly geueth all thynges. In great cities are riches, delicates pleaſures, pride and ambicō: But ſpecially Jeruſalem had in it a famous temple, by reaſon wherof ſhe was not a litle proud and ſtately. The ſame citie had alſo carnall ſacrifices wherunto the people truſted. Furthermore it had holye dayes, obſeruāces of the ſabboth, a preſcribed choiſe of meates, and other ceremonies, whereby ſhe ſuppoſed that man was iuſtified and made righteous before God. Finally, there were highe mīded prieſtes, and diſſemblyng phariſies. But whoſo deſireth the baptiſme of the goſpel muſt vtterly laye apart all trust and confidence of these thynges. He must forsake all Iewry with her Ierusalem, her temple, her sacrifices, her priesthod, and pharisaicall fashions, and from thence depart into wildernesse where he may heare the most ioyfull tydinges of our sauiour that straight wayes wil cum. To returne to Iohn, he cried not in vain. For he made a great many so afrayed with his crying and preaching, that they forsoke their dwelling places, and hasted to the water of Iordan: and that not alonely out of all the countrey of Iewrie, but also out of Ierusalem it selfe. Thither flocked a great rablement of souldiers and publicanes, and also certaine of the pharisees. Iohn receiued and taught as many as came, without choise or regard of perso, and did also baptise suche of them as were displeased with themselfes for theyr offences, and confessed the same: expressing hereby as it were by a certain corporall figure, the very order of the newe lawe and gospell. For the first office and ministerie in christian profession is to teache. When ỳ christian nouice (by this name vnderstande good reader suche a one as forsaking eyther the Iewish or Paynims religion, and intending to be christened, is newely instructed in the faith: in the wiche state he is called of thauncient fathers, catechumenus) when I saye, the christian nouice beginneth once through the doctrine of the teacher both to know his owne filthie liuyng and also the goodnesse of God, than is he wholely displeased with hymselfe, and perceyuyng no where els to appeare any hope of saluacion, hath straight wayes recourse for ayde and succour to the beneficiall lorde, who freely extendeth his mercy and goodnesse towardes vs. It is a great furtheraunce to the recouering of health, if the pacient knowe his owne infirmitie. It preuayleth not a litle to the obtaynyng of light, if a manne perceyue the present darkenes he is in. He hath already much profited to puritie of lyfe and vertuous liuing, whoso abhorreth his owne vnclenesse. The preaching of Iohn, figureth the christian instruccion, or fyrste teachyng by mouthe of Christes religion. His baptisme representeth the baptisme of Christe. That he so gentlye receyued all that euer came vnto hym, betokeneth nothyng els, but lyke as euery man nedeth the grace of the gospell, euen so no man of what degre or nacion so euer he be, ought to be secluded from the same. The pharisees had their washinges. They washed their handes at meale tyme or when they shoulde take theyr repaste: They washed theyr bodyes at theyr retourne home from the market: they washed oftymes theyr cuppes, dishes, stooles, tables, and the rest of theyr houlholde stuf, as though cleanesse and puritie of lyfe, whiche God loueth, and alloweth in vs, stode in the obseruacion of suche trifles, or as though a litle quãtitie of the Pharisees water, were of suche force & vertue that it coulde make a man euer the cleaner in the sight of almightie God. Suche maner of washinges & baptismes do not make a man cleaner in soule then he was before, but rather more proud and arrogant. Happy therfore are they who haue vtterly forsaken Moyses, and the Pharisees washynges, and with al haste runne vnto the bathes of Iordan. For in the Hebrue tongue this word (Iordan) is as muche to saye, as the floude of iudgement. He is not iudged of the Lorde, who so iudgeth himselfe. This is thatsame purifying floude whiche issueth out of two foũtaynes, that is, out of the knowleage of our own vnrighteousnes, and the remembraunce of the merciful goodnesse of god. This is that baptisme of repentaũce, and flood of teares, which causeth streames of bitter water, to flow out of the most inward vaines of mannes

hart, but it hath suche strēgth & vertue, that it doth as it were with the sharpnesse of saltpeter, scower and wipe awaye al the spottes and filthe of the soule. The Phariseis also haue a confessiō of their owne, but such an one as plainly declareth their pryde and arrogancie. I fast, sayth the proude Pharisei, twyse in the weke. I geue vnto the poore the tenthe parte of all my goodes, and I am not as other men be. The Iewes cōfesse other mens sinnes, and not their owne. Now they that prepare and make themselues ready to receyue the baptisme of the gospell, will neyther be knowen of their owne good deedes, nor make rehersal of other mens faultes, but eche of them truly cōfesse their owne. It is a poynt of arrogancie, for a man to stand in recitall of his owne good dedes, euen as to discouer other mens offences proceedeth of malice, and euill will. To be shorte, to acknowleage thine owne sinne and iniquitie, is to glorify the goodnes of god.

¶ Iohn was clothed with Camels heare, and with a gyrdel of a skynne, about hys loynes. And he did eate locustes, and wilde hony, and preached, saying: He that is stronger then I, cummeth after me, whose shoe latchet I am not worthy to stoupe downe and vnlouse. I haue baptised you with water, but he shall baptise you with the holy ghost. The texte.

And to thintent that Iohn, who in lyke manier came before the first cummyng of Christe, as Hely according to the prophecie of Malachi, shall cum before the last, might the more in holy and perfite lyuing resemble Hely, he led his lyfe in wildernes, vtterly eschewing the sinfull company of worldly people. He was not clothed with silkes nor yet with woollen clothes, but with a garment made of Camels heare, and girded about the loynes with a lether gyrdle. And by this straught manour of liuing, he shewed a certaine euangelike and christian perfection, euen before the gospel was published or preached. His foode was agreable to his dwelling place, and apparayle. For it was euen suche as came to hand, and was easie to be gotten: suche as the place of the own accorde, and without husbanding or tillyng, geue hym, most commonly certaine flies, called locustes, and wild hony. And here the criar or preacher of Christ, did a great deale more then Moses lawe required. For that law made distinccion only betweene sundrye kyndes of beastes. But he vtterly, & that without commaundement, abstayned from eating of all fower footed beastes, fowles, & fishes: That law forbeded to were any clothing of linsaye woolsaye: but he cleane depriued himselfe bothe from the vse of woll and flaxe. Suche a lyfe doubtles was conuenient for the preacher of repentaunce, who although he were sanctified in his mothers wombe, yet would neuer the lesse leade a straight life, lest his preaching should haue bene little esteemed and set by, if his liuyng and doctrine had in any point disagreed. And by this meanes he gate hymselfe so great renoume, and auctorite among the Iewes, that manye of them supposed he had bene very Messias in dede. But Iohn, albeit he was a man highly in the fauour of God, and endewed with many godly giftes and qualities, yet perceiuing what a great offence it was, for manne to chalenge that glorye whiche is dewe vnto God, or for one man to put ayde of saluacion in an other, openly preached in the presence of them all, and sayde: I am not he who ye suppose me to be. My doctrine is a base and a werithe doctrine. My baptisme is not effectuall. I am nothing els but a manne as ye are, conceyued in sinne: nothing elles but hys messenger, whiche will straught wayes cum to gyue saluacion vnto all men.

He is behynd me in tyme, and after the estimacion of the world, of muche lesse auctorite then I am: but he surmounteth me so farre in heauenly power, that I, whom you haue in suche reuerence and veneracion, am not worthy to serue him in the office of the vilest drudge or slaue: not worthy, I saye, to lye vpon the ground, and vnlouse the latchet of his shoes. You ought to honoure him. you ought intierly, and with most feruent affection, to desire his cummyng. I preache vnto you earthly thinges. He shall teache you heauenly matiers. I haue hitherto baptised you, as touching the bodye, with water, preparing your mynders to repentaunce: When he once cummeth abrode, he shall baptise you with the holy ghoste, whose secret vertue sanctifieth all thinges. For as no man hath righteousnesse of himselfe, euen so can no man geue the same to an other. He must nedes be of more power and excellencie than man, whoso geueth that thing, whiche pertayneth to God alone to geue. Knowe you the difference betwene an vnworthy seruaunt, and the maister: betwene the minister, and the auctor: betwene the cesar, and the kyng.

He that is greater then I, &c.

The texte. ¶ And it came to passe in those dayes, that Jesus came frō Nazareth of Galile, and was baptised of Johñ, in Jordan: and assone as he was cum out of the water, he saw heauen open and the spirite descending vpon him, lyke a doue. And there came a voyce from heauen. Thou art my deare sonne, in whom I delite.

After that John had with wordes of lyke sentence, moued and stirred vp the mynde of a great manie of theym, to wayt for Messias that was cummyng, then furth came Jesus when his tyme was cum, forsakyng the litle village of Nazareth in the countrey of Galile, where because of his educacō and long continuaunce in the same, men thought he had bene borne. Certes this is the nature and propertie of all euangelike thinges, to begyn very baselye, and from suche begynnynges by litle and litle, to cum at the length to highest perfeccion: whereas contrarily all thinges that euer the world and the deuel goeth about are after merueilous goodly begynninges, sodainly cast down, and brought to nought. So lucifer whiles he set his seate in the northe ymagenyng to be equall with the highest, was sodainlye cast downe headlyng into hell. In simblable wise Adam when that thorough the diuels instigacō, he desired to be equall with God, was by and by exiled, and cast out of paradise. Therfore if thou here considre the high excellencie, and greatnesse of Jesu, it will cause the muche more to wonder at his singuler humblenesse of mynd & modestie. He came out of a poore and homely village, out of Galile the vilest countrey of all Jewrie. He that purifieth all thinges, came as one of the raskall sort, humble & lowly to the baptisme of repentaūce, amōg sinners, souldiers, brethelles, & publicās without any seruaūtes to wayte and attēde vpō hym. It was not ynough for hym to be circumcised accordyng to the ordynaunce of the lawe, and purified after the tradicion of Moyses: He desyred also to receiue Johns baptisme, teaching & enstructing vs hereby, that whoso maketh hym selfe ready to be a ministre and preacher of the gospell, muste omitte nothing whiche in any wyse perteyneth to the increase of vertue and godlines: And again eschew all thinges, wherwith the weakelinges may be offended. John taught vs this lesō, that a preacher of goddes word shoulde, not get himselfe estimacion and auctorite, by gorgeous apparell, or pōpouse liuing, but by honest behauiour, and godly conuersacō. But the ensaple that Christ shewed, was of muche more perfection, and farther from the Jewishe

fashion then this: for that he differyng nothyng at all from other, neyther in his apparell, nor yet in dyet, dyd neuertheleſſe by his godlye lyuing, mekenelle, and beneficiall goodnes to wardes all men, vtterly duske and defface the auctozitie of John. For that is of hygher perfection whiche is geuen by the grace of the gospel, then that whiche procedeth from the austeritie, and straitnes of the lawe. The whole intent of the lozde Jeſus was this, to make the wozlde to know how he was the onely aucthour of saluacion, to expzelle and set out vnto vs, a certaine fourme of euangelike and true godlynes, to cõfirme the truth and certentie of all that euer Moyſes and the Pzophetes had tolde cõ of thinges past, and to make vs, as it were with the giuing of an earnest peny, to haue a sure hope and expectacion of thinges yet to come. For we right gladly beleue him, of whom we haue conceyued a meruelous good opinion, and vpon whom many witnesſes do consent and agree.

Wherfore it was procured by the prouidence and wisdome of god, that the Lozde Jeſus shoulde euery where haue an euident recozde and testimonie of his deitie: Of the whole lawe of Moſes, of all the Pzophetes, of the angels, of the shepardes, of the wise men called Magicians, of the Scribes, of Simeon and Anne, of John baptist, of the father, of the holy ghost, and finally of Pylate, and the deuils. The miracles also that he wzought, plainely declared hym to bey sonne of God. He dyd many thinges, not because himselfe had any nede so to do, but for ỳ he would set out vnto vs in his owne person, a certaine fourme and trade of lyuing: as when he fasted, when he was tempted, when he oftentymes prayed, when he came to baptisme, when he obeyed his parentes, when he patiently suffered all iniuries and wzonges, and finallye when he came to his crosse and passion.

He perfourmed many thynges that the pzophetes had pzopheeied of befoze, lest the people shoulde doubt of the pzomises afterwardes to be accomplished: as when that in his baptisme he receyued the holye ghost in the lykenesse of a doue, lightyng vpon the croune of his heade: as when he arose agayne from death to lyfe. Wherfore he came as a penitent to John: he desired his baptisme, and obteyned it. He was baptised in Jozdane, wherin were baptised both tanners, Publicans, and souldiers, a sozte of people so sinful, that none are moze blemished oz defiled with sinne. Are not here ỳ stately pzinces of this wozlde ashamed, who will haue nothyng common with the vulgare people? No kyng, nor pzieſt cummeth to baptisme, and if it were theyr pleasure so to do, they would scarcely vouchesafe to receyue baptisme in a bason of golde oz pzeciouſe stones. Nowe our sauiour Jeſus, that fountayne of all puritie, that kyng of all kynges, that lozd of all lozdes, disdayned not the common bathe, wherin the common sozte were washed. But whoso humbleth hymselfe befoze man, the same is highly exalted befoze god. Jeſus was baptised as the reſt, and euerychone of the common people there present. But the father of heauen diſſeuered hym frõ the residue, by a certayne notable signe neuer sene, ne heard of befoze. For as sone as he was come out of the water of Jozdane (whiche he halowed with the touche of his holy body) vnto lande, as he was in his contemplacion and prayers, John sawe the heauens open, and the holy ghoste flie downe from thence, and light vpon the holy croune of his heade, and there tarye. The pride of Adam closed the gates of paradise agaynst vs: The humblenesse of mynde and modestie of Christe, hath for paradise opened vs the gates of heauen. There was a visible signe shewed vnto mannes eyes, but by the same we were taughte what maner of myndes that heauenlye spirite both loueth and maketh. The spirite of the deuill, and the worlde maketh and loueth suche myndes as are haute, puffed vp with pryde, & fierce: but that heauenly spirite loueth those whiche are lowely, meke, and peacible. There is nothing more harmles, and more without gyle, then the doue: nothing whose nature worse agreeth with fighting and raueny. It was plainlye expressed & set out in the lord vp this corporall figure, what is spiritually wrought in all those, that with a sincere and pure faith, receyue the baptisme of the gospell. The body is washed with water, but the soule is throughly annoynted with grace inuisible. Moreouer that the doue abode still vpon the croune of the lordes head, signified that the holy ghoste is geuen to all other godlye men, and good lyuers, ratably after the measure and proporcion of their faithe, as it is presently expedient. But in Jesus was the continuall fountaine of al heauenly grace. For the doue brought hym not then any new grace whiche he had not before, but euidently declared howe he was full of grace, and showed moreouer, from whence all grace and goodnes issueth, and cummeth vnto vs. John beyng stablyshed in mynde with this so euident a signe receiued of the father of heauen, doubted not to pronounce Jesus to be the very sonne of God. The witnes that he gaue vnto Christ, was of great waight and authoritie amōg the Jewes, but much greater was the testimonie of the father himselfe: whose voyce sounded doune from the heauēs, saying: Thou art that my derely beloued sonne, in whome my minde delighteth. For a wyse childe is the fathers ioy and comforte. That heauenly spirit of God is not ydle, weake, faynt or feble, but of nature all fiery, and by and by worketh, and putteth furth his vertue, as soone as it is once entred into the soule of man.

And there cāe a voyce from heauē &c.

The spirite of man is slacke and slowe, and thinketh vpon nothing, but that whiche is lowe, vile, and worldly. But they that haue the spirite of the fleash mortified, and are led with the spirite of God, do furthwith goe in hande with high thinges, and of manly enterprise, that is to say, doe fight against the vncleane spirite, their ghostly enemy the deuil, whō they are not afrayed euen to prouoke to battayle, as men puttyng their whole confidence in the ayde and succour of the heauenly spirite, whiche is of muche more vertue and puissaūce than all that withstande the gospell.

The texte. ¶ And immediatly the spirite driue him into wildernes: and he was there in the wildernes fowerty dayes, and was tempted of Sathan, and was with wild beastes: and the aungels ministred vnto hym. After that Johñ was taken, Jesus came into Galile, preachyng the gospell of the kyngdome of God, and saying: The tyme is cum, and the kyngdome of God is at hande: Repent and beleue the gospell.

Wherfore Jesus plainly expressing in himselfe, what he woulde haue vs to doe incontinent after we haue receyued baptisme, was brought by force of the holy goste, into wildernesse. There he made his abode fowertie dayes, and as many nyghtes, stylle continuyng in prayer and fastyng, and in the meane season he was tempted of the deuyll, whom (after he had discoumfited, and ouerthrowen hym) he delyuered vnto vs to ouercum: shewyng vs also the very waye and meane, howe to gette the victorye. He is ouerthrowen by the spirite of Christe, by continuall prayer, and sobernesse of lyfe, and by the weapon of holy Scripture. The whyle that Christe continued thus in wyldernesse, he lyued among saluage beastes, vtterly abstayning from all comfort and solace

taken of the company of man. There had been no daunger for hym yf he had bene conuersaunt with the multitude of people, but he shewed hereby how expedient it is for a Christian souldiour, to exchewe the compainye of the common sorte, vntill he haue sufficiently tamed the flesche, and ouercome the deuyl, and by continuall recordyng of Goddes lawe, and deuout prayers, made hym selfe strong ynough in spirite. For many be in more saftetie when they lyue among beastes as Christ dyd, then when they be conuersaunt with suche mēne as are more noysome then any brute beastes. The Lorde and sauiour Jesus Christe kept company with beastes: but whiles he lacked the ministery of mē, Angels were alwayes present, and serued hym. They that vtterly despyse all the pastimes and pleasures of this worlde, neuer wante heauenlye pleasures, and solaces. For vs and our profite Christ was baptised: For vs he prayed: for vs he was notably described by the testimony of the father, and the holye ghost: for vs he went into wyldernesse: for vs he fasted: for vs he was tempted: for vs he gatte the victorye ouer the deuil. Here consyder thou Christian souldiour, the very true and right order of thy perfection. The first instruccion and teaching by mouth of Christes religion, causeth hatred of the former lyfe, and hope of clensyng or remission of synnes. With these capitaines thou runnest to Jordane: and there throughe fayth in Christe, washest awaye the fylthynesse of all thy synnes. And anon after at thine owne praier and at the petition and praier of the churche, thou hast a newe spirite geuen the from heauen, and by it arte admitted to be of the number of the children of God, and empyfted into the body of Jesu Christ, as a member of hym, who is the very heade of the churche. In themeane whyle it behoueth not the souldiour of Christe, to be careleffe. Thou hast promysed thy seruice to Christe thyne Emperour. Thou hast renounced the deuil. Thou haste receyued the holy ghoste as it were gifte money, a bond, and an earnest penye of thy salarye. Thou must enforce thyselfe with thy vtter endeuour to get victory. But that neuer chaūceth to the negligente and recheleffe person. Thou must take to thee armoure and weapon, leste thyne ennemie whiche euery where lyeth in wayte for the, cum vpon the vnwares, and when thou arte vnarmed. Thou shalte incontinent be assaulted with the worlde, the deuil, and the flesche. Thou muste alwaies fight, to thentent thou mayest alwayes gette victory. For this battaile shal not ende before thou make an ende of thy lyfe. But yet the oftener thou chaunce to vanquisshe thine ennemye, the weaker shall he departe from battayle, and thou the stronger. When thou haste here behaued thyselfe valiantly, and played the manne a while, then at the lengthe addresse thy selfe to the ministracion of the ghospell, specially yf thou feele that the spirite of God driue the therunto.

The Lorde Jesus was meete to preache the ghospell (then whiche ministerie, there is none of greater perfection) euen when he was a verye lytle chylde: But he ordeyned a patarne or an example in hymselfe, for vs to counterfayte and folowe: wherby we are taught, that we ought not by and by after our profession, rashely to hasten ourselues to this so high and holy a ministration. The lawe of Moyses had her tyme. There was also a tyme when it behoued that as the lyght of the euangelyke veritie, beganne by litle and litle to shine furth vnto the worlde: euen so shoulde the shadowes of the olde lawe banishe awaye: and then shall lawe gyue place vnto the spirituall, puttyng

furth her vertue. Lyke as in transformacions and naturall chaungynges of thynges, there is a certaine meane, whiche hath some affinitie with both the extremes, to the intent that thinges of muche contrarietie maye easily be trãsformed, and to turned one into another: Euen so Iohn came as a meane betwene the carnall law of Moyses, and the spirituall law of ỹ ghospell, to this ende, that men might the soner be transformed, and brought from the flesshe or litterall sence of the lawe, to the spirite, and true meanyng of the same. For ayre is not sodainly, and immediatly made of yearth, but in this transformacion water is the meane betwene both, whiche at the length by litle and lytle is fined into ayre, a more pure element. Wherfore as long as the preachyng of Iohn (who partly vpholde the olde lawe, for as much as it also somwhat helpeth to bryng a man to Christ) florished, our sauiour Iesus, leste he should haue seemed to any, eyther to contende with Iohn, or els to disanull the lawe, whiche he came to make perfect, neuer preached openly, ne declared his diuine power, but with a fewe miracles, nor gathered together any disciples, but rather behaued hymselfe as the disciple of Iohn: teachyng vs hereby, that no mã can well exercise the office of a mayster, vnlesse himselfe haue ben before an obedient disciple. But after that Iohn was cast into prison for his plaine and frãke speakyng, then dyd Christ as it were succede him, & come in his place. It is meete that the carnall be fyrste, and that later more, whiche is spirituall and gostely. That whiche is vnperfect goeth before, and the perfect commeth after. Grace foloweth the propertie of Nature. Corne is fyrste grasse before it haue eeres, and mannes state folowyth after infantie. The ceremonies of the lawe, notwithstandyng they haue somwhat shadowed and figured Christ, yet nowe at the length drawe they to theyr ende, and the light of the ghospell shineth abrode, whose only auctour is Iesus Christe. He went firste to preache in Galile. For it lyked hym that this newe lyght shoulde begin to shyne oute of that parte of Iewry, whiche was counted vilest of all other. Proude Ierusalem deserued not to haue this preeminence, which, albeit she were in very dede as blynde as a betell, yet thought her selfe to haue a perfect good syght, and for that cause was more vncurable.

But in these thynges, whiche came not to passe by hasard of Fortune, there lyeth hyd a certayne secrete significatiõ of thynges to be doen. For what betokeneth it that Iohn is closed and shut vp in prison? Forsoth that the law of Moyses shall at the appearyng of the moste cleare light of the Gospell, be made darke, and vtterly loose her lyght. What signifieth it that he is bounde? Truely that the carnall parte of the lawe shalbe bounde, and freedome leuyed and set at large, through the grace of the gospel. What meaneth it that Iohns heade is striken of? Certes that nowe is presente the true heade of the whole congregacion, which shalbe assembled of all nacions of the whole worlde.

What is this that Iesus preacheth the kyngdome of God in Galile? Undoubtedlye he maketh a foresigne that the grace of the ghospell shall forsake the wicked Iewes, and go from them to the Gentyles, because the Iewes embraced styll that olde heade whiche was chopped of by the ghospell, and contemned Christe the very head of the whole lawe. For this woorde (Galile) in the Sirian tongue, signifyeth a flyttyng or chaungyng of habitacion. Before tyme grace laye hydde, and ceremonies were in

hyghest estimacion. Nowe are they gone, and Jesus cummeth abrode, the effectuall auctour and preacher of the grace of the gospell. Therfore accordyng to the mistical sence herof, whoso will heare Christ preache, must flytte away from their olde vsages, and naughty lustes, to the intent they maye be receyuable of this newe and heauenly doctrine. Let the Jewe caste awaye the persuasion and sure beliefe he hath conceyued of his owne holynes: the Phariseye, the pryde he taketh by trustyng to his woorkes: the Bishoppes, the glory of their temple, and sacrifices: the Philosopheres, the vayne aydes of mannes wisedome. Let kynges and tyrauntes cast awaye that moste foolyshe trust, whiche they repose in their ryches. Let all nacions laye apart all vngodly customes, all filthy lustes, and hearken vnto this newe Preacher Jesus, who teacheth not worldly but heauenly thynges. He speaketh indifferently to all menne. Let all men therfore heare hym alike.

Here is it very expediente to consider how our sauiour Christ beginneth to set furth his doctrine. Worldly Philosophers do first teache their audiente, not those thynges which are most fruitfull & profitable, but such thynges as may cause thē to be had in admiracio for their singuler wisedome, minding nothing so muche, as to get themselues a name by dissenting in opinion, from other famous teachers. But the lorde Jesus woulde neyther disanull thauctorite of the olde law, (for he doth truely interprete ꝑ same, which was before mysse vnderstād: rather making it perfit, thē destroying it) neither dispraysed he Johns doctrine, although it were vnperfit, but begā his preaching with the selfsame beginning, which John had vsed before. A man would haue saied he had bene the very scholer and disciple of John, who was in dede the maister, and auctour of all. Now what preacheth he, what is the crye that ꝑ word, & sōne of the euerlastyng father maketh. The world had far swarued frō ꝑ right vsage of the law of nature, whiche God hath grauen and planted in al mens hertes. The wisdome that the philosophers taught, increased the foly of the worlde. The religion whichthe gentyles vsed before time, was moste wicked, and detestable. The law of Moses caused muche hipocrisy with her shadowes, her sacrifices, and her fears. The lawe signified or meant by her figures, and the Prophetes tolde before by their prophecies, how one should cum, who should offer vnto all nacions perfite saluacion. But because this promise was so long differred, the worlde beyng as it were deafe, gaue no eare thereunto at all.

Yet the lorde of his gracious goodnesse, forgate not to perfourme the same. Now is the time already fulfilled that he prefixed or aforepointed vnto this busines. You nede not from henceforth to await for the fulfillyng of any other figures, or any mo darke sayinges of ꝑ lawe. You nede not to lobe after newe prophetes. Loe, the kyngdome of God is now present. In steade of shadowes veritie shall shine abrode. In steade of the carnall lawe, the spirituall shall succede and cum in place. In steade of corporall ceremonies, true godlines shall raigne. In steade of the deuilles kyngdom, Gods kyngdom shal be enlarged. There is no cause why you should lynger or stay: why any man shoulde looke backe vnto the aydes of his owne righteousnesse.

Perhaps as Moyses lawe taketh righteousnesse, sum are righteouse in the sighte of the worlde: but as the new lawe requireth the same, all men are synners, and vnrighteous. Yet for all that there is no cause why you should dispayre. Knowe your disease, and then receyue remedy, that is, onely be you re-pentaunte for your former lyfe, and stedfastly beleue the gospel. Nowe is there brought vnto you a message right ioyfull, and muche to be desyred, I meane free remission of all your trespasses. You haue no nede of burnte offringes. Onely knowledge your vnrighteousnesse, and repose youre affiaunce in the righteousnes of almighty god, who doubtlesse will performe what he promiseth by his ghospell. For that man shal sufficiently deserue to enioye the promise therof, whosoeuer beleueth the promiser.

The texte. ¶ As he walked by the Sea of Galile, he sawe Symon and Andrewe his brother casting nettes into the sea, for they were fyshers. And Jesus sayd vnto them: Folowe me, and I wyll make you to become fyshers of men. And streyght waye they forsoke their nettes and folowed hym. And when he had gone a litle further thence, he sawe James the sonne of zebede and Johan his brother, whyche also were in the shyppe mendyng their nettes, and he anon called them, and they left their father zebede there in the shyp with the hyred seruauntes, and folowed hym.

After the Lorde Jesus had with suche wordes moued and stirred vp the myndes of the Jewes to receiue the newe Philosophy, and doctrine of the ghospell, he lyke wyse began after the ensample of John to gather certaine disciples, but fewe in number, and suche as were vnlettered persones, and of lowe degree, to the entent that when he had through their ministery conuerted all the whole worlde, it shoulde plainly appeare how this kyngdom was the very kyngdom of God, and not a worldly kyngdom. Therefore as he trauayled on a daye by the lake or sea of Galile, he espied Symon, and Andrewe his brother, labouryng together, and about to caste their nettes into the water: For they were fisher men, and by this occupation gat their lyuyng. The baselnes of their crafte, made for the aduauncyng of goddes glory. The concorde of the two brethren, sygnified the constant and agreemente of the churche. The crafte of fyshing, bare the figure of the ministracion of the ghospell, which by vertue of Goddes worde pluckethe vp into the lyght of veritie, and loue of heauenly thynges, suche as are drowned in the darknesse of ignorannce, and the fowle stinkyng puddell of worldly cares. And thus fyrste of all fyshed he for these two fyshers. Come ye (quod he) and folowe me, for I will make you begynne from this day forwarde, to fyshe after men. Allone as the Lord Jesus had spoken the word, the two brethren leauyng their nettes euen as they were, folowed him without any tarying. For Jesus voice hathe in it a certaine heauenly charme or inchauntment. And goyng thence a lytle forwarde, he sawe other two, that is to wete, James the sonne of zebede, and John his brother, who were also trymmyng and mendyng their nettes in the shyppe, and makyng themselues ready to go a fyshyng. And these two not withstanding their myndes were bent another waye, he soddenly spake vnto, callyng and commaundyng the to folow hym. Now, that thou mayest know young men of an euangelike faith, they made no tarying, but leauyng their father zebede with his hired seruauntes in the shyp, streyght wayes folowed their caller. Thus beganne Christe to gather the cleke prelates, and ministers of his Churche, cleane refusyng the priestes, and Phariseis of Jerusalē, with all their pompe and pryde.

The texte. ¶ And they came into Capernaum, and streyght waye on the Sabboth dayes, he entred into the Synagoge, and taught, and they were astonyed at his learnyng. For he taught them as one that had authoritie, and not as the Scribes.

And being accompanyed with such a felowshyp, he came vnto Capernaum.

This

This Capernaum was a citie muche flozishyng in substaunce, but no lesse proud, vngodly, and vicious, than it was welthy. Here byanby he beganne to playe the parte of an Euangelilte, oz preacher of the ghospell.

Foz vpon the sabboth daye he entred into the Synagoge, and taught the Jewes openly, not the vayne fables of the Phariseis, but declared vnto them the very true meanyng of the lawe, which was in dede spirituall, and not carnall. And the people perceiued him to be a newe teacher, & his doctrine also to be of a new sozt. Thei sawe he was a mā of lowe degre, & that suche as accōpanied him were but fewe in numbze, very rascals, & men of no reputacion: yet wondered they greatly at his wozdes, foz that they breathed a certaine godly vertue. Foz he did not after the maner of the Scribes, teache trifling cōstitucions of men, oz olde wyues tales of genealogies, and pedegrewes, but his wozdes were pithy and of authozitie, and the wonderfull great miracles he wzought, caused those verities that he spake to be beleued. What thyng soeuer is humayne and wozldly, the same is of litle price and estimacion, when Goddes power be gyueth ouce to put furth his strength and efficacie.

¶ And there was in their synagoge a man vexed with an vncleane spirite, and he cryed, saying: Alas what haue we to do with the thou Jesus of Nazareth? Arte thou cum to destroye vs? I knowe the what thou arte, euen the holy out of God. And Jesus rebuked him saying: holde thy peace, and cumme out of the man. And whā the vncleane spirite had torne him, and cried with a loude voyce, he came out of him, and they were all amased, insomuche that they demaūded one of another among themselues, saying: What thing is this? What newe doctrine is this? Foz with authozitie commaunded he the foule spirites, and they obeyed him. And immediatlye, his fame spred abzode throughoute all the region bozdering on Galile. The texte.

And lo, byanby there was occasion ministred foz him to wozke a myracle. Foz in that assembly, was there a certaine felowe whiche was vexed with an vncleane spirite. This wicked spirite coulde not abyde the heauenly spirite speakyng in Christ. Foz he beganne to clatter agaynst his heauenly doctrine, crying aloude, and saying: O Jesus of Nazareth, what hast thou to do with vs? Arte thou cumme to destroye vs before the tyme? I right well knowe who thou arte. Certes the selfe same holy one, whiche the prophete Daniel promysed long sithens, whom God hath singularly sanctified aboue al other. The lozde Jesus, eyther because the tyme was not yet cumme that he should openly confesse who he was, oz els because he was not pleased with this confession, beyng vndoubtedly true, but yet made throughe constraint of feare, and of a wicked spirite (who sythe he is of hymselfe a lyer, and delighteth to deceiue man, was not to be hearde in the presence of the people when he spake the trueth, lest any manne woulde haue taken occasion there by to beleue hym afterwardes when he had lyed,) the lozde Jesus, I saye, rebuked hym, and sayed: Holde thy peace, and departe out of the man, and so shalt thou better declare who I am. And furthwith at the lozdes cōmaundemēt, the vncleane spirite forsoke the mā. But at his departure he tare him, & cryed out with a loude voyce, so that it euidently appeared there by, how he fled awaye not wyllingly, but by force and constraint of Gods power. And here was shewed the fygure of a manne possessed with the spirite of the deuyll. Is not he vexed wyth the worste, & cruellest of all the deuils, whiche is wholly possessed with ambicion, couetousnes, rancour, malice, hatred, pleasure of the body, & suche other lyke deuilishe lustes, and appetites. Suche as are vexed with these spirites, canne in no wyse abyde to heare the gospell preached, but yell and crye out a gaynst it, as the deuill dyd, saying: what haste thou to do with vs Jesus? Arte thou cumme to destroye vs? For so many as ỹ spirite of this worlde possesseth, thinke themselues vtterly forlorne, whensoeuer they are constrayned to forsake those thinges wherein they haue sette their false felicitie. Wherfore their myndes are sore troubled, and as you would saye, tugged and haled into sondrie pieces, whylest on the one syde feare of eternall damnation moueth them to vertue and goodnes, on the other syde the vnmeasurable swetnes of such vices as thei haue of long time accustomed vnto, holdeth them fast and withdraweth them from their godly purpose.

But yet no maner of deuill taketh so faste holde, but he wyll at the commaundement of Jesu, flye awaye. It is a muche greater myracle to make of an ambicious man, a temperate, of a fyerce felowe, a patient, of the lecherous persone, a chast liuer, of the extortioner or one that liueth by pollyng and pyllyng, a lyberall man, than to deliuer a mannes body from a wycked spirite.

But yet men wonder more at this, then at the other, not because it is more wonderfull and meruailous in dede, but for that it is seene with bodely eyes.

And they were all amased. &c. Therfore when he had thus chased awaye the vncleane spirite by commaundement onely, then the Jewes greatly wondered at it, insomuche that they demaũded one of another saying: What new thing is this? we haue not read that euer the Prophetes dyd the lyke, castyng out deuyls by bare worde of mouth onely. Or what new kynde of doctrine is this, that hath so great vertue and power folowing it? He preacheth the kyngdome of god, and putteth further Gods power, in that he treadeth vnder foote, and subdueth the power of the deuill. Neyther is it by sorcery or inchauntment, or by makyng of long prayers vnto god, nor yet by any other laborious meane that he thus putteth to flyght the wycked fendes: But he commaundeth them with worde onely as their lorde and conquerour, and they incontinẽt whether they wyll or no, obey hym. Of this wonderful facte a great fame of Jesu was spred abrode throughout all the countrey of Galile. And because it shoulde appeare that in him is the well spryng of godly power, whiche can neuer be consumed, one miracle dyd streyght wayes succede and folowe another.

The texte. ¶ And furthwith when they were cumme out of the synagoge, they entred into the house of Symon, and Andrew, with James and John. But Symõs mother in lawe laye sicke of a feuer, and anon they tell hym of her, and he came and toke her by the hande, and lyfte her vp, and immediatlye the feuer forsoke her, and she ministred vnto them. And at euen when the Sunne was downe, they brought vnto hym all that were diseased, and them that were vexed with diuels, and all the citie was gathered together at the doore, and he healed many that were sicke of diuerse diseases, and cast out many deuils, and suffered not the deuils to speake, because they knewe hym.

For anon as they were departed out of the synagoge, they came into the house of Symõ and Andrew, whither also James and John folowed. Now Symons mother in lawe, as it thẽ fortuned, laye sycke & was sore vexed with an ague. Assone as Jesus was by them aduertised therof, he went to the bed side & toke the woman by the hande, & lyfted her vp, & forthwith the feuer forsoke her, & euẽ as she was sodainly, so was she perfectly, made whole. For she was sodaynly made as lusty and strong, as she was before, insomuche that she did her accustomed office in the house, ministring vnto Jesu, and his disciples.

He

He lyeth lycke of a perilous diſeaſe, whoſe mynde burneth with the loue of carnall pleaſures: who by reaſon of ſuperfluitie and exceſſe, leadeth an ydle and a ſluggiſhe lyfe. It is a woman that lyeth ſycke. And at the beginning the fyrſt woman deceiued with the pleaſaunt alurement of an apple, began to be ſycke of this ague. Our fleſhe that alwayes luſteth agaynſte the ſpirit is our Eue. But happy are they whome Ieſus, with the touche of his moſte holye ſpirite, lifteth vp to the loue of heauenly thynges, that he whiche before tyme ſerued ydleneſſe, riotous liuing, and vncleannes, maye ſodeynly recouer his olde ſtrength, and luſtynes, and being made a newe manne, hereafter becum the ſeruaunt of cleanes, chaſtitie, & ſobernes. For theſe are the meates, whiche Chriſte is refreſhed, and delyghted withall. Now ymagine, that the houſe of Symon ſygnifieth the churche of Chriſt, in the whiche it is not conuenient that there be anye feble and weake in ſpirite, but ſuche as are full of euangelyke ſtrength, and luſtines. And yet many tymes Peters mother in lawe, that is to ſaye, the ſynagoge, lyeth ſicke in the ſame. For he is a membre of the ſynagoge, vnto whoſe corrupte taſting, the vnſauery and weryſhe letter yet ſauoreth: who taſteth well the water of the Phariſaicall vnderſtanding, and can in no wyſe taſt the wyne of the ſpirite, and true meaning of the ghoſpell.

They that were in the houſe with the Lorde Ieſu, deſyred him to lyfte vp the woman that laye ſycke in her bedde. In ſemblable wiſe let vs all, who are mẽbres of the churche, deſyre his merycfull goodnes with moſt humble praiers, that he wyll vouchſafe to put out his holy ryght hand, and therwith to lifte vp alſo thoſe timerous perſons, whiche cleuing only to the letter of ſcripture, and wholy geuen to the ſuperſticious obſeruacion of ceremonyes, doue of a certaine vnright iudgement, greatly deſyre thoſe thynges that are hurtfull & noyſome: and contrarily, hate and abhorre ſuche thinges as are onely to be deſyred: to lyfte them vp, I ſaye, to the fredome of the ghoſpell, whiche ſerueth not for this purpoſe that we ſhould with more libertie committe ſinne at pleaſure, but to the intent we ſhould gladly, and with right good will, doue the workes of Euangelike or chriſtian charitie, and cheriſhe Ieſus in his membres. The Lorde is alwayes ready to heale the ſoule, yf he be deſyred, and called vpon. He loueth thoſe that call vpõ hym, call they neuer ſo importunatly, and out of ſeaſon.

It was nowe late in the euening, and the ſonne was ſet, ſo that it might be thought a great point of importunitee, to cal vpon the phyſycian at that time. But the great deſyre of healthe had the vpper hande of ſhame. They brought vnto him a very great numbre of ſuche as wer diſeaſed with all kyndes of infirmities, and among them alſo, ſome whiche were vexed with vncleane ſpirites. The whole citie of Capernaum came thicke and threfolde, to the gate of the houſe to ſee this ſyght. Ieſus without excuſe healed very many of them, of ſundry diſeaſes, and caſt out many deuils. He was a quicke and a readye phyſycian, who with worde cured diſeaſes. Moreouer he put to ſilence the deuils, who cryed with a loude voyce that he was Chriſt, vtterly deſpyſyng the teſtimonie of his enemyes, and of them with whome he wouldе that his ſhoulde in no wyſe haue to do. He ſuffered the chyldren of the Hebrewes, and fyſchers, to deſcry hym: But he admitted no recorde of the deuils, though it were true. The noughtines of the perſon that telleth the trueth, doth hurte the ſame. And he doeth more harme with his lies, whiche hath gotten himſelfe credence afore

by some true tale tellyng. This was then done accordyng to the hystorie. But to open the secrete sence and meaning hereof. Wee se very many euen nowe a dayes, that euen flockyng vnto Simon Peters house: whiche as I sayde before, bare the figure of the Churche. For the citie of Capernaum representeth the whole world: the setting of the sunne, figureth the deathe of Christe. The gate of the house, signifieth baptisme, whiche is beset with repentaunce of the former lyfe, & truste to obtayne soule healthe of Jesus. The sycke people sitte aboute the gates, that is to saye, the Publicans and sinners desyre to be receiued into the felowshyp of the churche. They should not deserue to be healed except they surely beleued that Jesus bothe could and would geue them helth. The churche of Christ conteyned in it but a very small numbre, so long as he was lanterne & lyght of the world, liued in yearth. But after his death a great multitude of people began thither to resorte, out of al the countreis of the world.

The texte. ¶ And in the morning very early, Jesus (when he was ryseu vp) departed, and wente out into a solitarye place, and there prayed: Symon, and they that were with him folowed after him, and when they had found hym, they sayed vnto hym: all men seke for the. And he sayed vnto them: Let vs go into the next tounes, that I may preache there also. For therfore I am cõ. And so he preached in theyr synagoges, and in al Galile, & cast the deuils out.

These thinges so done: when the Lorde Jesus who came not for this onely purpose to cure corporal diseases, whiche he sendeth many tymes to vs to the intent they maye be whole in soule: when, I saye, he sawe the multitude greatly desyre to be healed of their bodely diseases, and not with lyke affection couet to heare his heauenlye doctrine, wherewith the maladies and diseases of the soule are cured, the nexte daye, as though he had bene desyrous to take some ease and rest, he deceyued them, for he roose verie earlye in the morning, and went from Capernaum vnto a solytary place, where he made his prayers to the father, genyng hym thankes for the benefites wyche he had decreed to geue vnto mankynde by hym. And here are sundrye ensamples prepared for our instruccion. Fyrste he teacheth vs that we must assone as we haue done our neyghbour good, departe away: leste we seme to loke after any mede or reward, of those that we haue done good vnto. Secondarilye we are taught manye tymes to leaue of the teachyng of holsom doctrine for a season to styre vp a desyre in vs to aduaunce the same. Finally we learne also that we ought to refreshe and quicken the spirite, by often goyng aside into solitary places: I meane not suche goynges aparte, as are for pleasure and pastime, but for prayer, and heauenly contemplacion: because we maye retourne from thence more willyng in spirite, and better disposed to helpe the weake. Euery man which hath chaunged place, is not goen into wildernes, but he that hath cleane seuered his mynde from worldly cares, and wholly bent himselfe to the studie, and contemplacion of heauenly thinges. When Simon Peter, and the reste of the disciples vnderstode that Jesus was priuilye departed, they folowed after til they had founde where he was. For it is not beseming that the true disciples of Jesu be any tyme awaye from their maister whome they ought in all thynges to folow. In the meane season, when the people, whiche flocked early in the morning to the gate of the house, had also learned how Jesus was gone awaye, they lykewyse folowed hym into the wildernesse. Many there be that folow Jesus, but none fynde hym oute saue alonly his disciples: who after they haue once founde him, do shewe him vnto other.

Wherfore

Wherfore they tolde the lorde, how there was a great multitude of the citizens of Capernaum come thither to seke him. The lorde then answered again saying. It is sufficient at this present, to haue layed these foundacions among the Capernaites. Nowe it is tyme for me to go in like maner, and viset the litle townes, and villages here about, that I maye likewyse there preache the kyngdome of god: For I came not to preache to one citie alone, but to declare saluacion to all men. For this cause the Lorde trauayled through the townes, and villages of all Galilee preachyng in their Synagoges, curyng diseases, and castyng out deuils, because the ignorant people shoulde by reason of his mighty dedes and myracles, geue firme credence vnto his doctrine.

The texte. And there came a leper to him, beseechyng hym and kneelyng downe and saying vnto hym. If thou wilt thou canst make me cleane. And Jesus had compassion on hym and put furth his hande, touched hym, and sayth vnto him: I will, be thou cleane. And as sone as he had spoken, immediatly the leprosy departed from hym. and he sent him awaye furthwith, and sayth vnto him: See thou saye nothing to any mā, but get the hence, shewe thy selfe to the priest, and offer for thy cleansyng those thynges whiche Moses commaunded for a witnes vnto them. But he (alsone as he was departed) began to tell many thynges, and to publishe the saying, insomuche that Jesus coulde no more openly entre into the citie: But was without in desert places, and they came to hym from euery quarter.

It chaunced on a tyme whē Jesus had taught the people in a certaine mountayne many goodly lessons, concerning the perfection of the euangelike or christian profession, that there met him as he came downe agayne, a certaine man infected with leprosy, a disease vncurable, and abhorred of all men: in whome was shewed to the corporal iyes, a figure of those thinges which he wrought by inuisible operacion in the soules of the hearers. The leper hated his filthy disease, and had a meruelous great confidence in Jesu. Here thou seest a figure of a sinner, which returnyng from vicious liuyng, and entendyng to amend, is at the nexte doore to saluacion. The same leper feared not ỳ people although he knewe right well that they abhorred his company, but onelye regarded the goodnes of Jesu. Wherfore he ranne vnto hym, and fell downe at his knees. What woulde the proude Pharisey here do? He would crye: hence with this ougly and abhominable creature, leste he infect euen oure very iyes. He would call for water to washe awaye his noysome, and contagious breath.
This would the Pharisey do, more vncleane in soule, then any leper in body. But what doth the moste meke and gentill Lord, whiche onely was pure and cleane from all spot of synne? He commaundeth hym not to be had out of his sight, nor to be remoued awaye from his knees. It was not vnknowen vnto him what he desyred: but his will was ỳ the notable fayth of this mā, should be an ensample to all men. All suche as be lecherous persons, couetous, full of hatred & enuy, or attached with other filthy lustes and appetites of the body, are foule arayed with this horrible & detestable leprosy. And such as are herewith infected, let them heare, and marke the wordes of this leper, to thintent they maye folowe hym. If thou wilt, sayth he, thou canste make me cleane. He knowlegeth his disease, and doubteth not of the power, & goodnes of God. He wholy referreth ỳ iudgemēt to the lorde, to iudge of him whether he be worthy to receiue so great a benefite at his handes, or no: readie to geue thankes yf he obtayne his desire: and not to murmur, and grutche agaynst hym, yf he obtayne it not. For he would saye thus: He is able to put awaie leprosy, who not onely cureth all kindes of diseases, but also casteth out deuils: and he wyll do it,

it, that so willingly helpeth all that are in distresse and misery, where soeuer he cummeth. But so great is myne vnworthynes, that I alone deserue not that, whythe all other obtain of his moste mercifull goodnes. This so perfite a belefe, ioyned with exceding humblenes of mynde, and modestie, procured hym mercy of Jesu. For our sauiour shewing outwardlye, euen with his countenaunce, a certayne affecte of pitie and compassion, therbyto teache what affection of mynd ought to be in vs towarde synners, held out his hande, and therewith touched the leaper, and by vertue of wordes that hymselfe prescribed, made hym cleane. The leper sayed: If thou wilt thou canst make me cleane. Jesus answered: I will, be thou cleane. True fayth maketh not many wordes, neyther gruccheth the charitie of the gospell to do a good deede. And Christ had scarcely spoken these wordes (be cleane) but the disease was quite gone from the man, so that no token therof remayned. The lawe of Moses forfendeth to touche a leaper, the spirituall meaning wherof, cõtayneth wholsome doctrine. We must abstayne from the company of vncleane persons and synners, leste we be infected by the contagiousnes of their vyces. But the Lorde Jesus is aboue the lawe: neyther can he be defiled with touchyng, who purifieth whatsoeuer he toucheth. He touched the leaper with hys hande, and furthwith he healed his whole bodye. Let vs therfore praye that he may in semblable wyse touche our soules with his holy worde, and therwith purifie our inward vncleannes. O thou that vsest to haunt the company of harlots, thou that arte an adulterer, or polluted with lyke diseases, runne in lyke maner vnto Jesus (for he cũmeth downe from the heigth of his maiestie and meteth the) and knowyng thine own filthines, fall downe at his knees, prostrate thy selfe, and lye flat vpon the grounde: Crye and call vpon him, but crye with moste stedfaste belefe of harte and mynde: Lorde, if thou wilt, thou canste make me cleane. And anon thou shalt heare these wordes agayne of thy mercifull sauioure: I will, be thou cleane. After these thynges were done in maner before rehearsed, the Lorde suffered not the man to folowe him, but caused him to departe, commaunding hym straytly to disclose nothing of this matter to any creature lyuyng, but rather (q he) get the hence, and shew thy selfe to the priest, by whose iudgemẽt accordyng to the ceremonies of the lawe thou wast iudged to be a leaper. And if he geue sentence that thou arte clensed in dede of thy leprosy, then offer that Moses hath commaunded to be offered, of those that should fortune to be deliuered therof. Thus shalt thou with more tre dẽce publiche gods benefit towardes the, thẽ if thou straight wayes tell euery body that thou arte made cleane. For by this meanes it shall appeare, euen vnto the Pharisees themselues, whiche depraue my benefites, that thou wast a verye leper, and hast be ne clensed without eyther help of the Phisitiãs, or els of Moses law, by bare worde of mouthe, and touche onely: & so shall they know how there is one present that farre passeth their priestes: who can easely cure leprosy, thoughe it be de tr stable, & abhorred, wher as they haue muche a doe, truly to discerne the same. This felow departed, in stede of a leper cleane in bodye, and went to the priest, and was sene, and iudged to be cleansed of all leprosie. And anon after he concelled not this dede, but published it euery where, reporting bothe this, and many other thynges of Jesu. Sum will here aske: Why did this man as he was commaunded in the one thyng, and in the other, nothyng regarde the Lordes commaundement? Truely for that the one ſerued to confirme the certaintie of the miracle, becauſe the prieſt not knowing as yet who had healed the man, ſhoulde pronounce his healthe reſtored by Jeſu, to be a perfit health, who els peraduenture woulde haue depraued Chriſtes benefit, yf the autour therof had bene knowen, before he had geuen his verdite. But after the miracle was once confirmed by his ſentence, then made it muche for Gods glory to haue it publiſhed abrode. Wherefore then cõmaunded Jeſu that thing to be kept ſecret, which in dede his will was ſhould be blaſed abrode and vttred: For ſoth to monithe vs that we ought to ſeke no glorye and prayſe of man for the benefites whiche it pleaſeth God to worke by vs, becauſe the goodlyer praiſe euer followeth them whiche refuſe the ſame. It procedeth of an high courage ſo to do a good turne, ỳ thou woulde ſt haue no thankes therfore yelden the of him, whom thou haſt doen good & pleaſure vnto, beyng only contented with this, that it lay in thy lot to helpe thyne euen Chriſten in his neceſſitie. But he that is holpen by ſuche benefite as he hath receyued at thy handes, ought with ſo muche the more diligence to publiſh and ſet out thy well doing euerywhere to thy prayſe & cõmendacion. Chriſt was in no daunger to offende in vainglory: and therfore this enſample was ordeyned for our inſtruccion, whiche are continually in very great ieoperdy to fall therin. Neyther did this man contemne Chriſtes commaundementes: but the great gladnes that he was in by reaſon of the reſtitucion of his health, and a certaine feruent loue whiche he was kyendeled withall towardes Chriſte ỳ autour therof, would not ſuffer hym to kepe ſilẽce any longer. Verely it chaunceth for the moſt parte that we are beſt beleued, when we tell thoſe thinges, whiche we had rather in very dede kepe ſecret, thẽ diſcloſe, if the matter it ſelfe enforced not vs to vtter that which lyeth hyd in our ſtomakes. Nowe what came of it that this man did thus blaſe abrode this miracle? Truly by reaſon therof, euery man conceyued ſuche an opinion of the Lorde Jeſu, that he could not now for the great throng and preaſe of people that thyther reſorted, openly enter into the citie, as he was wont to doe: but was conſtrayned to auoyde the good townes, and make his abode in the wilderneſſe. Suche as goe about to get a name and gaynes by iugglyng caſtes and woorkyng of Magicall miracles, deſyer to be in thoſe cities, whereas moſte haunt and reſorte of people is. But oure ſauiour Jeſus, in that he ofte tymes ſhunneth muche aſſembly of people, plainly teacheth vs what we ought to do. He that is able to worke the miracles of the goſpell, doeth not ſomuche deſyer the great multitude, as the feruent mynde and affeccion of beholders. In great cities many reſorted vnto hym for this purpoſe only, to delite their iyes with newe and ſtraunge ſightes. No man followeth Jeſus into the wylderneſſe, vnleſſe he long after hym with a certaine vehement deſire and affeccion. He that forgoeth al pleaſures of good townes, and followeth Chriſt thorow rough and cumberous places, followeth hym to his great commoditie. For he that loueth hym vnfaynedly, doeth in all thinges followe hym whome he loueth: thorough reproche, hungre, deſpoyling of ſubſtaũce, baniſhmẽt, impriſonment, tourmentes and death. And ſuche followers of Chriſt, were figured by thoſe that came flockyng out of all countreis, and partes of Galile, vnto Jeſu: who kept hymſelfe cloſe, in deſert and ſolitary places.

The.ij. Chapter.

BVT whithersoeuer a man flieth, vertue hath euer her fame and glory folowyng her, euen as the shadow followeth the body. For he that is vnfainedly good, can neuer be but one maner of man, and lyke himselfe. And as there is alwayes light, whithersoeuer the body of the sune remoueth: euen so to what place soeuer true godlinesse remoueth, there is alwayes great resort of people. Now wildernesse was no longer wildernesse, after the lorde Iesus, the true light of this world, was gon thither. And yet the persone in whome is the power to worke the myracles of the ghospell, ceaseth not (asmuche as in him lyeth) to auoyde such places wheras muche people is assembled to beholde hym, for that he knoweth certainly, what a perilous vice vainglory is. Neuertheles the feruent desyre he hath to helpe and do all men good, doeth oftimes cause hym, though it be against his nature, to haue recourse thither againe. And by this meanes cummeth it to passe, that whiles the good man is compelled to remoue from place to place, the more receiueth benefite at his handes.

The texte. AFter a fewe dayes also de entred into Capernaum agayne, and it was noysed that he was in the house, and anon many were gathered together: insomuche that now there was no roume to receiue them, no not somuche as about the doore. He preached the worde vnto them. And there came certaine vnto him bringyng one sicke of the Palsey, whiche was borne of fower men. And when they could not come nye vnto him for preasse, they vncouered the roofe of the house that he was in. And when they had broken vp the rooffe, they did (with cordes) let downe the bed wherin the sicke of the Palsey lay. When Iesus sawe their fayth, he sayd vnto the sicke of the Palsey: sonne thy sinnes be forgeuen thee.

Wherfore Iesus geuyng vs ensample bothe to flye vayne glory, and also continually to doe good to our euenchristen, within fewe dayes after returned agayne to Capernaum, from whence he semed to be dryuen away before, by reason of the great importunitie of the people, whiche euen in the night tyme lay about the gates of the house wherin he soiourned. For as he made Bethleem muche renoumed by his byrthe, and Nazareth very famous by his education, and the countrey of Egypt happy, because he fled thyther for his preseruacion and safegarde: so did he, as it were adopte and choose Capernaum to be his countrey, bothe by his ofte tarrying there, and also by shewyng of many fayer miracles in the same. He came agayn hyther in maner by stealth, and fyrste kepte hymselfe secrete in a house, before it was knowen in the citye that he was cum. But as the Sunne can not be hyd, so the Lorde Iesus can not be kept close and secret. The rumour whiche (as it is commonly seen) rose of a fewe persons, had now blowē abrode throughout the whole citie, that Iesus was in the house. And furthwith thither flocked suche a multitude of people that all the house was fylled, and not onely that but also the porche, and al the places about the doore were not sufficient to receiue them. It is a blessed house whither Iesus is cum to dwell, and neuer departeth thence agayne. That house is the churche. For Capernaum beareth the figure of the whole worlde, whereseuer the Gentyles inhabite. Certes at Ierusalem the Iewes cast Iesus out of the temple, and among the Gentiles, the kyngdome of heauen uen ſuffereth violence, and the multitude of all ſortes of people entreth into it, after a certaine forcible fashion. The Chriſtian Nouices ſitte aboute ỳ gates, greatly deſyring to be admitted into the Lordes houſe, muche houngryng and thirſtyng after the rightuouſnes of the kyngdom of heauen. And verily Jeſus excludeth no manne from this houſe, neyther poore, nor ryche, whole nor ſycke, ſo that he haue a vehement deſyre to heare hym. Wherefore the Lorde teachyng vs that we ought alwayes chyefly e to care for our ſoule health, and afterwarde for our bodies, fyrſte of all miniſtred vnto them the doctrine of the ghoſpell, wher with the diſeaſes and maladies of the ſoule are cured. For this cauſe ſuch as are diſpoſed to geue almes to ỳ poore, do very well, yf they geue them fyrſte a fryefe exhortacion, that maye make them the better in mynde and ſoule, and then departe with theyr charitie. For the common ſort of people be of ſuche a diſordered iudgement, that they are more deſyrous of thoſe thynges whiche are expedient for the body, then of thoſe ỳ pertayne to theyr ſoule health. The lord euidently declared vnto vs by his enſample, that our chiefe care oughte to be for that parte, whiche is the chiefeſte parte or porcion of man, in that he fyrſte taught, and then by and by healed ſuche as were diſeaſed. Nowe whyles Jeſus was teachyng, and buſye about curyng the diſeaſes of theyr ſoules, there came vnto hym certain men, bryngyng with theim one that was ſycke of a Palſey, whoſe ſynowes were ſo reſolued in all partes of his body, through the violence of the diſeaſe, that he could not ſtyre out of his bed, but was fayne to be caried thither vpon fower mennes ſhoulders.

He preacheth the worde vnto them.

And there came certain vnto hym.

Here haſt thou plainly ſet out, the very ymage and fygure of a minde, whiche is by worldly luſtes and deſyres made ſo womanlyke, and diſſolute, that it can in no wiſe lift vp it ſelfe to doe any thyng that is good & godly, but lyeth ſtyl in the bedde of lowe and filthy cares, and neuer remembreth any thyng that is hygh or celeſtiall. Nowe when they ſawe howe they coulde not for preaſe of people that ſate ſo thicke about the gate and porche, bryng this ſycke man to the ſight of Jeſus, they lifted hym vp vpon the houſe, and after they had remoued the ſlates, and made a way in, they let hym doune bed and all, with a long corde, and layed hym at the feete of Jeſu, nothyng doubtyng but that he of his great mercie and goodneſſe, woulde help the ſelye wretche, aſſone as he once caſt thoſe his pitifull iyes vpon hym, and beheld how he laye in his bed lyke a quicke karkas, impotent, and benummed in all his lymmes. Jeſus ſawe this miſerable perſon, euen before he was broughte vnto his preſence, and knewe right well the great faith of thoſe that brought hym. He could if it had liked hym, without leauig of or breaking his tale, haue ſygnified his pleaſure vnto them, by whom he had luſte, in this wiſe: Let the ſycke of the palſye aryſe, and beyng ſodainly healed, cary home his bed again. But his will was to ſhewe al men there preſent, that piteous ſight, and alſo to declare of what great ſtrength and efficacie true belief vpon hym, is with almighty God the father. The diſeaſe was vncurable, and of long continuaunce: the cummyng to Chriſte very cumberous. And yet the gracious goodneſſe of the lorde, ioyned with lyke power, put them in a ſure hope to obtaine theyr requeſt. Wherfore after he ſawe theyr notable fayth, the more he perceyued the man to be diſeaſed in ſoule then in body, the more pitye and compaſſion he toke on hym. Euery man thought hym in a miſerable caſe that thus lacked the vſe of all his membres: but more miſerable was his ſoule, beeyng in subiection and bondage of sinne. They loked after nothing els but that the poore wretche should be restored to perfite healthe of body, which was a thing farre aboue mannes power. But Jesus beyng highly pleased with so notable a faithe, and therfore willyng to make hym all, and in euery part whole, turned vnto hym, and sayed: Sonne, thy synnes are forgeuen.

The texte. (But there were certaine of the Scribes sittyng there, and thinking in their hertes: Why doeth he speake these blasphemies? Who can forgeue sinnes but God onelye? And immediately when Jesus perceiued in his spirite, that they so thoughte within themselues, he sayeth vnto theym: why thinke ye suche thynges in your heartes? whether is it easier to saye to the sicke of the palsey, thy synnes be forgeuen thee, or to saye, aryse, take vp thy bed and walke: But that ye maye knowe that the sonne of man hath power in earth to forgeue sinnes, he spake vnto the sicke of the palsey: I saye vnto thee arise, and take vp thy bed, and get the hence vnto thine owne house. And immediately he arose, tooke vp the bed, and went forth before them all, in so muche that they were all amased, and glorified God, saying: we neuer sawe it on this fashion.

There were present in that assembly, certaine Scribes, who for the knowledge they had in the scriptures, were neuer the godlyer, and better in their liuyng, but rather more enclined to surmise matiers agaynst hym. They had learned of the bokes of the Prophetes, and Moses, that it perteyneth to God alone to pardon sinnes. For the priest dyd not release sinne, but made intercession vnto God for other mens offences, and that not without sacrifice. Because the Scribes knewe this right well, they had suche secrete thoughtes & imaginacions with themselues: What newe saying is this that he speaketh, whiche neyther Moses, nor Aaron, nor any of the auncient Prophetes, durst presume to speake. For he sayeth: thy synnes are released. Trulye he is a blasphemous person against God, that thus taketh vpon hym gods power. The law cõmaũdeth sum offẽces to be punished with death. And other sum there are, for the whiche satisfaccion is made with burnt offerynges, and diuers other kyndes of sacrifices, by the mediacion or intercession of the priest: But he passyng nothyng vpon suche rites and ceremonies, doeth at once forgeue all sinnes with bare worde of mouth. This thing that he taketh vpon hym, and promyseth, pertayneth not to manne. It lyeth in Goddes power alone to performe it. Surely they were offended with the imbecillitie and weakenesse of his manhode that they sawe, and therefore coulde suppose nothing of hym, aboue the state and condictõ of man. Neyther had the vulgar people any greater opinion of him, whiche yet by reason of their simplicitie, were not so muche enclined to pycke quarels, as the other were. The spirite of this worlde putte those thoughtes in their myndes, who whyles they stacke harde to the litterall sence of Moyses lawe, were farre frõ the spirite and true meaning thereof, and were somuch the more vnapte to be taught the same, because thei thought themselues very well skilled in the scriptures: in somuche that the same thyng hath here also place, and is verified, whiche we see chaunce among paynters, and singing men, who are wonte to take lesse for teachyng of one that is altogether rude and ignorant in their arte or science, then for him who hath ben euell enstructed of an other mayster in the same: and the reason is, because in teachyng of the ignorant, there is but one labour to be take: whereas yf a man take vpon hym to instruct the other, as it is the firste, so is it the more paynfull labour to teache hym to forget what he hath learned before, then to teache hym. And these vngodly thoughtes, they of a certain worldely pollicie, kepte in their stomakes for feare of the people, in whose presence

they muche aduaunced and magnified themselues for their greate knowledge & vnderstandyng. The Lord Jesus who rather desyred to declare his diuine power by deedes, then to vtter the same by wordes, because he woulde plainly shewe vnto the Scribes howe there is nothyng so closely hydde in mennes brestes, be they neuer so suttle and craftie, that his holy spirite (whiche searcheth, and throughly seeth all thynges) knoweth not, tourned him vnto them, and as though they had spoken out those thynges, whiche they inwardlye thought in their myndes, sayed in this wise: Why haue you suche slaũderous imaginacions in your hertes? why do you rather iudge me by this weake and feble body of myne, then by my deedes?

And immediatly whē Jesus perceiued in his spirite &c.

Why do you not gather of these my workes which you see with your iyes and cannot deny, that those thynges are of trueth, whiche can in no wyse be sene with your corporall iyes? you are offended with me because I sayde: Thy synnes are forgeuen: and deme it to be a vayne saying, and of none effect, because you see not the efficacie therof, whiche putteth forth and sheweth it selfe in the soule of man. But you that haue your bodely iyes whole and faultlesse haue spirituall iyes faultie and blemished.

What yf I speake like wordes vnto the other, and make the efficacie therof appeare vnto your iyes? Is it not then reason that you beleue the thyng whiche you see not, beyng thereunto enduced by the thyng you see? There is nothing that man can easelyer do, then speake: and contrarilye, there is nothing so harde, as to performe what is spokē. God alone cā as easely do the one as the other. And though hytherto he neuer gaue this power to manne, yet it is not oute of his power to geue it to whom it pleaseth hym. And long sithens he promysed by the prophetes that he would sende his Messias, who shoulde cure the diseases of the people of Israell, and abolishe and cleane take awaye synnes. Therfore regarde you not this symple bodye of myne, lyke in all poyntes to yours: neyther beholde ye my garmente, not decked & trymmed with Phylacteries, and embroudered hemmes: nor yet my speache nothyng differyng from other mennes. Let the thyng selfe be the grounde and foundacion of your iudgement. It is no maisterie for a man to saye vnto a synner: Thy synnes are pardoned. And it is lyke easy to saye vnto ỹ sicke of the Palsey: Arise, take thy bed and walke. You haue harde me speake the one saying and fynd faulte therewith. Nowe heare ye the other, which ye cannot lykewise fynd faulte withall, when you see euidently with your iyes how the thyng ensueth immediatly of my wordes. And this will I do: not to boast and brag vpon my power, but to the entent you may perceyue that God hathe geuen power vnto the sonne of manne, who appeareth vnto you an vnderlyng and a weake person, to release synnes with worde, (which power your priestes neuer had) and that not in Jewry alonely, but also in all regions and countreys of the worlde, in suche wise that whatsoeuer he releaseth in earth, is released in heauen: and whatsoeuer he leuseth not in earth, the same remayneth still bounde and vnleused in heauen. You haue no cause to picke quarels, and surmyse matters against me but to reioice and be glad for your singuler wealthe and commoditie, if god of his infinite mercie, haue encreased his bounteous goodnes towardes you. If you saye that God cannot thus do, then do you derogate or diminiche his Maiestie. If you saye he wyll not, you offende his goodnesse. If you saye he doeth not, albeit he hath once promysed so to do, the

do you make hym a lyar. Finally yf you be doyde of beleue in suche thynges as are spirituall, and pertaine vnto the soule, wheras ye can not thwarte and cauyll in the thynges you see doorn before youre iyes, then do you plainly declare your obstinate malice.

He spake vnto ỹ sicke of the Palsey. &c.

When Jesus had spoken these wordes, and they diligently marked what he would do, he tourned hym to the sycke of the Palsey, and sayde: I saye vnto the, arise, take vp thy bed, and go hence into thy house. And he had scarcelye spoken these wordes, but an effectuall vertue therof manifestly ensued. For the sycke mame began not by litle and litle, and at the lengthe with muche a do to moue hymselfe: But assone as Jesus had spoken the worde, he rayled hymselfe, and stode vp as lustie and couragious, as though he had neuer felte any Palsey at all. Then lifted he vp his bedde, and layed it on his shoulders, and so went out through the preasse of people, shewyng the al a newe syght that neuer had bene sene before ỹ day, in as muche as he, who was a litle before bedred, and caried lyke a dead karkas on fower mennes shoulders, was now cranke, and lustie: yea and able ynough without anye helpe, to carrye so great a burden. They made hym roume to go oute, who woulde geue him none to cum in. And both these thinges were right expedient to be doen. Fyrste that the people shoulde not let hym haue entraunce, because to make the greatnesse of his faythe manifest to them all: then ỹ roume should be made him to go out through the middest of the preasse, because euerybody might see this wonderful sight and miracle. The Scribes saw these thinges, and were not onely neuer the better therfore, but also more enuious, and maliciously set against Jesu. The residew, so many as were present, being greatly amased with this straūge miracle, glorified god, who had geuen such power to man, with bare worde of mouth both to forgiue sinnes, and also to heale an vncurable disease, truly confessing that among all the marueylous dedes, whiche were eyther reported to be doen of the holy men that were before theyr dayes, or els of suche as liued in theyr tyme, there was none comparable vnto thys. Now if we stand still many tymes when we see thinges wrought by grauers, & painters, & diligently behold and vew euery point of the workemanshippe, alwaies espying some newe thig, that we sawe not before: me thinketh it right expedient ỹ we stay & tarrie here a while, to behold this notable syght, & with godly curiositie, to consydre euery thing: because whatsoeuer the Lorde dyd in earth, he dyd it for this purpose, that we studying the mysteries therof, shoulde picke out for our instruction, what so euer conduceth to vertuouse and godly lyuing. And this shall we doe with muche more profite, if we first cōsidre what was outwardly shewed vnto the corporall iyes: then what was sygnified by this figure to be inwardly wrought in mens soules. Let vs therfore fyrst of all ponder the violence and greatnesse of this dysease, whiche the lord Jesus cured with worde. For the palsey is nothing els but a noysom humour, that taketh and astoyneth the synowes of the body, whiche are the instrumentes of mouing, so that he that is sycke of this disease, hath membres not to vse, but to payne hym with greuous burthen, & doeth almost appeare to be a liue carkas lyuing only to his payne and torment. And for the most parte, this disease either riddeth a man sodainly out of the world, or els if it chaunce not so to doe, then after long continuance it maketh an end of him, with a more cruell and paynfull death: and is one of those diseases, that the phisycians recken vncurable, and for that cause will not by theyr good will, medle with all, or elsif they assaye to ouercome it, then at the length, after they haue a great while stryuen therwith in vayne, they as the weaker parte, geueit ouer, & forsake theyr cure, specially if the sayd disease haue once taken not one or two partes, but the whole body. Now how vncurable this mans disease was, it plainly appeared in that he kept his bed continually, and was borne lyke a dead carkas, on fower mens shoulders. Furthermore this kinde of disease, manye times maketh a man speachlesse and also febleth & dulleth the quicknesse of the wyt. And so did it fare (as it semeth) with this patient, who albeit that he was in this yuell takyng, yet neuer desyred he the lorde to helpe him. Who is so hard harted, whom so pitifull a sight woulde not moue to compassion: who woulde not thinke suche a one to be in better case dead, then after this manoure aliue. But now, christian man, beholde a lytle whyle with thy spiritual yes, and consydre how muche worse is the palsey of that mannes soule, whose powers are altogether entangled with the moste trifling cares of transytory thynges, and worldly vanities, in so muche that when he should doe any charitable dede or worke of mercye, then is he altogether benummed & taken with a palsey, so that he hath neyther handes to relieue the pore at theyr nede, nor feete to goe to Jesus, nor tongue to desyre his sauiour to helpe hym: but as one cleane dead to Justice is carried about hither and thither, whithersoeuer it pleaseth the sensuall lustes and appetites of his body, whiche be as it were his porters, to carry hym. What shall the sely soule do, whiche because it is altogether dissolute, and weakened by superfluitie, by carnall pleasure, by inordinate desyre of vayne glorye, and worldly riches, hath no strength at all to lyfte vp it selfe from the filthy cares of this world, to the loue of heauenly thynges. It is altogether fastened to the naughty bed of carnall lustes, and therein lieth, and resteth. And beyng in this case, it farre passeth mannes power to helpe it. Only Jesus is able with his almighty commaundement, to put awaye all the violence of this disease. Wherfore we ought to resorte vnto this physycia, vnto whome no disease is vncurable, but not without a greate faythe, which may doe so muche with him, that this pacient was holpen euen for the beleefe of other men. They prayed not with woordes, but yet were they earneste suters in dede. When fayth hartely desyreth any thyng of Christe, her requeste is very affectuall, and no meruayle syth that euen we mortal men, fele great carefulnesse in our mindes (suche are the naturall affections of man) when we se one that hangeth vpon vs, with all his harte and mynde, & hath put his sure confidence and trust in vs. God requireth of sinners, neyther burnt sacrifices, nor offered gyftes. Onely acknowlege thy syckenes, and truste in thy physycian: and yet no man can make the able thus to doe, but god alone. For after that he of his inestimable goodnes, hathe once decreed to hele the soule taken with the palsey, he fyrst of all putteth into it a certaine wonderfull heauinesse & vnkelomnesse of ones selfe, in so much ỳ the sinner hateth himselfe, and is weery of his former lyfe. Nowe he seeth in what ignorãce and darkenesse he hathe ben of long season, what greuous offences he was wonte to cõmitte, and abhorreth himselfe, and woulde without doubte, be in vtter dispayre of saluacion, vnlesse he that put in the vinegre of sorowe, dyd also gine hym the oyle of good hope. The iustice of God, fore troubleth the synnefull soule. It threateneth with vengeaunce, and punishmẽt due vnto the synnes: It threat-neth with hell and damnation. But on the otherside the remembraunce of the goodnes and great mercy of God, calleth backe the synner from desperacion, for that god seketh not the death of a synner but wylleth rather that he tourne and lyue. The lorde Jesus who restored the lawe of nature, and destroyed not Moyses lawe but made it perfite, did also applye hymselfe to the common reason and iudgement of the vulgare people. As the pocion ministred by a faythfull phisician sore vexeth the whole bodye, and bryngeth it out of quiet, specially in a leperdous disease, and the more it worketh, and troubleth the patient, the more hope is there of healthe: euen so the nearer vnto desperacion the penitent synner is, the nearer is he to his soule healthe, Jesu being his phisycian. Now marke me well a shamefast vnshamefastnesse. For shame, as it is commonly sayde, is vnprofitable to the neady man. Shame putteth awaye shame, euen as one nayle dryueth out an other. It is an vnprofitable shame that causeth a man to hyde and kepe secrete his sycknesse. This shame is put awaye by the longe wearnesse of the disease, and the great hope that a manne hath, to recouer his health: and nowe is he not ashamed to confesse his sycknesse, because he is ashamed to be sycke. What manne yf he be greuously diseased in his bodye, hathe any regarde of shame at all. Dooe not menne in suche case discouer, euen the moste priuie membres of theyr bodyes, and suffer the phisycian to handle them. Lyke affection of minde is in hym, who hath begonne to knowledge the fylthie disease of his soule. For what lewder pageaunte or pranke could there be played, then to clime vp vpon another mans house, to cast downe the tiles, to make an hole, and conuey downe from aboue a foule lothsome syght that euery body abhorred, and lay it before all theyr eyes? What would ye proude pharisey haue sayde here? Certes he woulde haue cryed: Oh dilaynous dede: and ouer this haue cayled out of measure agaynst theyr lewdnesse, who had contrary to the common lawe, made an hole, and forcibly entred into an other mans seuerall house, and with suche a deadly syght, both interrupted the holy preachyng of goddes worde, and also defiled the eyes of the audience. He woulde haue commaunded the barkaslyke sycke man to be had away, and then haue all to washed himselfe with water. But with those thinges, in as muche as they were an euident proofe and argument of a notable fayethe towardes him, the Lorde Jesus was highly delyted, whiche they that crake vpon the righteousnesse of Moyses lawe, wouilde haue bene offended with all: in so muche that he, and ȳ not lokyng to be desyred, healed this miserable creature: and first of all he cured the diseases of his soule, whiche are synnes, and then forthwith deliuered his body of the palsey, because that as there are many vices, whiche after they haue taken theyr begynning of the body, doe from thence redounde into the soule: so it chaunceth oftentimes that the body is infected with the disease, that is first bred and ingendred in the soule, as when lecherye whiche is engendred of the humours of the flesshe, defyleth the sowle, and from thence returneth agayne her maladie and euyll effect into the body, there causyng eyther the palsey, or the fallyng euyll: or els wherin that enuie, whiche taketh her begynnyng of a vicious soule, dothe also waste the body, and bryng it to a cōsumption. He onely is able to cure bothe the partes of man, whiche made bothe. Here is it also to be consydered, howe greate was the largesse of Jesu in forgeuyng of synnes. For whē he saithe: thy sinnes are remitted, he lewseth thē all together.

Neyther

Neyther is there any mencion made of the merites paste, nor any requiring of sacrifices, or satisfaccion, but mencion of fayethe only. It is inoughe humbly to haue cum to the feet of Jesus. That man hathe made sufficient sacrifice, who with perfecte fayethe hath shewed hymselfe vnto Jesu, then whiche sacrifice, there is none more acceptable vnto him. The sycke of the palsey was wholy displeased with himselfe, bothe for that he knewe his owne synfull liuing, and also because his body was oppressed with so miserable a sickenesse. All his trust was in the mightye goodnes of Jesu, who made hym all whole because he wholy committed himselfe vnto this phisician: he cõsidered not how vncurable was his disease, but only regarded how myghty, and good was the phisician, vnto whome he committed himselfe. Nowe what hope of recouery is there in those persons, that cherysh, and make muche of theyr disease, that flye out of the physycians syght, yea that hate, and abhorre hym? If thou be ashamed to acknowledge thy sickenesse to a mã physycian, or els yf thou haue any mistrust in hym, who peraduenture when he knoweth thy sickenes, will rather hit the in the teeth therwith, then cure the same, yet hide it not from Christ, who discloseth no mannes offences, but healeth all men, and that freely: and thus do thou to thentent it maye lykewyse chaunce vnto the, as it chaunced to the sicke of the palsey. What did he? He all thinges now turned cleane cõtrary, lyfted vp his bed on his shoulders, as one ruling his sensuall appetites and passiõs, whiche he serued before. For this is the very thing that is meant by beating of the crosse. This is it that is vnderstand, by crucifying the flesche with her vices and cõcupiscences. Now needeth he no more lower porters to carry hym. He walketh on his owne feete, whithersoeuer ỹ spirite of Christ leadeth hym, neither goeth he, but whither he is commaunded to go. For what is it to walke, but by continuall encrease of vertue, styl to goe forwarde, and euery daye to wax better and better. what is it to retourne into the house fro whẽce he came, but to knowleage in what case he came out frõ thence, and by whose benefite, he returned thither againe so daintily chaũged, & altered bothe in body and sowle. For it is the propertie of the phariseis, to dwell without in stretes, market places, and wherras conuenticles and vnlawfull assembles be. He dwelleth at home in his owne house, whoso knoweth howe nought and vertuelesse he is of himselfe, and wholy ascribeth what vertue and goodnesse soeuer he hath, to the free liberalitie of our sauiour. Now will I dissemble the frõ any lõger beholding of this syght, after I haue rehersed vnto the by waye of epilogacion, the persones of this scene or pageaunt. The sycke of the palsey, and they that carrye hym, be made shameles through theyr great fayth, and obtaine theyr peticion. Jesus is so muche delyted with theyr fayethe, that euen of his owne accorde, and not desyred of them, he doubleth his benefite. The symple and vnlearned people, discerning nothyng in him, whom they beleued to be nought els but a manne, only merueyleth at the power of God. The scribes alone mutyre softly with themselfes agaynst Jesu. Let vs therfore eschew the ensample of the saide Scribes, who whyles they studie to aduaunce theyr owne glorie, goe about to dulke the glorye of Jesu. Let vs be of ỹ simple sorte of people, and with them glorifye God, not only if it please hym at any tyme of his great mercifull goodnesse to heale the infirmytie of our soules, but also whensoeuer we see any other, through his saide bountyous goodnes, forsake theyr olde vicious kyuyng, and cumme to amendement.

The texte. ¶ And he went agayne vnto the sea, and all the people resorted vnto him, and he taught them. And as Jesus passed by, he saw Leuy the sonne of Alphey, sittyng at the receipte of custome, and sayde vnto him: folow me. And he arose and folowed hym. And it came to passe that when Jesus sate at meate in his house, many publicanes and synners sate also together at meate with Jesus, and his disciples. For there were many that folowed hym. And when the Scribes and pharisees saw him eate with publycanes and sinners, they sayd vnto his disciples: Howe happeneth it that he eateth and drynketh with publicanes and sinners? When Jesus heard that, he sayde vnto them. They that be whole haue no nede of the physician, but they that are sycke. I came not to call the ryghtuouse, but synners to repentaunce.

And as Jesus passed by. &c.

After this so notable a miracle was wrought at Capernaũ, Jesu, to thentente he might dooe good to moe, departed thence agayne, and went to the sea. He dyd not conuey hymselfe awaye, because he woulde not helpe men and doe them good, but whyle he forsoke the vncurable scribes, he prouoked the godly by his departure, the more to desyre his presence. For there likewise resorted a greate number of people vnto the sea, teachyng vs that we ought in lyke manoure to forsake all thynges, & folowe Jesus whithersoeuer he goeth. For he is euery where a sauiour, whether he be resydent in cities, or trauayle thorough tounes, and villages, or continewe in ỹ wyldernesse, or goe vp to mountaines, or come downe into the plaine, or els repayre to seas and waters. When he sawe therfore, that so great a multitude of people was cumme thyther, & knew ryght wel the cause of theyr cumming, he taught them on the shore. And as he there walked, he passed by a certaine custome house, where those are wont to syt that demaunde custome, and towle, of suche as sayle by: and espied in that house a certaine manne named Mathew, who was also called Leuy, the sonne of Alphey, sytting at the receipt of custome, for he was a publycane or customer. And albeit this sorte of menne was euery where muche hated of the people, yet specially among the Jewes, they were counted abhominable. For they vse to bye this office of the prince, for an vnreasonable summe of money, and therfore to thentent theyr aduauntage and gayne may be the more, for the moste parte they take and extorte of all menne, without pitie and conscience, and put maryners, and wayfaring menne to muche busynesse, vnto whome many tymes damage and displesure ynough otherwyse happeneth. There were verye many among the Jewes, who denied that the Jewes beyng the holye people of god ought to pay tribute vnto the Emperour, since he was an heathen prince and a worshipper of Idolles. And for this cause they greatly abhorred the Publicans, who to haue the gaynes of the money whiche they leuied ouer and aboue that was due, serued hym in gatheryng of toll and custome. The sorde whiche had before inwrapped ỹ scribes with theyr vnbeliefe, for that they murmured against his miracle, whereas the symple people glorysyed and praysed god therfore, because he woulde nowe eftsoones shewe that none be farther from true holynesse, then suche as thynke themselues perfyte holy menne, called Mathew out of the custome house, and commaũded hym to folowe him. Mathew beyng sodaynlye chaunged, and made a newe man, forsoke his gayning feate, and folowed poore Jesus, to thentent he might be enriched with the ryches of the ghospel. All men did not so greatly merueyle at this facte, and yet was it in dede more wonderfull then that, whiche they so muche merueiled at a lytle before, when the sicke of the palsey was healed. For consydre me well what a palsey he hath whose mynde is fastened to couetousnesse. Neyther is it vnknowen howe intricate, tricate, and buſye, the accomptes of publicans be, and therfore that he ſodeinly chaunged went out of his cuſtome houſe, forſakyng all that euer he hadde, and folowyng Jeſu, was more to be merueyled at, then the ſycke of the palſey when he whipte out of his bed, and went home vnto his houſe. The phariſey heareth Jeſus reaſoning or diſputing on many matiers, and ſeeth him worke ſundry miracles, and yet diſtruſteth, and murmureth agaynſt hym. The publycane who neuer heard ne ſawe ſuche thynges before, obeyed thonly worde of Jeſu. And beholde an other occaſion, wherby bothe the wickednelle of the phariſeis, and alſo the bounteous goodnelle of Jeſu maye the better be ſet forthe and knowen. For Mathew being now the aſſured diſciple of Jeſu, to thentent he myght commend his maiſter to moe, and bryng ſuche as were his late companions, and felowes of the ſame ſtate and condicion that he was, to the lucre of the gholpell, was not afearde to deſyre the lorde that he woulde vouchelake to be his geaſt at home in his houſe. Jeſus lightely condeſcended vnto his requeſt, becauſe that before he ſo wyllingly obeyed when he was called. Mathew ſuppoſyng that he had obteyned no ſmall thyng, prepared a right gorgious and a royall feaſte, whiche ſhoulde ſuffice a great many, that is to wete, certaine diſciples whom the lorde had now gathered, and beſydes them diuerſe other, which then folowed Jeſus and went with him as vnbidden geaſtes to this feaſte: and many publicans, yea and ſinners to, whom for olde familiaritie and acquayntaunce Mathew had bidden therunto, beyng nothing aſhamed what manoure of companions he once had, ſithe he was thē departed from them to an other felowſhyp. For he truſted it woulde cumme to paſſe, ꝑ lyke as he was called of the lorde, ſo ſhould he thrōughe the lordes mercyfull vocacion, haue many of them ſcholefelowes with him in learnyng the doctrine of the gholpell (whereby is geuen aboundaunce of heauenly treaſure) who were before his felowes in vicious lyuing, and getting of ſlaunderous gaines. He receiued this great confidence thrōugh the gracious goodnes ꝑ he perceiued in Jeſu towardes all menne. Truly it was mete this ſhoulde be a great feaſte, which repreſented ꝑ churche that ſhould be gathered together of the gentiles. For the feaſtes of the Jewes be ſmall, and receyuable but of fewe perſons, becauſe they onely folowe the fleſhe or litterall ſence of the lawe, where as the ſpirite and true meaning therof, dilateth it ſelfe in moſt ample wyſe, and receiueth al ſortes of people. All menne loue libertie and haue neede of mercy: few haue rightouſneſſe, and yet did the phariſeis chalēge theſame notwithſtanding they lacked it, & were in very dede vnrightuous: who when they ſawe Jeſus feaſting with publicās and ſynners (whome they as menne of great perfection and holyneſſe would not vouchſake ſo muche as to ſpeake vnto) went vnto his diſciples, being then but ſymple ignorāunt perſons, and ſuche as they thought might eaſely be plucked from theyr mayſter: and them dyd they hunt after and aſſaye to wynne with theyr venemous whiſperyng. Why (ꝙ they) doeth your maiſter, whom you (John forſaken) folowe as the more holy and perfite manne, eate and drinke with ſynners, ſince that the communion of table is the greateſt token of familiaritie that maye be? Hath not he red this ſcripture folowing: with the holy thou ſhalte be holy, and with the froward thou ſhalt be froward. Doth not he cōſider how that by reaſon he is thus familiar, & kepeth company with ſinners, he doeth encourage thē to cōtinewe ſtill in ſinne, whiche els peraduenture, yf menne woulde auoyde theyr companye, woulde amende theyr lyues: When the disciples, who were as yet rawe in theyr profession, had no ready answere to make them, but onely with a symple plaine fayth hanged vpō theyr Lorde, then Jesus (vnto whom neyther the secrete wordes, nor yet the hid thoughtes of the phariseis were vnknowen) made answere for them in this wyse: O you phariseis, why do you grudge and murmour agaynst me, for that I rather feaste with thē whome you take for wycked and abominable persons, then with the priestes, scribes, and phariseis? The physicians are praysed who being themselues in good health go yet vnto ỹ sycke when they are sent for: And am I blamed for going vnto them who acknowledge the disease of theyr soule, and desyre a physycian to cure them? Suche as are in good health do not quarell with the physycian & saye: Why visytest thou suche, and suche, & not vs? For they that are whole haue no nede of a physycian. The facultie of phisycke muste alwayes be redy for those that be euyll at ease. These folkes which acknowledge theyr disease, are right glad that the physician is cum. For you sawe by that I did vnto the sicke of the palsey, howe I haue power geuen me to take away sinne. You that thinke your selues whole, & take vpon you to be right wisemen, haue no cause to quarell with the physiciā if he cum not vnto you. I was sent into ỹ worlde, to take awaye the sinne of the worlde. Whoso knowleageth his sicknesse, and desyreth the physycians helpe, him will not I fayle at his nede. Howe he that thynketh hymselfe faultles, yf he be in a right beliefe, neadeth nothing that I can do. But if he be deceiued in his opiniō, or els knowe right wel his inwarde infirmitie, and yet dissembleth the same, then is he paste all hope of recouery. And for this cause the physyciā should but lose his labour, if he wēt vnto him. For who can heale a manne agaynst his wyll? Therfore the physyciā is vniustely reproued, yf he folow the rules of his facultie: but they are very vncurtuous, who when thēselues are in good healthe, haue great disdayne and enuy that the physyciā should be present with the sicke. And this my facte ought not to seme straunge and vncouth vnto you, whiche professe the knowledge of the lawe. For you reade therin as foloweth: I will mercy rather then sacrifice. God spake these wordes by his Prophete, signifying therby that the carnall iustice of the lawe, whiche standeth in abstaynyng from open offences and the obseruacion of ceremonies, shoulde be set aside and abolyshed. He that neyther cōmitteth murther, theft, nor aduoutry, he that resteth on the Sabboth day, fasteth vpon dayes apointed, washeth, & maketh sacrifice, is righteous after the estimacio of man: But god requireth another maner of righteousnes, which standeth in free beneficence or well doyng to our neyghbour, in forgeuyng thē that haue offended vs, in mekenesse and gentle demeanour. Now how farre are they from this prayse, which do not onely themselues not helpe their neighbour in his necessytie, but also haue great despite, and bable agaynst it, yf anye manne so do? God promised to sende you suche a Messias, not as should excell the Phariseis in sacrifices, phylacteries, fastinges, and long prayers, for thobseruacio wherof they magnify & set out themselues vnto the people, but suche a one as shoulde be beneficiall to all men, a lanterne to them that be out of the way, a helper to oppressed persōs, a cōforter to suche as are in aduersitie, a physiciā to all that are cōtrite in herte, and finally suche a one as should ioyne vnto god, those that semed to be farre frō God: & contrary wise, declare that suche as

as appered to be next God, and moste holiest, were verie far from true godlynesse. With these wordes the lorde Jesus bothe stopped the mouthes of the Phariseis, and also taught his disciples how charitably they should demeane themselues toward sinners. For this cause we are much bound to the wicked phariseis, who so oft prouoke the lord to expoune the doctrine of the gospell.

The terte. ¶ And the disciples of John and the Phariseis did fast: and they cum and say vnto hym: why doe the disciples of John and of the phariseis fast: But thy disciples fast not? And Jesus sayed vnto them: can the chyldren of the weddyng fast whyle the brydegrome is with them? As long as they haue the brydegrome with them, they can not fast. But the dayes wyll cum when the brydegrome shalbe taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those dayes.

Behold there went also vnto Jesu certain of Johns disciples in cõpany with the false accusyng Phariseis. For they also were attached with a spiece of humain enuie, for that Jesus semed to defâce the great estimacion of their mayster John, notwithstandyng his life & rule appered to be strayter then Christes was, and that he had mo disciples then thother. Wherfore they went vnto Jesus, & moued vnto him this capcious question: why (q they) do Johns disciples, and the phariseis oft times fast, and thy disciples not fast at all? Vnto this question, because they assayled hym and not his disciples, the lord made a gentler aunswer, than he did a litle before, when he defended his disciples: teachyng vs hereby, that Christian charitie, whiche vseth all mylnesse in the euyls and displeasures doen vnto herselfe priuately, is more diligent in defendyng other from the same. For the Christian bysshop must be patiente, and meeke, in sufferyng all iniuries doen vnto his owne person: but yet ought he with diligent endeuour to helpe his flocke, whensoeuer it is in ieoperdie. Wherfore Jesus sayd: You that haue diligẽtly heard John Baptist preache, ought to call to remembraunce howe he preached that I was the bridgrome and he the brydegromes frende. It is mete that all heauinesse be away when the brydegrome is present.

Can the chyldren of the weddig fast &c.

Moses is a seruaunt and no brydegrome, and therfore fastinges were conuenient for hym, because the same doe cause sadnesse, and abate myrthe. It is well doen that they fast, whiche continue in the Synagoge, beyng a seruaunt and not a bride. For suche haunt not the brydegromes chaumber. But the frebourne chyldren, who haunte the weddyng chaumber, can not fast, as long as they haue the brydegrome hymselfe present with them: because theyr myrthe is so great, that it wyll not suffer them to remembre heauy thynges. He that for dread of punyshment doeth his duetie, can in no wyse be meary. Now the chyldren who haue receyued the spirite of libertye, perceyuyng that they are dearly beloued, and cared for of the brydegrome, be neuer carefull leste they offende in these thynges whiche wer commaunded for a tyme, to men of a seruile nature: as for an ensample, in washinges, in thobseruacion of the Sabbothe, in choyce of meates, in apparell, in holy dayes, in sacrifices. They put theyr confidence in the myght and goodnes of the brydegrome who is able without all these thynges, to geue them perfite righteousnesse. Spirituall belefe taketh awaye fleshly carefulnes. Charitie that maketh all thinges pleasaunt, causeth gladnesse. The brydegrome hath his owne proper meate, from the whiche his companions can not abstayne.

The worde of God, and the flesh of the brydegrome, is the meat and foode of the soule, and his blood is the drink of the same. Suche as cleaue nygh

companye, woulde amende theyr lyues: When the disciples, who were as yet rawe in theyr profession, had no ready answere to make them, but onely with a symple plaine fayth hanged vpō theyr Lorde, then Jesus (vnto whom neyther the secrete wordes, nor yet the hid thoughtes of the phariseis were vnknowen) made answere for them in this wyse: O you phariseis, why do you grudge and murmour agaynst me, for that I rather feaste with thē whome you take for wycked and abominable persons, then with the priestes, scribes, and phariseis? The physicians are praysed who being themselues in good health go yet vnto ỹ sycke when they are sent for: And am I blamed for going vnto them who acknowledge the disease of theyr soule, and desyre a physycian to cure them? Suche as are in good health do not quarell with the physycian as saye: Why visytest thou suche, and suche, & not vs? For they that are whole haue no nede of a physycian. The facultie of phisycke muste alwayes be redy for those that be euyll at ease. These folkes which acknowledge theyr disease, are right glad that the physician is cum. For you sawe by that I did vnto the sicke of the palsey, howe I haue power geuen me to take away sinne. You that thinke your selues whole, & take vpon you to be right wisemen, haue no cause to quarell with the physiciā if he cum not vnto you. I was sent into ỹ worlde, to take awaye the sinne of the worlde. Whoso knowleageth his sickenesse, and desyreth the physycians helpe, him will not I fayle at his nede. Nowe he that thynketh hymselfe faultles, yf he be in a right beliefe, neadeth nothing that I can do. But if he be deceiued in his opiniō, or els knowe right wel his inwarde infirmitie, and yet dissembleth the same, then is he paste all hope of recouery.

Why Jesus hearde that he saieth. &c.

I cam not to call the right wise but sinners &c.

And for this cause the physyciā should but lose his labour, if he wēt vnto him. For who can heale a manne agaynst his wyll? Therfore the physyciā is vniustely reproued, yf he folow the rules of his facultie: but they are very vncurtuous, who when thēselues are in good healthe, haue great disdayne and enuy that the physyciā should be present with the sicke. And this my facte ought not to seme straunge and vncouth vnto you, whiche profesSe the knowledge of the lawe. For you reade therin as foloweth: I will mercy rather then sacrifice. God spake these wordes by his Prophete, sygnifying therby that the carnall iustice of the lawe, whiche standeth in abstayning from open offences and the obseruacion of ceremonies, shoulde be set asyde and abolyshed. He that neyther cōmitteth murther, theft, nor aduoutry, he that resteth on the Sabboth day, fasteth vpon dayes apointed, washeth, & maketh sacrifice, is righteous after the estimaciō of man: But god requireth another maner of righteousnes, which standeth in free beneficence or well doyng to our neyghbour, in forgeuyng thē that haue offended vs, in mekenesse and gentle demeanour. Now how farre are they from this prayse, which do not onely themselues not helpe their neighbour in his necessytie, but also haue great despite, and bable agaynst it, yf anye manne so do? God promised to sende you suche a Messias, not as should excell the Phariseis in sacrifices, phylacteries, fastinges, and long prayers, for thobseruaciō wherof they magnify & set out themselues vnto the people, but suche a one as shoulde be beneficiall to all men, a lanterne to them that be out of the way, a helper to oppressed persōs, a cōforter to suche as are in aduersity, a physiciā to all that are cōtrite in herte, and finally suche a one as should ioyne vnto god, those that semed to be farre frō God: & contrarywise, declare that suche

as appered to be next God, and moste holiest, were verie far from true godlynesse. With these wordes the lorde Jesus bothe stopped the mouthes of the Phariseis, and also taught his disciples how charitably they should demeane themselues toward sinners. For this cause we are much bound to the wicked phariseis, who so oft prouoke the lord to expoune the doctrine of the gospell.

¶ And the disciples of Iohn and the Phariseis did fast: and they cum and say vnto hym: why doe the disciples of Iohn and of the phariseis fast: But thy disciples fast not. And Jesus sayed vnto them: can the chyldren of the weddyng fast whyle the brydegrome is with them? As long as they haue the brydegrome with them, they can not fast. But the dayes wyll cum when the brydegrome shalbe taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those dayes. The texte.

Behold there went also vnto Jesu certain of Johns disciples in cõpany with the false accusyng Phariseis. For they also were attached with a spiece of humain enuie, for that Jesus semed to defâce the great estimacion of their mayster John, notwithstandyng his life & rule appered to be strayter then Christes was, and that he had mo disciples then thother. Wherfore they went vnto Jesus, & moued vnto him this capcious question: why (qᵗ they) do Johns disciples, and the phariseis oft times fast, and thy disciples not fast at all? Vnto this question, because they assayled hym and not his disciples, the lord made a gentler aunswer, than he did a litle before, when he defended his disciples: teachyng vs hereby, that Christian charitie, whiche vseth all myldnesse in the cuyls and displeasures doen vnto herselfe priuately, is more diligent in defendyng other from the same. For the Christian bychop must be patiente, and meeke, in sufferyng all iniuries doen vnto his owne person: but yet ought he with diligent endeuour to helpe his flocke, whensoeuer it is in ieoperdie. Wherfore Jesus sayd: You that haue diligẽtly heard John Baptist preache, ought to call to remembraunce howe he preached that I was the bridgrome and he the brydegromes frende. It is mete that all heauinesse be away when the brydegrome is present.

Can the chyldren of the weddyng fast?

Moses is a seruaunt and no brydegrome, and therfore fastinges were conuenient for hym, because the same doe cause sadnesse, and abate myrthe. It is well doen that they fast, whiche continue in the Synagoge, beyng a seruaunt and not a bride. For suche haunt not the brydegromes chaumber. But the frebourne chyldren, who haunte the weddyng chaumber, can not fast, as long as they haue the brydegrome hymselfe present with them: because their myrthe is so great, that it wyll not suffer them to remembre heauy thynges. He that for dread of punyshment doeth his duetie, can in no wyse be meary. Now the chyldren who haue receyued the spirite of libertye, perceyuyng that they are dearly beloued, and cared for of the brydegrome, be neuer carefull leste they offende in these thynges whiche were commaunded for a tyme, to men of a seruile nature: as for an ensample, in washinges, in thobseruacion of the Sabbothe, in choyce of meates, in apparell, in holy dayes, in sacrifices. They put their confidence in the myght and goodnes of the brydegrome who is able without all these thynges, to geue them perfite righteousnesse. Spirituall bekfe taketh awaye fleshly carefulnes. Charitie that maketh all thinges pleasaunt, causeth gladnesse. The brydegrome hath his owne proper meate, from the whiche his companions can not abstayne.

The worde of God, and the flesh of the brydegrome, is the meat and foode of the soule, and his blood is the drink of the same. Suche as cleaue nygh

vnto me, are euer deſyrous to eat theyr fyll of this meat: and they that haunt the bride gromes weddyng chamber, doe alwayes couet to be dronken wyth this drinke. But lyke as corporall meate cauſeth not rightuouſneſſe, euen ſo faſtyng maketh not a man iuſte: yea it is oftentymes ſeen that he whiche eateth his meate, is more rightuous then the faſter. Suche faſtynges as are commaunded by the lawe, are full of beaunelſe, and therfore diſpleaſaunt to almightye God, who loueth a cherefull gyuer. He can in no wyſe be merye and chereful, that feareth and trembleth. But whoſo knoweth that he is ſet at lyberte in theſe thinges, eyther to doe them, or not to doe them, and yet mooued by charitie faſteth, the ſame vndoubtedly faſteth wyth great myrth and gladneſſe: not becauſe his faſting is ſo preſcribed by the lawe, but for that charitie moueth hym ſo to doe. Whan my diſciples are once cum to that ſtrengthe of mynde, that I nowe goe about by my teachyng and preachyng to bryng them vnto, than ſhall charitie cauſe them to doe more of theyr owne free wyll, than now doth the preſcripcion eyther of the law or els of Iohn get of you by compulſion. But as yet they are not cum to this ſtrength and perfection. They are yet tender and weake: for the preſence of my body letteth them to attain therto. The day ſhall once cum, when the corporall preſence of the bryde grome ſhalbe taken away from them, and then being made ſtronger by receiuyng the holy ghoſte from heauen, they ſhal not onely faſt, and that of theyr owne accorde, but alſo gladly and with right good wyll doe thynges, in the atchiuyng wherof, more ſtrengthe and conſtaunt courage of mynde ſhall be ſhewed, then in faſtyng. But foraſmuche as this doctrine is ſpirituall, it can not be receyued of them, who all theyr lyfe long haue enured themſelfes wyth Phariſaicall ceremonies. And for this cauſe I pyked out ſimple, and ignorant yong men to be my diſciples. For I ſhoulde but loſe my labour if I dyd commit ſpirituall and heauenly doctrine vnto theyr mindes, that are ſo ſuperſticious in keping of carnall ceremonies. Old thinges beſt agreeth with old, and newe thynges with newe, the whiche if a man myngle together, he dooeth not onely labour in vaine, but alſo maketh thoſe perſons worſe, whome he goeth about to reforme. For it is better for them ſtil to continue in theyr olde ſuperſticiouſneſſe, then whyles a man doeth his endeuour to bring them to the freedome of the ſpirite, to prouoke them (all feare of tranſgreſſion layed aſyde) to committe ſinne at libertie. For as it is more a doe to teache ſuche an one any crafte or occupacion, as hath conceyued a wrong opinion of hym ſelfe, thinkyng that he hath good ſkyll therin, and hath none at all, then hym who is altogether ignorant in the ſame: euen ſo is it the hardeſt thyng that maye be, to teache ſuche perſons the ryghtuouſneſſe of the ghoſpel, whiche for thobſeruacion of certain folyſh carnall ceremonies, beleue ſurely they haue attayned perfite ryghtuouſnes. And this doubtles is the cauſe that I fynde fiſhermen, publicans, ſinners, vnchaſt women & Ethnikes, more apt to learn this ſpirituall philoſophy, then the ſcribes, phariſeis & prieſtes, who ſuppoſe that perfit godlynes ſtandeth in thobſeruacion and kepyng of mans ceremonies. Iohn as a meane betwene the old law & the new, wēt about to myngle together two ſundry doctrines. For he durſt not commit this liuely philoſophy, pure and vnmengled as it was, vnto them that were weake of mynde. Nowe all is weake that is humayne & carnall. And contrarily that is full of lyfe, vertue, and ſtrength, whatſoeuer is godly, ſpirituall, and heauenly.

wherfore vnto my disciples (whome I chose rude and ignorannt, to the entent I myght the soner enstruct them in this strong and pithful Philosophy) I prescribe none of these thinges folowyng: Eate these meates, forbear these, now rest, now labor, vse suche apparel, touch not this thing, handle not that. And the cause is for feare lest they woulde alwayes contine we weake, if they once learned of me theyr maister to put any trust in suche corporall thynges. It is a thyng very vnprofitable to ioyne thynges together, whiche disagree one with an other.

For there is no man so farre from reason, that if he be disposed to amende an olde garment, will se we therunto a patche of newe clothe. And why so: certes for that he perceyueth yf he should so do, he shoulde bothe lose his new cloth, & also make the hole of the olde garment bigger then it was before. For beyng offended with the notable diuersytie betwene the piece of cloth sewed on, and the yll mended garmente, he strayght wayes plucketh of the piece that he sewed to, and so the hole of the same garment gapeth fowler then it dyd before. Neyther is there any man so folysh as to put newe wine in olde bottels. And why: because he seeth that he should sustain double losse therby. For the new wyne worketh so feruently through the behemencie of the fumes therein enclosed, that it breaketh ỹ bottels beyng weake by reason of age, all to pieces: and so are bothe bottels and wyne cleane lost, and spilt. Howe doeth he then prouide bothe for the safetie of the one and the other: Truly he putteth the newe wyne into newe bottels. Euen so they whose mindes haue of long time been accustomed to the naughtie wine of Pharisaicall superstition, can in no wyse away with the newe wine of heauenly & spirituall doctrine, but lothe and abhorre the same, stylle callyng after a taste of the wurse wine that hath been theyr accustomable drynke. And that Iesu spake the truthe herein, the Pharisees them selues many tymes declared by theyr deedes. And no man poureth new wyne into olde bottels.

¶ And it chaunced again that he went thorow the corn fieldes on the Sabboth dayes, and his disciples began by the way to plucke the eares of the corne. And the Pharisees sayd vnto hym: Beholde why do they on the Sabboth dayes that whiche is not lawfull? And he sayed vnto them, haue ye neuer read what Dauid dyd when he had nede, and was an hungred, both he and they that were with hym: howe he went into the house of God in the dayes of Abiathar the hye priest, and dyd eate the shewe bread, whiche is not lawfull to eate, but for the priestes onely, and gaue also to them whiche were with hym: And he sayed vnto them: the Sabboth was made for man, and not man for the Sabboth: therefore is the sonne of man Lorde also of the Sabboth. The text.

For as it chaunced on a certaine season that his disciples trauayled thorough a corne fyeld, and that vpon the Sabboth daye, on the whiche day it was a matter of conscience among the Iewes to doe any maner of worke, they went before, and Iesus theyr mayster folowed. And anon prouoked by hunger, they beganne to plucke the eares of the corne, and with the chafyng of theyr handes to rubbe out the corne, and eate it. Nowe heare howe the olde bottels were offended with the newe wyne of the libertie of the ghospell, calling after the olde wyne of kepyng the Sabboth, that hadde cleane lost his verdure. For the Pharisees, who as menne very righteouse in theyr owne conceyptes folowed Iesus, beholdyng what the disciples dyd, wrongfullye fully blamed the Lorde in them. For lykeas the vertuousnesse of the scholers is a great commendacion to the mayster, euen so theyr mysbehaueoure, and lewde taches are reproched and layed vnto those that instructed them. They tolde the lorde, and poynted vnto his disciples, as thoughe they had dorne a grieuouse offence, for that they brake the Sabboth daye, to the ende that he shoulde cause them to leaue worke, and by that meanes approue the pharisaicall superstition: orels yf he woulde not so do, then myght they take some occasion to picke a quarell, or surmise some matter agaynst hym. The Lorde so defended his disciples, that he disproued the learned in the lawe of Moses, by the auctoritie of the lawe, and of his gentlenesse vouchesafed to teache them the true meaning therof, whiche in dede deserued shaperly to be rebuked.

And he said vnto them: haue ye neuer read, &c.

With what face (sayd he) do ye accuse my disciples, for that thorough constraint of hunger, they plucke a fewe eares of corne, beeyng by chaunce in their waye, for theyr releefe and sustenaunce? sithe there is expresse mencion in the very lawe it selfe (wherof you professe your selues to be teachers) howe Dauid when he was in lyke necessitie, dydde a thyng whiche soundeth muche more to the breache of the lawe then this. For he beyng almost famished, and in great daunger to perysh for lacke of foode, fled for succour vnto the house of God: and although he were a laye man, was not afrayed to desyre Abiathar, then chyef of the priestes, to geue him those moste holy loaues called the shewe bread, the whiche it was not lefull for any man to eate of, but the priestes onely: and that but duryng the litle whyle they were within the precinct of the Temple, occupied about makyng of sacrifice. Abiathar was not here ignoraunt what the lawe had commaunded, and yet feared not he to deliuer vnto Dauid, and his trayne, the sayed holy loaues, to be eaten in the holy place. If you knowe not that this is scripture, orels yf you haue it not in memory, howe thā for shame dare you professe the knowledge ỹ of law? If you know, and remembre it, why doe you in a lyke case quite Abiathar, and Dauid, yea and allowe theyr facte, and yet accuse my disciples as giltie of an heynous trespasse? If the rigorousnes of the lawe did then geue place vnto the necessitye of the neyghboure, when the lawe was of moste force & strengthe, howe muche more then standeth it nowe with reason that the ceremonies of the same lawe, geue place therunto, whensoeuer charitie moueth a man to help his euen Christene.

Moreouer it is lykewyse commaunded in the lawe, that euery man ought to loue his neyghbour with lyke affection as he loueth hymselfe. Nowe synce this is the moste principall and greatest of all the commaundementes in the whole lawe, why doe you then of an vnright iudgement breake that whiche is chiefest, and alwayes continueth, for the obseruacion of those thynges whiche are of lesse value, and shall not endure for euer? The tyme once hath been when the Sabboth was not holy daye. And the tyme shall cum when to all true and Godly men, euery day shal be lyke holy. But the tyme neuer was, nor neuer shall be, when it hath not or shall not be an holy dede for man to succour his neyghbour in his nede. The lawe forbiddeth murder. Truely he murthereth, whoso whenit lyeth in his power to saue a manne, doeth not succour hym at all. And this lawe is permanent, and shall continue for euermore. The same lawe forbiddeth also to worke vpon the Sabboth daye. Nowe what a wrong shapen holynesse is this, yf a man whiles he feareth to breake

the Sabboth, ſuffer his brother to perysshe, when he wyll not sticke to plucke out his asse fallen by chaunce into a dyche vpon the same daye, without anye feare, or scruple of conscience to breake the seuenth, or Sabboth daye.

When Jesus had with these, and suche lyke manifeste reasons, declared how awkewardly deuout and holy they were, he added this generall sentence: The Sabboth day (sayde he) was instituted for mens cause, and not men made for the Sabboth daye. The sonne of manne came not to destroye men, but to saue them. And for that cause hath he power, yea, cleane to take awaye the Sabboth, so ofte as mans health so requireth. And that whiche I haue spoken of the Sabboth, is to be thought and demed of all like constitucions. They were all instituted for a season, to this ende, that the sturdye and disobediente people shoulde by little and little accustome themselfes to obey goddes commaundementes, to thintent that they might by corporal figures, be brought, and as it were ledde by the hande, to the vnderstanding of spirituall thynges. And he sayde vnto them: the Sabboth. &c.

He breaketh the Sabboth daye godlily, who nothyng troubled with euill lustes, breaketh it onely for the good zeale he hath to helpe his euen Christen. Fastyng is a godly thing, but the same is made vngodly, and detestable, if it beyng only instituted for mannes soule helth, be abused to the destruccion both of body and soule. Againe a vowe is a holy thing, but the same is made vnholy, yf a man by reason of a superstitious mynde he hath to perfourme it, bee withdrawen from the perfourmaunce of suche thinges, as nerer appertayne to true godlynesse. He doeth well, and lyke a good holy manne, whoso maketh his oblacion at the aulter. But agayne, that is an vnholy gift which a manne offereth, before his neighbour be made at one. So is it also well doen to passe litle vpon the coulour, and fashiō of apparell, so oft as it behoueth a man so to do, because man was not made for the garmentes sake, but the garment first inuented for the vse, and commoditie of man. In lyke manner, meate is ordained for mans cause, and not man made for meates sake. Wherfore it is lefull to eate all kyndes of meate when mans necessitie so requireth. For all these corporall thinges, wherin you put perfit righteousnesse, as your temple, sacrifices, meate, clothing, holy dayes, fastynges, vowes, and offered giftes, are vnholily obserued, yf for the obseruacion therof, the health of your euen christen be in any wise hurt or appaired. And againe they are well and holily kept, if charitie towardes your neighbour so requiring, you nothing regarde whatsoeuer is carnall, but truly perfourme in your hertes, that whiche suche corporall thinges be figures & significacions of. Of such manier of constitucions, Moyses was the minister, and not the auctour: the seruaunte, & not the maister. Suche as with a seruile minde cleue still vnto him, do very superstitiously keepe those thynges, that are compryſed in the letter of the lawe. But they that sticke vnto the sonne of man (who is Lord ouer the whole lawe, and teacheth howe all thinges whiche were figured by those corporall shadowes and figures ought to bee obserued after the spirituall sence and meanyng) are free, and cleane discharged in conscience, from any longer obseruing of suche Jewishe ceremonies.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

The.iij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he entred agayne into the Synagoge, and there was a man there, whiche had a withered hãde. And they watched him, whether he woulde heale him on the Sabboth day, that they myght accuse him. And he sayed vnto the man whiche had the withered hande. Aryse, and stande in the middes. And he sayth vnto them: whether is it lawfull to do good on the Sabboth dayes, or to do euill? to saue lyfe, or to kyll? But they helde their peace. And when he had looked rounde aboute on them with anger, mourning on the blindnesse of their hartes, he sayed to the man: stretche forth thy hand: and he stretched it out. And his hande was restored euen as whole as the other.

With suche wordes the lord Jesus as he walked on the way in the fielde, both disproued the false reprofe of the Pharisei-is, and also defended his innocẽt disciples. But to the intent we should plainly learne that none are more geuen to picke quarrelles, then suche as haue conceyued a wrong opinion of their owne holinesse, after Jesus was entred into the Synagoge, there to teache the people accordyng vnto his accustomed maner, occasion was eftsones ministred, bothe to hym to doo a good, and a charitable deede, and also to the Pharisei-is to surmyse sum matter agaynst him. For there was one there present among the people, who had (whiche was a pytifull syghte to beholde) a withered and a lame hande, and therfore carryed about with hym, a dead member that dyd hym no stede: and so muche the more miserable was he, because he was wonte with his hand labor, to fynde both himselfe and also all his poore houshold. But oh malicious and wicked Pharisei-is, quicke syghted to depraue, and finde faute with Christes benefites, but blynde to vnderstand the heauenly doctrine. By those thynges that they sawe with their corporall iyes, they knewe that he was a naturall man, and yet by his deedes and miracles that he wrought, they perceyued not his diuine power. They sawe howe the sely felowe was in a miserable case, & knewe ryght well that Jesus was mercifull, and straight waye gessed what would cum of it. And nowe are they about to seke a quarell, not agaynste the disciples, as they dyd before for pluckyng the eares of corne, but againste the Maister himselfe, who defended them. They marke whether he beeyng of nature ready to helpe all that are in distres and misery, dare in the presence and syght of the Synagoge, heale a man vpon the sabboth daye, because that yf he so do, they may accuse him of breakyng the Sabboth, for as muche as they shall haue the people to beare witnesse with them what is doẽ.

That pitifull creature desyred not Jesus to helpe hym, but yet to saye the trueth, it was a kynde of desyre for hym to cum in to the syght of mercyfull Jesu. The Lord, because he woulde haue them all to take good heede vnto the miracle that he entended to worke, called forth the man with the lame hande, and sayed: aryse, and stande in the myddes of the people. And with that he arose, and conceyued good hope that he should be made wholle. Then Jesus turned hym to the Pharisei-is, whose secrete thoughtes he was priuey vnto, and sayed vnto theym: What is your opinion whiche take vpon you to knowe the lawe? Howe, and with what thynges is the Sabboth

daye broken: with doing of good deedes, or of euill: by preseruyng of a mans lyfe, or destroying thesame. They knewe right well for what purpose he moued this capcious question. If they had answered that it had been better for the reuerence and solemnitie of the Sabboth, to suffer their neighbour to perisshe, then without scruple of conscience to helpe him in perill and necessitie, the people coulde not haue suffered so vnreasonable an answere, cleane repugnaunt to the lawe of nature. Agayne yf they had sayed he might lawfully haue dooen it, then had they brought themselfes in case that they coulde not haue charged him with any false surmise as theyr entente and purpose was to do. Therfore they thought good to holde theyr peace, and saye neuer a worde. And yet whiles they so dyd, they plainely declared vnto the people, theyr malicious willines, for that beyng prouoked by this question to amendement of lyfe, they of an obstinate mynde were still desyrous to picke quarels.

Nowe to the intent that this question shoulde the earlier be assoyled and answered to, he put furth another lyke question, asking whether there were any among them that kept the sabboth daye so hygh and holy, that if a shepe of his chaunced to fall into a dyche on that daye, woulde suffre it to perysshe, and in no wyse be so hardye as to drawe it out. There was none so blynde in that assembly, but he knewe ryght well howe muche the helth of manne ought to be regarded, before the helth and preseruacion of a shepe. Truly he sinneth, whoso maye saue that thing whiche he suffereth to perysshe.

Wherfore after the Lorde had loked for an answere, and perceyued hawe all the Phariseis lyke confederates, not because they were ignorannte of the trueth, but of an obstinate malice helde theyr peace: he loked rounde about, and behelde them, shewyng outwardly with his countenaunce howe wrothe and sorye he was, for theyr vncurable wickednes, who when they toke vpon them to be gydes of the blynde, had themselues heartes so blynded with worldely lustes, that they willyngly refused to see the moste radiant, and cleare light of veritie. For there is no blindnes more vncurable, then when a manne is bothe wittingly, & willyngly blynde. They sawe that the dumme beast might lawfully be drawen out of the hole, lest it shoulde perysshe, without anye violacion or breache of the sabboth, and woulde in no wyse see, that it was lyke lawfull to prouyde for mannes helth vpon thesame daye. Therfore, the moste gracious Lorde to teache vs that we ought not to withdrawe our selfes from helping of our neyghboure, for the vncurable frowardnes of the euill (the Phariseis contemned) turned him to the manne with the withered hande, and in the audience of the people, who were desyrous to see the ende of this matter, sayd vnto him: Stretche out thy hande. That voyce was scarcely heard: But he stretched it out sodainly chaunged, and seruing him as well to do euery thing withall, as the other whiche was neuer lame. Whome would not these reasones haue conuerted, and brought from his errour. whom would not so euident a miracle haue moued to glorifie God. But the Phariseis infected with the leuen of enuie, were therby prouoked to imagine more mischiefe.

Certes, these are those same corrupt, and alwayes vnryght iudgementes of the Phariseis. They passe more vpon a dumme beaste, then vpon a manne: more vpon the apparell, then the body: more vpon meate, then lyfe: more vpon the bodye, then the soule: more vpon worldly thinges, then heauenly thinges: more vpon the flesche, then the spirite: more vpon menne, then God. So true is it that there is no greater mischiefe in the worlde, then is peruerse and auke warde holynes. Among men it is counted to cum of a wonderfull vertue, with worde onely to restore a mans lame hande, and make it whole agayne. But it is a much greater vertue, and benefite, to restore the dead, and lame powers of the soule. What a pitifull lame hande hath he: how dead: how voide of all pitie and compassion: who when he seeth his neyghbour in necessitie, doeth not geue him his almes: when he seeth him erre and stray out of the right waye, doeth not teache and reboume him: when he seeth him oppressed with iniuries, doeth not helpe hym: when he seeth him ydle, doeth not stirre hym to good woorkes.

Suche handes had the Phariseis, who woulde rather muy the Lord, then be restored by him, vnto the helth of theyr soules. Such feble, and weake persones hath the Synagoge. But the churche of Christ receiueth neither deafe, dumme, blynde, feble, halte, nor lame. Who so is diseased, and vexed with any euils, let him cum into the syght of Jesu, and he shalbe cured. He will inspire vs with his holy spirite, and that whiche was before lame and without lyfe, shal then be made quicke, and alyue agayne. They that with true faithe wholy committe themselues vnto the Lorde, do returne home cured of theyr diseases. Contrariwise, such as trust to theyr owne righteousnesse, are made worse by other mennes benefites and good deedes. They that are puffed vp with a Pharisaicall spirite, wylleth well to none, but to themselues. Agayne suche as haue receyued the spirite of Jesu, goe about nothing els but to doo good to all men.

Ly terte. ¶ And the Phariseis departed, and strayght waye gathered a counsell (with theym that belonged to Herode) agaynst him, that they myght destroye hym. But Jesus auoyded with his disciples to the sea. And a great multitude folowed him from Galile, and from Jewry and from Jerusalem, and Idumea, & from beyond Jordane, and they that dwelled about Tyre and Sydon, a great multitude of menne, whiche (when they had heard what thinges he dyd) came vnto him.

For alsone as the Phariseis were departed out of the temple, albeit in the presence of the people, they durst not speake one worde against Jesu, yet now after they had sent for suche as belonged to Herode, to the intente theyr conspiracy should be the stronger (for none knewe better the feate howe to worke mischiefe then the Herodians) they all layed theyr heades together, & secretly debated the matter betwene themselues, howe they myght destroye Jesus, whom as they sawe ferre to excell them in myghtie dedes, so they perceyued that it was not possible for them to disproue him with wordes. The Phariseis, and suche as were of Herodes retinue, were not louers and frendes together, and yet for to destroy the author of helth, they agreed all in one. O mischieuous conceyde. O blyndnes, muche in deede to be lamented. What shall the pyney traynes of worldly deceite preuayle against him, vnto whome nothyng is vnknowen. The Lorde teaching vs by his ensample, that we ought many tymes to gyue place for a season to the vncurable obstinacie of the euill, lest through farther prouocation they becum more mischieuous, conueyed hymselfe thence, and wente aside agayne vnto the sea. The goyng aside of Jesu, is no hinderaunce to the ghospell, but an encreasyng, and furtheraunce of the same: For yf so be that the Phariseis had not driuen hym awaye, he

woulde not haue cum to the multitude of the gentiles. Therfore after that Jesus had forsaken the enuious and narrowe synagoge, and was gone vnto the sea, there came vnto hym out of euery quarter a great numbre of people, not onely out of Galile but also out of Jewry, yea and from Jerusalem selfe, from Idumea, and all the countreys lying beyond Jordane, and moreouer from suche places as bordered on the cities of Tyre and Sydon. For here was made a forshewe of the churche, that shoulde be gathered together of the Gentiles, because the synagoge did through her vnbelieffe, repell ꝑ Gospel. Out of all these places there came a great multitude of people, whiche moued by the bruite that was spred abrode of the marueylouse doctrine, and mighty dedes of Jesu, drewe the selues together, & assembled at the sea syde. The lorde, who is bothe bounteous, and riche towardes all men, secluded no man, neyther from his doctrine, nor fro receyuing the benefite of healthe. The people were so eagre and hasty, by reason of the great desyre they had to be cured of theyr sycknesses: that one of them thruste another out of place, & by force preased in where Jesus was, to the intente they might at the leaste wayes but touche hym, because that by the onely touchyng of his garmente, diseases were also cured and put away. There was no difference neyther betwene disease, nor person, with this mightie and liberall physician.

For whosoeuer they were that were troubled with any maner of euils, or infirmities, the same were furthwith deliuered therof, yf it chaunced the to go to Jesu. And the selfsame thing wee se spiritually done, euen in these dayes. How many be there out of all the nacions of the whole worlde, & what detestable vices are they subdued vnto, whiche flye vnto him for succour, & by touche of fayth are healed. Furthermore the vncleane spirites after they had sene Jesus, coulde not abide his puissaunt vertue, but fell downe at his knees and cried out, saying: Thou art euen that selfsame sonne of God, whiche was promised to cum. Jesus, who in no wise woulde suffre the wicked spirites to disclose him, strayghtly cōmaunded them to kepe silence, and in no case to disery hym before the tyme were cum. His will was to be knowen vnto the worlde, by humble and poore persons, vnto whom he said: He that heareth you, heareth me. He willeth vs to geue no credence at all to wicked spirites, no not so muche as then, when they speake the trueth. For this busynes was not done at all auentures, but God by his high wisedom, ordered euery thing with certaine degrees, and proceedinges, for our saluacion.

¶ And Jesus cōmaunded his disciples that a ship should wayte on him, because of the people, lest they should throng him. For he had healed manye: in so muche that they preased vpon him for to touche hym, as manye as had plages: and whan the vncleane spirites sawe him, they fell downe before him, and cryed, saying: thou arte the sonne of God. And straytly charged them that they should not make him knowen. The texte.

Wherfore when Jesus was thrust with the prease of people, anon he commaunded his disciples to prepare hym a ship, because he woulde not be disquieted with the disordered, & clamorous multitude, which rather desyred bodely health, then the health of theyr soules, and thronged hym rather then touched hym. Suche as confessing theyr diseases, go to Jesu with a syncere fayth, do touche hym, and are made whole. Againe they whiche troubled as yet with worldly lustes and desyres, cum rushing in with noyse & hurly burly, do greue and greatlye disquiete hym: Therfore the disciples who were wonte to be familiarly conuersaunt with the Lorde, prepared hym a ship of a more pure congregacion. Jesus is better pleased with a fewe cleane, and quiet persones, then with a great many that are troublesome and vnquiet. But yet he so gat him away, that he neuertheles taught the multitude out of the ship. When thou seest Jesus teaching oute of the shippe, vnderstand hereby a bishop, preaching to a multitude of all sortes, whiche contayneth christian nouices, and suche as haue not as yet the spirite cast out by baptisme, both of the Jewes and Gentiles. Happy and blessed are they that do spiritually touch Christ. None toucheth him so, but those whome he first toucheth. For whomsoeuer he toucheth, the same are healed of all theyr sinnes: and nowe being of vnquiet persons, made quiet, they shall be receyued into the ship of the Churche, there to haue the continuall fruicion of his companie, and alwayes to sit at his table. The shippe wherin Jesus preacheth, is very narrowe and roumles to vncleane and sinfull persons, and contrarily moste wide and large, vnto suche as are in cleane life, and purged of theyr sinnes. The Lord refused the publicacion of deuils, and auoyded the sinfull and vnquiet multitude of people. And yet these thinges euidently shewed that the kingdome of God was cum, into the whiche both worthy persons and vnworthy, were about violently to enter. Therfore he prepared himselfe certaine capitaines, whiche shoulde ayde hym in claymyng this heauenly kingdome: so many in numbre, as should be sufficient to teache so many nacions, as anon after shoulde come full and whole oute of all partes of the world, to professe the Philosophie and doctrine of the ghospell: So haue the princes of this worlde bene wont to chose them certaine head rulers and capitaines, to clayme, wynne, enlarge, gouerne and defend theyr empires & kingdomes by. It is requisite that the sayde rulers be ryghte trusty, wyse, polytique, and diligent, and in especiall that they knowe the king theyr maisters will and pleasure.

The texte. ¶ And he went vp into a mountayne, and called vnto hym whome he would, and they came vnto him. And he ordayned the twelue, that they should be with him, & that he might send them furthe to preache, and that they might haue power to heale sycknesses, and to cast out deuils And he gaue vnto Symon to name Peter. And he called James the sonne of zebede, and John James his brother, & gaue them to name Bonarges, whiche is to saye: the sonnes of thunder. And Andrewe, and Philip, and Bartholmewe, and Mathewe, and Thomas, and James the sonne of Alphe, and Thaddeus, and Symon, of Canaan, and Judas Iscariotb whiche also betrayed hym.

Therfore Jesus (who had oftimes before, because to allure manye vnto this doctrine, humbled himselfe, euen to the baseness of the common people, shewing therby that the teachers of the ghospell ought to do the lyke) Jesus, I say, now calling furth to the highnes of euangelike perfection, wente vp into a mountaine, and called vnto hym, not euery rascal of the multitude, but suche as it pleased hym, and those that he had specially chosen and sorted out before for this office and ministery. For he called not men of greate substaūce, head rulers & great estates, not priestes, Phariseis, or Scribes but poore men, vnlearned persons, & suche as were of lowe degree. For these were mete to folowe him, & to go vp to the mountayne, from whence whatsoeuer this presente worlde hathe in it worthy admiracion, is contemned: from whence as oute of a nighe place, the voyce of the father of heauen, is heard: and to be ſhort, from whence the glory of immortalitie, and euerlaſting lyfe is beholden. They that were called, obeyed, and came to Jeſus beyng on high. No man can mounte vp to this hill, except Jeſus call him. For himſelfe is the mountaine, vnto whome no man cummeth vnles he drawe hym. This that king of kynges, and Lord of rulers, did chooſe out twelue head officers and deputies, the whiche as loyall and faythfull garders of his perſonage, ſhoulde neuer depart from his perſon, to the intent, that when the affayres of the gholpell ſo required, he might ſende them out as legates for the body, to preache ſuche thinges, as they had learned of him their kyng, and publiſh abrode their princes commaundement throughout the whole worlde. Now for as muche as they were vyle fiſhers, vnlearned perſons, poore men, and ſuche as in outwarde apparaunce, ſhewed no poynte of kinglines, notwithſtanding they promyſed the kyngdome of God, our ſauiour, leſte their auethoritie ſhoulde haue ben nothing regarded, gaue them a power, that no princes of this world can geue their ambaſſaddures, the whiche power was, that they ſhoulde in the name of Jeſu, heale all maner of diſeaſes, and alſo put to flight vnclean ſpirites. The firſt of theſe legates or meſſingers was Simon, whoſe name he chaunged, and called him Cephas, the which worde implieth as muche as this latine name Petrus, that is to ſay a rocke or a ſtone, to the intent that we ſhould learne by the name ſelfe, how the chiefe groundwarke and foundacion of the doctrine of the gholpell, is an vnmouable ſtedfaſtnes of fayth. The ſecond was James the ſonne of Zebede, with his brother John. To theſe he gaue alſo newe names; and they bothe were called Boanarges, whiche is as muche to ſaye in the Syrian tongue, as the ſonnes of thunder: ſo that their name was a very prophecye to declare that they ſhoulde in tyme to cum, ſend out of that euangelike hill into all the worlde, the thunder of the preaching of the gholpell, whiche ſhoulde moue and ſtyre vp all mens myndes to the deſyre of heauenlye thinges. For lyke as thunder ſoundeth from an high: ſo the preacher of the gholpell ſoundeth, and preacheth nothing that is low and carnall, but all that he ſpeaketh, is high and heauenly. Be you penitent, the kingdome of heauen is at hande. This ſaying is a thunder clap. For allone as this worde is ſpoken, euery man feareth the daunger of lightninge: but there folowethe a ſhower, and that is: Beleue ye the gholpell, and you ſhalbe ſafe. The fourth legate and meſſinger was Andrew, brother vnto Peter, the fifth Philip, the ſixte Barthelmewe, the ſeuenthe Mathew, the eyght Thomas ſurnamed Didimus, the ninth James the ſonne of Alphe, the tenth Thaddeus, the eleuenth Symon of Canaan, the twelfth Judas Iſcarioth, the whiche betrayed the Lord. By theſe few baſely borne, vnlearned, and weake perſons, it pleaſed the Lorde to renewe the whole worlde, leſte that mannes wiſedome or power, ſhoulde chalenge any prayſe in this heauenly buſynes.

And he gaue vnto Symon to name Peter. &c.

¶ And they came into the houſe, and the people aſſembled thither agayne, ſo that they had no leaſure, ſo muche as to eate bread: and when they that belonged vnto him heard of it, they went out to laye handes vpon him, for they ſayde: he is mad. And the Scribes whiche came downe from Jeruſalem ſayed: he hath Beelzebub, and by the chiefe deuill caſteth he out deuils: and he called them vnto him, and ſayd vnto them in parables. The texte.

Theſe thinges thus doen in the mountayne, to monyſhe vs that in chooſyng the miniſtres of the gholpell we ought in no wiſe to be moued or led with low and priuate affections, Jeſus came downe with his elect head officers and they all together came into a house, as nowe the familiar frendes, and of shoulde with God. This exaumple was shewed to teache vs howe the teachers of Gods worde should not grutche to descend from theyr highnes or perfection, and abase them selues euen to the lowues of the wrake, therby to winne very many to theyr Lorde. Let vs also folow Jesus into the house, for this intent, that we may perfectly know what they ought to hope after, and whereunto to prepare theyr mindes, who take vpon them syncerely to preach the heauenly gospell. The multitude went not vp to the mountayne. For that thing pertayneth to them only, whom the lorde hath chosen out for that purpose. But assone as Christ and his disciples were cum downe lower, al the whole rablement of people resorted vnto hym again, so importunately crying and calling vpon him, partly for to heare his doctrine, and partly to be deliuered of theyr diseases, that the Apostles had no leasure so muche as to eate theyr meate. There can beno pleasaunter syghte vnto the teachers of the ghospell, then when the people being desyrous to learne, do disquiet the priestes, then when a great multitude of christen nouices sytteth round about the churche doore, then when there is not roume ynough in the Churches to receyue all maner of folkes, that resorteth vnto the bishopes sermon. After that all these dedes were through the great bruite therof, brought to his kinsefolkes and cosens eares, who knew right well thinfirmitie of his flesche, whereas for grossenesse of vnderstanding they could not suppose any thyng of his godly might and power: after, I say, they heard tell how he wandred vp and downe with a sort of rascall slouens, and vile felowes folowing him at the heles, and heard say also howe he caused muche people to folowe him, taughte newe learninges, and suche as had not bene heard before, put away diseases, and caste out deuils, they ascribed all to fury and madnesse: because being offended with the weakenesse of his body they could in no wise referre these thinges vnto his godly power. They knew his father and mother, they knew his house, and all his family: they knewe that in all other thinges he differed nothyng from other, and perceyued also howe all that was reported of hym, farre exceded the compasse of mannes power.

And ỹ people assebled together agayne. &c.

Wherfore for asmuch as they were his kinsfolkes, they thought it accordyng to mannes lawe, to be theyr parte and duetie to binde hym with cheynes, as one distraughte of his wittes and possessed with sum euill spirite. For they sayde: he is becum furious or madde. Truely they whiche contemnyng all erthly thynges, yea and like it selfe, embrace with all theyr hartes the heuenly Philosophie and doctrine, do appeare to be beside themselues to those persons, vnto whome nothing sauoureth but that whiche is earthly, and transitory. He that spendeth his liuelode to helpe the poore at theyr nede, semeth mad vnto hym who hath reposed the ayde of this presente lyfe in worldlye ryches. He that willingly for the ghospels sake vpon hope to be rewarded with euerlasting blissfulnesse, bryngeth hymselfe to banishmente, pouertie, emprisonment, tormentes, and death, is starcke mad in his opinion, who beleueth not that there is a more blissfull lyfe after this presente lyfe, ordayned for those whiche are good liuers & vertuous persons. He that setteth naught by honours geuen of princes, and the people, to the end he may purchasse himselfe glory with god in heauen, semeth out of his witte vnto suche as be mad in very dede, whiles that by bribes gyuing, by craft and deceyte, by hoke or by croke, by right or by wrong, they desyre lordshyp, souraigne rule, and dig-

nities: the whiche anon after, they muste nedes forgoe. And the Lorde suffered his kinsfolke to haue this wicked opinion of him, leste that his disciples should be offended if it chaunced them at any time afterward to heare lyke wordes of theirs. Howbeit the wickednes of the Phariseis was more manifest, who were themselues witnesses of these so great myracles that he wroughte. For his kinsfolkes erred rather of a certaine grossenesse of vnder-standing, naturally giuen vnto the common sorte, then of any obstinate malice, and wickednesse. But the Phariseis whiche came from Ierusalem (who because of the knowleage they had in the prophetes, oughte to haue knowen by such dedes and miracles as they saw hym worke, that the thing was already cum and present, whiche was promised of the same prophetes: and also for the soueraignte of their religion, by reason wherof they highlye esteemed themselues, ought to haue honoured goddes power, whiche all men proued helping and holsome) the Phariseis, I say, blasphemously spake against Iesus, saying: These dedes that he doeth, be farre aboue mannes power: howbeit he doth them not by the vertue and power of god, but hath sum mightie and notable diuell, by whose ayde he worketh the same. For he hath vndoubtedlye the spirite of Beelzebub, the maister diuell of all, & through his helpe, putteth other diuels to flight whiche are not so stong and mightie.
This shameleste and blind blasphemy because it was not onely spoken a-gainste Iesus (whome they reckened to be nothing els but a man) but against god hymselfe, whose glory they enuying at, ascribed the miracles that were wrought by his diuine power, vnto the vncleane spirite the diuel, the Lorde earnestly reproueth: and vseth also certaine parables, to thintent that all men shoulde clearly perceiue the mattier.

¶ How can Sathan drive out Sathan? And if a Realme be deuyded agaynst it selfe, that Realme can not endure. And yf a house be deuided against it selfe, that house cannot continue. And yf Sathan make insurrection against himselfe, and be deuided, he cannot continue, but hath an ende. No man can enter into a strong mannes house and take awaye his goodes, except he firste binde the strong man and then spoyle his house. Verely I saye vnto you, all synnes shalbe forgeuen vnto mens children, and blasphemies, wherwith soeuer they haue blasphemed: But he that speaketh blasphemy againste the holy goste, hathe neuer forgeuenesse, but is in daunger of eternall damnation. For they layd he hath an vncleane spirite. The texte.

Sith that the whole kyngdome of diuels, saith he, is against the kyngdome of god, how maye it then be that Sathan casteth out Sathan? except peraduenture the fiendes make battayle, and go together by the eares among themselues: as though it were like to be true, that they whiche serue one prince in his warres, do violently put one another out of his holde or fortresse. If that among mortall men, that Realme whiche is deuided through sedition and inward discorde very shortly cummeth to ruine, because like as vnitie and concorde is the chiefe keper and patronesse of a Realme, euen so discorde bringeth anye thyng to destruction be it neuer so strong, and well fortified: How then shall the kingdome of Beelzebub endure, yf one diuell cast out an other?
What speake I of a Realme? Wheras sedition raygneth, there euery thyng is so vnstable, that not so muche as a priuate house can long prosper and continewe, yf the inhabitauntes therof be at square, and one of them hate an other. Wherfore if I cast oute diuels by the helpe of Beelzebub (as you falsly report, and laye vnto my charge) then is it a sure proofe that his kyngdome shall shortely cum to ruyne and desolation: And the kyngdome of de-uilles ons destroyed, what than remayneth but that it becumme goddes kingdome? But yf I (whiche thing is mooste true) doe chase awaye deuilles, enemies to God, and mankinde, by goddes vertue and power, then is it euident that the kingdome of God is presente, whose power the kindes are compelled maugry of theyr heades, to geue place vnto. For they geue not place willingly, or because they haue couenaunted so to do. There can be no leage or couenaunt betwene god and the deuils. They warre continually together, and can in no wyse be reconciled, as it fareth when there chaunceth battayle betwixt two very doutye, and courageous Capitaines, whiche be mortall enemies, and at vtter defiance one with another. Neyther of them suffereth himselfe to be taken of the other, vnlesse it be by strength, and when he is ouerthrowen in batayle. For what courageous and bolde Capitayne will suffer his enemy to enter forcibly into his house, being righte strong, and well fortified, vnlesse his sayde enemy win the same by violent assault, and then caste him, now ouercum and banquished, into prison. By this meanes shall he rifle his house, and carye awaye with hym the spoyle and praye. If ye see the deuils crye out, and make a greate noyse when they are caste out and expelled, yf you see also many forsake theyr synnes wherewith they serued the deuill, and cum to the fredome of innocencye, and good lyuyng, why do you then take all the glory from God the conquerour, and geue it vnto Beelzebub who is conquered and ouercome? Doeth Beelzebub the enemye of mankinde chaunge his olde condicions, and now prouide for the health and preseruacion of manne? is not this a manifeste blasphemye agaynste God? Be you righte well assured of this: there is no kinde of blasphemye, but it may be pardoned of God, because that in all other blasphemies eyther ignoraunce or els the weakenesse and frayltie of mans nature, leaueth a place for the obtaynyng of forgeuenesse. But he that blasphemously hath spoken agaynst the holy goste, shall neuer obtayne pardon. That man speaketh blasphemy agaynst the holy goste, who being hardened and obstinate through malice, ascribeth those workes vnto the spirite of Beelzebub, which he seeth plainlye cannot otherwyse be done, then by the spirite of God. Errour and ignoraunce are pardonable. But howe is it possible that a purpensed malice againste the goodnesse of almightye God prouokyng vs to saluacion, shall get anye pardon at all? The weakenesse of mans bodye shall excuse suche blasphemy as is committed against the sonne of man. But to ascribe goddes power (the whiche plainelye appeareth in my dedes, to the healthe and saluacion of mankinde,) vnto Beelzebub the enemy of God, is a kynde of blasphemye, for the whiche no amendes or satisfaccion can be made.

These wordes spake Jesus vnto them, defending the fathers glorie, and nothing in the meane whyle passyng vpon his owne. He meant that theyr offence myght be better excused and borne withall, whiche had an euill opinion of hym, as his kynnesfolkes and cosens had, who sayed: He is becum furious, and prepared cheynes to binde him withall: then the wickednesse of the Pharisees, who of a certaine vnresonable malyce ascribed those woorkes vnto the spirite of Beelzebub whiche they coulde in no wyse fynde faulte with, nor say but they were worthye to proceede of God.

They yet perceyued not the diuine nature that was in Christ. For he would not as yet haue it vttered and knowen. Certes God hath oftimes by ver-

tue of his holy spirite, and the ministery of good liuers, wrought miracles, willing therfore to be glorifyed among men. Now yf any man not by reason of ignorannce, but of very malyce, do ascribe suche miracles vnto the spirite of Beelzebub, then is his peruerse and malicious naughtines past all hope of amendement. Wherfore they might haue bene excused yf they had sayde that Christe had bene nothing els but a man, or that he had bene no kyng, nor Messias. But in that they depraued and spake yll of his workes, they offended God and his holy spirite, in asmuche as the spirite of god can worke by whome soeuer it lusteth. Nowe when they sawe so many myracles meruyolously wrought, the people glorify God, so many holpen of theyr infirmities, so many delyuered of vncleane spirites, so many turne from vicyously lyuing, to a godly desyre, to lyue well and vertuously after the ghospell, and that by the preachyng of Christ: yet they obstinately sayde, he hath a deuill, and not the spirite of god.

For they sayed: he hath an vncleane spyrite.

¶ There came also his mother, and his brethren, and stode without, and sent vnto him to call hym out, and the people sate about hym, and sayed vnto him: Behold thy mother and thy brethren seke for the without. And he answered them saying: who is my mother and my brethren? and when he had loked roundc about on his disciples, whiche sate in compasse about him, he sayd: beholde my mother and my brethren. For whosoeuer doth the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother.

The texte.

After the Lorde Jesus had with these, and many other workes defended the glory of the heauenly father against the wicked blasphemy of the Phariseis, and imbrayded the Jewes with theyr obstinate, and incorrigible wickednesse, which they persecuted in notwithstanding that thorow faith alonly all synnes are lewsed and forgeuen: in the meane time there befell occasion for him also to declare that in the high ministracion of the ghospel, there ought no regarde at all to be had to humayne affections, the whiche in other matters to be muche moued by, is counted a thing prayse worthie, and right commendable. For there came vnto hym his synnefolkes in companye with his mother, who because there was no way for them to entre in for preasse of people, stoode without: and theyr voyce passyng from man to man, came vnto them that sate aboute Jesus, who shewed him howe his mother and brethren were cum, and desyred to speake with hym. There were sum, euen among his nere kinsemen, whiche had an euill opinion of him, yea and many of them supposed he had bene out of his witte. yet they thought by reason of kinred, they might lawfully at any tyme when they would, call hym oute to speake with them. The Lorde, to teache vs that the busynesse of the gospell, whiche was done by the spirite of the father for mans saluacion, and goddes glory, ought not to be left of for any affections humayne, aunswered as though he had been angrye, and in a great fume saying: who is my mother, and who are my brethren, and kinsfolkes? In this busynesse whiche I haue now in hande, I knowe ledge no fleshlye kynred. The ghospell hath a spiritual kinred of it owne, the whiche ioyneth together mens mindes with streighter bondes then doth the other theyr bodyes. And when he had loked round about on his disciples, who sate in compasse nerre hym, as he was teaching, he sayde: Behold these are my brethren, and my mother. As the ghospell maketh a new birth, so doth it also a new kinred. For whoso beleueth the gospel, and therein obeyeth the will of my heauenly father, although he be not only farder from me, as touching kinred of stocke or familie, but also ye strangest allyaunte that is, to all oure nacion, the same is my brother, the same is my sister, the same is my mother. For this kynred is not estemed after the degrees of blood, but by degrees of ỹ spirite. I acknowledge none to be of my kinred, except he be borne afresh of the heauenly father through fayth, and then as a very naturall sonne, doe obeye his father when he calleth hym to euerlasting thinges. As euery man will in moste perfecte wise perfoureme this, so shall I take him for my nerest kinseman.

The. iiij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he began againe to teache by the sea syde. And there gathered together vnto him, muche people: so greatly, that he entred into ship, and sate in the sea, and all the people was by the sea syde, on the shore.

THerefore Iesus forsoke the house which bare the figure of the Synagoge, wherin he was blaspheme of the Pharisees, and interrupted through the importunacie of his kinsfolkes: and eftsones went vnto the water, as one that desyred the large roume of the Gentiles. He is ofte times expelled of the Iewes: he maketh oftetimes a foresigne that the gospell shalbe translated from the Iewes vnto the Gentiles. For as longe as he was in the house, that is to saye, in Iewry, very fewe did sticke vnto hym, none but those onely whome he calleth his brethren, his systers and his mothers.

Many muttered agaynste hym, many rayled vpon hym, very many lay in wayte for him, & his nerest kinsfolkes of all interrupted him in his teachyng. Iesus loueth no suche houses. He loueth a multitude, not ỹ standeth in their owne conceyte, as the Pharisees did, not that vseth to backebite, and make yll report of their neyghbour, as did his kinsfolkes (who being grosse of capacitie through fleshly wisedom, interpreted his heauenly wisedom to be nothing els but fury and madnes) not that moued by worldly affections doe cause a man to leaue of any godly enterprise or busynesse as his mother, and kinsfolkes did. He loueth a multitude whiche is desyrous to heare ỹ ghospell, and word of God, & wholy hangeth vpon the relieke therof. Wherfore when the Lord Iesus was cum vnto the sea, and there taught as he did before, thither assembled again a great numbre of people, insomuch that he was constrayned through the noyse & hurly burly they made, thrusting one another out of place, to take a boate: out of the whiche, as it had bene out of a pulpet, he taught them sytting thicke together on the shore, as if it had bene in a round stage or place ordeyned for men to behold sightes & shewes in. Learne here thou that art a preacher & teacher of the gospell, what is meant by this figure. Auoyde thou so the rablement of clamorous, & vnquiet people, that yet thou cease not to do thy duetie in preachyng & teachyng of goddes word. When there is any ieopardy leste thou be thrust downe, and ouerwhelmed with ỹ trouble of worldly busynesse so that thou canst not now teache, get the into the ship of the gospell, whiche knoweth no maner of earthly ruffelyng, and out of that pulpit, thou shalte quietly teache the weake, and rude multitude. Go not farre from the shore: be nigh vnto the same, alwayes attẽperyng thy selfe as much as thou canst, vnto ỹ capacitie of the people. For they are not as yet able to folow the. Fyrst of all thou must attempre thy doctrine, according as theyr rude and ignorant myndes can awaye withall, tyll suche tyme that they haue well profited therin. For whom dyd Iesus teache out of the boate, but a rude and an vnlearned multitude of all sortes of people.

¶ And he taught them many thinges by parables, and sayed vnto them in his doctrine: Herken to, beyold there went out a sower to sow. And it fortuned as he sowed, that sum fell by the waye syde, and the fowles of the ayer came and deuoured it vp. Sum fell on stony ground, where it had not muche earth, and immediatly sprang vp because it had not depth of earth: but assone as the Sunne was vp, it caught heate, and because it had not rootynge, it widred awaye. And sum fell among thornes, and the thornes grewe vp, & choked it, and it gaue no fruite. And summe fell vpon good ground, and did yeld fruite that sprang vp, and grewe, and brought forth, sum thyrtie folde, and sum sixtie folde, and sum an hundred folde. And he sayed vnto them: he that hath eares to heare, let him heare. The texte.

He put furth vnto them parables, that is to saye, similitudes of thinges moste knowen to all menne. For this is the playnest manour of teachyng and moste conuenable for the rude, insomuche that it appeareth at the firste syght to the wyse of this worlde, a chyldishe thing, and to be laughed at.

But yet this manoure of teachyng, pleased the euerlastyng wisedome. The Philosophers made all thinges darke vnto theyr hearers, with argumentes fourmed by great arte and subtelte. The Rhethoricians enforced mennes myndes, with a meruaylous plentifulnesse of eloquent speache. The Pharisees gathered together certaine hyd misteryes, farre exceedyng the capacitie of the bulgar people. But the Lorde chose vnto hym this kynde of doctrine as plainest, and farre from all manour of playerlike ostentation, to the intent that all the glorie gotten by renewing of the worlde through the ghospell, shoulde wholy appertaine, and be ascribed to the might and power of God. Wherefore he moued them by many parables to receyue with sincere beliefe & cleane myndes, the doctrine of the ghospell: from whence the begynning of our saluation proceedeth. And because it behoued to haue this thing fast setled and printed in all theyr myndes, before he began to teache them, he commaunded them diligently to attende and heare what he would saye.

Harken (sayd he) yf anye haue eares to harken withall. It is a fable, and not a parable, except a man geue eare therunto. Neyther hath euerye manne eares to heare the parables of the ghospell, whiche are subtelly plaine, wyselye foolishe, and darkely manifest. For they hyde heauenly wisdome vnderneth a byle and folyshe couerynge. Neyther thought Iesu it sufficient yf they gaue diligent eare: he woulde also they shoulde beholde and see with theyr iyes those thinges that he purposed to saye. Blessed are they that haue both purged eares, and cleare iyes, when Iesus speaketh. Beholde, sayeth he, there went a out into the fielde a certaine sowier to sowe his sede, the whiche he had beyn pure, and good. And whiles that desyrous of plentifull increase, he caste it euery where, it chaunced that sum of it fell by the hye waye syde, whiche ioyned vnto the fyelde. And that sede, because it remained still abque grounde, by reason the way was harde and seere, the fowles that thither came anon after picked vp, and deuoured. Agayne an other portion therof, fell vpon a stonye grounde, whiche because there laye manye stones vnderneth, couered with a litle moulde or duste, sprang vp to tymely. For the warmenesse of the weather, brought it out of the grounde. And anon as the heate of the Sunne waxed once feruente, the corne that thus sprang vp before due season, season, was hurte, and parched therwith. And because it coulde not for stones take rootyng but lacked rootes to drawe moysture out of the deapth of the earthe, therwith to nourishe, and defende it againste the heate of the sunne, it widdered awaye before it came to eating. Againe an other portion of this sede fell vpon a grounde, the whiche in dede was ranke and fertyle, but yet ouergrowen with thornes, & briers. Nowe when these thornes were once growen very thick in heigth and breadth, it came to passe that the yong corne, whiche sprang therof, was smothered before it appeared in syght, not for wãt of moysture, but for lacke of ayer. And for this cause neyther had the sowier any profit hereof at all. But yet for all this, the labour of the same sowier was not vtterly frustrate, and in vaine. For there was summe of the sede that light vpon a good grounde, and therof sprang grasse, the which grewe, and wared vntill it came to it full ripenesse. And of this sede there was not one vnfruitfull grayne, notwithstanding that al yelded not like increase: For there were many eares whiche of one grayne, yelded thirtie, summe other tyme sixe, and a great sorte and hundred.

And sum fell among thornes.

The texte. ¶ And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelue, asked him of the parable, and he sayed vnto them: to you it is geuen to knowe the misteries of the kingdom of God. But vnto them that are without, all thinges happen by parables, that when they see, they may see, and not discerne, and when they heare, they maye heare, and not vnderstand, leste at any tyme they would tourne, & their synnes should be forgeuen them. And he sayd vnto the: knowe ye not this parable? And how then will ye know all other parables?

When the Lorde had spoken these wordes, then to the intent they should not be forgotten, but that euery man should searche out with himselfe the meaning of the parable, he sayed moreouer: He that hath eares to heare, let hym heare: declaring vndoubtedly hereby, that they all heard not that thing whiche they heard. Nowe when not those twelue specially chosen disciples themselues vnderstode well (by reason they were as yet raw and ignorannt) what this similitude meant: yet durst they not openlye aske hym any question. But after they had once gotten him alone, then were they bolde to desyre hym that he would vouchesafe the expounde them the misterie, and secrete meaning therof.

To you is it geuen to knowe the misteries of &c.

Then Jesus putting vs in remembraunce how all thinges are not to be disclosed to all persons, but that the doctrine of the ghospell ought to be dispensed according as time serueth, & the capacitie of the hearers can away withall, sayed vnto his disciples: The princes of this world make few priuie vnto their secretes, none but suche as are pycked felowes, & tryed persones, whome they maye safely make of their counsayle. If they haue any secrete thyng, that kepe they from the knowleage of the comminaltie. It is geuen vnto you (whom I sorted and piked out from among the commune people) to knowe the misterie or priuitie of the kyngdome of heauen, because you are familiarlye conuersaunt with me. But vnto the commune sorte, and suche as are not familiar companions of my courte, whether I doe, or speake anye thyng, all is in parables. For they neyther haue meete eares, nor meete eyes.

But vnto the that are without, al thinges. &c.

What they heare, they beleue not: what they see they depraue, and fynde faute with. And so is verified in them that the prophete sayed before shoulde cum to passe, that when they see best, yet see they not, and when they heare best, yet they heare not: because they vnderstand not. Truly he vnderstandeth not, whoso beleueth not. Nowe sinnes are not released, but to suche as beleue that sinnes are freely released by vertue of the gospell. Therfore through their vnbelefe, vnbeleefe, it cummeth to paſſe that they are not turned to God, becauſe they tourne themſelfes away from God, nor are deliuered from theyr ſynnes, becauſe they refuſe the medicine wherewith all ſynnes are healed. By theſe wordes Jeſus ſignified thoſe perſons, whome a litle before he vnderſtoode by the grounde that for ſundrye cauſes is barrayne & vnfruitfull. And to make his diſciples more apt to receyue his doctrine, he chideth them a litle for theyr dulneſſe. Doe you not yet, ſayeth he, geſſe what is ment by this parable, ſith the ſence therof is eaſie to be coniectured? And howe then will you doubte out the true meaning of all the reſt, ſince that I neyther ſpeake, nor do any thyng that hath not in it a ſignificacion of ſum ſecrete matier? I wyll expounde vnto you this parable to the intente that you maye lykewyſe accuſtome your ſelfes to ſearche out the ſecrete meanyng that lyeth hydin other.

And he ſaid vnto them: knowe ye not this, &c.

¶ The ſowier ſoweth the worde, and they wherof ſum be rehereſed to be by the way ſyde, are thoſe where the woorde is ſowen: and when they heare, Sathan cummeth immediatly, and taketh awaye the worde that was ſowen in theyr hartes: and likewiſe the other that receiue ſede into the ſtony ground, are they, whiche when they heare the worde, at once receyue it with gladneſſe, yet haue no roote in themſelues, and ſo endure but a tyme. Anon when trouble, and perſecution ariſeth for the wordes ſake, they falle immediatly. There be other alſo that receyue ſede into thornes, and thoſe are ſuche as heare the worde: & the cares of this world, and the deceipefulneſſe of riches, and the luſtes of other thinges, enter in, and choke the worde: and it is made vnfruitefull. And other there be that haue receyued ſede into a good ground, they are ſuche that heare the worde, and receyue it, ſo that one corne doth bryng forth thirtie, ſum ſixtie, ſum a hundreth. The texte.

The fielde is the worlde, wherein are very many vnmete hearers of the doctrine of the goſpell. The ſowier is the ſonne of man, who came downe frō heauen into earth. The ſede is the woorde or doctrine of the ghoſpell, by the whiche the will of God is declared vnto the worlde. His will is this, that all men diſtruſting their owne ſtrength, do truſt with all their harte & minde the promiſes of the ghoſpell: that is to ſaye, that through fayth all mens ſinnes are forgeuen: if after the trueth once knowen they geue themſelfes to the ſtudie of true vertue, and godlineſſe. Therfore by the ſeede whiche, as I ſaied, fell by the hie way ſide, they are vnderſtand, & ſignified, who ſlightly, and as mē otherwiſe occupied, heare the ghoſpell, like as they woulde heare anye fable or phantaſie of mans inuencīō. And amōg all, none heareth goddes worde with leſſe profit, then they do. For anon as they haue heard it, cummeth Satan, and putteth other thoughtes, & imaginacions in their mindes, and by that meanes plucketh out the ſede before it haue gotten roote, & be faſtened therin, ſo ỳ they do not ſo muche as remembre what they haue hearde. Nowe the ſede that is receiued into a ſtony ground, betokeneth thoſe perſones who gredely ynough heare the ghoſpel, & gladly deuoure theſame, perceyuing it to be both true, and holſum: but becauſe they ley it not vp in theyr hartes by depe cogitacion, (for they are letted ſo to do by other affeccions, which wholy poſſeſſing theyr mindes, will in no wiſe geue place vnto ỳ worde of God) they continue not in that they feruently & courageouſly began: neyther do they bring forth any fruite of euangelike or chriſtian godlineſſe, but ſuche fruite alonely as laſteth but for a ſeaſon: and all is, becauſe they haue no rootes. And ſo cummeth it to paſſe, that in proſperitie they beleue the goſpell, & as graſſe newly ſprōg vp, cauſe men to haue a good opinion of theym, that they will proue well. But aſſone as anye aduerſitie or perſecucion for the profeſſion of goddes worde doeth ariſe, and aſſaulte And lyke wiſe the other that receiue ſede, &c.

assaulte them, by and by they offended therwith, do vtterly forsake their former purpose. The seede that fell vpon the thorny grounde, signifieth those that diligently heare, and beare in mynde the wordes of the ghospell: But the loue of deceitfull riches, and the inordinate desyres of other thinges whiche allure and tolle men vnto them, with a false apparaunce of vertue, do enter into their myndes, and there dayly (as theyr propertie is) encreasyng, at the length ouergrowe the seede, so that it can neuer spring vp, and cum to be corne. Finally the sede that light vpon a good ground, betokeneth those that geue good eare vnto the Doctrine of the ghospell, and beleue all that they heare, and conuey it into the moste inwarde corners of theyr hartes, vntill that it spring vp, & bryng forth the worthie fruites of the ghospell, not euery where a lyke, but diuersely, according to the diuersytie of the soyle, and disposicion of the heauenly spirite: so that this men bringeth forth fruite meanely, that man more plentifully, an other greatest aboundaunce therof: lyke as if one grayne bryng foorthe thirtie, an other three score, and the thirde an hundred. He that bringeth forth greate plentifulnesse of fruite hath cause to render thankes vnto God almightie: there is no cause why he should stande in his owne conceipt. He that bringeth forth meane store, hath no cause to repyne at him whiche is muche happier, and bringeth forth more aboundaunce then he. For God, who is bounde and debtour to no man, doeth of his most bounteous liberalitie, geue euerye man his giftes, as it liketh him. What encrease soeuer cummeth, thesame is due vnto hym that firste sowed the grounde, and by whome what fruite soeuer is brought foorth, dayle encreaseth. My desyre is to haue all the corne grounde of the whole worlde sowen when the tyme shall cum, with this sede: and that this doctrine, whiche I nowe secretely teache you a fewe persones, may thorough your diligēt ministerie, be enlarged and spredde abrode, asmuch as may be, to ỹ intent that you also may shewe your selues, like a good grou̇d, yf you distribute that you haue receiued of me, to as many as ye can possible. For there is no fruite where with God is better pleased. Ye must therfore bee well ware, that the sede sowen in your myndes, perysshe not through forgetfulnesse, or negligence. Ye ought diligently to laye it vp in memorie that it may spring vp in due season, and bring forth fruite moste plentifully.

There be other also that, &c.

¶ And he sayed vnto them: is the candell lighted to be put vnder a Bushell? or vnder the table? is it not lighted to be put on a candlesticke? for there is nothyng so priuye that shall not be opened: neyther hath it been so secrete, but that it shall cum abrode. If any manne haue eares to heare let him heare. And he sayed vnto them: take hede what ye heare. With what measure ye meate, with the same shall other men measure vnto you agayne. And vnto you that heare, shall more be geuen. For vnto him that hath, shall it bee geuen: and from him that hath not, shall be taken awaye euen that whiche he hath.

The texte.

And because this monicion should the depelier be printed in theyr myndes, he added a parable. Thinke you not, sayed he, ỹ I will haue this thing which I doe nowe secretely commit vnto you, alwayes kept secrete. Doth a manne light a candell because to hyde thesame when it is lighted, vndernеath a bushell, or vnder the table, or elles doth he rather light it to the intent it may bee set in a candlesticke, and geue light to all that be in the house? The ghospell is the sede, whiche is therfore committed vnto you, because it maye bryng forth fruite with great encrease. I haue light the candell in you, that through your ministerie, it maye put awaye the darkenesse of the whole worlde. At this present I hyde many thinges from the multitude, because they are not as yet apt

to receiue them: and though they were, the tyme is not yet cum. But assone as the tyme shall once cum, there is nothyng so hid amongst vs that then must not be discouered, nor any thyng so secrete, that then muste not be openly preached to all men. For there must nothing keare you frō spreading abrode, or preachinge of the gospell: but all other thinges set apart, this thing onely muste you go about bothe day and night. For wo be to that man, who hath not multiplied ỹ good sede betaken vnto him: who hath hidden the light that was geuen hym. Therefore if any of you haue eares to heare, let hym heare these wordes: and when he hath hearde them, let hym beare them well in memorie. Againe lest the wordes that he spake, shoulde be forgoten, he said moreouer: Marke wel what thyng you heare, and take hede that you heare not in vaine. For you heare not vaine fables and phantasies of mans inuencion, but heauenly doctrine: whiche by your ministerie, muste be spread abrode throughout all the whole worlde. Preache you truelye the doctrine which you haue receyued, and teache nothing that is desagreable therunto. It shall auayle you muche to heare these thinges, if you retayne them well in memorie and diligently distribute to other what you heare of me. Again you heare thē to your greate perill, yf you stribē either with keare humaine, or els delited with the commodities and pleasures of this present worlde, do suppresse and kepe in, that you haue receiued. Be not ye niggish, and slouthful distributours of the doctrine that I giue you, but put it forth lauishly. For your liberalitie shal nothing diminiche, but rather encrease that, that you haue, and make it more. The treasure of gold and siluer is at the length wasted by liberalitie: but the more liberally you distribute this heauenly treasure, the greater shall the heape thereof be. Neither foloweth it that lyke as he is the poorer that giueth away his goodes vnto the neadie, so in like manour is he the wurse learned whiche distributeth the doctrine of the gospell to as manye as he can possible: but as he that carrieth light before manye, hath not therfore any whit the lesse light him selfe: euen so he that by preachynge the doctrine of the gospell, openethe a waye for all menne to cum to the knowleage of the trueth, doeth not onely not loose that light whiche he alreadye hath, but also hath a greate deale more gyuen him, to thentent he maye profite, and dooe good vnto mooe. The treasure that you haue, is none of youres, but his who gaue it you to distribute. And if you distribute it to other with large measure, he that gaue you the stocke and principall parte, will also with like measure geue you encrease therof. God loueth to haue his giftes prodigallye layed out: and here cleane contrarie to the manoure of worldlye ryches, he waxeth richest, whoso is lauichest in laying out.

And vnto you ỹ haue shall more be geue. &c.

For vnto hym ỹ hath &c.

For such is the beneficiall goodnesse of god, that he whyche gaue vs muche before, doeth in moste ample wise augmente his giftes, because he righte well perceiueth that whatsoeuer was geuen, the same is distributed and bestowed to the great vtilitie of manye. Therfore let hym whiche hath the gifte, bountuouslye distribute it, to thentente that he maye haue aboundaunce. No manne doeth well to geue goodes to hym that aboundeth with riches: but suche as be liberall in very dede, are wonte to geue vnto the poore, and neadie. Here it is cleane contrarye. For vnto hym that hathe, and hathe not that thynge whyche he hath to his owne vse and commoditie alone, but liberallye departeth therwith to other, to hym, I saye, as to a trustie distributour, shall more be gyuen: because he maye abounde, and haue muche plentye. He that hath not (suche a one is he that hydeth his treasure, and kepeth it to himselfe) the same shal not alonely be neuer a whit the richer therfore, but also that thing whiche he thought he had for his owne vse, and no mans els, shall be quite taken from him. Neither let this make you euer the slacker or worse wyllynge to distribute the gyftes of faythe, yf the people be vnkynde, and not answerable to your diligent endeuour. Your wages shall be safe for you wyth God, who the more that euery one of you hath trauayled in settyng forth the ghospell, the more bountiously will he rewarde hym in the worlde to cumme. Albeit neither shall you in the meane tyme be vtterly defeated of your rewarde, whiche are daylye more and more enriched with the riches of the ghospell.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde: so is the kyngdome of God, euen as yf a man shoulde sowe sede in the grounde, and shoulde sleape, and rise vp night and daye, and the sede should spring and growe vp while he is not aware. For the earth bringeth forth fruite of her selfe, first the blade, then the eare, after that the full corne in the eare. But when the fruite is brought forth anon he thrusteth in the sickle, because the harueste is cumme.

Moreouer the Lorde added another parable, whereby he taughte his disciples that they should care for nothing els, but onely go about with al that they might, to haue the gospell spred abrode and preached thorowe out all the whole worlde, tellyng them that harueste time shoulde once cum, whe it should please the Lorde. The kingdome of the gospel, sayeth he, is after this manour, as yf a manne shoulde sowe his sede, and caste it vpon the grounde in the daye tyme. Anon after that the sede is putte into the earth, he that sowed it, slepeth carelesse, and taketh his reste. And in the meane whilste that he is thus a slepe, the sede groweth neuertheleste both nyghte and daye, with secrete encreasynges without mennes laboure, and nowe springeth ỹ corne, and shooteth vp, hastyng vndoubtedlie of the owne accorde, and by a certaine priuie operacion of nature to bring forth fruite.

Certes nature hath her degrees, the whiche she alwayes after the sede be once sowen, kepeth of course without the husbandmannes laboure. For firste of all the sede, after it is putrified in the grou̅d, springethe vp into grasse. That is the firste hope of encrease. Then when the blade is shot vp, therunto groweth an eare, but suche a one as hathe as yet no corne in it. At the lengthe the huskes of the eare are fylled full of wheat cornes. And these thinges are so secretely wrought by the procurement of nature, that a man can not perceiue when they growe, and yet sen̅ublye perceiue that they haue growen and encreased.

Therefore when the corne is ripe, he that sowed the sede, thrusteth in his sickell to reape that is come vp, because he knowethe that harueste tyme is already come. By this darke parable, the Lorde couertly taught his disciples the begynnyng, goyng forwarde, and consummacion or perfit ende of al the whole gospell: of the whiche three partes, himselfe woulde openlye performe bothe ỹ firste, and the laste, with his visible bodie: and the other, that is to saye, the goyng forwarde, order with the inuisible grace of the holy ghoste. For that same prince sowed abrode the sede of the gospell, thorowe out all Jewry. Anon as he had so done, he slepte, firste dyinge, and then afterwarde risinge againe into euerlasting quietnesse. And thus farre foorthe springeth the sede of the gospell, whiles he that firste sowed it, is as it were a slepe: & secretly encreasethe bothe daye and night, that is to saye, both in prosperitie, and in aduersitie, what occasion casion soeuer be ministred eyther on theyr behalfe that promote and aduaunce it or els of suche as resiste the same.

For it can not be chosen but that seede muste nedes cumme vp, whiche he sowed, whose will no man resisteth. Moreouer, where as there is nothinge in this worlde vnknowen vnto hym, yet in that he suffreth the worlde to make businesse agaynste the ghospell, and his apostles to be persecuted, and slayne, he semethe vnto the faythlesse not to knowe what is here done, and to be in maner astepe, whereas in very dede, he doeth euen now by the inuisible power of his holy spirite, more effectually worke all thinges in all. He will not in visible forme retourne into the worlde, vntyll the tyme that (the ghospell beynge firste so muche enlarged, and spreade abrode, as he hath determined before, and onelye knowethe it shalbe) all men shall see hym cum agayne vnder the selfe same forme and lykenes, that he had when he ascended vp into heauen: to deuide the godly and good people from the wicked: and to laye vp the godly as good corne in the barne of euerlastyng quietnesse. Nowe howe small begynnynges the kyngdome of the gospell is spronge of, yf a manne esteme the thynge as it appereth vnto the worlde. This was, as a manne woulde saye, the grasse that sprange of the sede of the gospell, whiche the Pharisees, Scribes, Priestes, Elders, Rulers, Princes, Kynges, and Philosophiers, dyd what they coulde to oppresse and kepe vnder, that it should neuer cum vp. But whiles they stroue agaynste the streame, this sede began to be sowen in all partes of the worlde, and will not cease to growe before the worldes ende, vntill the corne be all ripe. Then the sickell of iudgemente that can not be auoyded, shall be thruste in, to the entente that when all are cut downe, it maie deliuer the tochel vnto the fire, and safely lay vp the pure wheate.

This parable although it do specially pertayne vnto Iesu, the auctour, promotour, and finisher of the kyngdome of the gospell, yet doeth it also touche both his Apostles, and their successoures, whom he willeth wholy to bende themselues hereunto, that Goddes worde maye be sowen a brode, and preached as muche as maye be. For this sede tyme lasteth euen tyl the worldes ende: and they also as helpers of Iesu Christe, be sowers, saue alonelye that they sowe not their owne sede, but suche as Christe deliuered vnto them. And because that sede is celestiall, it can in no wyse be ouerlayed or oppressed. The Pharisees also, and Philosophiers had sede of their owne, but those sedes coulde by no meanes (no not when the world fauoured them) growe and prosper, where as the seede of the heauenly doctrine, wareth euery daye more stronger then other, euen when the worlde with all the puissaunce and aydes that it hathe, assaulteth it. Therefore the Apostles do lykewyse sowe after their fashion, and for that purpose they are sente out, who by oft remouing from place to place, go about nothing els, but to haue the gospell as muche dilated and spred abrode as is possyble to be. God geueth the encrease when they be asleape. That forelayde sede hath in euerye one, euen of the Christians, his grasse, his eare, and his harnell. In hym that is a Christian nouice, the corne is yet vnperfite, & lacketh his naturall shape. In them that be lately borne agayne in Christe through baptisme, the sede is sprongen into grasse, whiche by ỹ greenes of innocencie, putteth euery manne in a hopefull hope that it wyll proue well, and come to good. Nowe when they are growen vp higher, by goyng forwarde in Christian vertue and godlynesse, then be they eared.

And when eche of them is rype after his manoure, then is he cutte downe with the sickle. This sickle is deathe, after whiche the wheate neyther waxeth more ne lesse: neyther is made worse, nor better. The barne signifieth the life celestiall.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde: whereunto shall we lyken the kyngdome of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it? It is lyke a graynе of mustarde seede, whiche when it is sowen in the earthe, is lesse than all seedes that be in the earth. When it is sowen, it groweth vp, and is greater than all herbes, and beareth greater braunches, so that the fowles of the ayre may make their nestes vnder the shadowe of it. And with many suche parables spake he the worde vnto them, after as they might heare it. but without parables spake he nothing vnto them. But when they were alone, he expounded all thinges to his disciples. And the same daye, when euen was comme, he sayed vnto them: let vs passe ouer vnto the other syde. And they lefte the people, and toke hym euen as he was in the shyp. And there were also with hym other shippes.

Furthermore, the Lorde Jesus shewed them by another parable, a figure of the successe and prosperous going forwarde of the Gospell, to the entente that they, who as then vnderstoode not his sayinges, shoulde afterwarde knowe by the ende and proofe of the matter that these thynges were not doone at all aduentures, nor by worldlye policie, but by the prouidence of Goddes wysedome. And because he woulde make his hearers to take better hede vnto his wordes, he lettynge as thoughe he had stande in doubte vnto what thynge he myght beste compare the kyngdome of heauen, sayed: Vnto what thinge shall we saye that the kyngdome of heauen is lyke? or what comparison shall I vse, whereby I maye expresse the nature and vertue therof, vnto thē that perceiue not thynge saue alonely what they see with their eyes? It is lyke (saieth he) a graine, or corne of mustarde seede, whiche (when it is sowen) is lesse then all other seedes of herbes that are sowen in the earthe: in so muche that yf a man marke the quantitie or fourme therof, he loketh not that any greate thynge shoulde come of it. But as soone as the same is once spronge vp, and gotten out of the grounde, then draweth it to the nature of a tree, waxyng harde from the stemme or stalke, and spreadyng abrode his braunches beyonde the quantitie and measure of al other herbes, in so muche that it geueth shadowe vnto the fowles, and also conuenient places for them to buylde and make their nestes in. With these and many other like parables, the Lorde Jesus shewed the rude and grosse people, a figure of the successe that the Gospell shoulde haue, attemperynge his wordes vnto their capacities. He spake nothyng vnto them at that tyme but in darke parables, because they were not as then receyueable of playne communication. For yf he had sayed, that he shoulde shortely haue beene slayne of the Jewes, but woulde anon after reliue, and spreade abrode his glorye throughoute all the worlde, so that he, who then seemed lowest, and most abiecte of all persons, shoulde be right well knowen to be the souerayne gouernoure of the whole worlde, and that no manne, were he neuer so hyghe in dignitie, shoulde fynde any quietnesse, or sure harborowe, vnlesse he fledde for succoure vnder nethe hys boughes or braunches: yf he had, I saye, spoken thus plainelye vnto them, not one of them all woulde haue abydē hys woordes, nor geuen anye credence thereunto. And yet was it verye expedient for them, as it were by a dreame, to remember these thynges: because afterwarde the thynge selfe shoulde teache them what was meante by the same parables. He shewed them in secrete communication, the secrete vnderstandynge of euerye parable

Ye is lyke a graine of mustarde seede.

And vi many suche parables. &c.

that he spake vnto them. Thus was that daye spente. When it was nowe almoste nyghte, he commaunded his disciples to rowe hym ouer to the other syde of the water.

Bycause faythe towardes Christe, and by Christe to Godwarde, is the originall cause of the encrease of the gospell: the Lorde perceiuing that his disciples (who were as yet but rude, and weaklynges,) dyd geue no credence vnto his doctrine, attempted many wayes to bryngе forth in them, and stablishe this fayth. Whensoeuer nyght, that is to saye, the storme of worldlye trouble, or aduersities cummethe vpon vs, then haue we chiefelye nede of a stronge and stedfaste faith towardes Christe. Therefore the disciples obeyed his commaundemente, and so after the people, (who coulde not folowe him) were sente awaye, they, accompanyed with certayne other boates, beganne to rowe hym ouer to the farther syde, in the same shippe that he then taughte and preached in. The Apostles carye ouer Jesus, whensoeuer they goe from place to place, to sette forthe and preache the Ghospell. He knewe righte well that against suche as so do, and be ministers of Goddes worde, there shoulde in tyme to cum be much sore businesse and trowble stirred vp, by them that loue better the vanities of this worlde, thē those thynges that appertayne to euerlastinge saluacion.

But when they were alone. &c.

The texte.

And there arose a greate storme of wynde, and the waues dashed into the shyp, so that it was now full, and he was in the sterne a slepe on a pillowe, and they awaked hym, and said vnto hym: master, carest thou not that we perishe? and he rose vp, and rebuked the wynde, and sayde vnto the sea: peace, be still: and the wind ceased, and there folowed a great calme. And he sayde vnto them: why are ye so fearefull? how happenethe it that ye haue no fayth? And they feared exceadyngly, and sayde one to another, who is this? For bothe wynde, and sea obey hym.

Wherfore to harten, and strengthen his disciples agaynste suche persecutours, and to teache them also, that no power, be it neuer so cruel and terrible, oughte to be feared of those that with full harte and mynde put theyr affiaūce in the lorde Jesu, he suffered them to be in daunger, euen to desperacion. For after they had sayled farre from the shore, there sodainely arose a greate storme of wyndes, whiche set the water in suche a rage, that the waues enforced by the violence of the tempeste, dashed into the shyppe, so that they were then in great daunger, leste the shyppe already filled with the great sourges of the sea, woulde haue soncken. In the meane whyle Jesus layed his heade vpon a pillowe, and slept in the shyp. This was no fayned slepe: he slepte in verye dede, beyng wearyed with trauayle, and watchynges, as one that had a very naturall bodye of man, subiecte to all suche passions as oures are subiect vnto. But he was not ignorant what would betyde. He wyste well there would a tempest arise. He knewe that the Apostles would be sore afrayed, and waken him out of his slepe. He could not more effectuallye teache them, that nothyng is to be dread of those that stedfastly beleue in him. The disciples therefore pinched hym as he slepte, and when they had awakened hym, sayde: Maister slepeste thou so soundely whyle we perishe? and thynkest thou that it maketh no matter to the, yf we be drowned? It was an argumente of faythe, that when they were in daunger of death, they fled vnto Jesu for succour: But of an vnperfite faythe, for as muche as they beleued that they were not in sufficiente safegarde, as long as the Lord was aslepe. When Jesus was wakened, bicause he woulde by dede declare that he was the Lorde of all the elementes. he rebuked the wyndes, and commaunded them to cease. Then he saide vnto the sea: peace, be still. These two elementes whiche are obediente to no mortall man, knewe the voyce of theyr maker. And by and by the wynde alayed, the waues and fourges of the water left their ragyng, and fell downe, and there folowed a greate calme. Then the Lorde tourned hym vnto hys disciples, and rebuked them for their vnbeleefe. Why (q he) are ye so afrayed? haue you not yet, after ỳ you haue sene me worke so many miracles, confydence in me? Nowe when the disciples, and the other that were wyth hym in the shyppe, sawe thys straunge wonder, how the sea beyng a dumme, and an vnruly element, and the wynde likewyse a violente elemente, forthwith as he had rebuked thē, ceased from further ragyng, and were still: perceiuyng that it was a thinge passyng the state, and condicion of manne, sayde one of them to another. Who is this whose cōmaundementes not onely diseases, and the diuils, but also the dumme elementis obey vnto.

He that was ỳ sone of man (as touchyng the naturall appetites of man) had not in this worlde where to reste his head. For euē dying on the crosse whē he hadde nothynge to laye his head on, he caste it downe, and so yelded vp the Ghoste: But here in the shyp he dyd not onelye take his reste, but also layed a pilowe vnder nethe his heade, and slepte theron: and anon a storme arose, because we shoulde knowe what great daunger hangethe ouer the churche, so oft as Christ sleapeth in vs. He slepethe verily, when the shepeheardes & pastours of Christes flocke, delited wyth the cōmodities, and pleasures of this worlde, are in a sounde slepe, so that yf a man pynche them, or crye vpon them neuer so muche, yet can they not be wakened. Howe fast aslepe are those Bysshops, who beynge altogether geuen vnto sensualitie, dronken wyth an vnlefull desyre to rule and playe the lordes, and wholy set to heape vp money, neyther take anye care for the flocke to them committed, nor haue anye remembraunce of theyr owne soule health, nor yet are moued any whit at all with the cōmon perill, to awake out of theyr slepe, and thinke thus with themselues. What do I mad man that I am? The Lordes flocke is cōmitted vnto me to be fed: and shortely muste I come to ỳ iudgyng seate of ỳ euerlasting iudge, who shed his precious bloud for these shepe, whiche he put me in truste withall. What answere shall I than make hym? I shoulde with ensample of good liuyng haue caryed lighte before them to euerlastynge saluacion: and by my naughtye sinnefull lyfe, I haue bene theyr guyde to hell, and damnacion. I shoulde haue fedde them with the doctrine of ỳ gospel, and dyd not feede them a whit, but plucked of their woolle by the rootes: but spoyled them of that they hadde, but slewe them. In stede of a father, I behaued my selfe lyke a tirauat, for a Bysshope, I was a woolfe and a robber. And in the meane whyle the tempest disordereth all thynges, and maketh a greate confusion. Jesus, who is the true heardman of the churches and congregacions, slepethe dissemblynge the matter, and sufferyng the storme to aryse: but he slepeth so, that he streighte wayes awakethe at the crye, and calling of his. The shyppe that Christe (as pertainynge to the body) is caried in, is one: but she hath mo accompanyinge her. There is one catholike or vniuersall churche, and agayne there be manye churches. Christ is lykewyse in them all: And as manye as do cleaue vnto the same heade, be one congregacion. No shyp is drowned that foloweth Christe: Be they neuer so muche tossed with ỹ waues of the water, neuer so much in ieopardie of drowning, yet haue they at the length good arriuall, and cum safe vnto the hauen. But all this while, the tempeste and nyghte do plainly teache vs that we can haue no maner of ayde and succour of our owne strengthe, and that all hope of saluacion is in Christ onely, if a man with full hart and minde put his trust in him. The deuel causeth oftetymes suche tempestes priuately to aryse in euery mannes soule. For after that the nighte doth once darken our myndes wyth errours: after the light of faith doth faile, and the strength of the euangelike spirite, be (as ye would saye) a slepe, & laid to rest in vs: then do the windes of naughtye lustes arise, and greatly disturbe the calme of the mynde. The soule selfe is now in great hasarde: there is no helpe, neyther in rowing nor in sayles. There is no remedie, but it muste nedes perishe and go to wracke, yf Christe be not wakened out of his slepe by feruente and importune prayers. If he heare not streight waies when he is called on, yet cease thou not, but pricke, and pinche hym tyll he be awake. By him onely the calme and quietnes of the mind, shall in continent be restored.

¶ The. v. Chapter.

¶ And they came ouer to the other side of the sea, into the countrey of the Gadarenites: and when he was cum out of the shyppe, immediatly there mette hym out of the graues a man possessed of an vncleane spirite, whiche had his abidyng amõg ỹ graues, & no man coulde bynde hym: no not with chaines, because that when he was often bounde with fetters, and chaynes, he plucked the chaynes asunder, and brake the fetters in pieces, neyther coulde any man tame hym. And alwayes nyght and daye he was in the mountaynes and in the graues, crying, and beating hymself with stones. But when he had spyed Jesus a far of, he ranne and worshypped hym, and cryed with a loude voyce, and sayed: what haue I to do with the Jesus thou sonne of the moste hyghest God? I require the in the name of God, that thou tourmente me not. For he sayed vnto hym: come oute of the man thou foule spirite. And he asked hym, what is thy name? And he aunswered, and sayed vnto hym: my name is Legion, for we are many. And he prayed hym instauntlye that he woulde not sende them awaye oute of the countrey. The texte.

So this tẽpest hath taughte vs that all trouble and businesse whatsoeuer the worlde woulde stirre vp agaynst the gospell, oughte by the ayde of Christe to be suffered with constãt courage of mynde: and that such trouble should at one tyme or another, be turned into greatest tranquillitie and quietnes: So folowed there in cõtinent a figure, whereby was signified ỹ there should be in summe partes of the worlde so vplandishe and cruell people, that they woulde at the fyrste bruute by reason of their naturall crueltie, refuse and abhorre the doctrine of the gospell: and yet should it cum to passe in processe of tyme, that they also shoulde waxe ientle or cyuille, and louingly receiue the swete yoke of the lorde after they once knewe it. Wherefore assone as this storme was alayed, whyche fygured the storme of persecucion that princes should stirre vp raging againste the gospell, Jesus, and suche as accompanied hym, arriued on the other side of the water.

That countrey was called the countrey of the Gerasites of a famous towne of Arabie, named Gerasa, ioynynge vnto mounte Galaad, in the tribe of Ma-nasse, not farre fro the lacke or sea of Tiberias. For nowe the Lorde Jesus maketh a forshewe of the brutishe, and cruell barbarousnesse of certayne nacions, of whome it maye be doubted, whether they deserue to haue the name of men, or no: yet is there none so fierse and saluage crueltie that we ought to despaire of. Wherfore after that Jesus was cummen out of the shyppe, and entred into this countrey, by and by he sawe a sight, whiche playnly declared the maners, and naturall disposicion of that nacion. For when he was hearde cummyng, there starte out a certayne felowe, vexed with a spirite of passinge vncleannesse, and crueltie. This wretched creature wolde not come where as any resorte of people was, but liued in solitarye places, lurkynge, and hydynge hymselfe in dead mennes tumbes that were by the highe waye syde. Neyther was there any that assayed any more to bynde hym, because he had bene ofte tymes bounde before, and alwayes plucked the cheines asunder, and brake the fetters in pieces.

And when he was cum oute of the ship. &c.

Neyther was there anye violence that could so reclaime hym, but that he beyng in case not able to rule himselfe, would gad abrode at libertie, whithersoeuer the wicked finde enforced him to go. For this cause he was vnbound, and wandered vp and downe both night and daye among dead mens tumbes, and in wylde mountaynes, cryyng and beatyng himself with stones. Nowe yf anye reken this to be (as it is in verye dede) a miserable, and a terrible sighte, lette him consider with hymselfe, howe muche more miserable a sighte in the iyes of almighty god, is he that hath nothyng els of a man, but the name onely: He, I say, that is marde and caste awaye through riottous liuinge, woode vpon harlottes, madde vpon the dise, and beside himselfe by reason of dronkennes, a brauler, a robber or praye taker, a breaker of the peace, a violent felowe, suche a one as can neyther be restrayned by Goddes lawe, ne mannes: neyther let, and brideled from his sensuall wilfulnes by any shame, reuerence, or feare: bolde to doo what hym lyketh: who for small wages is hired to go to what warfare soeuer it be, to slay and murder suche as he knowethe not and neuer dyd hym harme, to burne villages and good townes, to rifle churches, and fynallye to destroye all that euer holy is, or not holy. Put hereunto periuries, blasphemyes, and incestes, with the whiche vices suche leude ruffians as are of this sorte, be well acquainted. Put hereto treasons and poysonynges, with the practise of arte Magike or Sorcerye, and then shalte thou euidently perceiue howe muche lesse was the furye of the man thus vexed with the deuill, then of this wretched and vnthriftie caytife. But what? Ought we to despayre of suche a one? No truely, yf it maye chaunce him at anye tyme to see Jesu. He is sene by faith. For when the same wretched felowe at the noyse that the straungers made, was come out of his denn, violently to assault them according vnto his accustomed maner, anon as he had afarre of espyed Jesu, he drawen with an heauenly power, and sodaynly chaunged, ranne vnto hym, and worshypped him. And straight wayes the fiende began to cry with a loude voyce by the mannes mouth, and saye: What hast thou to do with me Jesu the sonne of the highest God? I require thee by the name of God, that thou tourmente me not. For Jesus voyce was vnto that deuill, a tourmente, because he sayde: Thou foule spirite departe out of the man. So greate was the malice of the deuill, that it was the greatest tourmente to him that might be, if he nowe wolde no lenger be suffered to vexe and tourment the sely wretche. He felt Jesus

For he fled vnto hym &c.

sus boyce effectuall, and almyghty, the whyche he was constrayned to obeye vnto, whether he would or no.

Nowe I reporte me to you, whether there be not lyke affection of mynde in suche as be extremely malicious persones, who haue a great delyght to do other menne harme, yea, thoughe it be to their owne displeasure. And yf they be restrayned from theyr wilfull desyre, so that they can not be suffered to doo what mischiefe they woulde, then are they sore vexed in mynde. Jesus demaunded of the foule spirite what was his name. The spirite made answere: my name is Legion, because we be manye. Thou knowest (good reader) that thys worde Legion, is a worde or terme of warre, whiche implyeth a foule rablement of ruffions confedered together, to destroye mē. But no power of a multitude preuayleth agaynst the might of Jesus. He as easelye puttethe a Legion to flight, as one man. Then that capitayne deuill who spake for all the reste, greatly besought Jesus, whome he acknowledged to be his conquerour, that he woulde not cleane exile hym out of that countreye. O peruerse malice of the deuil. He desyreth not forgeuenes, nor any other benefite, whereby he maye be in better case. He counteth it a pleasure and benefite, if he maye be suffered there to continewe, whereas moste occasion is for hym to do harme: Euen as thoughe a sorte of snaphaunses set all on mischiefe, enforced by a greater power of the prince, and commaunded to breake garison, or forsake theyr hold and fortresse, would make this petition: We desire no wages, but only that your grace will suffer vs to raunge abrode in the countrey, and robbe and reaue at our owne peryll.

But ther was there nigh vnto the mountaynes, a great heard of swyne feedyng. and al the deuilles besought hym, saying: Sende vs into the beardes of swyne, that we maye enter into them. And anon Jesu gaue them leaue, and the vncleane spirites went out, and entred into the swyne. And the beard was caryed headling into the sea. They were almoste two. M. and were drowned in the sea. And the swineheardes fled, and tolde it in the cite, and in the fieldes. And they wente out for to see what had happened and came to Jesus, and sawe him that was vexed with the fynd, and had the Legion, sit both clothed and in his right mynde and they were afraped: and they that sawe it told them howe it happened to hym that was possessed with the deuill, and also of the swine. And they began to praye hym that he would depart out of theyr coast. The text.

When that vnto this requeste and petition of the deuill, Jesus made no answere, there was not farre of a great heard of swine, nighe vnto the mountayne feedynge in the fieldes. Thou knowest here good reader, the beaste that was abhorred of all the righte Jewes, and wherewith the Gentiles, a people geuen to Idolatrye, were chefly delyted. Therefore the deuils desyred that they myghte be suffred at the leaste wyse to enter into the swyne: And yf we maye not (saye they) destroy the man whom thou delyuerest from vs, yet geue vs leaue sumwhat to wreake oure malice by destroyinge of the vncleane beastes. That Jesus graunted them without any stycking, who cared not for the safegard and preseruacion of swyne, but of men: teaching vs hereby that for to saue euen but one man, we ought not to passe vpon the losse of other worldly thynges, be it neuer so greate. The Legion of the vncleane spirites, forsoke the man, who remayned to be purified with the spirite of Christe, and went into the heard of swyne, whiche were forthwith caryed headlong with greate violence, doune the stepe hill into the lake or sea, and there drowned. The swyne were almoste twoe thousande in number. Lette menne beware that they bee

not founde like vnto swyne. For into suche soules the diuels are ryght glad to enter. Nowe the swyneheardes after they had sene this wonderfull facte, dyd not helpe theyr swyne, but fled awaye for feare into the nexte citie, and into the countrey there aboute, and shewed euery body what they had sene. That good shepeheard helpethe hys flocke being in ieopardye. But when the pastoures or shepeheardes are themselues as bad as theyr naughty flocke that is paste all grace and goodnes, then both the flocke goeth to wrecke and vtterly perisheth and the shepeheardes do nothyng els but flye awaye for feare. Assone as this thynge was noysed abrode, the people came runnyng thicke and threfolde oute of the toune and countrey, desyrous to see with theyr iyes, what they had heard before with theyr eares. For all semed vnto them incredible that the swyneheardes had tolde them. Wherfore they came themselues vnto Jesu, and sawe the manne whome they all knewe, before vexed with a spirite of exceding cruelnes, and wont by reason of his great fury and madnes, to braste al his chaynes and fetters in pieces, to rent and teare a soundre his clothes, to beate hymselfe with stones, violentlye to assaulte those that passed by, and to make all the places there aboute to ryng with his furious crying, and roring: sawe him, I say, then sit quietly at Jesus feete both clothed, and in his right mynde. Nowe they whiche were presente, and sawe what was doue, recounted to suche as came thyther, the whole history of all that befel, euen from the beginning, both howe the Legion of diuels was caste out of the man, and also how the hogges were drowned in the water. Wherfore when they (the mattier now diligently examined and tried out) were throughlye persuaded that all was of truthe which had bene tolde them of the swyne heardes, then were they afraied, and beganne to desyre Jesu to departe out of theyr quarters. This wicked, and grosse nacion, knew not Jesu throughly. They perceyued his power, but they marked not his goodnes, manifestlye declared in that he restored this man to his ryght mynde: and they were a greate deale more moued in theyr myndes for the losse of theyr swyne, then glad of the mannes health and recouery. They feared their Oxen, theyr Asses, and theyr hogges, and toke great care for the bely, and none at al for the soule. And yet for al that, it is a certayne begynnyng of saluacion, sum what to stande in dreade of Gods power.

The texte. And when he was come into the shyp, he that had the deuyll, prayed hym that he might be with hym, howbeit Jesus would not suffer him, but sayde vnto hym: go to thyne owne howse and to thy frendes, and shewe them howe greate thynges the lorde hathe done for the and how he hath compassion on the. And he departed, and beganne to publishe in the .x. Cyties, howe great thynges Jesus had done for him, and all men dyd meruayle.

The Lorde, teachyng vs by dede, that the roses of Goddes worde and the gospell oughte not in anye wyse to be caste vnto hogges, reculed vnto the water syde and toke shyppe. In the meane whyle the felowe whyche was deliuered from the deuil, perceiuing the authour of his health to departe, beganne to desyre hym that he might be one of his trayne. The Lordes pleasure was that he shoulde rather be a publisher of his mercie, and goodnes, then one that should accompany him in his iourneys, because it was expediente for the soule health of many that he should so be. Get the hence rather (q he) vnto thy house and to thy kynsfolkes and acquayntaunce, and shewe them howe muche god hathe done for the, and howe he toke compassion vpon the when all menne pitied the, but yet demed the paste all remedye. That countreye conteyned in it ten cities, and therfore was called in the Greke language, Decapolis. The man obeying the commaundemente of Jesu, departed, and tolde in all those cities bothe what case he was once in, and in what case he was nowe made againe throughe the benefite of Jesus. Euery man beleued that his wordes were true, by reason very many of the same countrey knewe hym before, and also because he shewed by his outwarde behauiour, that he was by the power of Jesu, perfitely restored vnto his ryght minde. He was not ashamed to speake of his olde calamities, whyles he wente aboute to set furth Gods glory.

Heare these thinges thou worshypper of Idols, thou whoremongery thou dyser, thou ryotous folowe, thou waster, thou extorcioner, thou robber, thou house burner, thou warryer, thou poysoner, thou murtherer: dispayre not: onlye runne vnto Jesus. Consider not the multitude & greuousnes of thine offences: only regarde that Jesus is he that came to saue all men, and is able to dooe all thynges with a becke. When the legion of deuiles hathe forsaken the, when thou arte restored to thy ryght mynde againe, then blase, especially amonge thy frendes, and acquaintaunce, the great mercy of God towardes the. Be not ashamed to confesse thy former lyfe. For this also shall make greately for the aduaūcyng and settyng furth of the mercy of Jesu, if it be knowen to as many as maye be possible, howe abominably thou lyuedest before. knowledge and confesse what thou haste bene: And where as thou arte nowe sodainly chaunged and become another manne, ascribe it not vnto thyne owne deseruinges, but vnto the free mercye of God: who taketh mercy and compassion vpon whomsoeuer it pleaseth hym, for as muche as he is debtour and bounde to no manne.

¶ And when Jesus was cum ouer agayne by shyppe vnto the other syde, muche people gathered vnto him, and he was nighe vnto the sea: and beholde there came one of the rulers of the Synagoge, whose name was Jairus: and when he sawe hym, he fell doune at his fete, and besought hym greatly, saying: my daughter lieth at poincte of deathe. I praye the cum and laye thy hande on her, that she maye be safe, and liue. And he wente with him, and muche people folowed hym, and thronged him. The text.

When this seede (as a man maye call it) was sowen among the Gerasites, ỳ Lord Jesus passed eftsones ỳ water. That he so oftetimes chaūgeth place maketh for the aduauncyng of the gospell: and the varietie of miracles monisheth vs how the teacher of the gospell ought busyly to do his deuoure whēsoeuer occasion serueth, to bryng whōsoeuer he can to saluacion. Nowe when he was brought ouer to ỳ other side, thither resorted afreshe, a great multitude of people. For like as the lodestone draweth vnto it yron, so dothe benefycence & well doing allure all men vnto her. Whiles the Lorde was by the water side, there came vnto hym one of ỳ rulers of ỳ Synagoge, called Jairus. This Jairus moued by the fame of Jesu, came thither wt the reste of the multitude. For there was a thing which greued his heart very sore, wherein he muche desyred ỳ presence of Jesu. Therefore whēne sawe ỳ Jesus was brought againe vnto ỳ shore, & set alād, he was right ioyous, & (as they are euer lowly & crouchinge whiche greatly desyre any thyng) although he were a ruler of the Synagoge, that is, a primate among stately felowes, yet fell he downe at the fete of Jesu, and besought hym saying: Lorde, my daughter a mayden of twelue yere olde, in whome I repose the chiefeste solace of myne olde age, is in as greate perill of lyfe as may be, & lyeth nowe at the mercy of God: cumme, and laye thy hāde vpon vpon her, that thorough thy touchyng the maye be safe, and lyue. Jesus per-

And he wist with hym. ceyuing well by his wordes how weake his fayth was as yet, in asmuch as he made mencion of the extreme ieoperdye that she was in, as thoughe he had not bene able to relieue her, if she had bene deade in deede: and in that he required his presence, and also the touching of his hande, as thoughe he couldenot beeynge absente, yea, and wyth a becke make whole whomsoeuer hym liste: Jesus, I saye, promised hym to come, and so folowed hym goynge homewarde a good pace: geuynge thereby an ensample howe readye the pastour of Christes flocke oughte to be in procurynge soule health to al men, bothe to Grekes, and to barbarous nacions, to them whiche are descended of noble parentage, and of base linage, to riche, and to poore, to learned and to vnlearned. And as he wente, there was occasion geuen him whereby to reforme the vnperfite faithe of the sayde ruler of the synagoge, & that by the ensample of a woman, whiche the lesse that she knewe Christe by the lawe, the more was she to be borne with all, and excused of her vnbeleefe. There folowed Jesus as he wente to the ruler of the synagoges house, a meruelious greate multitude of people, partlye bicause it was not possible to disseuer them from him, and partly to behold the miracle whiche shoulde be wrought. The nobilitie of the supter made them more desirous to beholde. Wherefore as eche of them preased to be nexte Jesu, so was he payned with the throngyng of the people.

The texte. ¶ And there was a certayne woman whiche had bene diseased of an yssue of blonde, xii. yeares, and had suffered many thynges of many physicians, and had spente all that she had, and felte none amendement at all, but rather was worse and worse. When she had hearde of Jesus, she came in the prease behynde hym and touched his garmente. For she sayde: if I maye but touche his clothes, I shalbe whole. And strayght way the fountayne of her blond was dried vp, & she felte in her body that she was healed of that plage.

In this prease was there a woman that had a fylthy, a shamefull, and also an vncurable disease, and had bene sycke thereof, the space of .xii. yere (for it was the bluddye flyxe) whiche was in so muche the worse takynge, because whyles she put great hope of recouery in Physycians, that made her manye faire promises, & whyles, disapoynted of one, she wente vnto another for boote that put her in more assuraunce of healthe, and from hym agayne to another, beyng continually fed with good hope, and comfortable wordes, she spente all that euer she had vpon them: and yet for all this so lytle was she holpen by Physike, that she was in muche worse case then she shoulde haue bene if it had not chaunced her to medle with the Phisicians at all, who whyles they made manye large promises, and payned the poore wretche with their serviceable diligence, bothe encreased her olde griefe, and also added thereunto a newe, that is to saye, vnto her bloudy flyxe, pouertie. Suche vndoubtedly are the commune sorte of those that profesle humaine medicine. But it is oft tymes seene that healthe is gotten by vtter despairing of healthe. After she began once to distruste the Physicians, and they perceiuinge that she had nothynge lefte to geue them, had now at the length geuen sentence that there was no hope of her recouery, than began she to bee rerer vnto health, then she was before. For God helpethe none more wyllyngly then suche a one as is cleane destitute and forsaken of all worldly succours. This woman hearde but tell of Jesu, and furthwith she conceyued a wonderful greate confydence of hym, and preased in among the thyckest of the multitude. The bashefulnes of womanhode, and the kylthynes of her diſeaſe, woulde not ſuffer her to dooe as the ruler of the ſynagoge dyd, but ſhe came behynde Jeſu, and at the lengthe when ſhe had wyth muche a do wounde her ſelfe out of the preaſe of people, whiche thruſte, and thronged one another, then touched ſhe hys garmente. For ſhe had ſuche confydence in hym, that ſhe ſayde ſecretelye to her ſelfe in this wiſe.

If I maye touche but the onelye hemme of hys garmente, I ſhalbe deliuered of my diſeaſe. When all the Phiſicians whiche toke muche money to put her to payne had geuen her ouer, ſhe happened to mete with another Phyſician, who ſodaynelye reſtored her to perfit health, and that for naughte. She was not deceyued in her truſte. For aſſone as ſhe touched the Lordes garmente, the yſſue of bloude ſtaunched, the humor beeynge ſodaynlye corrected, whyche was wonte to yſſue, and well out, as it hadde bene out of a quicke ſpringe. Moreouer ſhe felte nowe agayne the ſelfe ſame ſtrengthe and luſtines in all her bodye, that ſhe was wonte to haue before, or euer ſhe began to be ſycke of this diſeaſe.

Lette ſuche as be effeminate perſones, and made womanly be throughe eaſe, and worldely delicacies or pleaſures, haue recourſe no whitherels for ſuccoure, ſaue vnto Jeſu. If they truſte to Philoſophiers, lawyers, arte Magike, or Phariſaicall ceremonies, then ſhall they, after bothe tyme and wyttes conſumed herein, dode nothynge els but encreaſe theyr diſeaſe, and wynne pouertie: except peraduenture ſuche pouertie be leſſe grieuous vnto them by reaſon that age is nowe ſpente, and wytte cleane decayed and gone.

The woman highly reioyced when ſhe had, as it were, ſtollen this benefite of Chriſte, whom ſhe thoughte mighte (as a man) be deceyued, and kepte from the knowledge of the thynge that was done: or els yf he could not ſo be, then truſted ſhe verelye that he woulde of his goodnes, pardon the chamefaſtnes of womanhood.

¶ And Jeſus immediatly feleyng in hymſelfe that vertue proceded from hym, turned hym aboute in the preaſe, and ſayed: who touched my clothes? And his diſciples ſayde vnto hym: thou ſeeſt the people thruſte the, and aſkeſt thou, who dyd touche me? And he loked rounde about for to ſee her that had doen this thynge: but the woman fearing, and trembling (knowynge what was done within her) came, and fell downe before hym, and gaue hym all the truthe, and he ſayed vnto her: doughter thy faith hathe ſaued the, go in peace, and be whole of thy plage. The text.

The Lorde hauyng more regarde to Gods glory, and the healthe of a greate manye, than to the chamefaſtnes of one woman, knowynge righte well that he was touched, and that the woman had receyued the benefite of health therby, turned hym to the multitude preſſynge behynde hym, and ſayed: who touched my clothes? The diſciples thynkynge nothyng vpon this that befell, anſwerede the lorde agayne, and ſayde: Thou ſeeſt a greate preaſe of people thruſting and thongyng the on euery ſyde, and yet aſkeſt thou what touched the? They that reade the goſpell do touche Chriſte. Suche as do conſecrate or receyue hys holy bodye do the ſame: but al are not healed whiche do touche hym. The woman alone that touched hym with a ſtronge faythe was healed. Jeſus requited no other reward for his benefite, but onelye a confeſſion of the diſeaſe, and a knowledge of Gods mercy. Therfore when the woman conſtrayned by chamefaſtnes, helde her peace, truſtynge that ſhe mighte ſtyl haue bene vnknowen, he loked rounde aboute on the people, as thoughe he had bene deſirous to knowe her that had touched hym. This lokyng about of Jeſus, was a geſture of hym that courteously requyred a confession of the benefite receiued. He woulde not better her by name, leste he shoulde haue semed to haue hit her in the teethe, wyth the good turne he dyd her. The woman, of a womanlye shamefastenesse, and not of any vnthankfullnesse, helde her peace. Then was there a prycke or prouoca-cion geuen, to make her to put awaye that vnprofitable shamefastenes, and to wrynge out of her an holsome confession. For what is not the loke of Jesu able to doo? In this wyse he beheld Peter, and furth with he came vnto hymselfe agayne. The woman knowyng in what case she came vnto Jesu, and what greate benefite she had receyued of hym, durste not dissemble the matter, but all womanlye bashefulnes layde aparte, came fearynge, and tremblinge before hym. For she stode in greate dreade, leste he woulde haue rebuked her for her lewdnes.

Then fell she downe at his knees, and in the audience of them all, shewed the whole matter as it was in euery poynte without anye dissimulacion or colouryng: howe longe the disease had hanged vpon her, howe physicke had bene practysed in vayne, howe she touched his garmente priuily, and what a greate truste she had conceyued of him. The lorde Jesus loueth suche a confession as causethe the synner to knowe himselfe, and to geue all the glorye vnto God for the restitucion of his healthe, and synally that maketh him to prouoke many mo to haue like fayth: puttyng vs in remembraunce, that of him onelye cummeth free healthe and saluacion, and that it makethe no matter howe manye, and howe abominable mannes enormities be, but howe muche confidence one hath, either in the power, or els in the goodnes of almightie God. If the disease of thy mynde be secrete and vnknowen, yet confesse it vnto Jesu, who neyther vttereth it a-gayne, nor imbraydeth ỹ therwith, but maketh the whole. If thou haue openly offended, then make thou open confession, that like as thou haste entised manye by thy naughtye ensample, to vice and synfull lyuynge, so contrarye wyse be yng turned from synne, thou mayste prouoke many to amende theyr liues. That shamefastnes is vtterly to be putte awaye, which bothe muyeth God hys glorye, and our neyghboure hys soule healthe. Assuredly thou shalt be well apayed that thou art rid therof, when thou once feleste thy selfe more quiet in cõscience through thy confession, then thou waste before, as though thou haddeste heard the selfe same wordes of the Lord Jesu that the woman heard. What heard she? Daughter, thy fayth thou haddeste in me, hathe restored the vnto healthe, whiche physike was not able to geue the. Departe wyth a joyfull, and a quiete mynde. I wyll that thou enioye this my benefite continually. O thou ruler of the synagoge, seeste thou not? Heareste thou not these wordes? For all this was done to instructe the, and suche as thou art. The woman was sicke of an vncurable disease, she waxed dayelye worse and worse, and yet for the notable fayth she had in Jesu, she was healed by the onelye touchynge of his garmente.
And thou callest, as one woulde saye, the Physician home to thy house: thou commaundeste hym to laye hys hande vpon the paciente, and requirest haste.

The texte. ¶ While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the Synagoges house, certayne whiche sayde, thy doughter is deade: why disease thou the maister any further? And assone as Jesus heard the worde that was spoken, he sayde vnto the ruler of the Synagoge: Be not afrayde, onely beleue. And he suffered no man to folowe him saue Peter, and James, and John the brother of James, and he came vnto the house of the ruler of the Synagoge, and

ſawe the wundring, and them that wept, and wayled greatly, and went in, and ſayde vnto them: why make ye this a do, and wepe? The damoſell is not dead but ſlepeth: and they laughed him to ſcorne. But he put them all out, and taketh the father and the mother of the damoſell, and them that were with him, and entreth in where the damoſell laye, and taketh the damoſell by the hande, and ſayth vnto her. Tabitha cumi, which is (if one do enterprete it) damoſell, I ſaye vnto the, ariſe. And ſtraight waye the damoſell aroſe, and walked. For ſhe was of the age of twelue yeres. And they were aſtoned out of meaſure, and he charged them ſtraightly that no man ſhoulde knowe of it, and commaunded to geue her meate.

Whyles Jeſus was aunſwerynge the woman, there came meſſengers from the ruler of the Synagoges houſe, which ſaide vnto him: Thy doughter is deade. Why doeſt thou put the mayſter to further paynes in vayne? Theſe wordes ſpoken, the ruler of the Synagoge, who had before a doubtfull hope mengled with muche feare, beeyng nowe as a manne in deſpayre, durſt make no farther ſuite vnto the Lorde. The meſſangers put hym in deſpaire, ſayinge: She is deade. So manye are wonte to ſpeake by thoſe perſons whiche haue fallen to the committing of ſome haynous enormitie: as for an enſample, of aduoutrie, inceſte, theefte, or manſlaughter, ſayinge: He is at a poynte: he is paſte all goodneſſe. Surely Jeſus ſuffereth none to fall into deſperacion, but ſuche a one as refuſeth to beleue in hym. It is the propertie of Jewes to deſpaire. The good Chriſtian who knoweth the goodneſſe of the Lorde to bee ryll with his power, neuer deſpaireth. Chriſte therefore holpe and lyfted vp the fayntyng hope of the ruler of the Synagoge, with ſwete and conforteable wordes, ſayinge: be not afrayed although it be ſo that thy doughter be deade indede. Onelye haue beleefe. It ſkylleth not in howe euell caſe ſhe be, but howe ſtronge and ſtedfaſte is thy fayth. When he had thus ſpoken, he came vnto the ruler of the Synagoges houſe, and entred in, but leauyng all the rablemente of people without dores, ſufferyng not ſo muche as his diſciples, to goe in with hym, ſaue alonely Simon Peter, James, and John, who was James his brother. Theſe folowyng hym, he entred into the ruler of the Synagoges houſe. there founde he all thinges ryght gorgiouſlly, and with greate pompe prepared for the buryall of the mayden, and beſyde this manye of her kynſmen, and kynſwomen lamentably bewaylyng her ouertymely deathe. For the common ſorte are wounte to take the death of young folkes much grenouſlyer then of olde, wher as in dede nothing is more to be deſyred of god, then in that age to dye, when it is moſte pleaſure to lyue, or euer the ſoule be blemiſhed with the manifolde euyls of this preſent lyfe. For it litle forceth howe longe a man liue, but howe well, and vertuouſly.

Jeſus therfore teaching vs that we oughte not to bewayle the deade with vayne funerall ſonges, cauſed the mourners to ceaſe theyr noyſe. Why, ſayth he, make you ſuch a clamoure and noyſe in the houſe with your wepynge, and waylynge? The mayde is not deade, but a ſlepe. Truly vnto hym ſhe dyd but ſlepe, who could much eaſyer wake, & relyue her with a worde of his mouthe then one of vs can wake another oute of his ſlepe. And ſlepe is in euery point a reſemblaunce and meditacion of death. For it bryngeth to reſte the powers of the ſowle, and taketh away ſence, ſo that if it were continuall, it were verye deathe in dede. But ſuche as ſtode by when ſhe died, not perceyuing what Jeſus meante by theſe wordes, laughed hym to ſcorne becauſe he beleued ſhe was yet aliue, ſithe it euidently appeared that ſhe was deade. Jeſus droue all theſe folkes out a dores, whiche fylled the houſe full of noyſe and dynne with theyr vayne wepyng, and waylyng, and dyd not onelye nothyng at all profyte the deade bodye therwith, but also encreaced the woefullnesse of her parentes, and laughed hym, the aucthour of healthe, to skorne. There nedethe not the presence of suche people, where the soule beeyng dead throughe synne, is to bee called agayne to the lyfe of innocencie, and vertuous lyuyng.

This thyng dyd Jesus then in a nother mannes seuerall house. What woulde he nowe doe, yf he sawe the great pompe that some vse in funerals euen to very madnesse? There are certayne persones hiered to fayne mourninge and weping, to crye out, to teare the heare that manye tymes is none of theyrs, to knocke themselues on the breste, to scratche theyr faces, to caste out wordes that no frantycke manne woulde speake the lyke, full of distruste and vnbeleefe. They set mylke by the deade karkes, therewyth to allure the soule, straynge and wandryng abrode, into the body agayne. They oftetymes crye and call vpon the dead body by name: Phylip cum againe: Come agayne to vs good Phylip. They chyde and braule with him saying: Why hast thou forsakē thy frendes? Why wouldes thou kyll vs with mourning? Thou lackeddest nothyng to liue all at pleasure, neyther ryches, nobilitie, honorable aduaunceme̅tes, beautie, nor age. O thou cruel felowe: O wretches that we be. &c.

Nowe put me hereunto trumpettes that sounde vnto the deafe, the syngyng menne that syng vayne funerall songes vnto the deade bodie, whiche heare the them not: and dooe not thereby take awaye the sorowe of the lyuinge, but encrease it. Furthermore, put hereto the long rowes of torchbearers, and the raye of those that are clad all in blacke, and mournyng apparell: Yea, there be summe also whiche cause horses trapped in blacke to bee brought into this pompous shewe, to cary the deade mānes flagge and coote armoure, and with theyr downe lokyng, (for theyr neckes are fast bounde vnto theyr legges) to make as though they sought for their maister that is descended and gone downe to hell. What shall I rehearse the great feastes, and solemne bāketes that they are wonte to make? The magnificke, and costlye buildynges of tombes, as thoughe there were litle pompes, and superfluite vsed in life, excepte dead folkes dyd also declare themselues to be attached wyth these vices. Nowe sythēs euen those that are of the wyfest sorte of the heathen, suppose these to be mad and fonde customes: howe muche more then oughte they not to be had in vse amonge christen menne, whiche dooe all slepe rather then dye, and shal awake agayne the last daye at the sownyng of the Aungels trumpet. Therefore, to retourne to the order, and procesſe of thystorye, when Jesu had put all these folkes out a doores, he toke the parentes of the mayden, and wente into the secrete chambre whereas the coarse laye.

For his pleasure was that they shoulde be witnesses of the miracle whiche he entended to worke. Here the Lord toke the mayden by the hand, and as though he woulde haue wakened her out of her slepe, sayde vnto her: Tabitha cumy, the whiche in the Syrian language is as muche to saye, as howe mayden, aryse. Suche as are in a depe or sounde slepe cannot many tymes be wakened, althoughe a manne call them ofte tymes with a loude voyce, and pinche them neuer so muche: and when they be called vp, yet doe they not byandby awake, but beeyng a good while halfe a slepe or drousy, gape, stretch theyr armes, nod with theyr heades, that many tymes the chynne stryketh the breste: and if a man call not styll vpon them, they fall aslepe agayne. This deade mayden arose rose furthwith, and walked at the voyce of Jesu, beyng not only relyued, but also very mery, and iocunde. For the soule which throughe thenforcement of disease had forsaken the bodye, knewe the voyce of his maker, and without delaye retourned againe into the house that it went out of.

And they were astonied out of measure, &c

The more sorowfull that her death was by reason of her yong age, (for she was but twelue yeare olde) the greater was the myrthe and ioye which was made for her relyuyng. Her father and mother were greatly amased with this straunge, & wonderfull syght. Jesus who neyther required reward or mede of them nor yet thankes for his laboure, onely commaunded them to geue her meate, bycause it myght thereby more certainely appeare how she was restored to life. For eatyng is not onely a sure token of lyfe, but also of welfare, and good healthe. He lykewyse charged them that they shoulde not blase this thyng abrode whiche was priuely done, and in the presence of a few persons, eyther because he would haue it rather published by suche as he putte out a doores, then by the ruler of the Synagoge (who should haue bene more enuyed, but lesse beleued if he had bene the publisher hereof) eyther because, in that he commaunded them to kepe the thyng secrete, whiche he knew ryght well they would not do, his will was to teache vs how that in all the good dedes we dooe, we ought vtterlye to eschewe all vayne glory, and worldly prayse. If a man wade deper herein, and serche what secret learning lyeth hid in this miracle, (for euen the very doinges of Jesu be parables) it shall appeare that this dead mayden of twelue yeare olde, and scarcely yet mariable, signifieth a man, whiche by frayeltye of nature hathe fyrste fallen to the committing of some priuie cryme or synne, and therfore, because he is not yet past regarde of honestye, nor by long custome rooted in synne, maye with the medicine of shame, easlye be holpen, and cured therof. When any suche offendeth, it becōmeth the Curates and pastours to folow the gentle demeanour of Jesu, who without makyng any great a doe, raysed the mayden at home in the presence of a fewe witnesses. It shall be sufficient to rebuke suche as haue thus offended and done amisse, secretly: leste theyr faulte beyng once disclosed, they eyther sette all shame aparte, or els pyne awaye throughe ouermuche sorowe and heauinesse.

The fyrst offence if it happen throughe frayltie and weaknesse, is very sone amended. It is muche harder to cure hym whose wickednesse is once cum to the knowledge of the people: and hardest of all to heale suche a one as is hardened and rooted in synne by long custome of synnyng. And therfore he rayseth the mayden by vertue of his bare worde in her fathers seuerall house, suffering fewe to be present thereat. But he maketh more a doe when the young syngalte, whiche was borne out vpon mennes shoulders to be buryed, is restored to lyfe agayne. His mother and all the people that go with her, make great mone and lamentacion. The yong man is had out to burying, and fyrst his mother heareth Christ saye: wepe not. Then Christ toucheth the coffin, and causeth the porters to staye. Anon he calleth the dead man, with a loude voyce, saying: How, I say to the, aryse. Then fyrst he rayseth himselfe, and sitteth in the coffin: afterward he begynneth to speake, at the length he whippeth out of the coffyn, and is deliuered vnto his mother.

But Christ commaundeth Lazarus graue to be shewed hym, as thoughe he knew not where it were: he weepeth once, or twyse. He is troubled, and groeth nethin spirite. He commaũdeth the graue stone to be remoued and calleth out Lazarus with a loude voyce. The dead man cummeth out, but bounde: At the length he is vnbound, and falleth to his meate.

It was no more maisterie for Christ to rayse vp the karkas whiche had layne fower daies deade, then the bodie newly deade, who at the daye of doome, will by the voyce of thaungell, rayse and call to lyfe agayne, all mennes bodies that haue bene buryed in so many thousand yeares before: but by thys figure his wyll was to shewe vs howe muche a doe it is for them to turne from sinful lyuing, who of long tyme haue bene accustomed to vices, not to the ende that we should despayre of suche persons, but because we should endeuoure to amende oure lyues in season, and more earnestly goe about to bryng all that are in suche case to amendement. Moreouer I thynke it also here worthye to be noted, that where as Jesus woulde haue hys benefyte publyshed of the Gerasyte possessed of the deuyll, yet commaunded he the ruler of the Synagoge to kepe sylence. For the enuyous Synagoge went aboute by al meanes, to ouerwhelme and oppresse the glorye of the Lorde Jesu, the whiche Synagoge did also afterward beate the Apostles, and charged thẽ that they should not be so hardy as once to speake of his name. But theyr enuye preuayled nothyng at all. The more they went aboute to oppresse his holsome name, the more was it preached amonge the Gentyles. The priestes holden theyr peace: The Phariseis crye out, and speake agaynst him: The Scribes rayle vpon him: Herod laugheth him to skorne: but wurshyppers of Idolles, theues, extorcioners, and such as are attached with the vyces of incest and aduoutry, sodainly delyuered by the grace of the ghospell from theyr olde synnes as from most fell and cruell dyuels, doe magnifye and prayse hym.

The. vj. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he departed thence, and came into his owne countrey, and his disciples folowed him: and when the Sabboth day was cum he begã to teache in the synagoge. And many that heard him were astonied, and sayde: From whence hath he these thinges? And what wisdõ is this that is geuen vnto hym, and suche vertues as are wrought by his handes? Is not this the carpenter, Maries sonne, the brother of James, and Jokes, and of Juda, and Symon? and are not his systers here with vs? And they were offended with hym. Jesus sayed vnto them: a Prophet is not despised but in his owne countrey, and among his owne kinne, and in his owne housholde. And he could there shewe no miracle, but layde his handes vpon a fewe sycke folke, and healed them, and mercyed because of theyr vnbeliefe.

Whatocasyon soeuer Christ haue to goe any whyther, he is alwayes after one fashyon, and lyke hymselfe: that is, he euer bryngeth healthe, to teache his disciples that accompany hym, how we christians ought neuer to cease to doe the busynesse of the ghospell, but still to goe aboute whensoeuer occasion serueth thereunto, to make of euell men good, and of good better, whether it happen vs to continew and leade our lyues at home in our owne houses, or els in foreyne and straunge countreys: in publyke place, or in pryuate. Moreouer he that is vnfaynedly indewed with suche vertue and goodnesse as belongeth to christian profession,

whether it chaunce hym to be in chyppe, or in wagan, or to haue familiar talke and communicacion, or els to be present at feaste or at banket, yea, to make shorte tale, euen when he bourdeth to, or maketh any game or pastyme, he so demeaneth hymselfe, that euer some depart awaye from hym, muche amended in theyr maners and conuersacion, by reason of his companye.

Therfore Jesus, whoe attempted to go vnto the Gerasytes, forsoke the places nighe vnto the water side, and returned backe into his owne countrey, leste he shoulde haue semed readyer to doo straungers and forayners good, then his owne countrey men. For Nazareth deserued to haue this honorable name to be called his countrey, because he was fostred and continued there a long season. There went with hym his disciples, the whiche then folowed him euery where continually. Now when the sabboth was cum, vpon the whiche day the Jewes were wonte according to an auncyent, and right laudable custome they had, to assemble together, not because they woulde passe the holye time, that is to saye, loseit, with the beholdyng of folyshe syghtes, tellyng of vayne and vnfruitfull tales, vsyng of vnholy pastyme, or syngyng of ydell balades and songes: but by holy communicacion eyther to learne goddes law themselues, or els to teach the same to other: Jesus entred into the Synagoge in lyke maner as other dyd, to gyue an ensample to his, wherby all men should perceyue what a great shame and dishonestie it shoulde be for vs christian menne, sithens the Jewes so earnestly laboured throughly to learne and know a carnall lawe, which neyther was perfite ne shoulde continewe for euer, and was written but of Moyses a mortal man, yf we woulde not with semblable or rather more diligence, study to knowe the Philosophye and doctrine of the ghospell, whiche the very sonne of god his owne selfe taught and set forth vnto the worlde. Wherefore, when Jesus was teaching in the temple, his authoritie was theleste estemed of many, because he was ryght well knowen vnto them, as pertayning vnto the flesche. They knewe his poore parentes, and the symple and homely house that he came out of. But they neuer supposed any thyng at all of his heauenly father, a euerlastyng house, from whence he came downe for our cause. They knew his fathers occupacion, wherwith Joseph mayntayned and founde his house, the whiche science hymselfe also practysed in his fyrst yeares. He was a carpentoure, a conuenient occupacion for hym, by whom the heauenly father once made this whole worlde. By a carpentour mākynde was created and made, and by a carpentour mete it was that man should be repayred. Therfore when those that knew Jesus (who vntil he was almoste thyrtye yeares olde, lyued among his frendes, and neuer appeared to haue any knowleage in the Phariseis learning) heard hym teache with great authoritie, suche thynges as they neuer had heard before, of the excellently well learned Phariseis, they wondered greatly, saying one to another: how is this felow so sodainly chaunged, and becum another man: from whence hath he all these thynges: and what newekynde of wisdome is this that is geuen hym: from whence hath he this mighty and effectuall power to worke miracles, so great as we neuer heard the like to haue bene in any of the prophetes: Sythe he hath bene from vs but a shorte whyle, how cummeth it to passe that he is cum againe sodainly altred, and cleane chaunged: Is not this the selfe same Jesus the carpētour, the sonne of Joseph the wryght, and Mary a poore symple woman. Did not we knowe hym, and all his kynred, and progenye. Do not the next of his kyn, that is to saye, his brethren and sisters, dwell here among vs? And so they had halfe disdayn at Jesu, that he, who not longe before was taken for an vnderlyng and a persone of no reputacion, was now sodainly exalted to highe estimacio, and authoritie. For they were offended w thimbecillitie, & weaknes of his flesh, wherof they had ouer much knowleage:

And many that heard hym were astonied.

Jesus said vnto them. a prophete is not despysed. &c.

When the lorde Jesus perceyued this, he sayed vnto them: A prophete is no where more despysed then in his owne, countrey among his aliance, kinnesmen, and familiares. Ghostly busynesse yll agreeth with fleshlye affeccions, neither is it in anye wyse besemyng that a true prophete or preacher of ỹ ghospell, who teacheth vs to set nought by this worlde, who promyseth the ioyes of heauen, who teacheth that we muste be newly borne throughe baptysme in Christ Jesu, who teacheth also that we ought to mortify our membres which we haue vpon earthe, to thentent we maye lyue ghostlye in heauen: it is not besemyng, I saye, that suche a one here knowe either countrey, house, acquaintaunce, kynred or frendes. Neyther is it any maruayle yf earthly citizens knowe not hym agayne, synce he is nowe made denisen of an other countrey.

And he could there shewe no myracle. &c.

Wherfore Jesus, thoughe he were almyghtye, and desyrous to saue as many as myght be, yet could he not there among his countreimen worke many myracles, for that he was letted so to dooe by the vnbeleefe of his acquayntaunce and kynfolkes. For where as being among alyauntes, he had easely cured very many of all kyndes of diseases, caste out dyuels, and healed leapers, here in his owne countrey, he onely healeth a fewe sicke folkes, and that with the laying of his handes vpon them.

The texte. ¶ And he went about by the townes that lye on euery syde, teaching: and he called the twelue, and began to sende them furth, two and two, and gaue them power agaynste vncleane spirites. And commaunded them that they shoulde take nothyng in their iourney, saue a rod only, no scrippe, no bread, no monye in their purse; but should be shooed with sandales: And that they should not put on two coates.

For this cause he as one meruey lyng at so great vnbeleefe of his countreymen, departed from thence, and trauayled throughout all the townes and borowes there about, sowyng euery where as he went, the sede of the ghospell. Hereby were the disciples couertly monyshed, that in thynges concerning the preachyng and settyng forthe of the ghospell, they shoulde in no wyse truste vnto worldly affeccions (for the selfe same thing whiche then chaunced vnto Jesu in his countrey, shoulde afterwardes betyde them in Jewrye) but goe where soeuer they sawe any hope, and lykelyhode of plentyfull encrease. There the preaching of the ghospell bryngeth forth fruite most aboundantly where soeuer the hearers are enclined to beleue. Suche inclinacion to beleue, is there neyther among kynred, Phariseis, nor kynges. Kynred despiseth, the Phariseis haue disdayne and enuye, and kynges laughe to skorne the folysh nesse of the crosse. Nowe was it hyghe time that the Apostles whiche were by Christ apoynted to the ministracion of the ghospell, and had already a good whyle folowed hym continually, shoulde as it were, make a flourishe before their office and ministerie, and geue their captayne a saye of their diligence, and loyaltye. Wherefore he called vnto hym those twelue, whome as moste worthye persons, he specially chose and pycked out to take this charge vpon them them: and beyng assembled before hym, he enstructed them all with one sermō or lesson, to thentent that they sent of one maister, and hauyng like commaundementes gyuen them, should not in any wyse disagree in theyr preachyng one from another. And because they should the more profite and edifie, he sent them out by two and two, puttyng vs in remembraunce by this couplyng of them together, of brotherly charitie, without which there cummeth no profit of the gholpell. He lymited vnto euery couple, as it had bene to certaine deputies, or lieutenauntes, theyr prouince. For this was verye expedient to be done, for the enlargyng of the kyngdome of the gholpell. He sent them out weaponlesse, leste that mans aydes shoulde chalenge any thing in this heauenly busynesse. Further leste theyr authoritie should haue been litle estemed, for as muche as they were but fishers, vnderlinges, simple folkes, and vnlettered, he gaue thē that power, wiche worldlye princes are not able to geue to theyr ambassadours, and deputies. For he gaue them power to deliuer men of diseases, and to caste out diuels. What like thing can ỹ Emperour geue? He can geue aboūdaunce of golde, and syluer, hoostes of men, battayle axes, and all manoure of artyllarye, & engynes belongyng to warre, whereof he hath great stoze & plētie. But there is no heade officer, or deputie of his, who hathe so great vertue, that he can by calling vpon the emperous name, heale so much as mennes iyes when they be bleared. And he gaue this power vnto his disciples vnder condicion that they should therewith, freely and without rewarde takyng, helpe all those that neded the same. & gaue the power agaynst. &c.

Now to thentent they should be the better prepared to take in hande, and execute that office, whiche requireth suche a ministre as is quicke and spedy, and not a luskyshe loyterer or sluggerde, he charged them to carry no manour of baggage, vitaile, or weapō with them in this iourneye, saue a rodde only, not a scrippe to put theyr vitayles in, not somuche as breade whiche maye be carryed about without a scrip, nor gyrdels laden with money, neyther weare any bootes vpon theyr legges, but only be shod with sādals, to kepe the soles of theyr feete, that neyther the stones shoulde hurte, nor thornes pricke them: and fynally to content themselues euery manne with one garment. The entēte of Jesu who gaue these enstruccions was nothing els, but after a grosse manour, to inculke and beate into the heades of his disciples (who were as yet rawe and ignorannt) howe suche a one as taketh on hym the ministration of the gospell, ought to be disburdened, and free from all care of corporall thynges, leste any sodaine chaunce befall, that maye hyndre the encrease and procedyng of the heauenly doctrine. As this busynesse was farre diuerse from worldly affayres: euen so was this kynde of ambassade or legacion new, and suche a one as had not bene vsed before. They receyued a fourme of doctrine, leste they shoulde presume to teache any thyng whiche theyr maister had not taught them before. And this thyng held they commune with the legacions of manne, where it is death to passe the limites of the commaundementes, or commission. They are sent all of one lorde with lyke power, leste any disdaine or priuye malice shoulde aryse among them.

They are sent by two and two together because they shoulde remember brotherly charitie and one brother ayde another. They are sent to sundry places and countreyes, to thende that mo should take profite of the gospell.

They haue power geuen them to heale diseases, but in the name of Jesu:

because that lyke as they receyued another mannes lerning to dispence and teache faithfully, and not theyr owne, so should they knowe that it was goddes power, and not theyrs, wherwith they cured diseases.

He forbad them to carry about eyther scrippe, bread, money, or two coates, because they should with full affiaunce hang vpon the promise of theyr maister, and haue sure confidence to be safe from all the force and violence of theyr enemyes through his helpe: and perfitlye knowe that by his prouidence they shoulde want nothyng pertayning to the temporall necessitie of the bodye. For where as nothyng is able to suffice sensualite and pleasure, so the leaste thyng that maye be, sufficeth the necessitie of nature. Neyther dyd the Lorde speake these wordes meaning therby as thoughe it shoulde neuer be lefull for those that be ministers and preachers of the ghospell to carry about with thē any necessary litle fardell, or money, since the Apostles, and byshops are not in our tyme afrayed so to do: (yea paraduenture it is moreprayse worthy yf a man woulde on his owne propre coste and charge, teache the ghospell) but by suche manoure of figuratiue speakynges called of the Grekes hyperbole, his entente was to plucke oute of his disciples myndes (who were as yet grosse and rude) all carefulnesse for those thynges that are wont to be an hinderaūce or let vnto the minde, whē it goeth about any heauenlye enterprise: els wist he well that they would not forget to speake as foloweth: Thou sendest vs out to countreyes that we know not, and makest vs, who are naked and weaponlesse, to be many wayes in ieopardye of our liues. But who shall fede vs if hunger cum vpon vs? who shall defende vs if anye violence be vsed againste vs? who shall clothe vs if it chaunce to be colde weather? Thou wylt haue vs to teache frely. Thou wylt we curemen for naught. But he that liueth in a straunge countrey needeth many thynges.

This pensyue and filthie carefulnesse, because for the moste parte, it springeth of distruste, he earnestly went about to wede out of theyr myndes, as a thyng not besemyng the greatnesse and weyghte of suche a busynesse as they were deputed vnto. Furthermore the figuratiue manour of speakyng that he vseth, serueth hereunto, that suche thinges as he teacheth them, maie the depelier be fastened in theyr rude and ignorant myndes. For the teacher of the ghospell shoulde nothyng offende yf he ware shoes, or had two coates, being amōgest the barbarous people called Getæ, or els yf he dyd take victayle, and a good summe of money with him, beyng in gate to the sandes of Affrike, or to summe nacion where as there is no iemle entertaynement, and receyuing of straūgers. But what thyng so euer hyndreth the procedyng of the gospell, the same is vtterlye to be renounced. Nowe considre me, with how great a burthen they goe charged to the ministracion of the ghospell, who carrie aboute with them princely ryches, dignities, promocions, worldly pleasures, and a gredie desyre to be auenged yf any thyng happen to their grieke, and displeasure.

This fardell that Christ speaketh of here is rather in the mynde, then in carrying about of scrippes, and superfluous clothing. Who so wyll not cast awaye all these fardelles (I meane of mynde) the same is not meete to be the messenger and ambassadour of Jesu Christ. Likewyse there is a figuratiue speakyng in the thinges whiche he licenceth them to vse. For he geueth them leaue to vse eche one a wande, and a payre of sandals. The lightest manoure of shoe that is, is the sandall: and it so sauyth the feete from takyng anye harme, that it letteth not a man to make quicke spede in his iourney. Therfore it is but one thyng that he monisheth, whiche permitteth them to vse sandals, and forbiddeth to weare shoes. For he forbiddeth nothyng els, but slacknesse in doyng of theyr dutie, and exhorteth them to vse spedinesse therin.

Agayne it is but one thyng that he warneth them of, whiche geueth them leaue to carie a wande, and taketh awaye from them the vse of staues. For a wande socoureth and stayeth the walkyng manne, and nothyng hyndreth him in his iourneye, but rather causeth him to make quicker spede. Nowe the staffe as it burtheneth a manne to beare it: so is it wont to be caried againste violence. Therfore he that permitteth them to vse no other weapon but a wãde only, and forbiddeth them to carye a staffe, willeth vndoubtedlye that the preacher of the gospell be by no other ayde safely fensed agaynst the assaultes of yuell menne, then by the onelye helpe of Chriſte. A wande is meete for a wayfairing man, and a staffe for a fighter. Moreouer he that hath the hãdelyng of the gospell, must alwayes goe forwarde to thinges of higher perfection, and be farder from desyre of reuengement.

¶ And he sayde vnto them: whereſoeuer ye enter into an house, there abyde styll tyll ye departe thence. And whosoeuer shall not receyue you, nor heare you, when ye departe thence shake of the dust, that is vnder your feete, for a wytnes vnto the. Verely I saye vnto you: it shall be easier for Sodome and Gomor in the daye of iudgement, then for that citie. And they went out and preached that men should repent, and they caste out many deuils, and annoynted many that were syche with oyle, and healed them. The texte.

After that Chriſte hadde plucked this carefulnesse oute of the myndes of his Apostles, then went he about to shewe them a waye, howe it shoulde cum to passe that they shoulde neuer nede to be carefull for suche thynges. Take ye no thought, sayth he, neither for harborough, ne sustenaunce: but after ye once be entred into village, or citie, whereſoeuer it be your chaunce to be receyued, be the house neuer so poore and homely, there abyde you till suche tyme as you thynke it meete for you to departe sum whither els, moued through desyre to set forthe and aduaũce the ghospell. And beyng but fewe in number, and contented with a litle, you shall not be chargeable geastes to anye man. It is in manoure impossible that there be any where any good towne or citie so farre past all grace and goodnesse, wherin there can not one manne be founde who wyll be glad to receiue suche geastes as ye are, synce there are manye whiche will not sticke to wage a phisicia with a large salarie, and send for him a great waye of. yf you chaunce to cum to any so vnkynde a citie, or house, that the inhabitauntes therof wyll not receyue you, notwithstandyng you bryng them of your owne accorde an heauenly gyft or present, wherwith both bodies and soules are healed, yet cease you not for a fewe harde harted persones, to do the businesse you haue taken in hande: but yet departe you out of that citie for a season, to other cities: and or ere you go awaye, embrayde suche persons as would not receiue you, with theyr great folye, and madnesse. Gette you out into the stretes, and shake of the dust stycking on youre feete, that they maye call to remembraunce howe there came summe vnto them, who freely offered them health and sauetie, & brought them the ioyfullest message that coulde be: and maye further perceyue that lyke as so excellente a good thyng cannot by any manoure of rewarde be worthilye recompensed: euen so suche precious ware and marchandise oughte not to be thruste to anye whiche lotheth the same, and is not wyllyng to receiue it: and this do you to thintent they maye blame themselues for theyr owne damnacion, because they wouldē rather perishe, when they might haue been saued: and also know perfectlye howe you soughte for nothyng els among them, but onely the healthe and saluacion of your neyghbours, insomuche that you would not endamage them as muche as with the losse of a litle quantitie of dust. It becommeth well yioughe my ambassadours to vse such manour of proude demeanure against frowarde, and disdaynfull persons. At your departure speake vnto them this one thyng folowyng, although they be not wyllyng to heare it: knowe you that whether you receyue vs, or receyue vs not, the kyngdome of God is cumme. If you receyue vs, it is cum to your greate wealth and commoditie. But yf you receyue vs not, yet shall the same cumme to your great euyll, and confusion. When Christes messengers were furnished with these necessaries for their iourneye, they toke their leaue of theyr maister, and as it was geuen them in commaundement, they moued and exhorted all men to be repentaunte for theyr former lyfe, shewyng them howe the kyngdome of God was already present, whiche through fayth of the gospell would bring vnto all men perfite ryghteousnesse. For the chiefe and principall parte of preachyng of the gospell, is for a man to geue faith vnto the doctrine that he heareth, and to beleue the promyses. Whē the lorde Iesus had with these, and many other lyke lessons, diligentlye enstructed his disciples, then the same twelue headmen of the kyngdome of heauen toke theyr iourney, and the matter went forward, and had good successe. They preached vnto all menne that they shoulde be penitent for their former sinnes, and that no man should truste vnto his owne dedes and merites, but onely haue sure beleefe in the promises of the gohspell. And they founde sum that lystened and gaue diligent eare vnto theyr preachyng. There lacked not here a ready power to worke miracles, whiche made theyr wordes to be beleued, thoughe themselues were neuer so symple persons, and vnknowen. They anoynted the sycke people with oyle, and the same were healed. They commaunded the hurtfull spirites to go out in the name of Iesu, and they went out.

That oyle was not a medicine (for who healeth all manoure of diseases with one medicine) but a sacrament. The skynne was outwardly anoynted with visible oyle, and the body was made whole. But theyr soules whiche anon after shoulde be delyuered from the diseases of vice and synne, were to be anoynted with the oyle of grace inuisible, by our anoynted Iesus Christe. Wherfore it was not by vertue of suche prayers, and enchauntmētes as witches or magicians vse, that they cast out dyuels, but by wordes pithy and effectuall through an euangelike fayth.

This was vndoubtedly the very power of the kyngdom of heauen. What was more abiect, vile, and lesse regarded then the Apostles were? But the lesse that theyr power was the more manifestlye did it appeare that all that euer was done, came to passe by the might and power of God. They neyther had riches, learning, office, garde to defende them, nobilitie, fame nor authoritie. To be shorte, they had nothyng els but a plaine and a symple fayth in Iesu, whome they as yet knewe not perfectlye.

And

¶ And kyng Herode heard of him (for his name was ſpread abrode) & he ſayd: Iohn Baptiſt is riſen agayne from the dead, and therfore myracles are wrought by hym: other ſayde, it is Helias, ſome ſayed it is a prophet, as one of the prophetes. But when Herode heard of hym, he ſayd: It is Iohn, whome I beheaded, he is ryſen from death agayne. For Herode hymſelfe had ſent forth men of warre, and layed handes vpon Iohn, and bounde hym, and caſte hym into pryſon for Herodias ſake, his brothers wyfe (becauſe he had maried her.) For Iohn ſayde vnto Herode: It is not lawfull for the to haue thy brothers wyfe. Herodias layed wayte for hym, and would haue killed hym, but ſhe could not. For Herode feared Iohn, knowyng that he was a iuſt man, and an holy: and gaue hym reuerence. And when he heard hym, he dyd many thynges: and heard hym gladlye. The texte.

By theſe thynges, Ieſu waxed euery daye more famous then other, ſo that his name was nowe knowen euen vnto kyng Herode. For it is very late ere kynges knowe Ieſu, whome it behoueth firſte and chiefly to knowe hym: neyther are there any that know him worſe, and leſſe for theyr ſoule healthe, then they do. After that Ieſu had wrought ſo many, and ſo euident miracles that no man could cauill, and ſaye they were fayned thynges: and the ſame myracles had done ſo many menne good, that no manne coulde ſclaunderouſly reporte and ſay they were done by the power and operacion of euill ſpirites: And after diuerſe menne had diuerſly ſpoken theyr myndes, and conceites what they thoughte of hym, at the length Herode ſhewed alſo his opinion. Iohn, ſayth he, is ryſen from death: and therfore now hath he power to worke myracles.

Agayne, other there were who taking coniecture of the prophecy of Malachy, ſayed howe Ieſu was Helye, whiche is prompted in ſcripture to ryſe againe before the great, and terrible daye of the lorde. There were other ſum, whiche denied hym to be Hely, who was of greateſt authoritie among the Iewes, auouchyng him to be one of the meane ſorte of prophetes reſtored, and ryſen agayne. When Herode had heard all theyr opinions, yet ſtacke he ſtyll vnto his owne, and ſayd: Yea, this is the ſelfeſame Iohn, whoſe heade I cauſed to be ſtriken of. He is alyue agayne, and beyng nowe made a ſaynete, worketh ſuche thynges as paſſeth mannes power. There was none of all thoſe whiche beleued not that the bodies ſhall reſtore. And yet are there manye at this daye who beleue not that Chriſte roſe agayne from death to lyfe. And to thentent thou mayeſt here perceyue how vnright are the iudgementes of the wicked, they beleued that Iohn, who neuer hadde any name for worckyng of miracles, was alyue agayne: and moſte ſtifly denyed the reſurrection of Ieſu, whoſe godly power was ſo many wayes declared. Conſydre alſo the fondneſſe of wicked kinges: Herode affirmeth Iohn to be alyue agayne, and cõfeſſeth he hath now greater power then he had, when he was firſte alyue: and yet for all that he in a manour maketh his vaunt howe he cauſed hym to be putte to death, redy to ſlea hym afreſhe yf it laye in his power.

Here it is expedient to heare what occaſion Herode hadde to committe ſo haynous a dede. For at the prouocacion of an vnchaſte woman, he commaunded Iohn to be taken, and layed in pryons, not for anye offence committed on his behalfe: but to gratifie Herodias the daughter of kyng Areta, the whiche Herodias, notwithſtanding ſhe was maried before vnto Philippe one of the lower rulers of the countreyes of Iturea and Trachonitis, the kyng her father, by reaſon of a certayne debate that befell betwixt them, toke awaye from his ſonne in lawe Philippe (by whom ſhe had then a daughter) and maried her to this Herode brother vnto the sayde Philippe, but yet his enemie. Iohn, to thentent he might the better resemble Helye, who verye frankely rebuked Achab and Iezabela, could not abyde this vnchaste and filthye matrimonie, but sayde vnto kyng Herode: It is not lawfull for the to kepe still in house with the thy brothers wyfe, synce he is not barrayne, and is yet alyue.

It is not lawfull. &c. Herodias, who was then diuorced from her former husbande, fearyng leste she should by Iohns procurement be lykewyse diuorced from this, wet aboute to entrappe him, and sought occasion to make him awaye, but all that euer she went about, came to none effecte. For albeit Herode loued not Iohn hartely, yet did he feare hym. True vertue is of suche force, that kynges, and mightie princes feare it. Herode knewe right well he was a iuste manne, and an holy liuer, and therfore had hym in awe and reuerence, and folowed his counsayle in manye thynges, and gladlye heard him speake.

These thynges letted the wicked womanne to destroye hym according as she purposed to do. She entended mischiefe, but occasion woulde not serue therunto, whiche is the thing, that onely lacketh vnto yuell folkes to do harme.

The texte. ¶ And when a conuenient daye was come, that Herode on his byrthe daye made a supper to the lordes, high capitaines, and chiefe estates of Galile, and when the daughter of the same Herodias came in, & daunced, and pleased Herode, and the that sate at boorde also, the kyng sayde vnto the damsell: Aske of me what thou wylte, and I will geue it the, and he sware vnto her: Whatsoeuer thou shalte aske of me I wyll geue it the, euen to the one halfe of my kyngdome. And she went forth, and saide vnto her mother, what shall I aske the sayed, Iohn Baptistes heade. And she came in streyghtwaye with haste vnto the kyng, and asked, saying: I will that thou geue me by and by in a charger, the head of Iohn Baptiste, and the kyng was sorye: howbeit for his othe sake, and for theyr sakes whiche sate at supper also, he would not caste her of. And immediatly the kyng sent the hangman, and commaunded his head to be brought in: and he went and beheaded him in the prison, & brought his heade in a charger, and gaue it to the damsell, and the damsell gaue it to her mother. And when his disciples heard of it, they came and toke vp his body, and layed it in a graue.

Nowe was Herodes byrthe daye come, a tyme verye propise, and meete to worke this vngracious dede in. It was beseemyng that the natyue daye of a wicked kyng, shoulde be polluted with the death of a man of moste holye liuyng and godly conuersation: and that the meddes of the excessiue banketting and courtlye delicacies, shoulde be distayned with the cruell murtheryng of an innocent, and giltlesse person. Wherfore when that in the honoure of his byrth daye, he made a souper of gorgious, and excessiue furniture, to the princes, capitaines, and great estates of Galile, because there shoulde be the moo present to beare witnesse of his crueltie, there came into the place where they feasted, a young damsell, daughter vnto Herodias and Philippe, to make the geastes myrth and pastime with her vncumly, and wāton daunceing. And the more vngoodly she daunced, the more she delited the geastes, and the kyng specially, who was now twise mad, because, besydes that he was in amours with the vnchaste womanne Herodias, he was also distempred, and set in a furye with wyne.

Wherfore he sayed vnto the damsell ryghte magnifycentlye as became a kyng. Aske of me whatsoeuer thou wylt, thou shalte haue no denyall therof.

And

And to make her the bolder to desyre what she woulde, he bounde his dronken promyse with an othe. Whatsoeuer (sayeth he) thou shalte desyre of me, though it be thone halfe of my realme, I wyll geue it the. Aske of me whatsoeuer wylt. &c.

Oh fonde and folysche saing, worthy to cum oute of so folisshe, and dronken a kynges mouthe. But the young damsell, as she began to playe this parte at the prouocacion and setting on of her mother (whiche diligently awayted the daye, place, and howre, and trymmed her daughter of purpose to daunce) so durste she not by and by tell the kyng what she woulde demaunde, but departed out of the feasting chaumber, and asked her mother counsayle, saying: The kyng my father in lawe hath bounde it with an othe, that he wyll geue me whatsoeuer I wyll desyre of hym. What shall I therfore aske? Here was undoubtedlye a iuste occasion to doubte, and take good deliberacion, leste so great an opportunitie should haue been loste. But the unchaste woman her mother, unto whome nothyng was so deare, as the death of the moste holye and innocent man, without further deliberacō takyng, answered: Desyre of him John Baptistes heade. Oh wicked daughter, soone taught, & ready to obey for a mischiefe. She returned strayghtwayes into the kynges priuie chamber (for her mother priuily aduertised her to make haste, and speake with Herode before that great heate of his Princely courage were coole d againe.) And then went she unto the kynges presence, and desyred a rewarde for her wanton and lasciuious dauncyng, saying: I desyre but one messe alonely, I wyll thou geue me withoute farther delaye, John Baptistes heade in a charger.

Here marke me well the auke warde conscience of the wicked kyng. Where as there is nothyng that suche kynges are oftener wont to do, then to breake all bondes of leages, couenauntes, and religion: yet here he thinketh hymselfe bound in conscience (which was a thyng agaynst all conscience) to performe his moste foolysche othe, especiallye syth it was made in the audyence of so many witnesses. Wherfore leste menne would haue thought hym to haue been a manne of no credence, yf he had refused to perfourme what he promised by an othe to do, swearyng perchaunce eyther by his diademe, the spirite which had the gouernaunce of his body, or the heade of the damsel that daunced before hym: or els leste he shoulde haue seemed vncurteous, and voyde of all good maners, yf he had eyther let the mayde departe from hym all heauy and sad, or with some cloude of heauinesse abated the myrthe and solace of the gestes, whom she had pleased with her pastyme. (O worshypfull fayth, and conscience: O good maner & curtesie worthye to be put in Chronicles) leste I saye, these thynges should haue chaunced, the hangman was forthwith sente out, and the holy head of the moste innocente person broughte unto the kyng, as it had been a messe of meate in a charger. The kyng toke it unto the damsell, and she to her mother, unto whom it was a derer present, then thone halfe of Herodes kyngdome. And immediatlye the kyng sent ye hangmā &c.

With this deadly syght this folysche dotyng and mad kyng, dyd gratify the unchaste woman, and celebrate or worshyp his natiue daye. The kyng caused hym to be slayne, the hangman brought the head to the kyng, the damsell obtained it, and in conclusion the same deadly rewarde was geuen to her mother the worker, and well of all this mischiefe. Oh worthy geastes all this while, and mete for suche a feaste maker. And gaue it to the damsell. &c.

There

There was none of them al so frendely to the king, that would go about tolet hym to do this mischieuous dede. And shall we hereafter maruaile yf kynges otherwhiles be not a feard to commit outragious enormities, yf they be of disposicion lyke vnto Herode, that is to saye, enflamed with vnchaste loue, and geuen to riot and sensualitie, and ouer this, haue suche dayly companions, as be eyther fearfull persons, or els fauourers of theyr crueltie.

And whan his disciples heard of it. ℣.

When the bruite of this haynouse dede was cum to the eares of Johns disciples, they toke awaye the carkas, and buried it honorablye. Howbeit in these thynges lyeth hyd some mystery and secret meanyng. John although he bare the figure of the lawe, and sygnified the same, yet in as muche as he was a forecurrour of the Gospell, he was rewarded with the rewarde therof, that is, with a glorious death, but yet farre diuerse from the death of Christe. For Johns head was priuily striken of after he hadde layne a whyle fast gyued in prison. Christ was openly lyfted vp vpon the crosse. The darkenes of the prison agreeth well with the shadowes and sygures of the lawe. It was mete they shoulde geue place vnto the lyght of the gospell, whiche beganne to appeare and shyne abrode. It was conueniente that carnall ceremonies shoulde be diminished, to the entent that spirituall freedome should be encreased. And it was lykewyse nedeful that all, whiche proceded of feare, should be bounde, because the fayth and charitie of the gospell, should the farther be spred abrode and extended. Finally it was mete that mannes heade shoulde be striken of, least the churche shoulde acknowledge any other head saue alonely Jesus. And so the lawe beyng in a maner slayne, and honourably buried, gaue place vnto the Lorde Jesu, when he began to preache his spirituall philosophie and doctrine. For in that we do beleue the ghospell we are muche bounden vnto the olde Testament, whiche so many yeares agoe drewe out Jesus Christ vnto vs, with shadowes, and figures, and promysed and described him with the prophecies, and darke sayinges of the Prophetes.

The texte. ¶ And the apostles gathered themselues together vnto Jesus, and told hym all thynges bothe what they had done, and what they had taught. And he sayde vnto them: cũ ye alone out of the waye into the wyldernesse, and rest a while. For there were manye cummers and goers, and they had no leysure, so muche as to eate. And he went by ship out of the waye into a desert place, and the people spied them when they departed, and many knewe him, and ranne a foote thither out of all cities, and came thither before them, and came together vnto hym. And Jesus went out, and sawe muche people, and had compassion on them, because they were like shepe, not hauyng a shepeherde, and he began to teache them many thinges.

While these thinges were done, the Apostles after they had finished their message, drewe themselfes together, and returned to Jesus the heade of the whole busynesse. All thynges proceede from him, and to hym all thynges must be referred. From hym, after they had receyued their commission, they departed al of one mynde and accorde, to thentẽt that whatsoeuer it should fortune them to doe, they should likewise do it in his name: and to hym they returned with semblable concord of myndes, desyrous to haue all that they had done, by him approued. And so at their retourning they recoũted vnto him ỹ whole history and processe of theyr legacion, seuerally rehearsyng euery thyng that they hadde taught and done with greate ioye and gladnes, and the wing also howe the matter had successe euen as themselfes desyred. ioyeing in their actes, toke them awaye with hym into a solitary place, which was the wildernesse of the towne of Bethsaida, to thentent that after theyr great trauaile and labour, they should there reste a whyle, and sumwhat refresh themselfes. This goyng aparte into wyldernes was not for recreacion and pastyme, but because they should quicken and renewe the strength of the spirite by secrete contemplacion, and prayer, ỹ they myghte bee the more able to sustayne suche trauayles and paynes as they should soone after be put vnto afreshe. For the teacher of the gospell must very little care for the body. Moreouer for as muche as he that exerciseth the office of an apostle or preacher of goddes worde, is compelled to haue to do both with weake & strong, with learned and vnlearned, with good and bad, it can not be chosen but he muste other whiles be greatly wrasted from that perfite quietnesse, and tranquillitie of mynde. And whensoeuer it so chaunceth, then must he seuer his mynde from worldly matters, and wholly geue hymselfe to secrete and most deuout prayers, and to purest contemplacion of heauenly thynges, that beyng made stronger in spirite therby, he maye soone after returne from this his godlye meditacion, to the helpe and comforte of his euen Christen. For vnto the place where as at that season they found the lorde Jesu, there resorted an vnnumerable multitude of people, so that it semed as it had bene an ebbing and flowyng of cummers and goers, the whiche would suffer the Apostles being then weary by reason of theyr iourney, to take no reste: no not so much eas to eate their meat. Wherfore after the people were sent away, they toke shippe, and sayled to the syde nighe to Bethsaida, & from thence went with the Lorde into a solitary place. But neyther chaunced it them here long to kepe themselfes close and secrete. For the light of the vangelike veritie can in no wyse be hydde. This going aparte did nothing els but make the people more gredy to folowe them. Some there were who diligently marked whyther they wēt, that is, howe they toke their gate to the wyldernesse marchyng on the citie of Bethsaida: and byanby as it was noysed abrode that Christe woulde make hys abode there, a great multitude of all sortes of people resorted thyther a foote out of all the tounes there aboutes, who made so good spede in their iourney, that many of them came thyther soner a foote, then Christ and his disciples, whiche had the vauntage of the water. A manne would haue sayde that the tyme had bene alredy present, when the people woulde goe about forcibly to enter into the kyngdome of heauen. When Jesu perceyued howe an vnnumerable multitude of people was assembled together, whiche had with very muche payne and difficultie trauayled thyther a foote, so true is it that he gate him not out of the waye, nor commaunded them to departe for theyr importunacie, that he came out of the secrete place, where he was, in manoure to meete them, goyng about to teache his disciples by sundrye wayes and meanes, howe they should at all tymes be willing & ready to set forth the gospell. And so when the moste gracious Lorde Jesus came forth, & sawe a very great, but a confuse rablement of all sortes of people (for there were men, women, & children) he was moued with compassion, and shewed with iyes, countenaunce, & as we commonly say, euen with the very forehead, an vnfayned sorowe of mynde, fashionyng thaffection that ought to be in him, who is a teacher of the gospell. The people thirsted after holsome doctrine. And that was plainlye declared both by the quicke spede they

For the Prieſtes, Phariſeis, and Scribes, nothing regarding theyr flocke, fed their owne belyes. Therfore Jeſus takyng compaſſion on theſe ſimple, and diſordered people, began to exerciſe thoffice of a faythfull ſhepheard. Firſte of al he refreſhed theyr myndes with great aboundaunce of the meate of holye doctrine, and then immediatly healed the ſycke folkes, whom they brought with them.

The texte.

¶ And when the day was nowe far ſpente, his diſciples came vnto him, ſaying: this is a deſerte place, and now the tyme is farre paſſed, let them departe, that they maye goe into the countreye round about, and into the townes, and bye them bread, for they haue nothing to eate: he answered, and ſayd vnto them: geue ye them to eate: And they ſayd vnto hym: ſhall we go and bye two hundreth peny worth of bread, and geue them to eate? He ſayd vnto the: howe manye loaues haue ye? go and loke. And whē they had ſearched, they ſayd: fiue, and two fyſches. And he commaūded them to make them all ſitte doune by companies vpō the grene graſſe. And they ſate doune here a rowe, and there a rowe by hundredes, and by fyftyes. And when he had taken the fiue loaues and the two fiſches, and loked vpto heauen, he bleſſed, and brake the loaues, and gaue them to his diſciples, to ſet before them: and the two fiſches deuided he among them all. And they all dyd eate, and were ſatisfyed, and they toke vp twelue baſkettes full therof, and of the fyſches. And they that dyd eate, were about fyue thouſand men.

After that muche tyme was ſpent herein, and now the thing it ſelfe gaue a watche worde that the multitude had lykewiſe nede to be fedde with corporall foode, the diſciples folowing the mercy and pitifulneſſe of their Maiſter, aduertiſed him therof, ſaying: Lorde thou ſeeſt how a very great number of people is cum thus far without any vitayles and purueyance. And this is a deſerte place, and meale tyme is paſt. They deſyrous to heare thy doctrine, forget themſelues, and can in no wiſe be ſeuered from the. Wherfore let them depart, to thentent they maye repayre into the countrey, and villages nexte here about, to by them eates to eate. Then Jeſus teachyng his diſciples how a multitude ſhould be fedde, made anſwere: yea do yerather who ſhalbe ſhepheardes in tyme to cum, now accuſtome your ſelfes to play the ſhepheardes: geue them of your owne vitayles to eate. The diſciples not perceyuing for what purpoſe he ſpake theſe wordes, anſwered agayne accordyng vnto their rude capacities, ſaying: Thou commaundeſt vs to do a thing vnpoſſible. For thou knoweſt right well, how ſlenderly we be prouided of vitayles neceſſary for our iourney. Shal we goe, and bye two hundred penyworth of breade for this multitude, the which will not be ynough to ſuffice them, inſomuche that euery man ſhall ſcarcely haue a lyttle morſell to ſauour his mouth? Then Jeſus preparyng theyr myndes by little and little vnto the myracle, ſayed: Howe many loaues haue you in ſtore? and becauſe they had not their anſwere ready: Go ye (ſayed he) and loke howe well ye be prouided of vitailes. They loked, & ſhewed hym ꝑ there were fiue loaues, & two fyſches. It was not vnknowen vnto ꝑ Lord what they had: but his will was, to haue ꝑ Apoſtles perfectly to know, how ſmal ſtoore of vitayles ther was, to thentēt they might ꝑ more acknowleage Goddes power in ꝑ miracle. And becauſe they myght the better diſcerne what a great multitude and compaignie ther was, he commaunded them to bydde all the people to ſitte doune vpon the grene graſſe, ſo deuyded into compaignies, that in euery cōpaignie ſhould ſitte an hundred perſons, or els fiftie together. The apoſtles did as the Lord bad them, and lyke wyſe the people were obedient vnto the Apoſtles: ſo greate was the confidence they had in theyr guyde, and ſhepeheard Jeſu. Then toke he the fiue loaues, and two fyſhes, and lifting vp his iyes, accordyng vnto his accuſtomed manour to heauen, gaue thankes vnto the father, thorough whoſe beneficiall goodneſſe, the buſyneſſe of the Goſpell dyd ſo well goe forward. That done, he brake the loaues, and gaue thē vnto his diſciples that they ſhoulde ſette them before the multitude. In like maner deuided he the fiſhes into ſundrye portions, and gaue them vnto his ſayd diſciples, to be likewyſe diſtributed among all the people. All were refreſhed, and dyd eate theyr fyll: none of them all lacked, inſo muche that after the feaſt was done, the Apoſtles, by the Lordes commaundement, gathered together the reuerſion, and therwith fylled twelue baſkettes. Furthermore the number of the people (whiche myght eaſely be knowen, by reaſon they were thus deuyded into compaignies, and ſatte in rowes) was fyue thouſand men, beſydes children, and wemen. By thys myracle Jeſus bothe preſcribed vnto his diſciples a fourme or rule howe to feede a multitude with the foode of the Goſpell, & alſo pulled oute of theyr myndes all penſyue carefulneſſe to prouide for corporall ſuſtenaunce. Therfore whoſoeuer thou be that arte a Biſhop, Curate, or paſtour of Chriſtes flocke, thynke not thus with thy ſelfe: I am a Doctoure of diuinitie: I am an excellent cunnyng expounder of holye ſcripture: I haue great ſtore of learning wherwith to inſtruct the people, and may take inough out of my riche ſtore houſe ſtuffed with cunning, to feede them with al, be they neuer ſo hungry. Yea rather loke, and acknowledge how ſmall ſtore of vitayles thou haſt at home, for the whiche, whatſoeuer it be, thou arte a debtoure vnto the Lorde. But bryng ſuche ſtore as thou haſte vnto the handes of Jeſu. Deſyre hym to vouchſafe to handell, and breake it. That done, what he hath deliuered thee, the ſame doo thou, euen as he toke it the, miniſter vnto the people as ỹ Lordes meate, and not thine: and miniſter it not miſtruſting, not puttyng difference betwyxt this meat & that, not truſting to thine own ſtrength: and ſo in concluſion ſhall it be a very euangelyke banket, and the mindes of the faithfull ſhalbe more refreſhed, and fylled with this holſome foode, thus miniſtred by a ſimple perſon, then if the ſuperſticiouſe Phariſey, the arrogant Philoſophier, or eloquent Rhethorician, would for the aduaunceyng and fettyng forthe of them ſelfes make vnto the people an artificiall oracion or ſermon, whiche they had diligently ſtudied, and long tyme prouided for afore hand.

And they that did eate.35.

Now for as much as he cōmaūded his diſciples before to cum vnto the miniſtery of the goſpell, without any prouiſion of corporall foode, here hath he declared by very dede, howe thoſe ſhall wante nothing, who whiles their myndes be wholly ſet vpon the kyngdome of God, and the righteouſnes therof, do not paſſe vpon theſe temporall thinges, for the which the common ſorte of people taketh great thought and care, yf ſo be there lacke not in them a ſyncere, and true faith in the Lorde Jeſu.

¶ And ſtrayght way he cauſed his diſciples to go into the ſhip and to go ouer the Sea before vnto Bethſaida, while he ſent away the people. And as ſoone as he had ſent them away he departed into a mountain to praye. And when euen was cum, the ſhippe was in the middeſt of the Sea, and he alone on the lande, and he ſaw them troubled in rowing, for the winde was contraye vnto them. And about the fourth watche of the night he came vnto them walking vpon the Sea and would haue paſſed by them. But when they ſawe him walkyng vpon the Sea, they ſuppoſed it had bene a ſpirite, and cried out, for they all ſawe sawe hym, and were afraide. And anon he talked with them, and sayed vnto them: Be of good cheare, it is I: be not afrayed. And he wēt vp vnto them into the shippe, and the winde ceassed, and they were sore amased in themselues beyond measure, and marueyled, for they remembred not the loaues because theyr hartes were blinded.

It was but a small benefite that he filled their hungry belies, in respecte of those benefites whiche they daylye receiued of his most bounteous goodnesse. It procedeth of a greater liberalitie to fede the mynde or soule, then the bellie. And yet for all this the grosse common sorte of people are wonte (such is their vnright, and aukeward iudgement) to set most store of all by that whiche is of leaste price and value. Therfore Jesus knowyng it would cumme to passe that they would nowe after their bellyes were fylled, imagine howe to make him a kyng, compelled his disciples (for it was muche a do to sunder them from so liuely, and amiable a Lorde) to take ship, and go ouer the water before him vnto Bethsaida, whiles he in the meane whyle sent awaye the people, whō beyng dismissed, he conueyed himselfe priuily to a mountayne there to pray alone, and make petition vnto the father, that lyke as the affaires of the ghospell had begun well, and properously, so might they with lyke successe go forward. In the meane time the night approched, and the disciples sayled in the myddes of the sea without their maister: and as they were sayling there arose a tempest. How can it be chosen but there must nedes be night, where that Sunne and light of the world Jesu, is not present? How can it be chosen but that ship must nedes be in ieopardie, wherin Christ lacketh? How can it be chosen but the Apostles must nedes be troubled, when the comforter of all men, Jesus is awaye? how can it be chosen but contrary wyndes must nedes staye and hynder the successe of mans diligence, if Jesus helpe not forward? He is many times awaye: but yet doeth he not forsake sucke as be his vnto thende. He semeth sumtymes to forsake them for a season, because to exercise them in aduersyties, and to learne theym to haue sure beliefe and cōfidence in hym. For now was he cum doune from the mountayne: now stode he on the sea banke, but alone without any company.

He departed into a mountayne to praye &c.

The disciples sawe hym not: neuertheless he sawe them. Wherfore we muste not despayre, what trouble or distresse soeuer we be in: but in oure hartes conceyue this stedfaste beleke that the Lorde (although he no where appeare, and shewe hymselfe bysyblye) wyll not fayle to helpe hys when tyme requireth. Nowe standeth he on the shore, and seeth what labour and payne they take in rowing. For the wynde was against them. When therfore they had thus striuen a pretye whyle with the waues and bousteous wyndes of this worlde, and were at the next doore to desperacion, about the fourth watche of the nyght, that is, a litle before the daunyng of the daye, Jesus came vnto theim, not in a shippe, but quietlye walkyng on the water (for the element knewe it maker) and made semblaunt as thoughe he woulde haue passed by them. For so doeth he other whiles suffer his to continue in aduersytie and tribulacion, as thoughe he passed not vpon theim at all, whereas in dede he neuer stynteth to care for them.

He came vnto theym walking on the sea. &c.

The Apostles after they had spyed him in the darke walking vpon the water, forgetting so many miracles as they had sene hym worke before, and beleuing it to be vnpossible for the liquid element to beare the massy bodye of a man, supposed he had been sum spirite or ghost, whiche had deceyued theyr

theyr eye sight with a vayne and phantasticall illusion. Wherefore they were sore afrayed, and for feare cried oute. For they all sawe the verye shape and likenes of Jesu, and yet beleued not it was he. The Lord is euer terrible vnto those that beleue he is an auenger, and knowe him not to be a sauiour. Neyther is it possible for him to be knowen in the great darkenes of this worlde, vnlesse he bringe himselfe into our knowledge. Wherefore he suffered not his disciples to be any lenger dismaide with feare, but straigth waies spake vnto them with the voyce whyche they knewe right well, and sayed: Be of good chere, it is I, feare ye not. And then came he vnto them into the shippe, and furthwith the tempest ceased. Nowe after their feare was past and gone, then beganne they to marueyle howe a mannes body might walke vpon the water. They were so dull, so rude, and forgetfull, that they remembred not so muche as the miracle whyche they sawe hym worke a litle before, when he filled so manye thousand folkes belies with fiue loaues, and two fishes. And theyr hartes were so blynded, that they thought it a thyng muche to bee wondred at, to see Jesus walke vpon the water: whereas in deede it was a muche more wonderfull facte, to suffice so muche people with so litle meate. The Lord suffered this brutishe dulnesse to continue in his disciples, to the entent they also should enure themselues to beare with the dulnes, and simplicitie of weaklynges, till they were cum to more perfection. And anon he talked. &c.

¶ And when they were ouer the water, they came into the land of Genazareth, & drew vp into the hauen. And assone as they were cum out of the ship, straight waye they knewe him, and ranne furth throughout all the region rounde aboute, and began to cary aboute in beddes, those that were sicke, when they heard that he was there, and whither soeuer he entred, into townes, cities, or villages, they layed the sicke folkes in the streates, and prayed him that they myght touche and it were but the hemme of his vesture: and as manye as touched hym, were safe. The texte.

In the daunyng of the daye, they came vnto the shore, and arriued at the hauen where they appointed to arriue, in the lande called Genazareth. Jesus was scarcely entred the lande, but thither were cum diuers of the inhabitaunts that knew him. For now was the sunne disclosed, & the night gone, whiche had darkened the myndes of the disciples: and manye there were who marked him, whithersoeuer he went. Beside this he was now knowen vnto very many, euen by the phisnamye: but a great mayny mo knewe hym by the fame of his doctrine, and miracles. Now those that sawe him, and knew who he was, byanby as though they had cum as spyes, departed awaye from hym, and wente throughe all the region, and shewed howe Jesus was landed. As sone as this rumour was once noysed abrode, very many beganne to cary aboute sicke folkes in beddes. And began to carye about i beddes. &c.

And whithersoeuer Jesus went, whether it wer to the countrey, townes, or cities, there was euer present a greate number of importune and vnquiet people, more carefull to be delyuered of theyr bodily diseases, then to be cured of the diseases and maladies of theyr soules: whiche layed out in the streetes pitifull sightes of sicke folkes, diseased with diuerse sicknesses: and besoughte Jesus as he passed by, that they might touche euen but the hem of his garmente. For there was suche a busines, and hurly burly amonge them, that harde and scarce any one could be suffred so to do. It came not of any daungerousnes, or difficultie on his behalfe, that they coulde not touche him, who grutched not to touche, and handle the Leper: but the ensample of theyr fayth highly pleased him, the whiche his pleasure was to haue set forth and commended to all men: and good cause why it should so be. As manye as touched him were healed, what diseases soeuer they were payned withall. They with perfite beliefe touched the hemme of his garment, whiche afterward those persons chaūced to haue, who crucified him, and put him to death: and by touching therof, were rid of theyr corp or all diseases. How muche more then ought all men to endenour themselues to touche Jesus himselfe with harte and minde, to the intent they maye be healed of the infirmities of their soules? Touchynge auayleth nothing without faith. The cruell Jewes that bufeted him, that bound him, that scourged him, that nayled him on the crosse, touched his bare bodye: but that they so touched him did nothing profite any of them at all. Thou readeste the ghospell, and in so doynge thou toucheste Jesu: but thou readeste it to this ende, to dispproue it, or els thou readest it negligentlye, and takest no heede thereunto, and therefore thou touchest Jesus in vayne. Reade it with a pure and a syncere fayth, and then shalt thou anon be healed. But thou must sue vnto Jesus by prayer and peticion, that thou maiest touche him. That maiis neuer the better for touchyng hym, whome he hath not foretouched. If thou be not able to attayne that secrete wysdome, whiche S. Paul speaketh of amonge such as are perfite, then the hem of his garment touched, so that thy fayth be perfite wall, shall restore the to health. The hemmes of the Phariseis garmentes, be they neuer so brode, are not of power and vertue to do the lyke. There is nothyng so lowe in the Lorde Jesu, that through fayth geueth not healthe.

¶ The. vii. Chapiter.

THus went the ghospell forward among the simple and lightly beleuyng people. But it had not lyke successe amonge the Scribes, and Phariseis, who thought in theyr owne conceiptes, that they had in theyr keapynge the castle of all pure religion, and true doctrine: and scantly esteined the vnlearned, and ignorannt sorte of the commō people, for men. For of the prieistes there is scarcely any where any mencio made, but when Jesus should be put to deathe. Therefore lyke as in Comedies or playes there are diuerse scenes, and pageauntes, to the intent that by the comparing together of sundry persons and matters, euery thing maye the playnlyer appeare: so in thys euangelyke busines, the Lorde Jesus so ordred all thynges that were doen from tyme to tyme, that it shoulde playnlye appeare to all men, after they sawe howe ready the simple people, and Gentyles were to beleue, howe vncurable was theyr froward obstinacy, who of congruence, ought to haue reformed other, if they had been hard of beliefe. To the vnlearned and common sorte it was sufficient for the recoueryng of theyr health, that they touched but the hem of Christes garment. But the Phariseis were neuer the better, neyther for that they vnderstode the prophecies and forespayinges of the Prophetes, neither because they had so ofte tymes heard Jesu preache vnto them the heauenly doctryne, nor for so many miracles, as they had seene him worke before.

The texte. ¶ And the Phariseis came together vnto him, & diuers of the Scribes, whiche came from Jerusalem. And when they sawe certayne of his disciples eate bread with cōmon, that is to say to saye with vnwashen, handes they complayned. For the Pharisees, and all the Iewes, except they washe their handes ofte, eate not: obseruing the traditions of the elders. And when they cum from the market, except they washe, they eate not. And manie other thinges there be, whiche they haue taken vpon them to obserue, as the washyng of cuppes, and crules, and brasen vessels, and of the tables.

Nowe after all this was doen, thither came certayne of the Pharisees and Scribes in companye together, forsoth a worshypfull sorte of gentilmen, and worthy to be had in greate reuerence: and the more a greate deale because they came from Ierusalem, where they bare men in hande that the well of godlynes and holy doctrine was: whereas in deede there was the verye well springe and head of all ambicion, all hypocrisie, and all vngodlynes. These felowes, because they thought themselues ryghteous men, and well learned, came not hither to learne any thing of Christ, neither to be healed, but to picke quarels. And loe, byanby was there a ready occasion for them so to doe. This occasion (beyng much desirous therof) they toke of the superstitious obseruacion of ceremonies, whereof rysen almost all quarelinges, and wrongfull accusacions amonge christian men. The Iewes call that common whiche is vncleane and vnholy, abhorryng all impuritie, and endeuouryng in no wyse to seme to haue any where any maner of vncleane or filthye thyng. And this cleanesse they measured, not by puritie of mynde (the whiche is the onely, and true puritie before God) but by corporall ceremonies. And of these ceremonies a fewe were commaunded by Moyses lawe, not to this ende that they shoulde be earnestly obserued for euer, but partly to the entent the ignorannte, and disobediente people should by this meanes accustome themselues to obey Gods commaundementes, and partely because they should by suche mauer (as a manne would say) of shadowes, and rudimentes, be by litle and litle enstructed to those thinges that belong vnto true godlynes, which is in the soule of man. Nowe sum of them not contented with the ceremonies commaunded by the lawe, added thereunto constitucions of their owne makyng, out of numbre, whiche the Pharisees more rigorously compelled the people to kepe, then suche thynges as were commaunded by God, alwayes, and euery where to be obserued. And for suche foolishe trifles, they chalenged the prayse of holines, and brought the people in a fonde beleefe, that they were made holy therby, and finally (the whiche was a muche wickeder deede) they wente aboute to forge a matter of vngodlines, or heresy against their neighbour, for the breache of suche ceremonies, tho obseruacion wherof conduced nothing at all vnto true godlynes.

And when they sawe certayne of his disciples eate meate with vnwashed handes, that is, as they vse to speake, with commune, and vncleane handes, they rebuked them as wicked persons, and their maister too, who had naughtely instructed them. They condemned not this facte because it was either of it owne proper nature vicious, or els forbidden by almightye God, but because it disagreed with their vse and custome. Assuredly the wurst rule that can be to iudge by, is to disalow any thyng, because thou vsest not to do the same.

For it chaunceth many tymes that the foolishest thinges of all, grow to a commune custome, whiche ought not in any wyse to be made the rule of godlines, in asmuche as puritie is to be estemed, not by custome, but by those thynges whiche are true, and commaunded by God. But the Scribes, Pharisees, yea, and almoste all the whole packe of the Iewes, most folishely iudgeing puritie of mynde to stande in corporall thynges, dyd contrarie to this, superstitiously obserue the maner taught them, not of God, but of theyr forefathers, and elders, in suche wyse, that yf they had been in daunger to sterue for hunger, they woulde haue eaten no meate, vnlesse they had first washed theyr handes. And yf they be compelled to take theyr repaste ofte tymes a daye, then washe they ofte tymes, and therfore suppose that they commune cleane vnto the table. Further, if they retourne home from the market, then do they (as though they had gathered sum filthe by touching of the people) washe theyr whole bodies afreshe before they eate any meate: whereas all this while hauyng theyr soules moste polluted with hatred, enuy, ambicion, couetousnes, hypocrisye, and manye other detestable vyces, they neuer haue anye mynde of washyng at all. These, and suche other like traditions, were taught them of theyr forefathers, besydes the constitucions of the law, whereas the law expresly forbedeth that anye thynge be eyther added, or taken awaye from Gods commaundementes. Neyther thought they it sufficient ofte tymes to washe theyr bodies, therby to appere the cleaner: They washed also theyr cruses, theyr brasen vessels, and their tables.

The texte. Then asked hym the Pharisees and Scribes: why walke not thy disciples according to the custome ordeyned by the elders, but eate bread with vnwashen handes? He answered, and sayed vnto them: well prophecied Esay of you hypocrites, as it is written: This people honoreth me with theyr lyppes, but theyr harte is far from me. Howbeit, in vayne do they serue me, teaching the doctrines, and commaundementes of men: for ye laye the commaundement of God apart, and obserue the constitucions of men, as the washing of cruses, and of cuppes, and many other suche lyke thinges ye do.

Nowe coulde they no lenger kepe in this foule scabbe of false reprouyng, yet quarelled not they with the disciples, but assayled the maister himself, as though he had committed sum haynous enormitie. Why, say they, do not thy disciples who folowe the, and hang vpon thyne instruccion and teachyng, kepe the custome begon of our elders, but eate their meate with vnwashen and vncleane handes? Jesus intending to teache vs that there is no more noysom or mischeuous kinde of quarrelling, then when a man vnder pretence of godlynes, kyndeth faute with the well doynges of his neyghboure, sharpely reproueth theyr malice, and coloured righteousnes: By your deedes, sayeth he, you playnely declare, that the Prophete Esay prophecied of you hypocrites, full well, and worthely, whyche make an outwarde shewe of holynes, whereas inwardly ye are replenished with all sinne & wickednes. In this Prophete, God complaynethe in this wyse: This people honorethe me with theyr lyppes, but theyr heart is far from me. And as thēselues do liue, so do they instructe other. I passe nothing vpon this cleanes of theyr bodies, and houshold stuffe, but require of them inward puritie & cleanes of soule. They serue me in vayne wyth this coloured kynde of godlynes, auauntyng and magnifying it, as thoughe it were a thyng of great worthynes, and wherein perfite godlynes did stande, teaching mans tradicions, whiche make no man commendable, and prayse worthy before God: and of a superstitious mynde they haue to obserue the same tradicions, nothynge passynge vpon Gods commaundementes. Loke howe muche difference there is betwene God and manne, so muche difference oughte there to be betwene mens constitucions, and Gods commaundementes. God is a spirite, and that whiche is spirituall and ghostly continueth for euer, and oughte neuer to bee neglected. Agayne, what thynge soeuer is corporall, the same lasteth but for a season. If it be lawfull to passe litle vpon the ceremonies whiche god himselfe hathe commaunded to be kepte, whensoeuer charitie towardes the neyghboure exhorteth so to doe: howe muche lesse then is it meete to breake the commaundementes of God, for kepyng of mans tradicions? It is a wrong shapen godlines, and an vnholy holines, to bee superstitious in kepyng of suche ceremonies as your forefathers instituted and taught you of theyr owne mynde, and in the meane while litle to regard those thinges which God himselfe hath commaunded you to obserue. Ye thinke it to be one of the chiefeste pointes of godlines to washe your handes, your cuppes, your cruces, and to obserue manye other lyke thinges, the whiche your doinges, by reason they haue a certayne counterfayte apparaunce or visure of holines, doe highly set you furth and make you seeme prayse worthy vnto the worlde: and this prayse so gotten by coloured holynes, you set more by then by Goddes auctoritie. For you loue your selues: and neyther seke Goddes glorye, nor the soule health of the people, whose guydes, and teachers you profesle your selfes to be.

¶ And he sayed vnto them: wel, ye cast aside the commaundement of god, to mayntayne your owne constitucions. For Moyses sayd: Honour thy father and thy mother, and whoso curseth father or mother, let him dye the death. But ye saye, a man shall say to father or mother, Corban: which is, what gifte soeuer cummeth from me, shalbe for thy profite. And so ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother, and make the worde of God of none effect through your owne constitucion, whiche ye haue ordayned, and manye such thinges daye. The texte.

Therfore it is no maruayle yf ye disanull, and cleane take awaye that God hath commaunded to be obserued of all men for euer, to thentent that mannes tradicions, whiche procure you great gaynes, and authoritie, may stil continue. Doth not all the worlde see that you thus do? Did not god geue this lawe by Moyses: Honour thy father, and mother: And he that curseth his father or mother, shall dye the death. This God commaundeth not in one place, but doth oft times repete it, and put euerye man in remembraunce thereof, because that children shoulde to theyr power, helpe theyr parentes when they be olde, impotent, or fallen into pouertie, or otherwise, so ofte as they are oppressed with any maner of necessitie, and by this meanes paye them home agayne, the benefyte of theyr nourishing. The same thyng the lawe of nature commaundethe, whiche is likewise emplanted in manye brute beastes, as in Storkes: But you hauinge an eye to your owne peculiar vauntage, doe with your fayned doctrine, make Gods commaundemente of none effect: and require that this lawe (whiche God woulde so fayne haue euery body to kepe) shoulde geue place vnto your fayned coloured doctrine. God himselfe crye the: honour thy father and thy mother: & ye are bolde to saye the contrary: Honour not thy father and thy mother. You crye not so with wordes, but you do it in very dede. So muche the more detestable is your wickednes, because you doke the same with an ymage or colour of godlynes. For to the intente your treasury (wherewith all your exceslle and pride is mayntayned) maye be filled, you craftely allure whomsoeuer you can, to bringe very many gifftes vnto the temple, by defeatinge euen of theyr owne parentes, whom they shoulde accordinge to Gods commaundemēt, succour at theyr nede: perswading them that by this meanes the commaundement is fulfilled, as thoughe the thynge whiche is dedicated vnto the temple, were geuen to God, and that God were the very naturall father of all menne. Wherfore vnto him who hath caste anye money into the treasurye, you saye, that he nowe nedethe not to geue anye thynge But ye saye a man shall say to father, &c.

to the relefe of his poore parentes, because the commaundemente is otherwyse fulfilled: and in the meane while you so feare the parentes with vayne superstition, that they dare not require of theyr children anye thinge, which semethe once dedicated vnto God, leste in so doynge they shoulde bringe themselues in daunger to be accused of sacrilege. Doubtles God hath no nede of your moneye, neyther is the same employed to his glorie, but turned to your owne priuate commoditie: and thoughe it were bestowed vpon the buildynge of the temple, yet with God there is no temple so holy that for the mayntey-naunce therof, he would haue the children forsake theyr parentes at theyr nede.
Do not you, when that by suche fayned doctrines, ye both so deceyue the children, that they refuse to helpe theyr parentes, and also so feare the parentes that they dare not touche anye thynge once consecrated vnto the temple: doe not you, I saye, whiles you thus stablische and vpholde your owne comman-dementes, dysanull and put out of place goddes commaundementes. This thinge haue I broughte you for the for an ensample, whiche ye cannot denye.
But you offend not herein alonely. For in many other thynges you doe the lyke, as in that you nowe doe. Goddes commaundemente is: thou shalte love thy neighbour as thy selfe. And you for trifling vaine thinges taughte you of men, goe a boute to surmyse matters bothe agaynst me, and my disciples, nothyng regardyng goddes commaundement in thys behalfe.

The texte. And when he had called all the people vnto him, he sayde vnto them: Herken vnto me euery one of you, and vnderstande: there is nothyng without a man that can defile hym when it entreth into hym: but the thinges which procede out of a man, those are they that defile the man. If any man haue eares to heare, let him heare. And when he came into the house away from the people, hys disciples asked his of the similitude. And he sayd vnto them: are ye also so greatly without vnderstandyng? Doe ye not yet perceyue that whatsoeuer thyng from without entreth into a man, it cannot defyle him, because it entreth not into his hart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purginge out all meates.

After the Phariseis were with theyse wordes vnto them priuately spoken, rather put to sylence then cured of theyr malicyousnesse, he eftsones called all ỹ people vnto him. For his pleasure was to haue them all monished of the premisses, leste they shoulde at anye time after warde, haue bene by Pharisai-call traditiõs, withdrawen from the puritie of the gospell. Heare you all (saith he) and vnderstande my wordes. You sawe howe I was accused of heresie or vngodlynesse, for that some of my disciples dyd eate breade with vnwashen handes, as who saye, he that so eateth, were by suche meate polluted and made vncleane before God. The cleanes, and vncleanesse of manne, standethe not in outwarde, but in inwarde thynges. Neyther canne the soule of manne bee defiled with corporall thinges. Therefore nothinge that is without man, and entreth into the bodie, can make him vncleane before god. But suche thynges as be within man, and cummeth out of hym, declarethe him to be vncleane. By this darcke saying, the Lorde Jesus gaue the people occasion diligentely to enserche what was the meanyng of his wordes, and to make them more diligent, he sayd moreouer: whoso hath mete eares to heare, let hym heare: meanyng that the foresayed songe was songen in vaine to the deafe Phariseis. But after the multitude was sent awaye, and he gone into a house, then the disciples desyred hym aparte, to expounde them the parable of the difference betwene the thinges entring in & cumming out of man. Jesus here folowinge thensample of a faythfull, and diligent scholemaister, after he had

He ỹ hath eares. &c.

had gyuen them a litle checke, and by that meanes made them to take better hede vnto his wordes, then did he teache them the misterye, and secrete meaninge thereof. What, saye the he, are you also, whome I haue specially chosen out to teache other, so voyde of vnderstanding? Truelye ye your selues oughte to haue gessed what was meant by this parable, by so manye as I expounded to you heretofore. Perceyue you not that mans cleanesse and vncleanesse can neuer be knowen by those externall thinges whiche enter into hym? For whatsoeuer entreth in by the mouthe is not conueyed into the harte, but into the stomacke, and anon after into the bely: from thence, yf there be anye thynge that is vncleane and filthy, it is auoyded out into the priuie: so that to the eater euery meate is cleane, because nature purgeth whatsoeuer is here vncleane, and filthy.

What soeuer thig frō without entreth into ye,

And he sayed: that whiche cummeth out of a man, defileth the man. For from within euen from the heart of men, procede euell thoughtes, aduoutry, fornication, murther, theft, couetousnesse, fraude, deceypte, vncleanes, a wicked ye, blasphemies, pryde, foolishnesse: all these euel thinges cum from within, and defile a man.

The texte.

But those thinges that cum out from the most inward partes of man, be the that both make and declare him to bee vncleane. The seate of the soule or minde, is in the heart, and in the soule is true cleanesse and vncleanes. For this cause he is not forthwith cleane whoso hath washed his handes, but whoso hath a washen, and a cleane harte. Therefore all that cummethe from thence doethe verely declare manne to be cleane, or vncleane. For out of the moste secrete corners of the harte, do yssue euel thoughtes, aduoutry, fornication, manslaughter, theefte, couetousnesse, gyle, falsehode, vnchast lyuinge, a naughty and an enuyous ye, raylyng wordes, pryde, and folishnesse. The meate whiche is eaten with vnwashen handes, bringeth in none of all these enormites, but they springe euen of the man himselfe, that is to saye, of the harte: and when they once cum out, then doe they playnly declare him to bee vncleane in dede, whose harte is defiled with so manye fylthy vices. If they be kept in and hid, yet is the man neuertheless vncleane, in the sight and yes of almighty God, who throughly seeth the entrayles and bowles of the harte. But yf they fortune to come out eyther by wordes or dedes, then do they not onely testifye that the persons from whome they procede are vncleane, but also many times do defile other mo, whiles that by the eyes, and eares, they enter and crepe into the myndes of the hearers and sears. Wherefore let your chiefe care be, to kepe your harte cleane, and then shall it not skill, whether you eate your meate with washen handes, or vnwashen.

And from thence he rose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sydon, and entred into an house, and would that no man should haue knowen. But he could not be hid. For a certayne woman (whose doughter had a foule spirite) assone as she heard of him, came & fell at his feete. The woman was a Greke, out of the nation of Syrophenicia. And she besought him that he would caste out the deuill from her daughter. But Jesus sayde vnto her: Let the children first be fed. For it is not mete to take the childrens bread and to caste it vnto whelpes. She answered, & sayd vnto him: euen so lorde, neuertheless the whelpes also eate vnder the table, of the childrens crummes. And he sayd vnto her: For this sayinge go thy waye, the deuill is gone out of thy daughter. And when she was cum home to her house, she found that the deuell was departed, and her doughter lying on the bed.

The texte.

After these thynges were thus doen, Jesus signifying euen by the very chaungeing of place, how wery he was of the Jewish honouring and seruice, whiche was almoste altogether estemed by the obseruacion of foolishe corporall ceremonies, and coarcted within the very narrowe limites of Jewry: signifi-

yng also how much he desyred to be at large among the Gentiles (where he should be honoured in spirit, and trueth) gat himselfe thence and went into the borders of Tyre, and Sydon, but as a priuie geste because of the enuious Iewes, who by reason they counted the Tyrias and Sidonians for dogges, and abhominable people, woulde not haue suffered him to haue translated and had awaye the doctrine of the ghospell vnto them. Wherfore beyng there, he vsed not to be conuersaunt in open and common places, as he was wont to be among the Iewes, but went into a house, as though he had bene desyrous to kepe hymselfe secrete, and vnknowen. Albeit he coulde in no wise so do. So greatly had the fame of his wordes, and dedes spred abrode, and stretched forth it selfe, euen beyonde the bondes and lymites of Iewrye, as though it had then deuised to ouerrunne the whole worlde. In this wise is the glorye and prayse gotten by leadyng a godlye lyfe after the ghospell, best of all spred abrode, when that of it owne accorde it folowethe hym, who eschueth and shunneth the same. For a certain woman of Canaan, as this rumour was bruted, and noysed abrode of Iesu, came oute of the coastes of her countrey, and anon conceiuing a greate confidence of hym, hasted her to the place where he was: and being with muche a doe let into the house, fell downe at his feete. This womanne was not of the Iewishe, but of the heathen religion: not a Iewesse borne, but a Syrophenisse. Here thou seest a figure of the churhe whiche anon after should be assembled and gathered together of the gentiles. The Iewes drone Iesu out of theyr countrey: but this Syrophenisse forsoke her countrey, and wente to mete him. It is but lost labour to cum to Iesu, vnlesse thou haue first forsaken thyne olde vices beyng now familiar, and of houshold with the. Thou must flitte out of thyne owne house, to thentent thou mayest cum vnto the house where Iesus abydeth.
This woman had a daughter at home vexed with an euell spirite, by the whiche daughter are vnderstand the people geuen to ydolatrie. Wherfore she desyred Iesu that he woulde vouchsafe to delyuer her from the spirit. How muche perfyter was the fayth of this heathen woman, then of the ruler of the synagoge: Iesus because he woulde make the faythe of this woman more apparaunt to all men, shaped her an aunswere as though he had bene of a Iewish minde, saying: suffre the children, first to be filled. It is not besemyng that I take the breade of the children, and caste it to dogges. For the Iewes do glory, and make theyr vaunte that they alone be the children of God, and esteme the gentiles, who are of a contrarye relygion to theyrs, for dogges. He calleth the vertue of the ghospell bread, whiche by the heauenly doctrine, and pure faythe, healeth all diseases, and expelleth all kynde of diuels out of mennes sowles. The woman nothing offended with this rebuke, tourned his wordes into an argumente to obtayne her peticion, the whiche he spake (as it semed) because to shake her of that she shoulde make no further suyte and requeste vnto him herein. Thou sayeste very well, sayeth she, Lorde. The heathen people haue not disdain at the Iewes, that they (as children) doe honorably sit at the table of theyr erreding rythe father and eate theyr fyll of the holye loaues. But yet dogges are permitted to eate the crummes whiche fall downe vnder feete from the childrens table. Iesus, as though he had bene ouercum with so great faith, pacience, humblenesse of minde, and constancy of the woman, answered, and sayd: By reason of this answere thou obteynest that perforce, whiche it was not yet tyme for me to geue the.

Get

Get the home, thy daughter is nowe deliuered of the spirite. The woman gaue credence vnto his wordes, and so departed thence with greate ioye and gladnesse, and proued all thinges true, that Jesu tolde her. For she founde her daughter at reste in her bedde, nowe cleane deliuered from any further vexacion of the fiende. Assuredly the faythe of the mother enforced Jesu to heale the daughter. Assone as the euill spirite is once put to flighte, then folowethe there incontinent, quiet of minde and conscience. For that euer foloweth innocency & cleane life. So at this daye the congregacion of godly folkes, resorteth vnto Jesus, and maketh intercession for suche as are no lesse vexed with Idolatrye, ambicion, wrathe, couetousnesse, and a furious desire to make warre, then yt they were vnder the thraldome of some foule spirite. The Jewes thoughte it not beseming that they whiche a litle before were enforced to doe all mischiefe at the will and pleasure of diuels, shoulde so daynlye throughe the grace of the gospell, be receyued to the dignitie, and felowship of the children of God: and the cause why, was by reason they perceyued not howe this high preeminence oughte not to bee estemed by consanguinitie or kinred, but by feruentnesse, and constancye of faythe, towardes the Lorde Jesu Christe was promised vnto the children of Israel, and to the posteritie or successours of Abraham: But they are the posteritie of Abraham which folowe the fayth of Abraham. They are the children of Israel which require not heauen gates to be opened vnto them for theyr merites sake, but goe aboute violently to entre in by force of an euangelike faith. For Israel is as muche to saye in the Hebrue tongue, as a man strong or valiaunte againste god. For when the Gentiles (who before tyme were blemished wyth all kindes of vices, and had no good dedes at all, whereby they mighte make anye iuste title or clayme vnto the kingdome of heauen) were by the iustice of God cleane excluded and shut oute: then brake they in by the windowe of mercye, and made themselues a waye in by constaunte faythe, as it had been with some toole or weapon, violentlye breakynge by the walles of the same kingdome. The time was not yet come that they shoulde be openly called to the felowship of the kingdome of heauen: but yet the Lorde maketh many forelignes of theyr vocacion, as one desirous to preuente the thing, whiche he chiefly desireth.

¶ And he departed agayne from the dartes of Tyre and Sydon, and came vnto the sea of Galile, throlow the middes of the coastes of the ten cities. And they brought vnto him, one that was deafe & had an impediment in his speache. And they prayed him to put his hande vpon him. And when he had taken him aside from the people, he put his fingers into hys eares, and did spit and touched his tongue, and loked vp to heauen, and syghed and sayde vnto him: Ephata, that is to saye, be opened. And straygtwaye his eares were opened, & the string of his tongue was lewsed, & he spake playne. And he commaunded them that they shoulde tel no man. But the more he forbad them, so muche the more a great deale, they published, saying: He hath done al thinges well, he hath made both the deafe to heare and the dumme to speake. The texte.

After this sede was priuely, and as a man would saye, by stealth, so wen amonges the Tyrians, Sydonians, and Cananites, the Lorde reculed, and wente agayne vnto ỹ lake of Galile: leauinge Sydon, and passinge alonge by the countrey of Decapolie or ten cities, wheras before he healed a man vexed with a spirite. And when he was hither cummen, they brought him a pitifull sight, that is to wete, a manne bothe deafe, and dumme. For he muste nedes be dumme, whoso is of nature deafe: But more miserable is his deafenesse, which lacketh meete eares to heare ỹ worde of god. He is worse dūme, who hath no tongue to confesse his owne filthie liuing and gods mercye. By the hearing of fayth, beginneth our saluacion: and by confession of mouth, is the perfection of soule healthe. The Jewes albeit they dayely hearde Jesus speakinge, yet they hearinge heardе him not, because folowinge thensample of a serpente called an Aspike, whyche stoppethe her eares againste the voyce of the wise enchaunter, they wouldе geue no credence vnto suche thinges as they heardе. And therefore had they a tongue to backbyte, and make yll reporte: but none at all to professe the holsome faythe of Christ. But what shall this sely poore wretche doe, who hath neyther tongue to desire the Lord to geue him healthe, nor eares to heare that voyce of Jesus, whiche reysethe to life euen the deade? Other that had bothe tongue and eares holpe him. They brought him vnto Jesus: they besought him of his gracious goodnesse, to vouchesafe to laye his handе vpon him. So pleasethe it the moste mercifull lorde to helpe sinners, euen at the contemplacion of other mennes faythe. The christian novice is broughte vnto Jesu. He hath made an ende bothe of yll doinge, and naughtye speakynge: but yet hathe he not learned to doоe well: yet hath he not learned to confesse the goodnesse of the ghospell. For howe can he so doe vnlesse Jesu laye his handе vpon him? Men do but labоure in vayne yf Jesu put not to his secrete power and vertue. The lorde couldе euen with the bare worde of his mouthe, haue rasiye healed this deafe and dumme felowe: but this fourme of healing was set out for our enstruction. For like as ỳ wordes of Jesus are moste commonlye parables or misteries: euen so be many times his doinges too. He toke him by the handе, led him aside from the multitude of people. Safe is he whomsoeuer Jesus hath taken, and seuered from the ruffling of this troublous, and vnquiet worlde. Then put he his fingers into his eares, and touched his tongue with his spittell. Nowe is healthe verye nere when Jesus by vertue of his spirite (whiche is the finger of god) vouchsafeth to touche the eares of our minde, when the spettell of heauenlye wisdome (whiche is himselfe) cumminge out of the mouthe of the highеste father, dayneth to touche the tongue of our soule, to thentente that all godly thynges maye relishe and sauiour vnto vs. For without this humour, there is no tast: and if mannes spettell be fautie, then maketh it a wrong iudgemente in tasting. This spettell dothe not onelye leuse the tongue, but also open the eyes of the blinde borne person, as often as it is mingled with earth, and the eyes are therwithall anoynted: wheras the spettell of the Philosophers, and the Phariseis, doethe rather put out the eyes altogether. As Christe did, so in manour doe the teachers of the gospel. They take men and leade them away from the multitude, when they call them backe from the brode waye (by the which very many walke vnto damnacion) to the felowship of the litle flocke of true Christians. They put their fingers into theyr eares, when perswadinge them to put no trust in thinges transitorie, they stirre and exhorte them to embrace the heauenly doctrine. They laye spettel vpon their tonges, when they exhorte men to professe the Euangelike and Christian fayth.

They lay on their handes, when they geue the holy goste to them that be baptised: by whome theyr sinnes are taken awaye, and innocencye is conferred. But the teacher doethe all this in vaine outwardlye, excepte Christe worke within and sende downe his godly vertue from heauen. Jesus willing to shewe vs as it were a certayne figure hereof, when he had taken the man and firste put his fingers into his eares, and then spitte on his tongue, he lifted vp his iyes to heauen, and sighed. This sighing came not of anye mistruste to cure the manne, but was a passion or poynte of him that greuously bewayled mannes calamitie.

For what thinge is more miserable and wretched then they, whose inwarde eares are so occupyed and enombred with worldly lustes, that they cannot heare the worde of God: Whose tongue is so entangled, and infected wyth naughty affections, that they sauour not of heauenly thinges, but are altogether dumme to confesse theyr owne sinfulnes, and dumme to set out the mercy of God. Therefore the sighinge of Jesu, putteth vs in remembraunce in what case we were: but his lokinge vp into heauen, taketh away desperacion shewing vs from whence cummeth our redy succoure, and also whom we ought to recken our selues bounden vnto, that we, whiche had before open eares to heare detraccions, ribaudry, fond tales, Pharisaicall doctryne, opinions of Philosophers, and the suggestions of the diuell, haue nowe the same opened, to heare the heauenly doctrine of the gholpell: and that, we whiche had before our tongue so infected with the spettell of the fleshe, that we lothed the delicate foode of the heauenly Philosophie: so tied with the diuels bondes that we coulde neyther knowledge our offences, nor sette out goddes glorye: do now confesse howe nothynge is due vnto vs for our desertes but onelye hell: and howe it cummethe wholye of the bounteous goodnes of God, that we be chosen bothe to the name, and also to thinheritaunce of the children of God. Wherefore let the priest in lyke manour rather mourne, then rage againste other mennes sinnes: rather sorowe, than be angrye. Neyther lette hym chalenge vnto hymselfe the power to geue absolucion: but loke vp to heauen, confessinge, and testifyinge thereby, that all that euer is doen through sacrametall rites, and ceremonies, is done by goddes power alone, and not by mannes. Jesus sayed vnto the man: Ephata, whiche woorde signifiethe in the Hebrewe tongue, be opened: And by and by of his worde there ensued a vertue. For anon his eares were opened, and the bande of his tongue was lowsed, and he spake redily. They had open eares, who after the lorde saied vnto them (come after me) forsoke all that euer they had and followed him. They had a redye tongue, which after they had receyued the holy goste, spake with sundrie languages the wonders of god, and aunswered the rulers charging them that they shoulde not from thencefor the be so hardye, as to preache the name of Jesu, on this wise: whether we oughte rather to obey god then men, iudge you. These thinges were doen aside from the people. For we muste not make a wicked multitude witnesse bearers of our firste professing of the gospell, leste they haue in derision, that they as yet beleue not.

Therefore Jesus charged them they shoulde tell nobodye hereof, not for that he woulde not haue his miracle disclosed and knowen, but because the thinge selfe dothe better declare the power of god, then any publycacion, or settinge forth of man. They all knewe this deafe & dum person. Nowe he hearde, & had his tonge at will. And so did he blase, euen when he spake neuer a woorde of the mattier, the greate benefite receyued of Jesu. Further, Jesus was in this world conuersaunte vnder the shape & likenes of man, because he woulde instructe menne, and teache them what they shoulde doe. What thinge soeuer

a manne dothe that is excellente, and prayse worthye, lette him coueté to haue no wordes made thereof, to thentente that mannes glorye maye be vtterlye suppressed, and onely goddes glory aduaunced. It is iopardy to magnify and extoll manne, but the power, and goodnesse of God, is euermore moste worthely praysed. Albeit neyther is the glorye and prayse of man (if anye be due vnto him) cleane suppressed: yea oftetimes the more it is auoyded, the more it folowethe. But a christian teacher muste be of this mynde, to desyre, as muche as in him lyeth, to be knowen to god alone: and in so doing, he is the more worthy to be praysed to euery body.

For whoso desirethe glorye and prayse among men, the same in that he is so desirous therof, deserueth to haue none at all. Wherfore in that Iesu forbadde them whiche broughte the dumme manne vnto him, to tell anye bodye what was done, he thereby more prouoked them to publith, and tell it abrode to all menne. And so muche the more had they his greatnesse, and excellencie in admiracion, because that he, who bothe was able to doe, and wrought in dede suche feates among them, did not onely not require of them anye mede or rewarde for his laboure, but also wouldе not somuch as take the fruicion of that glorye and prayse, which he moste worthely deserued, for so notable a miracle. But as it is the propertie of him who is beneficiall in dede, to require no prayse for hys benefite: so is it agayn the part of a thankfull perso, so much the more earnestly to render hartie thankes, because the authoure of the benefite loketh for none at all. Therfore those felowes reported euery where of Iesu, saying: He hath done all thinges well, and hath restored to the deafe theyr hearing: and to the dumme, theyr tongue, and speache. This praise is agreable to none, but to god alone. No earthly manne doeth all thinges aright. All the miracles that Iesu wrought, were vndoubtedly our benefites: whiche miracles if a man wey and ponder after the outward appearaunce of corporall thynges, in dede there were many of them, that farre passed this, wherewith he made the deafe to here, and the dumme to speake. But according to the spiritual meaning hereof, the fume of a christen mannes felicitie standeth in this poynte, that with his eares he may heare the wordes of the gospel, and then with his tongue, vttre, & speake what he hath learned, and geuen credence vnto.

He hathe done al thinges wel, &c.

¶ The. viii. Chapiter.

The texte.

¶ In those dayes when there was a very greate companye, and had nothing to eate, Iesus called his disciples to him, and sayde vnto them: I haue compassion on the people because they haue nowe bene with me thre dayes, and haue nothing to eate, and if I sende them away fasting to theyr owne houses, they shall faynte by the way. For diuers of them came from farre. And his disciples answered him: where shoulde a man haue bread here in the wildernesse to satisfie these? And he answered the: Howe many loaues haue ye? They sayde, seuen. And he commaunded the people to sitte downe on the grounde: And he take the seuen loaues. And when he had geuen thankes, he brake them and gaue to his disciples to set before them. And they did set them before the people. And they had a few small fishes and when he had blessed, he commaunded them also to be set before them. And they did eate and were satisfied, and they toke vp of the broken meate that was left, seuen basketes full. And they that did eate were about fower thousand. And he sent them away.

The

THe Lord Jesus exhorteth his disciples by diuerse ensamples, to continuall beneficence and well doyng, the chiefeste parte wherof is to feede the ignorannte people wyth the doctrine of the ghospell. Therefore he repeteth thensample of feadyng, because the thyng so ofte tymes pryntedin theyr myndes, should in no case out of memorie. For it fortuned on a certayne season, that a greate multitude of people, came vnto hym to wyldernes, bryngyng with them many sicke folkes, payned with diuerse diseases. The moste gracious Lorde cured all theyr corporall sickenesses, and fedde theyr soules with the heauenlye doctrine. And by reason he was so readie to do good, he so wan the hartes of the multitude, that they could by no meanes be seuered from hym.

And whiles theyr myndes were wholelye fixed vpon the kyngdome of God, they remembred not to make prouision for vitayles, in somuche that when theyr bodies were healed, and their soules fed, they were in great daunger to sterue for hungre.

Assuredly honger is a sore thing, especially when it chaunceth among a multitude. Jesus mindyng to teache the apostles by dede selfe that suche shall want nothing, as cleaue vnto hym by sincere fayth, sayed vnto them: I haue compassion vpon this multitude. For lo, they haue been with me nowe this three dayes, and haue nothyng to eate. If I sende them awaye fasting as they be, it is ieopardie leste they faynte, and tyre by the waye, before they gette home. For sum of them came a greate waye hence. By these wordes Jesus prouoked his disciples to attend vnto the miracle, whiche he purposed to worke. Howebeit they being yet rude, and ignorannt, had cleane forgotten howe that before he had fedde a greate numbre of people with fiue loaues, and two fishes: and therefore answered in this wyse: Where shoulde a man haue breade here in wildernesse to satisfie so great a multitude, and so houngrye withall by reason of two dayes fastinge, although there lacked not money ynough to bye it. Here thou hearest an answere of forgetfulnesse, and distrust. And his disciples answered &c.

Jesus asked them agayne: howe manye loaues haue you? They loked vpon theyr vytayles, and answered, seuē. Doubtlesse this was the true Euangelike breade, not of barly, but of wheate, like as were the loaues before mencioned, wher with the chyldren ate fedde, whiche is not caste to dogges. Barlie hath in it his proper floure, but couered with a rough huske, or couering. The fiue bokes of Moyses called the Pentateuche, haue also in them a spirituall vnderstanding, but thesame is wrapped, and couered with darcke figures. The nūbre of the loaues was multiplied, but the couering was taken awaye, intoken that grace was encreased, and ceremonies diminished.

Nowe whereas the disciples thought that these vitayles would not haue been sufficient for so greate a multitude of people, Jesus, that notwithstāding, commaunded them all to sitte downe vpon the grounde. It is a blessed feaste where the hungrye multitude sitteth downe at Jesus commaundemente. That is doen, whensoeuer the people desirous to heare goddes woorde, cum to the temple, there to heare Jesu speaking by the mouth of a good preacher. For many do cum with no more deuocion to the sermon, then the common sorte be wonte to goe vnto the stage, there to beholde a playe or enterlude, of sum vnghostly mattier. He that will haue his belye filled with the loaues of Jesu, muste must sitte downe, and that vpon the grounde. He muste cum hither with quiet affeccions. They deserue not to be fed with this meate, whiche lye all at pleasure in the beddes of the Phariseis, and Philosophiers doctrine. O thou that arte but yearth, and asches, why art thou proude? why art thou puffed vp with vayne glory, by reason of thy vayne philosophy? why putteste thou confidence in these thinges, wherin is no saftie? Knowe thy selfe: Humble and caste downe thyselfe vnto the grounde from whence thou camste. Let all fleshely lustes be setled, and quiet in the: and then shalt thou be filled with Christes meate. All this that I speake of was doen. The whole multitude sate doune vpon the grounde. Beholde now, and marke me well what Jesus doeth. He toke the seuen loaues, and to shewe that all cummeth of God, what soeuer conduceth vnto mannes saluacion, he lifted vp his eyes to heauen (for there dwelleth the father, of whom he commaunded this breade dayly to be craued) and gaue hym thankes: not takynge vpon him as of himselfe, the authoritie of this ministerie, leste pure manne shoulde take ought vpon him. For he might iustly haue taken vpon him this authoritie, as equal with the father (albeit concerning also his diuine nature what soeuer he is, or hathe, he is debtour for the same, vnto the father) but thensample that he shewed, was more expediente for our enstruccion.

And he toke the seuen loaues &c.

After he had geuen thankes, he brake the loaues, and being broken, deliuered them vnto his disciples: that euen as they receiued them, so shoulde they sette them before the people. Mannes wordes are not pythy and effectuall, except they be handeled before, with Christes handes. Thou haste eloquence: Thou haste knowleage in philosophie: Thou haste a good witte: thou haste knowleage in holy scripture, in the lawes ciuill, and canon: what soeuer thou haste, firste deliuer it vnto Christes handes: let him blesse, and haloweit: lette hym breake it: and then do thou minister the same vnto the people: not as thyne owne, but as receyued, and deliuered of him. For there are some, whyche breake the bread of holy scripture not as they ought to do, writhing and wresting it to the lustes of man, and not to the wyll and pleasure of Jesu. For Jesus doethe so breake it, that the hungry multitude maye be fylled, and not that the ambicion, and couetousnesse of prynces maye be therewith bolstred, and maynteyned. Whoso teacheth the ghospell for gayne, or for to get glorye, and prayse of mã, or els for any other worldly affeccions, the same receyueth not loaues broken of Christ. Therfore in preaching the worde of God, and Christes ghospell, let vs folowe his disciples. As Christ commaunded them, so did they set the loaues ready broken to theyr handes, before the multitude.

Here some manne will saye: what, is there no meate? Is it onely a breade feaste? There must not be muche added vnto the loaues of the ghospell. There is nothyng of more vertue and efficacie: nothyng more swete and pleasaunte in tasting then they are: And yet through the bounteous liberalitie of the feast maker, there are added vnto the same a fewe small fishes. Paraduenture the apostles will put hereto certayne epistles, howebeit theyr puttinge to will not be muche, but a very small matier or trifle, in respecte of the euangelike prouision. This addicion was permitted for the lothsomnesse of certayne persones: but we must require it no more. We oughte to contente our selues with the meate alreadie prepared, leste yf any would styll put to of his owne prouision whatsoeuer hym lustethe, it shoulde then become the feaste of menne, and not of

And they had a fewe smal fishes &c.

Jesu

Jesu Christ. For Jesus did lykewyse halow these litle fishes, albeit they were but few, and small, and commaunded them to be set downe before the people, whiche thing yf he had not doen, they should not haue been set before them at all. Do not here complayne of the frugalitie, and slender prouision of meates: if thou wilt permit the knackes and iunckettes of the Rhethoricians, the royall dishes of the Philosophers, and the vnsauerie potage of the Phariseis, to be serued in, then shall it be ieopardie, leste the bread of the gospell sauer not vnto the mouthe that is infected & brought out of taste with so many sortes of diuerse meates. Now that we may depart with full bellies from this euangelike feaste, let the teachers do as the apostles did, and likewise the people, as did that multitude. What did the apostles? As they receiued this meate of ỳ lorde, so did they set it downe before the people, without any doubting, or reasoning. The multitude was also quiet, and receiued it without murmuryng & grudgeing against theyr ministers, and toke well a worth whatsoeuer was geuen them. And so in conclusion, besides that euery one of them had ynoughe, there were also seuen baskettes fylled with the meate that remayned when euerye man had eaten his fill. Moreouer the people (whiche a manne may more meruayle at) that were satisfied and filled here with, drue almost to the number of fower thousand persons. Certes this was the largesse of goddes worde and the ghospell. Whensoeuer there cummeth a proud teacher fournished with no small prouision and furniture, as well of liberal sciences, as of other good learning, lawes, and constitucions, so that he hath in all thynges exceedyng greate skill and knowleage, crying ofte that he shall not haue tyme ynough to prosecute his matier, that his audience is not receyuable of so high misteries, that he is drowned with copie of matier, and standeth in doubte where he maye best begin: Do not we see it cum to passe that his audience departeth away hungrymuche lesse then remayneth there ought, when the feast is ended.

And they that eate, &c.

But of this frugall, and sparing feast of Jesu, there are lefte seuen baskettes full of broken meate, vnspent. The aboundaunce and plenty of the euangelike feast, standeth not in the multitude of sciences, as it were in sundry kyndes of meates so many in numbre, that the sight of them will take awaye a mannes appetite, and prouoke hym to lothsomnesse, nor in sauces made of the mengling together of all manour of humayne and secular learnynges, but in the vertue of the worde deliuered vs of god, and truly ministred without any fraude, or couine. When Jesus had thus fed the people, then he sent them awaye. This is also sumwhat, happely to depart from the feast or banket of Jesu. So are they sent awaye, who render him hartie thankes: who laye vp his benefites in theyr soules, and there digeste the meate whiche they haue receyued: who after they be cum home (their bodies beyng now, as it were well fedde) do by good workes doing, practise suche thynges as they haue learned.

And he sent them away &c.

¶ Anon he entred into a ship with his disciples, and came into the partes of Dalmanutha. And the Phariseis came furth, and began to dispute with him, seking of him a signe from heauen, tempting him. And when he had sighed in his spirite, he saythe: why doth this generacion seke a signe: Verely I saye vnto you, there shall no signe be giuen vnto this generacion. And he left them, and went into the shippe agayne. And departed ouer the water. The texte.

These thynges so doen, Jesus forthwith departed thence, and hasted an other waye. The heardman muste neuer be conuersaunt with his flocke, but when it is to be holpen. He hath healed the sicke, taughte the people, and fedde those that were in ieopardy to perishe for hungre. After all these benefites stil

to tarrie with them, semeth to bee a poinct of suche a one as loketh for summe thankes or gramercies. The necessitie of the multitude, whether it be bodily, or ghostly, is by all manour of meanes to be holpen: but the nature of ỹ people is suche, that for the least good tournes of all, they are wont to geue moste hartie thankes. It is the smallest benefyte that canne be, to feede and nourishe the body: it is a greater to heale it, and the greatest of all to heale and feede the soule, with holy doctrine. None of them made him a kyng for the doctrine that he preached, & the diseases he cured: But for meate, they gaue him a kyngdome. And leste they woulde nowe haue done the like agayne, he departed straighte wayes from them, and takyng with him his disciples (whom he chose because they shoulde alwayes accompanye him) he toke ship, and so came vnto the coastes and borders of Dalmanutha or Magedan. And that the vnbeliefe of the Pharisees may the ofter appeare, they came likewyse hither out of theyr countrey, not to be healed, but to pike quarels. For they had enuy at his miracles, and enuied also the people whiche were holpen with so manye of his benefytes. For this cause they began to reason the mattier with him, as though the miracles which he shewed, had not been wrought by the heauenly power, because they were (as they sayed) but base, and after a common cast. Wherfore in case he would haue them, being men far aboue the commune sorte, and as you would saye, heauenlike felowes, to beleue in hym, they required hym to shewe some signe from heauen, as Moyses obteyned Manna from thence: and Helye brought to passe by his prayers, that fyre sodaynlye discended from the same place, and consumed both the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and to be short, al the water that was in the trenches or cesternes by the altare.

And ỹ pharisees came forth, &c.

And began to dispute with hym. &c.

The Lorde knowing right well that whatsoeuer he had done, they would haue had a quarell to him therfore, for if there had been any wonderfull signe or token shewed thē from aboue whereas the princes of darkenesse do raigne, they might with much more apparaunce of trueth, haue ascribed it vnto Beelzebub, then those thynges whiche they saw with theyr ies, heard with theyr eares, and handled with theyr handes, chiefly because it is a commune practise among the experte in arte Magike, to cause sodayne showers, and dasshes of rayne, thunder, lightnyng, hayle, and tempest: the Lorde, I saye, perceyuing this, sighed in his spirite, shewyng thereby howe wofull he was for theyr so obstinate vnbeliefe. And as though he had been in a fume, and chafed with anger, spake vnto himselfe on this wise: What a froward nacion is this, whiche after so manye miracles seene, yet neuertheless requireth a signe, as thoughe she had neuer seene none before. Then he tourned him to the Pharisees, and sayed: Of this one thing, I assure you: there shall no signe be nowe geuen vnto this nacion, the whiche onely to tempt me, she requireth from heauen. But she shall haue a signe geuen her that she loketh not for, from beneath. And it shall bee the signe of Jonas. For this Jonas after he was swalowed vp the space of three dayes, and beleued to haue been dead, was deliuered againe out of the whales bely, when no man thought it: euen so the sonne of man after he hath been hid about thre dayes space in the belly of the earth, shall rise vp alyue agayne, contrary to all your expectacion and wening.

And when he had sighed. &c.

Verily I saye vnto you. &c.

When the Pharisees vnderstode not these wordes, Jesus departed from them, as from desperate persons, and retourned vnto the shippe, and so passed ouer the water: Thus the Lorde Jesus desirous of mannes helth, ofte times chaungeth place, not seking for sacrifices, wherof he had long agoe his fyl, but true faith. This scarcely found he in the worlde, but yet euery where rather then among the priestes, Scribes, Pharisees, and head men of the people. So yll doth the faith of the gospel agre with thē, that haue the world at will.

¶ And they had forgotten to take bread with them, neyther had they in the shippe with them more then one loake. And he charged them, saying: take hede, beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, and of the leauen of Herode, and they reasoned among them selues, saying: We haue no bread: and Iesus knewe it, and sayth vnto them: why take ye thought because yē haue no bread? perceyue ye not yet neyther vnderstand? haue ye your hertes yet blynded? haue ye iyes and se not? And haue ye eares and heare not? Do ye not also remember when I brake fyue loaues, among fiue thousande men? How many baskettes full of brokē meat toke ye vp? They sayde vnto hym, twelue. When I brake seuen among foure thousand, how many baskettes of the leauing of the brokē meate toke ye vp? They said, seuen. And he sayde vnto them: howe happeneth it that ye do not vnderstand? The texte.

Here as they sailed, the disciples called not to remembraunce how they had forgotten to prouide themselues of breade. For they hadde but one loake with them in the shippe. Iesus perceiuing howe they were careleſſe by reason of forgetfulneſſe, and not for the faith they had in him, gaue them warning therof, and by that meanes caused them to be carefull afreshe: Albeit this their carefulneſſe came not so muche of diſtruſt, as it did of an humaine negligence, and forgetfulneſſe.

For hauing their myndes wholy fixed vpon the woordes and deedes of Iesu, thei hadde no remembraunce of breade: and it was expedient for vs that they so oft tymes forgatte howe a greate numbre of people was ſuffiſed with fiue loaues, to thentent it shoulde the deplier be fastened in oure mindes howe those persounes shall wante nothyng, who with pure harte and mynde, continuallye cleaue vnto Chriſte. That shippe is sufficientlye prouided for, that hathe in it that one loake, which is Chriſte Iesus. Wherfore his pleasure was to sturre vp this carefulnes in them, because he woulde heale them therof. And for this purpose, he gaue them a charge saying: Loke diligently that you beware of the leuen of the Phariſeis, and of Herode. This woorde leuen (which thei hearde, but wiſte not what he meāt therby) caused thē nowe when it was to late, to be carefull, & take thought afreshe, howe they shoulde make prouiſion for vitailes. Therfore they began to whiſper, & saye softely: we haue no bread. For one thyng brought another into memorye. After they hearde him once make mencion of leuen, straightwayes it came to their remembraūce that they had forgottē to bye thēſelues bread. Of this matter they talked softely one to another, as though thei had made a faute through forgetfulnes, because they bought no breade. Howbeit this forgetfulnes pleaſeth Iesu very well, whenſoeuer through the great deſire we haue of heauenly thinges, we forget corporall & worldly matters. They feared leſte they shoulde haue bene checked for their negligēce: but thei were rebuked for their vaine & superfluous carpe & care. Wherfore, saieth the lorde, doe you thus reaſon the matter amōg youre ſelues, beyng carefull because you haue no breade? Haue you as yet, after I haue enſtructed you with so many preceptes, taught you with so many enſamples, & so ofte warned you, no perceueraūce & vnderſtanding at all? Are your hartes yet blynded? and be you in case, that you haue iyes and see not? eares, & heare not? Do you not at the leaſte wyſe remember the thing whiche was twise done, of late before your iyes: you sawe, not long ago, howe fiue loaues broken with my handes, and dealte of you, suffised fyue thousand people, in suche wyse that euery body had his fyll. And howe many basketes full of broken meate dyd you then take vp? They sayd, twelue. Afterwarde, whan seuen loaues lykewise suffised fower thousande persones, howe many baskettes fylled you with the reuersion, and meate that was lefte? They answered, seuen. Then sayde Jesu: howe then chanceth it that sithe you haue bene so oft and manye waies taughte, you doe not perceyue howe this care for your foode and liuing is superfluous: and that the monicion whiche I gaue you of the auoydyng the phariseis and Herodes leuen, perteineth nothinge at all to bread, but to theschewyng of theyr doctrine, leste you be likewyse deceiued as they deceyue many a one. A very small piece of leuen maketh al ꝑ dowe sower, or sauery. If the leuen be naught, then is all the dowe marde. They make a shew and semblant of godlynes, notwithstanding they be very farre from true godlines: and they dissent in opinions among theselues, whereas both of them dooe shamefully erre, and be out of the way. For the Herodiãs do many times erre by reason they be ignorannt in holy scripture, beleuing not that the bodies shall rise agayne: and all is because they beleue nothing, but what they se with their iyes: The Phariseis, although they haue the scriptures at theyr fingers ende, yet blinded with euill lustes and desyres, doe withstande true godlynes. you muste be chiefly ware of their doctrine, leste both youre selues be infected therwith, and also other mo hereafter, by the contagiousnesse of your infeccion. But embrace you the breade made sauery with the leuen of the Gospell, that you maye likewise distribute this pure bread to other.

The texte. ¶ And he came to Bethsaida. and they brought a blynde man vnto hym, and desyred hym to touche hym. and he caught the blynd manne by the hande, and led hym out of the towne, and when he had spitte in his iyes, and put his handes vpon hym he asked hym yf he sawe ought. And he loked vp, and sayde: I see the men. For I perceyue them walke as they were trees. After that, he put his handes againe vpon his iyes, and made him see, & he was restored, and sawe euery man clerely. And he sent hym home to his house, saying: neither go into the toune, nor tell it to any other.

In the meane while they arriued, and came to Bethsaida, and behold howe euery where is ready matter and occasion ministred to shew mercy. Here in a certaine strete, they brought hym a blynde manne, and desired him to touche him. This blynde body desyred nothing hymselfe, but intercession was made for him, by other men. No man desyreth healthe of the Lorde Jesu, but suche a one as he toucheth. For the first touche bringeth a man to the knowlege of himselfe. This man was not poore blynde, or a littell appayred, and decayed in sight, but as bysome as was possible to be. They ꝑ be so blind, haue neede to be ledde to Jesu by other men, whiche by prayer maye procure them theffectuall touche of his holy hande. Jesus, who coulde with a becke haue healed what blynd manne soeuer hym luste, restored hym not byanby to his sight, because he woulde vnder a figure, shewe his disciples howe muche a do it is, en suche persons can be brought to the knowledge of the truethe as of long tyme haue continued in theyr errours. Suche a blyndnesse was the blindnesse of the Painims and Gētiles, who so many hundred yeares, embraced the worshippyng of Idols, in steade of great godlynes. Suche a one also was the blindnes of the Jewes, whiche couldenot be made to forsake the superstition receiued of theyr elders whereunto they had so many yeares accustomed.

Therfore

Therfore when the Bishop and preacher of Gods worde, shall chaunce to mete with suche a blinde man, what muste he do: marke what Jesus dyd. Firste he toke the blind man by the hande. O blessed guide: but whyther dyd he leade hym: he lead him out of the towne. That manne setteth before his iyes the worste ensample or patarne that cā be, whoso folowethe the trace and steppes of the multitude. They fauour themselues to theyr owne perill, that saye thus: I do not this thyng alone. Euery man doeth so, as well as I. I hadde leauer playe the vnwyse manne with the multitude, then be wyse with a fewe. Suche as are blynd, are diuerse wayes in ieopardy, so lōg as they be among company. They are laughed to scorne: they are runne vpon: they rumme, and strike against other: they are thruste out of place, and haue manye a fall. Therfore firste of all the blind manne must be leade out of the place, whereas much company and resorte of people is. He walketh now safely that hath such a guide. What did the Lorde moreouer: he spit in his iyes, and then putte to his handes, and touched them. Neither were his iyes, yet opened: so great was his blindnesse. Then Jesus asked him whether he sawe ought. As he had spoken the worde, the blynd man lifted vp his iyes, conceiuing as it were sum lytle hope to be restored to his sight, and sayd: I see men walkyng like trees. They that haue not yet perfitely receiued the light of the Gospell, whatsoeuer they see in this worlde, seemeth muche greater then it is in dede. They see a ryche man, he semeth a plane tree. They see an heade officer or a prince: they thynke they see an Apple tree, or a Cypresse tree. When he had spit in his iyes.

They see a stoicke philosopher, with a greate beарde, or a Phariseу trimmed with brode hemmes and phylacteries: they beleue he is a fygge tree. Nowe if their iyes were clensed, and thinges would shewe and appeare vnto them in their propre lykenes, and as they be in dede, then shoulde they perceyue what maner of trifles, and vanities, suche thinges were, as semeth so greate vnto hym, whiche is halfe blind. But the Lorde who quencheth not the smokyng flare, nor forsaketh him that hath but halfe a syght vntill he se perfitly, dyd eftsones put his handes to the blynd mans iyes, and foorthwith he began to haue a clearer sight, and at the length attayned suche perfiteneſſe therof, that he sawe all thinges clearely. After that he putte his handes agayne vpon his iyes.

Blessed is he who hauing the iyes of his harte lightned by Christe, seeth euery thyng plainlye. Vnto hym those thynges seame leaste, whiche vnto the worlde appeare greatest. Vnto hym those thynges seme fowle and filthye, that make the goodlyest shewe vnto the worlde. Vnto hym those thynges appeare greatest, whiche seme vyle and nothyng worth vnto the same. Whosoeuer thou be that art a teacher of the Gospell, despyse not the weakenes of them whiche are newe beginners in learning the philosophye and doctrine of the gospell. At the firste time it is ynoughe for them to be brought out of ỳ towne, that is to saye, to haue departed from their olde synnes. Then must the doctrine of the gospell be straight wayes put foorth, and preached vnto them whereby their iyes maye be lightened: and first of all the rudimentes, and first principles of the euangelike perfection are to be taught, vpon the professing wherof, suche as entre into Christes religion, and be nouices of the same may receiue the sacrement of baptisme. Anone after, there muste be taught them a more secrete and pithy doctrine, whiche shall make them to see, and perceyue euery thyng clearly. These thinges shall the ministers of Jesus Christe doe.

But Jesus himselfe wyll vouchesafe to touche the blynde mans eyes, with an hyd and secrete vertue, that he maye receyue his sight agayne.

And he sent him hõe to his house.

After the Lorde had done this good dede, he bad the man retourne home to his house, forbydding hym to tell any bodye what was done. As ofte as he commaundeth any facte of his to be conceled, he teacheth the preestes thereby howe they ought not to seke for any prayse and glorye amonge menne, yf they haue done any thynge well, and prayse worthy, in the ministracion of the ghospell. Agayne if at any tyme he commaunde his facte to be publyshed and tolde abrode, it is a monicion for hym that is healed of his synnes, bothe to knoweledge his owne filthynes, and also to displaie and set out the goodnes of god, vnto whome onely he is a debtourr, for that he is chaunged, and made a newe man. Nowe to retourne into his owne house, is nothyng els, but after the time he hathe once receiued grace from heauen, not to forget what he was before, & to what inconuenience he shall fall agayne, yf he be not preserued thorough the grace and beneficiall goodnes of almightye God. If it chaunce him in his retournyng homeward to cum into any towne, that is to say, among a sinful and a wycked multitude of people, whiche will rather laughe Christes religion to scorne, then beleue in Christe, there ought he not vndiscreetely to bable out the misteries of our fyrst profession.

Jesus sayde vnto hym: goe vnto thy house, and if thou enter into any towne, tell nõ bodye. He healed one before, whiche was bothe deafe, and dumme. The same fellowe heard the worde of the Ghospell, and spake redilye.

Nowe hathe he healed a blynde man, who notwithstanding his sight be good and perfite, yet is he commaunded to kepe sylence amonge vngodly persons & synners, forasmuche as when he is cum home, the thynge it selfe shall open the myracle to suche as knewe hym blynde. For there is a tyme when it behoueth a man to profesle the mysteryes of the ghospell. Agayne there is a tyme when it is better to concele the same.

The texte.

¶ And Jesus went out, and his disciples, into townes that belong to the citie, called Cesarea Philippi. And by the waye, he asked his disciples, saying vnto them: whom doo men saye that I am? And they aunswered: some saye thou art John Baptiste, and some saye Helyas: agayne some saye that thou arte one of the numbre of the Prophetes. And he sayde vnto them: But whome saye ye that I am? Peter answereth and sayeth vnto him. Thou arte very Christ. And he charged them that they shulde tell no manne of him. And he began to teache them howe that the sonne of manne muste suffer many thynges, and be reproued of the elders, and of the hye Prestes, and Scribes, and be killed, and after three dayes, arise agayne. And he spake that sayinge openly. And Peter toke hym aside, and began to chide hym. But he tourned about, and loked on his disciples, and rebuked Peter, saying: Go after me Satan, for thou sauerest not the thinges that be of God but the thinges that be of men.

Nowe maketh he a triall howe muche his disciples haue profyted ghostly, prouing whether suche thynges be done in them spiritually, as in other haue bene wrought corporallye, and by darke fygures. Therefore he departed from Bethsaida, & went in company with his sayd disciples to ꝑ litle tounes belonging to the citie of Cesarea, surnamed Philippi. As he wente by the waie, he asked them what the people supposed of hym. For nowe after so manye myracles wroughte, euen the common sorte ought to haue conceyued some maruaylous great opynion of hym. Jesus was not ignorant what the common opynion was of hym: but his intente and purpose was, to shewe vs

whyche is the true euangelike faith, that saueth the faithfull: & howe muche it differeth from the inconstante, and variable opinion of the common people.
Whom (saythe he) do men saye that I am? The disciples answered plainly, as they had hearde. Some men (ye they) suppose thou art John Baptist, who is relyued again. Other some take the to be Helye the Thesbite, whose cõming was promysed by Malachy the Prophete. And agayne other there are, whoe thinke not that thou art Helie, but some other of ỳ olde Prophetes risen againe from death to lyfe. These were the opinions of those men, who as then, had the greatest opinion of him. For being themselues but men, they could suppose nothing of him aboue the state & condicion of man. They supposed hym to be a man of great excellencie, but as yet they beleued not howe he was Messias, the very sonne of God, and sauiour of the worlde. yet was this a rudiment and first principle (suche as it was) of the euangelyke and christen profession, the mystery wherof, was not as yet to be disclosed to the common sorte. For it being once discouered, no man can be saued, saue he whyche beleueth that Jesu is the authour and originall cause of all healthe and saluacion. The well of ỳ euangelike saluacion, is a sure beleke on Jesus Christ, the sonne of God, inspired vs by the heauenly inspiracio. And to wryng this beleke out of the Apostles, he sayd: The cõmon people, as I perceyue, are wauering in theyr fayth, hauing no constant opinion of me, and yet haue they a greater opinion of me, then such as sayed, I was nothing els but a Carpentours sonne: then such as said I was furious and madde, & sought me out to thentent to haue bounden me with cheines: the suche as sayd, I had the spirite of Beelzebub. But what say you, who be of household, and of familiar acquaintaunce with me, & haue bene alwayes witnesses of all that euer I haue done, and taught: whom saye you that I am? Then Peter the chiefe professoure of the ghospell, made an-swere in all their names, and sayde: Thou arte that selfe same Messias long agoe promised of the Prophetes, the sonne of the lyuing God, by whõ onely halthe & saluacion was promysed vnto the world. When the lord had greatlyallowed this open cõfession of his, as inspired of God, and had geuen there-unto a worthy testimony of blysfulnesse, and pronounced it to be the foundacion of the churche and euangelike Citie, whiche no puissaunce of the deuell shoulde euer be able to shake: Then charged he theym strayghtly, that they shoulde in no wyse discouer what they knewe by thinspiracion of the father, before the time were cum. It behoued that the people should awaite for Mes-sias and beleue that he should shortely cum: hõwbeit as yet, it was not expedient to be knowẽ that Jesus was Messias. For this was it necessary for our instruccion that glory should spring of base and humble estate. The disciples of an humain affecciõ, abhorred the displeasures of theyr maister, muche desyrous to haue hym greatly esteemed and taken for a holy felowe of euery body. But it pleased the euerlasting wisedom to obserue the other order. Therfore Jesus began to teache them what he should suffer, before he would haue his greatnesse and excellencie knowen vnto the worlde. The sonne of manne (sayed he) of whome you haue conceiued so hyghe an opinion, muste suffer great reproche, many paynes and tormentes, be condemned as a felon, of the Scribes, priestes, and head men of the people: and in conclusion, be putte to a shamefull deathe, as an euyll doer, in somuche that among worldly men, it is not possible for any manne to be counted more vile, abiecte and desperate

Whom doe men saye that I am.

But whom say ye that I am.

then he. But for all this, there is no cause why ye shoulde despayre.

Kepe stedfastly in mynde youre confession, whiche ye haue made before me. After they haue persecuted me to deathe, I wyll ryse and be alyue agayne, on the thyrde daye. And where as he had nowe and then before, sumwhat darkely monyshed them of the premisses, at this present he spake his mynde playnly, because it appered they coulde nowe a waye with suche communycacyon, sith they had geuen so noble a verdicte and sentence of theyr maister.

But for all that they coulde not yet abyde to heare any mencion of his death, although they shoulde thorowghe hope of his resurrection haue taken comforte agayne. The loue wherwith they enbraced Jesu, was great: but yet was the same a very worldely loue, and an humayne affection. For as yet they had not receyued the holye Ghoste, whiche should make perfyte in them, whatsoeuer was vnperfyte. Wherfore when Peter hearde suche fell and cruell wordes of condemning, tourmentinge, and sleing, he was not afearde to take Jesus aside, as thoughe he would secretly monyshe hym of some thinge whyche shoulde be for his weale, and profyte.

Forsoth this is mans wisdome, whiche oftimes studieth to go before the wysdome of god. Yea he was bolde to rebuke his lorde, as thoughe he had not bene well aduised for that he woulde dye, sith he might auoyde deth. And albeit he beleued he woulde be alyue agayne on ỹ third day, yet he thought it muche better for hym not to dye at all, then after deathe to reliue. This leude tache of Peter, although it proceded of a certayne harty loue towardes Jesus, yet dyd Christe openly, and sharply reproue, to thentente we shoulde learne in all thynges obediently to folowe the wyl of God, and not with our fonde iudgement, to go before his determinacions. It is not mans parte to take Jesu aside, and rebuke hym, for feare leste he doe, what he hath determyned to doe. But we ought reuerently to beseche hym, that he wyll vouchesafe to take and lead vs, whyther soeuer it please hym. Therefore because he woulde cleane wede out of all theyr myndes, this naughty affection, he fyrste tourned from Peter to his disciples, and then beholdyng them (whome he knewe right well dyd not dissente in opinion from theyr spokesman, though he bolder, and more presumptuous then the reste, was not afearde to speake his mynde) he rebuked Peter agayne, of whom he was rebuked before, saying: Why letteſt thou me Satan? That worde in the Syrian tongue, signifieth an aduersary: as who saye: Why doeste thou that art but a disciple, assaye to goe before thy mayster? Thou that art a man, attempt to go before god? folowe rather behynd. This is not mans busines whiche is nowe in hande. Thyne affeccion and loue is as yet a worldely affeccion: neyther sauereſt thou of those thynges whiche are of god. If thou wylte be my disciple, it becommeth the to folow my deathe, and in no wise to hinder it. And not the alone (albeit chiefely thee & the other whõe I haue specially chosẽ) but also all ỹ will profesſe themselues to be my disciples.

The texte.

¶ And when he had called the people vnto hym, with his disciples also, he sayed vnto them: whosoeuer will folowe me, let him forsake hymself, and take vp his crosse, and folowe me: for whosoeuer wyll saue his lyfe, shall lose it. But whosoeuer shall lose his life for my sake and the Gholpels, the same shall saue it. For what shall it profite a man if he wynne all the worlde, and lose his owne soule? Or what shall a man geue to redeme his soule withall agayne? Whosoeuer therfore shall be ashamed of me, and of my wordes, in this aduoutreous, and synfull generacion: of hym also shall the sonne of man be ashamed when he commeth in the glory of hys father, with the holy Angels.

When

When Jesus had thus spoken, he commaunded the whole multitude to be present with his disciples, leste any should suppose that those wordes pertayned onely to these specially chosen persons. And when they were nowe all together, Jesus spake vnto thē with an audible voyce, on this wyse: Many there be which do folowe me rather with feete, then by imitation of lyfe. Neither do all men come to me for one cause or purpose. For some are enticed hither by the noueltie and straungenes of my miracles: some with the desire of bodely health, and other some by a greate desyre to heare my doctrine. But whoso will be a true folower of me, yf he intend to be associate with me in blisse & glory, let the same in the meane tyme dispose hymselfe to be my felowe or partener, in sufferyng afflictions, and death. Let hym vtterly renye himselfe, reseruing nothing vnto himselfe in thys worlde, but cleane renouncyng all thynges euen to contempt of lyfe: and finally let euery man take vp his crosse, and folowe me. Let not the disciple be ashamed to folowe his teacher, nor the seruaunt to folowe his maister. Neyther let any intende to come to glory by any other way or meane then that, by the whiche he shall se me goe thither before hym. Whoso thynketh that he hath in himselfe wherby he is able to attayne saluacion, shall perish. And contrarily, whoso distrustyng all his owne aydes, wholly putteth himselfe to my mercy, shall be saued. For it is not inough for my sake lytell to passe vpon landes, tenementes, parentes, wife, and children: but lyfe it selfe (for the preseruacion whereof manne forgoeth all that euer he hathe) must likewyse be forsaken.

Be ye of good comforte: that neuer perysheth whiche is geuen to me, no rather ye shall preserue that by losyng, whiche you shoulde otherwyse lose in dede by euill kepyng. Through faythe of the gospell, to all men is geuen lyfe euerlastyng. Therfore he that setteth more by thys present lyfe, then by the grace of the Ghospell, although he seme for a tyme to wynne the same, yet doeth he in very dede, lose it. For no manne can here prolong his lyfe beyonde the tyme appoynted. Albeit, to saye the truthe, neyther in the meane tyme, and before his deathe, liueth a manne in dede, excepte he liue well and vertuously. And after this lyfe (whiche to all men is very short and transytory) he shalbe condemned to euerlasting deathe. Nowe, whoso for my sake, and for that he is a stedfast professour of the gospell, putteth his life in hasarde of death, shall preserue it by me, whiche els should verely perysshe. Therfore, yf there be nothyng so dearely beloued of manne in this worlde, but he wyll be content to ransome temporall life with the losse thereof, debatyng the matter with himselfe in this wyse: what shall it auayle me to haue house, landes, goodes, precious stones, wyfe and chyldrē preserued, yf my selfe perysshe, and shall not enioye that I am owner of. Though all these thinges be in safety, yet do they perisshe to me ward, yf I fortune to dye. For what thing can be so dearely beloued and muche set by of man, ỳ is not to be contemned for the preseruaciō of lyfe.

If one woulde offer another as great riches and treasure as euer had Mydas, and Crœsus, the beautye of Absolone, the Monarchy and empyre of the whole worlde, and fynally all sortes and kyndes of pleasures and therewith saye: take these thynges, and dye: wouldenot thother byanby refuse this offre made hym with suche condicion, and answere agayne: I loue my lyfe alone, better then all these thynges. Sythe, I saye, that euery manne doethe wysely consyder these thynges with him selfe, so ofte as there is any imminēt daunger of bodely lyfe, why do they not then more earnestly loke vpon, examyne, and waye the matter, whensoeuer it concerneth that lyfe inestemable? Nowe euerlasting lyfe is proffered vnto thy soule: and wilte thou not exchaunge therfore the shorte, and wretched life of the body? especially sithe that euery manne shall another daye receiue his owne body agayne, restored to a more blessed life? All men must not of necessitie dye for the profession of the ghospel: but yet euery manne ought to be ready in wyll and mynde so to doe, to the intent, that yf the case requyre, they maye passe nothyng vpon corporall life, so that the lyfe of the soule may be saued. Whensoeuer the storme of persecution aryseth, then must this crosse be taken vp. Albeit neither, euen when all thynges be quyet, and persecution ceaseth, shall any manne be without his crosse, vnlesse it be counted an easy thing to renounce all naturall affections, with al worldly pleasures and inticemētes, to cut of the inordinate lustes of the flesh, to bridle excesse, to represse sensualytye and pleasure of the bodye, to subdue hastines, and lette passe reuengemente. For these thynges also muste euery manne doe, that wyll be my disciple, euen at that tyme, when the worlde is moste quiet, and without busynes. But trueth it is that the worlde shall with all maner of engynes ryse agaynste those whiche profesſe my name, and threten them with reproche, banyshement, imprisonment, tormentes, attayndour and deathe. For this is a naughtye nacyon, and shall euer haue in it moe reprouable, and naughty disposed persones, then good menne: among whom it shall be counted the greatest offence that maye be, to profesſe my name. And if any manne, the worlde being thus set, and bent against me, wyll be ashamed to confesſe himselfe to be my disciple in this vngracious, and counterfeite nation, where after shorte affliction foloweth euerlastyng blysfulnes, hym the sonne of man wyll requyre, and be lykewyse ashamed to take hym for hys disciple, when he shall eftsones cum, not lowe, and contemned as he is nowe, but wonderfull and merueylous in the royaltye and glory of his father: not accompenyed with a fewe poore disciples, but enuironed with innumerable compenyes of holy Aungels.

The.ix. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde vnto them: verely I saye vnto you: there be some among them that stande here, whiche shall not taste of death, tyll they haue sene the kyngdome of God come with power.

They shall not be partakers of this glory, who wyll not nowe suffre the infamy of my crosse. The Iewes loked for a merueilous kyngdome of the children of Israel which they supposed should begyn, assone as Messias was come, and therfore they coulde not beleue that Iesus was Messias, because he came so poorely, and lyke an outcaste of the worlde: and muche more were they offended with the mention of his passion and death. They vnderstode not how there were two comminges of Messias, ꝑ fyrst which after the estimation of the world, was lowe and reprochfull, and another full of maiestie, and glorye, which shalbe in the ende of the worlde, to the entent he maye may ioyne vnto him his whole body, deliuered from all euils in the glory of the father: and thrwe downe Sathan with all his membres, into the fyre of hell. He woulde that the daye of his latter cumming should be vncertaine to all menne: but yet woulde he haue euery man to be in a readynes against the same. Therfore forasmuche as there were some among the people whiche by inward imagination sayde thus to them selues: when shall this tyme of glory cum which he promiseth? And peraduenture many of them beleued not that it should euer cum at all: Jesus stablished their wauering myndes with suche wordes as here ensue: Be ye ryght well assured of the thyng I told you, that the sonne of manne (whome ye nowe see humble and lowe, and very shortly shall see more abiect then all other) shall appeare in the fathers maiestie, with all his holy Angels, and chosen disciples. Neyther is that tyme so farre of. For there be some here in this companie, whoe or euer they dye, shall perceiue that the kyngdome of God is already come with power.

There be certayne among them that stande here. &c.

Therfore let euery man make himselfe redy, to thentent he maye be founde worthy to be of the same kyngdome. These wordes that the Lorde spake, the Apostles themselues as then vnderstode not, because there was in them double vnderstanding. For after his death, resurrection, and ascencion, and after the sending doune of the holy ghoste from heauen, then that vertue of the corne of mustardsede, that is to saye, of the Euangelike doctrine, began to shewe and putte furthe it selfe.

The texte.

¶ And after sixe dayes, Jesus taketh Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them vp into an hye mountayne out of the waye alone, and he was transfygured before them, and his rayment dyd shyne, and became very whyte, euen as snowe, so whyte as no fuller can make vpon the yearthe. And there appered vnto them Helyas with Moyses, & they talked with Jesus. And Peter answered, and sayd to Jesu: Mayster here is good beinge for vs. Let vs make also three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moyses, and one for Helyas, for he wyste not what he sayd. For they were afrayde. And there was a cloude that shadowed them, and a voyce came out of the cloude, saying: This is my beloued sonne, heare hym. And sodaynly when they had loked roundes aboute, they sawe no man more then Jesus onely with them.

Nowe because the disciples should put no doubtes, but he woulde once performe what he promysed concerning the maiestie of his second comming, his pleasure was to geue them some taste thereof, and that before their death, so farfurthe as mannes nature was able to receiue or awaie withall. Wherfore after fyre dayes, Jesus toke vnto him three of his twelue specially chosen disciples, as the chiefe and worthyest persons: vnto whom his pleasure was to shewe this sight, because thei woulde make no wordes therof, tyll the time were come that thei might lawfully disclose it. These were Peter, James, and John. Them onely he toke awaye with him into a very highe mountaine. For thei muste be farre from all carefulnes of lowe and yearthly thinges, whome Jesu vouchesaketh to shewe suche a syght vnto. He dayneth euen in these daies to geue by secrete inspiracion, vnto certaine elect persones enhaūced to the mountaine of pure contemplacion, some taste, and syght of the euerlasting blisfulnes.

The people whiche abyde benethe in the plaine, knowe nothing therof, and if a manne tell them, they beleue not. When the Lorde, and his disciples were come to the toppe of the mountaine, fyrst of all they fell to theyr prayers. For prayer is the thynge whiche chiefly prepareth the iyes of the heart, and maketh them meete to beholde suche a sight.

and

And he was transfigured .&c.

And loe, as Jesus was in his prayers, the shape of his body was sodaynly chaunged. For his face, whiche before semed not to differe from the common physnamy of other, shone as bright as the sunne. Then did his clothes glister with whytenes, surmountyng the whytenes of the snowe: suche as no fuller can by any crafte make the like vpon clothe. Neyther was Jesus sene thus alone, but with hym Hely, and Moyses talkyng together. It was Moyses office to talke with God. And we rede howe Hely, was taken vp and caryed into heauen with a fyery charyot. Doubtles theyr communication with Jesu, signifieth the agrement of the lawe and the Prophetes. For the lawe shadowed and dyd owe out Christe with misticall fygures: and the prophetes shewed before by theyr prophecies, howe Christe shoulde come suche a one, and lyke in all poyntes as Jesus came: and yet the Jewes woulde not beleue. The matter wherupon they talked, was his glorious death & departing, whyche he shoulde in shorte space after fulfill at Jerusalem vpon the crosse, so that here the mention of deathe dyd lykewise assuage that excedynge greate pleasure, wherof mans mynde was in no wyse receyuable. Peter being rauished with this vnspeakable sight, and therfore not well able to rule his affectes, brake theyr communication begonne of deathe, saying: Maister speake no more of Jerusalem: Here is good beinge for vs. Therefore lette vs make iii. tabernacles in this place, one for thee, another for Moyses, and the thyrde for Hely.

And there appeared vnto them Hely as w Moyses.

And Peter answered &c.

These wordes of Peter, partly proceded of the feare of death, whiche was depely soncken into his minde, & partly of the great pleasure he had in beholdyng of this sight, wherewith he was, as it were dronken. For lyke a man beside hymselfe and rauyshed of his wyttes, he wyst not what he sayde.

And there was a cloude that shadowed them &c.

So great was the feare wherewith these mortall menne, not yet receyuable of ỹ diuine maiestie, were astonied. Therfore because they should not be ouercome with this passyng great bryghtnes, there arose a clonde whiche ouershadowed them, and tempred that vnsufferable light, so as they might awaite with it. This taste of the diuine maiestie, was geuen to theyr corporall iyes. There was also somewhat geuen vnto theyr eares. For there sounded out of the cloudes, the fathers voyce, being likewise full of maiestie, whiche sayde: This is my moste dearly beloued sonne, geue eare vnto hym.

Nowe, howe for very shame dooe the Jewes to this present daye, speake agaynst Christ, sith bothe Moyses, and Hely, whiche are of greatest authoritie among them, beare hym wytnesse: sith the father (whom they woulde be sene deuoutly to serue and worshyp) gaue by hys voyce, the whole authoritie to his onely begotte sonne. The Apostles were delighted with this glory: but let hym that wyll come thervnto, heare Jesu whan he exhorteth to the imitacion of his crosse. O Peter, doe not thou from hencefoorthe rebuke thy Lord: doe not thou go before Gods determinacio. Thou hearest the fathers voyce, which sayd: heare him who is my dearely beloued sonne, as who say: hitherto you haue heard Moyses, & the Prophetes prophecying of Christ, they haue nowe played theyr partes. He is alredie cum whom they promysed. Hereafter geue no eare vnto suche as promise thinges to cum: but heare you him that is present, and speaketh my wyll and pleasure. No man shall speake truer thinges. Whatsoeuer disagreeth with his wordes, that vtterly refuse you.

Anone

Anone as this voice of the father was heard, all thynges were sodenly chaunged agayne into another shape and lykenes: for when they loked rounde about them, like menne awakened out of their slepe, they sawe not one iote of all that euer they sawe before, saue alonelye Jesus, whoe was present with them againe, hauing the selfe same shape that he was wonte to haue. He shewed them his greatnes onelye through a cloude, and they were not able to behold it. What would they haue done, if he had shewed them his very hyghnes and maiestie, euen as it is in dede? Therfore Jesus eftsones humbled himselfe to their lowenes, and forsakyng the toppe of the mountayne, came downe to the reste of his disciples, and the multitude. Here remembre thou that art a preacher of the ghospell, howe muche more it becumeth the to humble and abase thyselfe to the capacitie of the weake, the whiche wast once lyke weake as they be: yf thou haue any hygh or excellent qualitye in thee, the same is Christes, and none of thyne.

and sodainly when they loked rounde about. &c.

¶ And as they came downe from the hyll, he charged them that they shoulde tell no man those thynges that they had sene, tyll the sonne of manne were risen from deathe againe. And they kepte that saying with them, and demaunded one of another, what the rising frō death againe, shoulde meane. And they asked hym saying: why then say the Scribes that Helyas muste fyrst cume? He answered, and sayd vnto them: Helias verely when he cōmeth fyrst, restoreth all thynges. And the sonne of man (as it is wrytten of hym) shall suffre many thynges, & be sette at naught. But I saye vnto you that Helyas is come, and they haue done vnto hym, whatsoeuer they would, as it was wrytten of hym.

The texte.

As they were cummyng downe from the hyll, or ere they camme to the multitude, the Lorde Jesus forbad those three to tell any bodye what they hadde sene, tyll after the tyme that the sonne of manne were rysen agayn from the dead. Other heretofore when they were lykewise commaunded to holde their peace, did so much the more blase abrode those thinges whiche they were charged not to disclose. But these. iii. because they heard the fathers voyce saying heare hym. &c. did as they were commaūded, kepe secrete what they had sene, insomuch that they disclosed it not to the residue of the Apostles before the time appointed. They wyste not what the matter meante: but yet they supposed there was some earnest cause, why Jesus woulde not haue it published vnto the people before his resurrection were knowen. For what other good shoulde they haue done by tellyng it abrode, but made themselues a langhyng stocke vnto the faythles? Who woulde haue beleued it to haue bene matter in dede, that Jesu had appeared in such wyse, syth menne shoulde se hym sone after putte to so muche shame and villany, and in conclusion suffer death vpon the crosse? But the disciples (whoe durst not after they had once heard the fathers voyce, distruste the wordes of Jesu) not vnderstandyng what he meante by these wordes ensuing: When the sonne of manne shall ryse from death. &c. fell to reasoning the matter among themselues, and supposed verely that incōtinent after his resurrection, the glory of that kyngdome shoulde begynne, whereof they had nowe taken a saye: howbeit there was a certaine scruple or doubt whiche made muche against them, and that was, because his death was at hande, the whiche he had ofte tymes warned them of before, promisyng he would reiyue on the thyrd daye after the same.

But they had learned of the prophecy of Malachy, howe Hely should come before the great daye of the Lorde. And because they coulde not assoyle this

doubte among themselues, they moued the question to Iesus: Lord say they thou hast performed thy promise: we haue seene the brightenes of the kyngdome of God. Therefore we beleue that after thy resurrection, thou wilt cum in semblable likenes, and suche a one as thou diddeste whylere appeare vnto our syght. But what is the cause that the Scribes, takyng theyr authority of the prophecy of Malachy, doe saye, that the same daye shall not come, vnlesse Hely the Thesbite come before, to make the people in a readines agaynste the cumming therof, leste the Lord smyte al menne with cursyng? Certes Hely, whome we saw we with the in the mountayne, is not yet come. Neyther is there as yet anye thynge done by hym. Therefore, eyther the kyngdome of God shall not come byan by after thy resurrection: or els there is an other sence and meanyng of the prophecy, then the Scribes doe teache. Vnto this question of the disciples, the Lorde Iesus made a doubtfull aunswere, for that they were not as yet receyuable of the whole mystery hereof.

Knd demaunded vne of another.

He answered & sayde vnto them.

For abhorryng those thynges whiche pertayned a greate deale more vnto theyr saluacion, they dreamed onely vpon the glorye of that kyngdome, wherof they had taken a taste: perceyuinge not howe this is also the kyngdome of God, when the holy ghoste (the ghospell beeing spreade abrode and euery where preached) subduethe all the puissaunce, bothe of this worlde and also of oure ghostlye enemy the deuyll. That kyngdome beganne to appeare, what tyme the lame walked, the blynde sawe, the dumme spake, the lepers were clensed, and the deuils caste out. Nowe whan this kyngdome shoulde come, whereof they had a litle before taken a taste, the Lord would not haue them to knowe: yet to thintente they should more pacyentely take his deathe, whom they loued out of measure, he suffred them to dreame for a whyle, that the brightnes of the same kyngdome shoulde shortelye cumme, whereof there was a saye geuen in the mountayne. Therefore he temperethe hys answere so discretelye, that he approueth the prophecye, and yet dothe not altogether condemne the interpretacyon of the Scribes, but only reproueth theyr vngodlye argumentacyon, wherby they concluded that the kyngdome of God was not yet come, because that same Hely, whiche was promysed long agoe of the Prophete Malachy, had not as then appeared in the worlde. For nowe the spyrytuall kingedome of God (whiche thynge the proude Scribes and Pharisees vnderstode not) began to come. Nowe was Hely after the mysticall vnderstandynge alredy come. Therefore Iesus sayde: bothe that whiche Malachy prophecyed of Hely, and also that whiche the Prophetes spake before of the sonne of man, shal come doubtles. You reade of Hely how he shall come before the great and dreadfull daye of the Lorde, to tourne the hartes of the fathers, to theyr chyldren, and the heartes of the chyldren to theyr fathers, to thentent that the yonger sorte and posteritie, maye perceyue howe that is already come and performed, whiche theyr forefathers and elders awayted for. Therefore this Hely goynge before, restore the all thynges, and amende the what soeuer is not right, leste the Lorde come to the great mischief and vengeaunce of all men, if he fynde them vnprepared.

Helyas before the cõmmeth fyrst, restoreth. &c.

And ✠ sonne of man as it is written of hym. &c.

But like as the prophecie of Malachy speakyng of Hely the forecurrour is true: euen so are the prophecies of other Prophetes like true, whiche foretell howe it shall cumme to passe, that the sonne of manne or euer he shewe hys maiestie, shall suffer many thynges, shalbe sette at naught, be mocked, and in conclusion

concluſion putte to death. yea, to ſaye the truthe, whatſoeuer was ꝓphecied of Hely to cumme, is already accompliſhed, and fulfylled: the whiche thyng beyng as yet vnknowen vnto the Scribes and Phariſeis, I diſcloſe vnto you my deare frendes. For Hely is already cumme, whoe ſhewed how the kyngdome of God was preſent, and moued all menne to be repentaunt for theyr former lyfe. And yet, this notwithſtanding, they whiche boaſte and crake vpon the perfite knowledge of the ꝓphecy, knewe hym not: And they whiche loued better theyr owne kyngdome then the kyngdome of God, deſte by hym, not as he deſerued but as them lyked. For he cumme accordyng to the ꝓphecies of Eſaye, and Malachy, crying in wildernelſe how the great and terrible daye of the Lorde, was preſent, howe the axe was alredy put to the rote of the tree, and that euery manne ſhould ſpedely endeuour hym ſelfe to auoyde the vengeaunce of God cumming. But this Hely (who openly without regarde of perſon, rebuked euery mannes vices) they deſpiſed, and put to deathe. Neyther wyll they more gently entreate Meſſias, then they haue done his forecurroure. But I ſaye vnto you ꝙ Helias is cumme.

Hereby Jeſus declared howe Iohn was Hely, not after the body, but after the ſimilitude of ſpirite: who, whyles he neyther ſpared kynges, ne phariſeis, was caſte into priſon, and beheaded. As they dyd by the forewalker, ſo wyll they doe by his Lorde: The ſame thyng wyll they lykewyſe doe by thoſe Apoſtles, that ſhall folowe hym. For whoſoeuer hath ſincerely preached that goddes kyngdome ſhould cumme, the ſame hath ſuffred many afflictions of the vngodly. And whoſo ſyncerely preacheth ꝙ it is already come, muſt nedes ſuffre the lyke. With theſe wordes Jeſus called backe his diſciples frō ꝙ dreame of glorye, to the remembraūce of the ſtorme that was to cum, and hanged ouer theyr heades, that is to ſaye, from pleaſaunt thynges to neceſſarye.

¶ And when he came to his diſciples, he ſawe much people about them, and the Scribes diſputyng with them. And ſtraygtwaye, all the people (when they beheld hym) were amaſed, and ranne to him, and ſaluted hym. And he aſked the Scribes, what diſpute ye among them? And one of the company aunſwered, and ſayed: Mayſter I haue brought vnto the my ſonne, which hath a dumme ſpirite, and whenſoeuer he taketh hym, he teareth hym, and beſtoweth, and gnaſheth with his teethe and pyneth awaye: And I ſpake to thy diſciples that they ſhould caſte hym out, and they could not. The texte.

In the meane whyle that they had thus commoned together, they were come into the ſight of the people, at what ſeaſō a great multitude, were gathered about the diſciples, whome Jeſus left beneath in the playne. He ſawe alſo the Scribes reaſonyng ꝙ mattier, I wot not wherupon, with his diſciples. Now when the people had eſpyed Jeſus vnlooked for on theyr behalfe, foraſmuch as he had preuely conueyed himſelfe awaye with a fewe of his diſciples, they were aſtonyed, and met him cummyng full and whole, and ſaluted hym.

Jeſus was not ignorant what the ſcribes diſputed on, but yet he aſked what the mattier was where vpon they reaſoned, to thentent that euery body might knowe what was done. And when both ꝙ diſciples & the ſcribes helde their peace for very ſhame, the diſciples for that they aſſayed to caſt oute a diuell and coulde not bryng it to paſſe, and the other becauſe that in the preſence of the diſciples they depraued the name of Jeſu, as a thyng vertueleſſe, and of no efficacie: one of that multitude who miniſtred the occaſion of the reaſoning, ſhewed the whole matier euen as it was, vnto Jeſu. Mayſter, ſayeth And he aſked ꝙ Scribes. &c.

sayeth he, I brought hither my sonne vnto thee, who is vexed with a dumme spirite, of whome he is pitifully tourmented. For whensoeuer the spirite, taketh hym he dasheth hym agaynste the grounde, and then the childe fometh at the mouth, gnasheth with his teeth, and cryeth out, and all this whyle he pyneth and consumeth awaye, by reason he is thus vexed. Because thou wast not here I desyred thy disciples that they would chase awaye this spirite, and deliuer my sonne. They assayed to doe it, and coulde not.

The texte. Che answereth him, and sayeth: O faythles nacion, howe longe shal I be with you? howe long shal I suffer you? Bryng him vnto me. And they brought him vnto him. And assone as the spirite sawe him, he tare him, and fell downe on the grounde walowinge and fomynge. And he axeethe his father, howe longe it is ago hence this happened him. And he sayed of a childe, and oftetymes it hath caste him into the fier, & into the water, to destroye him. But yf thou canst do any thing, haue mercy vpon vs and helpe vs. Jesus sayed vnto him yf thou couldest beleue, all thinges are possible to him that beleueth. And straygbte waye the father of the childe cryed with teares, saying: lorde I beleue, helpe thou my vnbeliefe.

When the lorde heard this, to shewe, that feblenes of fayth was the verye cause why the yonge man was not delyuered of the spirite, he makynge as thoughe he had been wrothe and in a fume, sayed: O faythlesse nacion whiche yet canst not by so many miracles as I haue done, be brought to beleue. Howe longe shall I lyuynge here in earth, striue with your vnfaythfull obstaclemesse? howe long shall I beare with you? when wyll you come forwarde in those thynges that be of the spirite? when wyll you beleue those thynges that you see not, syth you beleue not the thynges whiche you see with your corporall eyes? bryng hym hyther to me. And they brought hym vnto hym. That sinne cleaueth fast, whereunto the synner hath from his chyldehood accustomed. But after he was brought vnto Jesus, he was worse vexed then he was before, by reason of the conflicte which arose betwene the spirite desirous to amende, and sensualitie tollyng and alluryng hym agayne, to his accustomed synfull lyuyng. For anon as the fiende sawe Jesus, he feelyng a contrarye power to his, tooke the younge manne, and sooze vexed hym, insomuche that beeyng dashed agaynste the grounde, and rolled to and fro, he fomed at the mouth. This was a pitifull syght, to all the people. But it is a muche more pitifull syght when the sinner possessed with greuous sinnes and of long continuaunce, is lykewyse vexed in soule. Howbeit there is no synne vncurable vnto Jesu.

The Lorde because the other shoulde also knowe in howe euyll case he was, asked his father howe long it was, since his sonne fyrste beganne to be thus vexed: he answered againe, of an infante. And the spirite doth not onely, sayeth he, thus vexe hym, as thou seest, but also casteth hym oftetymes headlong into the fyre, and many tymes into the water, because to destroy hym.

But if thou canst do any thing. &c. Here thou hearest a very sore and cruel malady tourned into nature: and therfore the father feared leste it had been vncurable. For he sayed moreouer. But yf thou bee able to doe any thyng haue mercye on vs and helpe vs. He did well to desyre the mercy of Jesu, who could alleage no merites: howbeit thou hearest a wauerynge faythe, when he sayeth: But yf thou bee able to doe any thyng. &c. That faythe Jesus refourmeth, saying: doubte thou not what I am able to doe. For yf thou couldest beleue, there is nothyng but strong and stedfast fayth may obteyne it. Assone as Jesu had sayed so, the father had better hope and comforte then he had before, and declaring the great desyre of his minde with teares, and weping, sayed: I beleue lorde, and yf my beleefe be vnperfite healpe thou my weakenesse.

The texte. ¶ When Jesus sawe that the people came runnyng together vnto him, he rebuked the foule spirite, sayinge vnto hym: Thou dumme and deafe spirite, I charge the cum oute of him, and enter nomore into hym. And the spirite (when he had cryed, and rent hym sore) came out of hym, and he was as one that had been deade, in somuche that many sayed, he is deade. But Jesus caught his haude, and lift him vp, and he rose. And when he was cum into the house, his disciples asked him secretly: why could not we caste him out? And he sayed vnto them: this kynde can cum forth by nothyng, but by prayer, and fastyng.

In the meane season, the people came runnyng together on euery syde, to see this sight. When Jesus sawe they were come (for his wyll was to haue them all to bee witnesses of the miracle) then putte he furthe that almyghtie voyce wherwith he calleth to life again when it pleaseth him, euen the dead. He threatned the foule spirite to handle hym accordyngly, vnlesse he would incontinente departe, saying: Thou deafe and dumme spirite, I charge the to gette the out of the man, and that thou neuer from hencefoorthe enter into him again. Jesus is in a fume with the spirite because he may shewe mercye vpon the man: geuyng vs a lesson what we ought to doe in healyng of sinners. A man must so rebuke vice, that he may seme to loue the soule health of the person. And because we should knowe that man laboureth & speaketh in vayne, vnlesse Jesus speake with hym by his secrete vertue and power, the disciples commaunded the spirite to go out, but all was in vayne, because Jesus was awaye. He is awaye so oft as our fayth is colde and wauering, by the which fayth, his wyll is that we obtayne all thynges. What was doen at the emperious voyce of Jesu? By and by the spirite went out.

But to the entent it should appeare that he wente out agaynste his wyll, he cryed, and vexed the sely wretche very sore at his departure. For nowe laye he vpon the grounde for dead, in somuche that many sayed he was dead in dede. Thou seest here a figure of a penitēt person, and him who turneth from great and accustomed synnes, to amendemente. Nowe hathe the hatred of synne delyuered hym from synne: howbeit he is at the nexte doore to desperacion, whoso both knowleageth his owne filthinesse, & also hath gods iustice in remembraunce. But yet lyeth he happily deade that is deade to synne. For then remaineth there nothyng elles, but that he begyn to lyue agayne to righteousenesse. And this benefyte geueth also our most bounteous sauioure Jesus without whome there is no saftie. He caught the felowe by the hande, and lifted hym vp as he laye in this traunce, and furthwith the same, who before seemed deade, recouered hys former strengthe: and throughe the benefite of Christe rose vp stronge and lustie. But vnlesse Jesu had nowe geuen hym newe grace to leade a godlye lyfe, it had been to no purpose that he was deliuered from the dyuell at the contemplacion of his fathers fayth.

Nowe heareth this deafe manne, whiche before had his eares stopped with worldely lustes agaynst the doctryne and woorde of the gospell. Nowe speaketh this dumme felowe, who before was tongue tyed & speacheleſſe by reaſō of the passions, and wilfull pangues of the flesche. Nowe is the same at rest and quiet, who before styred wt the furious rages, sumtime of sensualitie, and pleasure of the body, sumtime of ambicion, & desire of worldly aduaūcemēt, others whiles of wrath, nowe of enuy, nowe then of couetousnesse, was as it had

it had been rauished and caryed by the constraynte of sum vncleane and violente spirite. All these thinges saw the Apostles, and saied nere a worde, for that they durst not interupt the lorde. The Scribes also helde their peace being now assured by the thing selfe, howe it was not by reason the name of Jesu was vneffectuall and vertuelesse, that this felowe was no sooner ryd of the spirite, but for the weakenes of fayth. And as it chaunced vnto this yonge manne bodely, so chaunced it to the Pharisees spiritually. They were not healed of their sinnes bicause they beleued not the woorde, by the onelye virtue whereof, they might haue been healed. But when Jesus was cum into the house, the disciples now beyng with him alone, asked him what was the cause why they could not cast out the deuyl, syth they had afore cast out so many in his name. For they were disquieted in mynde, with a certayne humayne carefulnes, leste they had vnwares offended the Lorde, and by that meanes loste the power, whiche he once gaue them to worke miracles.

Jesus who is not wont to take awaye agayne, what he hath once geuen, but to encreace the same (yet wyll not he haue his gyftes negligently kepte, and after a rechelesse sorte: and nowe hath he sufficiently declared, in the father of hym that was healed, how weaknesse of fayth was the only impediment why the deuyl wente not forthe, the whiche faythe was not as yet so strong in the disciples, as it ought of congruence to haue been) Jesus, I saye, answered, that there was a certayne speciall kinde of dyuels, which coulde not otherwyse be expelled, then by prayer, and fastyng. For these be the two engynes which are of moste force agaynst wicked spirites. For by prayer, the strength of fayth is renued and quickned, as it chaunced vnto the yonge mannes father, who saied Lorde helpe my vnbeliefe: And by fasting, bycause it contayneth a certaine forbearyng of all carnall pleasures, the rebellion of the flesshe is subdued. He muste haue a cleane spirite himselfe whoso goeth about to caste out vncleane spirites of other. Jesus and the three disciples, were newly retourned from prayer. The reste of them kepte compaynie with the multitude, and dyd neyther faste, ne praye, and for that cause were not able ynoughe, to caste out a dyuell whiche had so faste holde, and was so familiar. The more the trust of our selues encreaseth in vs, the more the power to worke miracles decreaseth: The more the power of the flesshe is mortified in vs, the stronger is the holy goste by whose onely power, foule spirites are expelled. We muste therfore ofte tymes praye that the strength of fayth may in vs be encreased: we muste also mortifie our flesshe continually, to thentent that the spirite of Jesu Christe may liue in vs. To be shorte, Christe doethe nowe prepare his disciples againste that houre when they shall be commaunded to watche, and praye leste they fal into temptacion. But bycause they toke a nappe after supper, the weake flesshe had the vpper hande.

The texte. ¶ And they departed thence, & toke their iourney thorow Galile, and he would not that any man should know it. For he taught his disciples, & sayed vnto them: the sonne of man shalbe delyuered into the handes of men, and they shal kil hym, and after that he is kylled, he shal arise agayne the thyrd daye. But they wyst not what he sayed, and were afrayed to aske him. And he came to Capernaum. And when he was cum into the house, he asked them what was it that ye disputed among youre selues by the waye? And they held their peace. For by the waye they had reasoned amonges themselues, who shoulde be the chiefest. And when he was set downe, he called the twelue to hym, and sayed vnto them: If any desire to be firste, the same shalbe laste of all, and seruaunt to all. And he toke a chylde and set him in the myddes of them. And when he had taken hym in his armes, he sayed vnto vnto them: whosoeuer receiueth any suche chylde in my name, receiueth me. And whosoeuer receiueth me, receiueth not me but him that sent me.

These thinges doen in maner before rehearsed, Jesus beyng accompaygned with his disciples, began to take his iourney to Jewrywarde, who pryuily, and as it were by stealth, passed through the countrye of Galile, not bycause he feared death (whiche in dede he moste feruentlye desyred) but leste he should haue semed to prouoke the priestes, and Pharisees to cõspyre his death before the tyme appointed. This outwarde appearaunce of feare shewed he, because he would cleane delyuer his disciples from all feare, and also declare the weakenesse and fraylte of the nature whiche he had taken vpon hym. As he went by the waye, he repeted vnto them thesame thing whyche they had diuerse tymes hearde hym speake of before. For he sayed as foloweth: That must nedes cum to passe, whiche I haue so oft tymes told you: the sonne of man shalbe delyuered into the handes of men to be taken, condemned, mocked, scourged, and slayne. Yon must make your selues readye in mynde against the cumming of these thinges, whiche vndoubtedly be at hande. But it is vnpossible for any of you so to doe, vnlesse thesame be free from all worldly affections, and be also stablished with the strength of the spirite. I knowe that the mingyng of death troubleth you very sore. But you must be of good comforte, and take menne s hartes vnto you. I wyll not long forsake you. For I will be aliue agayne on the thirde daye. The disciples were so dull, and feble wytted, that they vnderstoode not these wordes (not withstandyng they were plainly spoken) supposyng there had been sum darke mysterie in them, because it came to their remembraunce, how they had been sumtymes before deceiued with suche figuratiue maner of speakynges, as when they were commaunded to beware of the Pharisees leuen. Neither could they yet conceiue in mynde the misterye of the crosse, nor gesse for what purpose he would be slayne, yf he would soone after his death reiyue agayne, syth that he who cauue reiyue when hym luste, can also yf it please hym, not dye at all.

Therfore albeit they were greatly offended with these woordes, yet durste they not aske hym any question, feared with themsample of peter, who to his displeasure, questioned with the lord herein. For they heard Christe say vnto hym: Go after me Satan: They yet sauoured of the worlde: for goddes determination was to be reconciled to mankynde (pardoned of all his offences thorowe fayth) by the sacrifice of an vnspotted lambe. The disciples dreamed vpon a certaine worldly kingdom, and therfore as they trauayled by the waye, they fell a reasoning among themselues, who shoulde haue the preeminence, and vpper hande in the kyngdome of God, whiche they hoped should very shortly begyn. They sawe a litle before, howe the three disciples were preferred afore the reste in goynge vp to the Mountayne: they sawe howe Peter had the preeminence when the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen were deliuered, and yet sum of theym were his auncientes, yea and beside that kynne vnto the Lorde.

And wer afrayed to aske him. &c.

When they were cum to Capernaum, the Lorde asked them apart what was the matter whereupon they reasoned secretlye betwene themselues, as they went by the way. But they holding their peace, and ashamed to make hym an answere (for they knewe well that he being the author of all modestie and humblenesse of mynde, would disalowe this theyr ambicyousnesse) Iesus because he woulde cleane wede oute of theyr myndes, this moste damnable and naughtie affection: sate him downe as one that woulde teache sum earneste mattier with authoritie, and commaunded theym all twelue to cum vnto hym, and then sayed: If any of you desyre to be the fyrst or chiefe man in the kyngdom of heauen, the same shalbe laste, and seruaunt to all: so far wyde is it, that the kyngdome of heauen ought to be esteemed after this worldly kyngdome. And anon, because he woulde the deper fasten this doctrine in their myndes, he called vnto hym a litle childe, and sette hym in the myddes of them. And when he had embraced hym, signifying therby howe muche he defyed proude persons, and loued suche as are humble and meke in spirite, then sayd he vnto them: Do you see this lytle babe? what is more abiect and vile, after the estimacion of the worlde? yet they that are suche in humblenesse of minde, simplicitie, and godly lyuing, as this is in age, those doe I set moste store by. For reason wyl that I loue them best, whiche be lykest vnto my selfe. This prerogatiue is not esteemed by riches, reuenues, power, statelynesse, and violence. For suche as haue these thinges, as they moste resemble heathen princes, euen so are they highliest esteemed of the same. Lyke as earthly kynges beleue that they are eyther honoured, or dishonoured in theyr great estates: so in this Euangelike kyngdome I thinke my selfe to be eyther honoured or dishonoured in suche lytle babes, whome the worlde setteth naught by because of their innocencie, simplicitie, and humblenesse of minde. If you know any to be more humble and low then I am, hym counte ye for the chiefe mame in the kyngdome of heauen. But yf ye fynde none, then take you me for the very soueraigne: And as euery man moste resembleth me in contemning of those thinges, whiche great men sue for in princes courtes, so iudge you hym to be the moste soueraigne persone. Therfore whoso receyueth one of suche litle babes, in my name, the same receiueth me. For it reioyseth me to be receyued in those, whom I loue as them that are lyke me. Agayne, whoso receyueth me beyng lowest of all men, after the estimacion of the worlde, receyueth not me, but hym that sent me. For as the maister is honoured or dishonoured in the scholers: so is the father lykewyse dishonoured or honoured in the sonne.

And he cam to Capernaum. &c.

By these wordes, Iesu toke not awaye authoritie from suche as be prelates, and haue the charge or ouersyght of the Lordes flocke, but plucked out of the disciples myndes, all desyre of worldly auauncement. For the lowenesse of this sorte of lytle ones, is not esteemed after the quantitie and strength of the bodie, but after the humblenesse of suche a mynde as claymeth nothyng in this worlde that is highe, nor trusteth anywhit to his owne strength, but with syncere fayth hangeth vpon Christe.

The texte. Iohn answered hym, saying: Maister, we sawe one cast out deuels in thy name and he followeth not vs, & we forbad him because he followeth vs not. But Iesus sayed: forbyd him not. For there is no man whiche (yf he doe a miracle in my name) can lyghtlye speake euil of me: for he that is not against vs, is on our parte. Whosoeuer shall in my name geue you a cuppe of water to drinke, because ye belong to Christ, verely I say vnto you, he shall not leese his rewarde.

By occasion of these wordes, there arose an other doubt among the disciples, the whiche Iohn propounded in this wyse: Mayster (sayd he) when thou sentest sentest vs out to preache the kyngdome of God, we sawe a certaine felowe caste out diuels in thy name, and yet was the same neyther of the numbre of the twelue, nor of the seuentie, whome thou diddest afterwarde chose, and sende out, nor none of all the disciples, whiche folowe vs. We herfore hym, as one of an other secte, and none of thy felowshyp, we forbad: but whether we dyd well or no, we wot not. Iesus answered: Forbyd ye none suche as are in any wyse good to spreade abrode, and preache the ghospell. For you must not be disdainfull in receyuing of those, whiche goe aboute, by what endeuoure soeuer it be, to auaunce the worde of god. You must not consydre whether he folowe me as a disciple, but whether he preache my name. If he cast out diuells by callyng vpon my name, he cannot lyghtelye speake yuell of me. And yf he so doe, then will the thing it selfe reproue him. For it shall be said vnto hym: howe darest thou for very shame backbyte that name, whiche thou hast proued mightie, and effectuall in worckyng of miracles? Therfore do ye not vpon light occasion suppose him to worke for a naughtie purpose, whoso doeth a godly dede. He that resisteth not the ghospell, in this poynte furthereth it, because he aydeth not them, whiche take part against the same.

Whosoeuer is not against you, maketh for you. This newe doctrine must beeset forth whensoeuer occasion serueth: but with what synceritie of mynde it be promoted, it is no mattier to you, so that the preacher doe by any manour of meanes further the busynesse whiche you goe about. For not onely they shall be rewarded for furtheryng of the gospell whiche shall caste out diuels in my name, but they also who according to theyr abylitie, will put theyr helpyng handes neuer so litle to the aduaunceyng therof. For whoso wyll geue you euen but a cuppe of colde water in my name, that is to say, in respect that ye are my disciples, and doe my busynesse, be you right well assured, the same shall not lacke his rewarde.

¶ And whosoeuer shall offende one of these litle ones that beleue in me, it were better for him yf a mylstone were hanged about his necke, and he were caste into the sea. Wherfore yf thy hand hinder the, cut it of. It is better for the to enter into lyfe, maymed, then (hauing two handes) to go into hell, into fyre that neuer shalbe quenched, where theyr wourme dyeth not, and the fyre goeth not out. And yf thy foote be a hyndraunce to the, cut it of. It is better for the to go halte into lyfe, then (hauyng two feete) to be cast into hell, into fyre that neuer shalbe quenched, where theyr wourme dieth not, and the fyre goeth not out. And yf thyne eye hinder the, plucke it out. It is better for the to goe into the kingdome of God with one eye, then (hauing two eyes) to be caste into hells fyre, where their wourme dieth not, and the fyre goeth not out. The texte.

Againe if any shall chaunce to let them, by whome the ghospell is aduaũced (truly it is aduaunced not by those whom the world counteth great, but by litle ones, simple persons, vnderlinges, and men of no reputacion) if anye, I say, offend any of these litle ones who haue reposed theyr affiaunce in me, so true is it that he shall not auoyde punishment, that he shoulde be muche eallier punished, if there were a mylstone tyed vnto his necke, and he cast into the sea. The princes of this world cruelly punishe suche, as let theyr deputies to put those thynges in execucion, whiche they haue commaunded to be done. They hange them on a gebet, and also many tymes quarter them, or cast them downe headlyng from sum high rocke, or els drowne them in the sea with a stone tyed vnto them, for cumming vp agayne: so true is it that they will not haue theyr great men offended, whom they vse as ministers of their tyrannie, that is to say, to oppresse the people. But God wyll muche greuously punishe suche as willlet his litle ones (whom he would to haue the handelyng of thaffayres of the heauenlye kyngdom for all mennes saluacion) that they cannot put theyr kynges commaundementes in execucion. For albeit they shall seeme for a tyme so to doe vnpunished: yet at the leangth shall they not escape the punishment of hell. The tyrauntes of this worlde could inuent no kynde of deathe comparable to that punyshemente, whereby bothe bodye and soule shall seme to dye with continuall tourmentes, and yet neuer can dye. Therefore studye you not howe to be reuenged. Doe your businesse, and God shall punishe those that will let you.

Nowe if there arise anyelette and impediumente, not of any persecutoure, but on theyr behalfe, whiche appeare to be your frendes, there oughte nothynge to be so deare vnto you, that the loue therof maye cause you to leaue of the ministracion of the gospell. Admitte it be thy ryghte hande, that is to saye, thy father or beryenere frende, whome thou canste not spare: put case it be thy ryghte eye, that is to wete thy welbeloued wyfe, and swete children: Admitte it be thy foote, that is to saye, thy seruaunt, or factour, whose seruice thou canst not lacke for therploiture of suche affaires, as thou hast to doe in this worlde. Cut of thy hande, plucke out thyne eye, chop of thy foote that hyndreth thee to doe the busynesse of the ghospell. If thou canste bringe with the to the euangelike saluacion thy father, thy mother, thy brethren, and thy systers, doe it. But yf the tender affeccion thou beareste towardes them, withdrawe the from the ministracion of the ghospell: and againe if it shoulde so come to passe that whiles they refuse to be saued by thee, thou shoulde st also perishe, and be damned with them, then cast awaye naturall affeccion, and let the charitie of the gospell ouercumme the charitie of mãne: doe the same thing in perill of thy sowle, that thou woldest doe in the ieoperdie of thy bodie. If thou were at suche an exigent, that thou shouldest eyther be slayne, or els thy life be saued with the losse of thy hande, thou wouldest not sticke in this case to choppe of thy hand and so with the losse of one membre, were it neuer so necessarie, to redeme thy lyfe. It were a thyng more to be wished to attayne saluacion with thy parentes, and frendes by the ghospell: but if that can not be brought to passe, then is it muche better for the to forsake thy parentes (who doe not onely refuse to be saued themselues, but also goe about to bring thee to lyke confusion) and so to enter into lyfe euerlasting, as a man would say, maymed, then with thy sayd parentes, and frendes to be cast in to hell, that is to saye, into fyre whiche can neuer be quenched. There the worme repentaunce that gnaweth the conscience of the wretched creatures, dieth not. For they liue onely to theyr tourmente and payne. There the fyre wherwith the damned soules are tourmented, is neuer put out. There shall bothe thy parentes and thou repent, but to late, and in vayne: thou, for that thou folowedst theyr vnlawfull affeccions to thine owne damnacion, and they because they would not be aduertised by the, when thou exhortedst them to saluacion. Neither shall their calamitie helpe the, nor thy torment any thing release or diminishe theyr payne. Moreouer, the damnacion of the parent that would not be saued, shall not be layed vnto his charge who hastened to doe the busynesse of the gospell. Lyke wyse after this manour cut of thy foote, consydering with thy selfe that it is better for the to cũme halt and lame to lyfe euerlasting,

lasting, then with whole feete to be throwen into hell, where neyther the fyre canne be quenched, nor the worme dyeth.

There is nothyng dearer to man then his eye, nothyng more pleasaunte, then wyfe and chyldren. But if thou be brought to this strayte, that eyther thou must nedes for theyr pleasure forsake the ghospell, and be damned with the: or els forsake them, then whome (as touchyng worldly affection) there is nothyng more deare vnto the: in this case stycke not to pluche out thyne eye, and caste it awaye: reckening it to be muche better for the, to enter with one eye into the kyngdome of heauen, where there is lyfe eternall, then to haue both thyne eyes whole, and with them to be throwen into the fyre of hell. Lette not here the wepyng, and waylyng of thy wyfe, nor the swete wordes of thy children, any whit moue the. They are fooles to wepe because they are forsaken, sith they myght haue folowed the if they had would. All worldly affections muste be set aside, when goddes commaundement compelleth it so to be. All losses of corporall thinges ought to be counted for gaynes, whensoeuer euerlasting lyfe is to be purchased. It is no delicate and pleasaunt thing to profesle my name. Persecucions, and worldlye afflictions shall arise on euery syde which maye withdraw you from your purpose. But suche as take in hand the ministracion of the gospell, muste banquisshe all these thynges. He that will be a mete minister or preacher of the euangelike doctrine, muste wholely yelde him selfe to the will of God, to thentent he maye in no wise, neyther for feare of persecucion, nor by reason he is corrupted with any enticementes of fleshely appetites, swarue from the pure veritie of gods worde, and the gospell.

And if thy foote be an hinderaunte &c.

¶ Euery man shall be salted with fyre, and euery sacrifice shall be seasoned with salte. Salte is good, but if the salte be vnsauery, what shall ye season therewith? Haue salte in your selues, and haue peace among your selues, one with an other.

The texte.

For as no sacrifice after the lawe of Moyses is lawfull saue alonely that whiche is salted eyther with fyre or salte or els with both: euen so whosoeuer will profesle the philosophie and doctrine of the ghospell, muste nedes be pourged with fyre from all worldly affeccions; and be also powdred with salte, that he maye in no wyse be corrupted with the infection or contagiousnesse of euell mennes. Worldly wysdom is vertuelesse and vnsauoury, and neyther preserueth him that hath it from worldlye corrupcion, nor yet is of force to preserue other. Nowe must the teacher of the gospell, doo both: that is to saye, bothe fynde the meanes that he be without corrupcion hymselfe, and also take awaye the same from other. This canne neither be done by the philosophers wisedome, nor by the Phariseis doctrine, but only by the vertue of the euangelike philosophie: whiche with the tartenesse of truth byteth awaye, and consumeth what thing soeuer is in man in daunger of corrupcion. The same thyng doeth also that fyre of the spirite of God, whiche lykewyse consumeth all carnall affeccions, and purgeth mens soules therof, yea, and in maner transformeth into God, what thing soeuer it hathe once caught, in so muche that they whoe were before tyme entangled with the cares of worldlye vanities, are nowe (the same vtterly contemned) all together rauished with the loue, and desyre of heauenly thynges. Whoso is seasoned with this salte, can by no manour of inticementes be corrupted, and fall from the puritie of the spirite of the ghospell. He that is pourged with this fyre, will despyse whatsoeuer the persecutours can threaten him withall.

Salt is good &c. There is nothing better then fyre yf a man vse it aright: nothyng more profitable then salte. But yf the fyre be colde, if the salte be made vnsauery, and vertuelesse, what then remaineth to season the vnsauerie, and symple people withall. If they that professe the spirite of the gospell, frayed with the threateninges of menne, doe forsake theyr profession, and for feare of displeasure, feede and vpholde with theyr flattery the folye of princes, whome theyr dutye had been boldely to rebuke, what hope then remayneth. If suche as professe the salte of the gospell, doe not only not heale the corrupte affections of other with the tartenesse of truth, but also fall themselues for theyr parentes and frendes pleasures, and because to obtaine earthlye vanities, from the hope of the kyngdome of heauen, and winne hell, expouning and wrestyng the doctrine of the gospell (whiche is the greatest offence of all) after thaffections, and lustes of man: What then is there left to season mannes folye with all: sithe that both thei who ought to haue been the seasoners, are theim selues corrupted, and therbyng is also tainted, whiche onely was left in the worlde to bryng it at one time or an other to amendement.

Haue ye salt in your selues. Therfore to thentent you maye bothe ouercum cruell persecucions, and also contemne all worldly affections for the gospels sake: and to thentent also you maye bothe prouide for your owne soule healthe, and bryng as many as maye be to saluacion, lette eche of you haue in him the salte of the gospell. Lette there be peace, and mutuall amitie among you. Salte shall make you without corrupcion: and concorde, stronge and myghtye. Whereas variaunces do raygne, there is not the salte of the gospell. Where as the vice of ambicion is, there is neyther peace, nor salte. Therfore the philosophers be at contencion and braule one with an other, because they haue not this salte. For this cause also the phariseis cannot agree with the Saduces, & the Herodiãs, because they all corrupted with naughtie affeccions, lacke the salte of the gospell. your doctrine shall season the folye of the worlde, yf the people perceiue nothyng in your affections, that is corrupted and rotten eyther by desyre of glorye, loue of money, gredinesse of reuengemente, feare of death, desyre of lyfe, or to be short, by any other worldely affeccion: And if they also perceyue that lyfe as your lyfe, and doctrine shall agree, so in semblable wise you wyll agree one with an other. Undoubtedly you shall agree, if you vtterly abandonyng all ambicion (wherwith suche persones are attached as desyre to rule and play the lordes in this world) do syncerely preache, and teache other, the heauenly doctrine whiche you haue receiued of me.

The. x. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And when he rose from thence, he went in to the coastes of Iury, through the regiõ, that is beyond Iordan: and the people resorted vnto hym a fresshe, & as he was wont, he taught them again. And the phariseis came, and asked him: Is it lawfull for a man to putte away his wife? to proue hym. And he answered, and said vnto them: What did Moyses bid you do? and they sayd: Moyses suffered to write a testimoniall of diuorcement, and to putte her away. And Iesus answered, and said vnto them: for the hardnesse of your harte, he wrote this precepte vnto you: but at the first creacio God made them, man and woman. Therfore shall a man leaue his father and mother, and abide by his wyfe, and they twayne shall be one flesshe. So then are they now not twayne, but one flesshe. Therfore what God hath coupled together, let not man separate. And in the howse, his disciples asked him agayn of the same

Lame matter. And he layeth vnto them: whosoeuer putteth away his wife, and marieth an other breaketh wedlock, to her ward. And if a woman forsake her housband, and be maried to an other, she committeth aduoutrie.

After the Lord Jesus had with suche lessons sufficiently prepared the mindes of his disciples against ỳ storme that was at hand, he departed oute of Galile, and went into that parte of Jewry which lyeth beyond Jordan, wheras John first taught. Now was Jesus so much renoumed in all places, that he could nowhere be hid. Therfore anon as he was cummen, the people came flocking hither in like manour as they were wõt to doe in other places. Neyther was he at any tyme wery of doing all men good, of curyng theyr bodyes, of enstructing theyr sowles. There lacked not here the phariseis, euery where one manour of menne, and like themselfes. The multitude sought for health, and were desyrous to heare his doctrine: but the other desired more to take hym in a trip, then to be healed: to proue him, rather then to learne. And whiles they so did, they coloured their maliciousnesse with a visure of holynesse, and cloked theyr disceitfulnesse with a pretensed desire to learne. Oh wisdom unapte to receiue doctrine. They came to Jesus with bodie, whome they were farre from with mynde. ●

They put forthe vnto hym a captious question, saying: What is thyne opinion, our Maister? Is it lefull for the husbande to forsake his wife? This captiouse question deuised they among themselfes, trusting thend would be, that answering therunto he shoulde be driuen to graunt eyther one inconuenience, or an other. Before, he pronounced those blessed, who gelded themselfes for the kingdom of God. Therfore if he being a fauourer of chastitie had now giuen sentence that it had bene lefull for a man to cast of his wife because to mary a new, as the Jewes vsed communely to doe: thẽ should he haue semed to haue taught cõtrary doctrines. Againe yf he had answered that it had bene vnto wiues lefull so to doe, then would they haue layed against him how he had made the law of none authoritie, whiche geueth the husband libertie to put away the wife: The lord because he would take these crafty fellowes in theyr owne craftinesse (for they prepared a snare for him out of the law) asked thẽ againe: what nede you to aske me this question, synce yourselfes do profesle ỳ knowleage of the lawe? What cõmaundement hath Moyses giuen you touching these matiers? They answered: Moyses suffered the husband, yf there were any thyng in the wife ỳ offended him, by & by after a libel of diuorcement geuen vp, to put her awaye, and mary an other, if it pleased him so to doe. The Phariseis did so interprete this sufferaunce of the lawe, as thoughe those men had very well, who for euery trifling cause, woulde be diuorced from theyr wiues, & marie agayne not vnderstãding the mind of the lawe maker, which they might haue perceiued by the beginning of the boke of Genesis. Jesus therfore sayd vnto them: In that Moyses gaue you this libertie to forsake your wyues, he fauoured not diuorcement, but suffred the husbandes to doe, what carnell desyre and sensualitie moued them vnto, and would rather permit the lesse yuell, then open a wyndowe to more greuouse enormities. He would rather suffre vnlawfull separation, then manslaughter, poysoning, or

Is it lawfull for a mã to put away his wife? &c.

And Jesus answered & sayd. &c.

i iij. detestable

detestable murthering of wyues. For he knewe the hardnesse of your hartes: vnto the which vice, this thing was geuen as a remeadie, lest greater mischiefe shoulde haue ensued. But in paradise before the nature of man was fallen to this wickednesse, matrimonie was not so instituted, ỹ diuorce should be made at the sensuall will and pleasure of the husband: but forever to continue betwen man and wife, and neuer to be dissolued. For at the first time god ioyned one to one, that is to saye, man to woman: betwene whome he would haue so great loue and charitie to be, that no separacion might chaunce. For this cause, saith he, a man shall leaue his father, and his mother, and sticke vnto his wyfe, and they bothe shall becum one flesh, so that being now conioyned in bodie & soule, they are no lenger two persons, but one, to thentẽt there maie be a mutual participacion of weale and woe, betwene them. These wordes plainly declare that God was not pleased with diuorce, els would he disanull his fyrst ordinaunce. But Moyses permitting diuorce besydes the will of God, prouided for a seasõ for ỹ hardnesse of your hartes: supposing aduoutry to be a smaller offence then murthering of wiues. If this gentle permission of Moyses do please you, know you also the cause compelling hym to geue you this libertie. Therfore what god himselfe hath so conioyned at the begynning, ỹ it shoulde alwayes continue vndissolued, let not man parte asunder. But awaye the hardnesse of your harte, & then shall there be no nede of diuorce: then shall separacion of manne, and wyfe, haue no place. With suche a sobre, and a discrete answere Iesus defended goddes commaundement, and yet neyther condẽned Moyses, nor minished the prayse of chastitie, nor finally e brought himselfe in daunger to be taken in the phariseis snare, but rather snarled thẽ with theyr owne grinne, who came purposely to entrap him. But after he, & his apostles were cumme into the house, and they being with him alone had asked his opinion herein, then did he more plainly condemne diuorcement. Whosoeuer, saith he, putteth awaye his wife, and marieth an other, committeth aduoutrye to herward. Agayne if the wyfe forsake the husband, and marye an other, she committeth aduoutrie to her former husbandward. For it is not mete for christen men to be so hard harted, that they neyther can awaye with theyr wiues condicions, nor wyll by faire meanes correct them when they doe amisse, but for euery tryflyng cause conceiue displeasure against them, and ymagine theyr death, except they departe, and get them away. This is a Iewishe minde, whiche my disciples must in nowise haue. The Iewe putteth awaye his wife for stenche of breth, for bleames of the eyes, or for any suchlike faultes, whereas among christen men, there is but one cause onely, whiche dissolueth wedlocke, and that is, the breache of the fayth, & promise of matrimony. For that wife whiche hath letten an other manne haue the vse of her body, is nowe no longer a wife, although she be not yet diuorced: and that husbande whiche hath letten an other woman haue the vse of his body, is nowe before any separation be made, no more an husbande. As fyre is not fyre vnlesse it be hotte, so wedlocke is not wedlocke except that of two be made one. There cannot be one flesshe made of thre, or fower.

But at the first creacõ God made them. &c.

The texte. ¶ And they brought chyldren vnto him, that he should touche them. And his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Iesus sawe it, he was displeased, and sayd vnto them: suffer the children to cum vnto me, forbid them not: for of suche is the kyngdome of God. Verely I saye vnto you, whosoeuer doeth not receyue the kyngdom of god as a thylde, he shall not enter therin. And when he had taken them vp in his armes, he put his handes vpon them, and blessed them.

When he had spoken these wordes, there were certaine persons cum thyther, who had brought vnto him yong children, to thentent he shoulde lay his handes vpon them, and blesse them. They sawe howe diseases were put away by vertue of his touching, and therfore beleued they that thesame touching should also be good and holsome for sucking children against manye suche inconueniences as this weake and tender age is wonte to be indaungered with. The disciples supposyng it not to be sitting that theyr Lorde, for somuche as he was occupied about waightier affaires, shoulde be wery'd with suche trifling matters, kept awaye the children that they coulde not approche hym, and further rebuked suche as brought them, as though they had disquieted him with their importunitie. Verilye a litle before he prayed lytle babes vnto them. Therfore when he perceiued howe they would not suffer the children to cum vnto hym, because it was out of theyr remembraunce what he had said before of suche little ones, he put them vnto silence, saying: Suffre ye the children to cum vnto me, and kepe them not away from my touchyng. For vnto suche belongeth the kyngdome of heauen. Those haue in them an ensample of innocencie and simplicitie, after the patarne wherof, proude malicious persones must be forged a newe, yf they desyre to be admitted into the kyngdome of heauen. Let no man thinke that these are to be set naught by, for theyr weakenes or symplicitie. This one thyng I assure you of: Vnlesse a man be borne agayne, and all wilynesse, couetousnes, ambicion, hatred, wrath, desyre of reuengement, and enuy, put awaye, becum suche a one in minde, as these are in age, he shall not be receyued into the kyngdome of heauen. And to thentent he might the more commend vnto all men simple innocencie, he toke eche of them in his armes, and layed his handes vpon them euerychone, and blessed them: teachyng hereby howe Bishops ought not to disdayne the simple vnlearned people, nor any other be they neuer so bery vnderlinges, or abiect persons after the estimacion of the worlde, but cherish the in euery behalfe til they cum forwarde to a better state of perfeccion. And aboue all thinges we ought to desyre the Lord Jesus, that he will vouchesafe to laye his holy handes vpon suche persons, and blesse the. He will vndoubtedly geue vnto litle ones wilinesse, wherby they may escape the diuels snares. He will geue them a tongue that goddes prayse maye be made perfite by the mouthe of infantes and sucklinges.

Suffre the children to cum vnto me. &c.

¶ And when he was gone forthe into the waye, there came one running and kneled to him: and asked him, good maister what shall I do, that I maye inherite eternall lyfe? Jesus sayed vnto hym, why callest thou me good? There is no man good but one whiche is God. Thou knowest the commaundementes: Breake not maryinony: kyll not: Steale not: Beare no false witnes: defraude no man: honour thy father and mother. He answered and sayd vnto him: maister al these I haue obserued from my youth. Jesus beheld hym and fauoured hym, and sayd vnto hym: one thyng thou lackest. Go thy waye, sell that thou hast, and geue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and cum, and folow me, and take vp my crosse vpon thy shoulders. But he was discomforted because of that saying, and went awaye mourning: for he had great possessions.

The texte.

Nowe when these thinges were done in the house, and he gone forthe into the waye, then came there vnto hym a certaine yonge spryngalte, because that after childhode was commended, this age shoulde lykewyse be called

be called from good beginninges, to thinges of hygher perfeccion. He fell doune at his feete, and sayed: Good maister, what shall I doe to purchase me eternall lyfe? The askyng of this question, smelled sumwhat of that vice, wherwith all suche are attached, as stande in theyr owne conceipt.

But gentle teachers are wonte to wynke at this faute, yf it be meane and tollerable for the great hope and lykelyhode that is in this age to cum forwarde. For he desyreth not somuche to be taughte of the Lorde, what he ought to do, as to be praysed for the thinges he hath already done. And he calleth hym good, whom he beleueth to be nought els but a man, as who saye, that man had any good thing of hymselfe. Therfore Jesus, as though he were offended with this arrogant name, saith vnto him: why doest thou call me good? This name is farre aboue the state and condicion of man. For there is none verily good saue god alone. For this cause, as he is an arrogãt person, whoso taketh this name vpon hym: euen so he that geueth the same vnto man, geueth hym more then it becummeth hym to do. With this proheme Jesus discouraged the yong man whiche in his owne conceipt thought himselfe not muche vnworthye to haue this goodly title, or name geuen hym: & forthwith asked him this question: knowest thou the commaundementes? Then to hym demaunding what they were, he answered, recityng these common commaundementes folowyng, for keping wherof the Jewes chalenged the praise of goodnes and iustice. Thou shalt not commit aduoutry: thou shalt not kyll: thou shalt not steale: thou shalt not beare false witnesse: thou shalt not begile thy neighbour: honour thy father and thy mother. Here this yong man hopyng to haue bene greatly commended, answered agayn with a glad and ioyfull hart: Maister I haue euer kept all these, since I was a litle child. Jesus beholding his great towardnes (for he cloked not the matter: nor dyd not, as the Pharisees, of a naughty mind, or proude stomacke stand in his owne conceipt) Jesus, I say, signified þ he was delited, euen with thonely endeuour of this age. Therfore he made semblãt that this godly affeccio of his, albeit it was vnperfit, dyd neuertheles highly please hym, who as it were, embraced þ great likelihode he espyed in hym to profit & cum forward in þ doctrine of þ gospel, (for as that age seldõ applyeth Godly lyning, so is þ study therof right cõmendable in þ same) teaching vs hereby, how we ought not in any wise ouer sharply to rebuke yong folkes, in whõ we see any inclinacio to the vngodlike & the ste godlines: and by that meanes cause thẽ to withdraw theyr yong & tender minds frõ the gospell, as sum ouer waywarde schole maisters are wont to doe, which by reason of their crueltie & roughnes, be wont to teache good wittes to hate learning: but with all gentlines to set them forward, and bring them to better thinges, commending their diligence, but yet neuertheles they wyng thẽ with all what they must endeuour thẽselues to attain vnto. Thẽ Jesus tryed þ gladnes of this yõg man, who reioiced ouertimely, saying: That thou hast obserued these thinges, I cõmẽd the. But perfite righteousnes stãdeth not, as thou supposest, herin. Thou lackest yet one thing. Thẽ to him merueiling, & asking what þ should be, the lord answered: returne home, & make sale of all that euer thou hast, and deale þ money which thou makest therof, among poore folkes. Thou shalt not lose such doles, but for earthly possessiõs, horde vp great treasure in heauẽ. And being lighted of thy burden, & free from all encumbraunces, cum & folow me. For then will I knowledge the to be a disciple of the gospell.

The yong man wanted many thinges: but Jesus entended to shewe by touchyng of this one soore, howe farre he was as yet from the perfection of the ghospell. After he had heard him say so, he went his waie mournyng, because he was disapointed of the prayse of righteousnesse, whiche he well hoped he should haue had. For he was a man of great substaūce, and therfore it semed vnto hym a very soore thing sodainly to forgoe thesame. Yet departed he not as one vtterly to be despaired of. For he was neyther wroth, nor murmured against Christ, but went his waye with mournyng chere and silence. He was cōmended for his vertevous and godly endeuour: but that he mourneth cummeth of mans frailtie and weakenes. For he vnderstode not Jesus woordes, the meanyng whereof was not that a man should so much forsake his goodes, as his affections. Whoso is redy and willyng to leaue all that he hath, if the case so require, hath forsaken all thynges.

¶ And wode Jesus had loked rounde about, he said vnto his disciples. How vneasy shal they that haue money entre into the kingdō of god: And ỹ disciples were astonied at his woordes. But Jesus answereth again, and saith vnto thē: childre howe hard is it for thē that trust in money to enter into the kyngdō of god? It is easier for a Camell to go thorowe the ye of a nedle, then for the riche to entre into the kyngdom of god. And they were astonyed out of measure, saying betweue themselues: who then can be saued? Jesus loked vpon thē, and said: with men it is vnpossible, but not with God. For with god all thinges are possible. The texte.

With this ensample, Jesus frayed his disciples from couetousnesse. Therfore when the yong man was gone awaye all sadde and heauy, Jesus loked round about on his disciples (for all this was done for their instruccion) and sayd: he his gone. Howe much a doe shall it be for them that haue aboundaunce of money, to enter into the kyngdome of God. These woordes greatlye amased the disciples, who supposed that vnnethe any one could be founde, whiche woulde sodainly lathe out great riches for the kyngdome of God, although themselfes had forsaken a fewe small thinges of little price or value. Therfore Jesus repeteth the thynges whiche he spake before, mittigating the sharpnes therof with pleasant woordes, and expounyng the darke saying, whiche they vnderstode not. My children, sayeth he, how hard is it for thē that haue great substance, & trust vnto it, as the commen sort doe, to enter into the kyngdom of god. And leste this seme to sore a saying, I will yet speake much sorer woordes thē these, but moste true withal: It is easier, I say, for a camel to go thorow a nedles ye, thē for a riche mā to enter into gods kingdome. The disciples after they had heard him say so, were mache disquieted in their myndes, & reasoned thus amōg themselfes: If no man can be saued vnlesse he enter into the kyngdome of God, and if no manne can enter into Goddes kyngdome, excepte he haue forsaken his riches: then sith we see all men so inordinately loue the same, that it seemeth they will in no case forgoe them: what riche man can there be saued? This carefulnes of the disciples, smelled of the godlye charitie of their Lord (for they were desyrous that as many as might possible, should entre into the kyngdom of god) but as yet they vnderstode not the nature & vertue of the christian profession, whiche commaundeth vs nothing to passe vpon wife, children, parentes, no nor life to, if the case so require. It is the easiest thing that may be, yf a man waye and ponder the thyng selfe, to contemne and set naught by richesse: and again it is the moste greuous thyng of all, if we regard the maners of the people. Therfore the Lord perceyuing his disciples to be carefull, and heauy, by reason of the woordes he spake vnto thē, and at the nexte doore to desperacion, recomforteth them agayne. But fyrst he loketh vpon them as he is wonte to do, so ofte as he is about to speake any notable thing, or of great importaunce. Why despayre ye, sayth he, of the saluacion of riche men? The thynges whiche I requyre, be of muche difficultie: but there are muche harder thynges to be perfourmed. There is nothing harder, then to set naught by life for ỹ gospels sake. Herein you shal haue me your capitain. If there shall sum be founde, vnto whome the ghospell shall be more deare then life, will you then despayre, that there shalbe sum who will set lesse by their riches, then by the gospell? These thynges seme impossible to humaine affections: But all this is easily brought about by goddes helpe. God requireth hard thynges, and suche as be farre aboue the strengthe and power of man: but the same putteth to his helping hande, that man may be able to accomplishe his commaundementes. And so cummeth it to passe, that man can do that by god almightyes helpe, whiche of himselfe he is in no case able to do. Whoso with all the harte of his body trusteth him, shalbe able to do all thynges by hym. Therfore he that passeth not vpon his goodes for the kyngdome of god, sustaineth no losse therby, but hath great profite and bauntage. And to know this, is a thing pertaynyng, not to mans wisdom, but to faith geuen vs from heauen. For whosoeuer he be that with harte and minde beleueth that for the goodes forsaken, whiche hindred vs from doyng the dutyes of saluacion, a hundreth fold so much is geuen vs here in this world, and in the world to cum lyfe euerlasting, the same will with right good wyll make suche an exchaunge.

The texte. ¶ And Peter began to say vnto him: Loe, we haue forsaken all, and haue followed the. Jesus answered, and said: verely I say vnto you, there is no man that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or systers, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or landes for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receiue an hundreth folde: nowe in this life, houses and brethren, and systers, and mothers, and children, and landes with persecucions, and in the world to cum, eternall lyfe. But many that are first, shalbe last, and the last first. And they were in the way going vp to Jerusalem, & Jesus went before them, and they were amased, and followed, and were afrayed.

Of these wordes wherby Jesus bronghte his disciples out of despaire, the same receyued more courage, and boldenesse, then they shoulde haue done. For nowe Peter by cõparyng himselfe to the yongman, who departed away all heauy and mourning, began to stand muche in his owne conceipt, saying: Loe, we haue forgõne all that euer we had for thy sake, and followed the. We haue done what thou whilere requiredst of the yong man. To him thou promisedst treasure in heauen: what reward then ought we to hope after? If a man regarde the valuacion of the Apostles goodes, they forsoke not muche, especially Peter, who was a fysher man, & with muche a doe gate his lyuing, with his daily trauaile & labour. But vnto euery man, his owen proper substance is greatest. And he forgoeth very muche, whiche so forsaketh all his goodes and ryches, that he hathe no mynde, neyther to restore, nor to encrease the same agayn. He that hath cleane put away all affeccion and gredy desyre of riches, the same hath forsaken, not onely so muche as he was worthe, but also so muche as he myght haue desyred. The lorde after this rule esteemyng the goodes forsaken of the Apostles (who with right good will did also for sake suche thynges as were muche dearer vnto them, as their parentes, their wyues, and their kynsfolkes) answered in this wyse: I tell you this for a suretie: Not onely you shall not be defeated of your reward, but also there shall be none who for my sake, & the loue of the gospel, hath forsaken house brethrē, or sisters, or father or mother, or children, or landes, but he shall receiue for euery of these thinges so forsaken, a hundreth folde so muche, and that euen in this presente life, be the stormes of persecution neuer so great. For muche more shall encrease through the charitie of the gospell, then was taken awaye by the crueltie of persecutours. For one carnal brother or sister forsaken, he shall haue so many brethren, and systers: as felowes in professing of the ghospell. The affections of the spirite be more vehemēte, & pleasanter with all, then are thaffeciōs of nature. For one father, and mother, he shall haue so many fathers, as teachers: for one house forsaken, he shall haue euery where a house, whersoeuer theu angelike and christen charitie shall raigne, which doubtles maketh al thinges common. For a litle piece of land forsaken, he shalbe partaker of all the landes whiche the true professours of the ghospell haue possession of. And if these thinges came not to passe, yet the losse of temporall goodes shalbe sufficiently recompenced with the ghostely giftes of the soule, so that a man had a hundreth times leuer haue the thinges receiued, then the thinges forsaken. There is no comparison betwene such thinges as be transitory, & will sone perish, although no mā take them away, and the riches of the soule, whiche no man can geue but god alone: no mā can take away, but he that geueth them. And if this seme but a small gaine, there shalbe added therto the possession of eternall life in the world to cum. With these sayinges the lorde stayed the weake mindes of his disciples, leste they should eyther forthynke that they had forsaken suche thinges as thy forsoke, or els fall againe in time to cum to the loue of worldly riches, & goyng about to be enriched with vile thinges, ware miserable poore as touchyng the goodes and riches of the soule. It is a naughtie chaūce whē a man falleth againe from the loue of the goodes of the soule, to the desyre of the goodes of the body: from true riches, to vayne and deceiuable riches: from euerlasting commodities, to fading and transytory. Now leste that by prayesyng of his disciples for forsaking theyr goodes, and maisterynge theyr affections he should haue geuen them occasion to be careles, he spake further a litle sentence of lyke tenour as here ensueth: But many that nowe seme first, shall one be last. Neither are they to be despayred of, who be not yet able to performe what the vertue and strength of christian perfection requireth: neyther ought suche to truste themselfe, as haue profited to a certain degree therin. For there are sum who haue done the like as you haue, and yet for all that, they shall fall againe to a more mischieuous couetousnesse. And there be sum, who at this presente, cannot contemne and set naught by their goodes (of the whiche sorte that yong man was one) the whiche in tyme to cum shall excell suche as appeared to haue forsaken all the worlde. Finally it shalbe found that those were poorest of all, who after the iudgement of the worlde, semed richest: and contrarily suche as appeared to contemne al worldly thinges were moste gredy and desyrous therof. For this prayse and commendation standeth not in thinges, but in affections. He is the poorer man of both, who possesseth suche goodes as fortune hath lente hym, as though he had them not, ready to departe therwith, so ofte as his neyghboure is to be holpen, not reioycynge ouer muche yf anye encrease be, nor pynyng awaye for sorowe, yf anye thing be taken from hym: then he that setteth

great store by that litle he hath, and neuer maketh an ende to augment and encrease the same. Hereby he seemed to meane Judas, who albeit that he forsoke all that euer he had, as the other dyd, and folowed Jesus, yet afterwarde was he perceiued to be a more naughtie couetous wretche, thē those, which after the iudgement of the worlde be rycheſt.

And they were in the way goyng vp to Jerusalem.

With suche woordes Jesus framed the myndes of his disciples, by lytle and litle against the most greuous storme of all that was at hand, the mencion wherof they vtterly abhorred. For nowe began he to goe vp to Jerusalem the whiche name the disciples hated, bycause they had heard saye, how theyr maister should there suffer muche shame, and vilanie. In other places of the ghospell it is oft tymes mencioned, howe they went before, as when beyng hungry they plucked the eares of corne. In this vyage they coulde not so doe. For it is a painfull iourney to goe vp to Jerusalem. It is for them that be of valiant courage, and strong in spirite, and suche in whom this worlde hath naught that is his. Therfore Jesus nowe goeth before, and the disciples folowe after all heauy, and murmuring against hym, because he would willingly put himselfe in manifest daunger of lyfe. They both marueyled what minde he had so to do, and also feared their owne partes, leste he woulde bring them into lyke daunger. Suche disciples, so grosse, and weake withall suffered Jesus: and doth it greue vs sith we be weake our selues, to beare with the dulnesse of the weake? They gaped after a kyngdom, they desyred to be partakers of glory, and reasoned who should haue the chiefe place or preeminence: but they vtterly abhorred that thing whiche was moste necessary for theyr saluacion.

¶ And Jesus toke the .xii. agayne, and began to tell them what thinges should happen vnto him. Beholde we go vp to Jerusalem, and the sonne of manne shall be deliuered vnto the hie priestes: and vnto the Scribes, and they shall condemne hym to death, and shall deliuer him to the Gentiles, and they shall mocke him, and scourge him, spitte vpon him, and kill him. And the thirde daye he shall ryse agayne.

Jesus therfore to geue vs an ensample howe we ought in instructing of our neyghbour, to teache him rather necessary thinges then delectable, rather holsome thinges, then pleasant: After he had called vnto hym the .xii. whome his will was should not onely be witnesses, but also in some pointes partakers with him of this storme: Jesus, I say, printed in theyr myndes what he had first couertly, and anon after plainly forshewed vnto them, saying: Loe, the tyme is nowe cum, that I haue so oft retold you of: We go vp to Jerusalē, to thentent you maye perceyue that I willingly, and wittingly, will suffer what tourmentes, and passion soeuer I shall be put vnto. For I must not flye, syth the tyme appointed of god is present: this sacrifice shalbe made at Jerusalem, because that place is appointed therevnto. And the sonne of man shall be deliuered into the handes of the chiefe priestes, Scribes, Pharisees, and elders of the people. They shall condemne hym as a felon, and a wicked person, and at the lēgthe, after they haue accused hym of diuerse crimes, iudge hym to deathe. And then incontinent shall they deliuer hym as a notorious misdoer, to the heathen people, that they may mocke hym, and spitte vpon him. To be shorte, he shalbe scourged, and slayne: but on the thyrde day he shal arise again from death to lyfe. ¶ And James, and John the sonnes of Zebede, came vntō him, saying: Master, we woulde that thou shouldest do for vs whatsoeuer we desyre. He said vnto them: What would ye that I should do for you? They said vnto him, Graūt vnto vs that we maye syt, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory. But Jesus said vnto thē: ye wot not what ye aske. Can ye drinke of the cup that I drinke of, and be baptised with the baptisme that I am baptised with? And they sayd vnto him: We can. Jesus sayd vnto them: ye shall in dede drinke of the cuppe that I drinke of, and with the baptisme that I am baptised withall, shal ye be baptised in. But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand, is not myne to geue, but it shall happen vnto them, for whome it is prepared. The text.

Now when the Apostles were all in their dumpes, and like men amased by reason of these wordes, and durst not now counsayll hym to the cōtrary: two of them, that is to wete, John, and James the sonnes of Zebede, came vnto hym alone. These .ii. after they heard hym speake of his resurrection, conceiued good hope, that that same kyngdome which he had so oft tymes promysed to cumme, shoulde very shortly begyn. For as yet they had not cleane cast out of their mindes the desyre of worldly aduauncemēt. For they set their mother a worke, & by her desyred him to haue sūmme preeminēce & souerayne dignitie geuen thē in the same kingdom: but or euer they obteined their minde, they did what they coulde to get a faythfull promise of him before hāde to haue their requeste graunted, because it should not thē be lawful for him to deny it them. The Lord makyng as though he woulde deny thē nothing what soeuer they demaunded, bad thē tel on hardely what great thing it was that they sued for. For it semed that they would desyre some weyghty thyng, or hygh promocō. Lorde, saye they, oure petition and suite is, to haue this honourable preferment in thy kyngdome, that we may sit nexte the, the one of vs on thy ryght hand, and the other on thy lefte. Jesus by askyng them a question, plainly bewrayed their ignorance and rudenes. For as yet they dreamed vpon a certayne corporall kyngdome: as yet their myndes were vpon the primacy. Howbeit it was then no time to rebuke thē for their grosse ymagination: but yet bryngeth he thē agayne to the remembraunce of death, the whiche they so muche abhorred. Because, sayeth he, ye perceiue not what maner a thyng the kyngdome of God is, therefore ye wotte not what ye desyre. You seke after vayneglory, and consydre not by what meanes the true glory of my kyngdom is attayned. I will open you the waye, and yf the same do lyke you, then trust verely to haue the glory that you desyre, saue alonely that it shall be a true glory, and not suche a one as you dreame vpon, and imagine it to be. Can you drinke of the cuppe I nowe make my selfe ready to drynke of: Can ye be baptysed with the baptisme that I shall ere it be long be baptised withall? They of a gredy desyre to haue their petition graunted, as they folyshly desyred this preeminence, euen so did they rashly promyse for their behalfe, and saye they could: notwithstanding as yet they knewe not themselues aright. Neyther did the moste gracious Lord rebuke thē for this their great folye, They saide vnto him, &c. Can ye drinke of ꝑ cuppe? &c.

holy, forasmuch as the tyme was not yet cum, that they shoulde be receiuable of these mysteries. As yet whatsoeuer they heard, they heard it as it were in a dreame: and yet did he with neuertheless diligente teache, & instruct them, euer attempering his wordes to their weakenesse, because they beyng afterwardes, as a man would say, wakened out of their slepe, and manfully perceyuing the truth by the holy ghoste, shoulde with more entire affection loue their Lord, who beyng suche a one as he was, would so iently beare with suche maner of disciples: & also because they being once growen to more perfection, should agayne followe his ientlenes in bearyng with the weaknesse of their euen christen, whom they should happen to instruct, hauyng alwayes in their remembraunce, how ignoraunt, howe forgetfull, and how dull they also themselues sometime were. This was an ambitious sayyng: Let vs sit nexte the in thy kyngdome. It was vnaduisedly spoken when they sayd: we can doe it. For it was spoken of the, who would soone after deny their Lord & maister for feare. But suche error as springeth not of malice or obstinate cuylues, but of symplicitie, must either be cured, or els borne withall for a season. Therfore Iesus answered: Truely ye shal drinke of my cuppe, & shall be baptised with the baptisme that I am baptised with: but in tyme to cum. For as yet ye are not able to do the thyng, which ye beleue ye can do. Therfore prepare your mindes hereunto: but leaue all ꝑ iudgement of your rewarde to god the father. Let your only endeuoyr be to counterfaite me, & folow my trace. He hath for euery mā his peculier rewardes alreadi prepared, and will distribute the same as it shal please him. For this matter is not so ordred in the kingdome of heaue, as it is in princes courtes, where as he is not alwayes chief in dignitie, which he deserueth so to be: but he whome the prince or kyng chiefly fauoureth. Sumtimes he fauoureth the naughtyest person of all. But with my father there is no regarde of person. Neither is it your parte to regarde the measure or multitude of your merites and deseruinges, sith you are able to do nothyng of your selues: nor to consider how far ye passe other. You must only do your endeuoyr according to the power that God hath geuen you, to folowe me. Ye shal not be defeated of your reward, although you thinke not theron at all. For he that fighteth for the rewardes sake, and would not els fight vnlesse he thought he should be rewarded for his labour, cleane disapointeth himselfe of the reward. Let no man be his owne iudge, but do what he can: and then remitte the whole iudgement vnto god.

The texte. ¶ And when the ten heard it, they began to disdayne at Iames & Iohn. But Iesus, when he had called them to him, sayd vnto them: ye knowe that they which are tenue to beare rule among the people, raygne as lordes ouer the. And they that be greate among them, exercise auctoritie vpon them: neuertheles so shall it not be among you. But whosoeuer of you will be greate amōg you, shall be your minister. And whosoeuer of you will be chief, shall be seruaunt of all. For the sonne of man also came not to be ministred vnto, but to minister, and to geue his life for the redemption of many.

And loe, howe one euill sprang of another. The symplicitie of these two disciples, bewrayed a greater rudenes and ignoraunce of the rest. For after it was cum to the others knowledge what the two brethren, although their request was not graunted them, had desyred of the Lorde, they all in maner disdayning hereat, were angry with them and in their toppe, because not regarding their simplenes and meane estate, they presumed to desyre ꝑ first or chief plate which was rather due vnto them. There was none of them all but hoped he

ped he should haue had that preferment himselfe, accordyng as eche of them fauored his owne gyftes, and deserres. Doubtles these are the very affectiõs of suche persons, as leade theyr lyues in princes courtes. Euery man there highly esteemeth hymselfe: euery man warraunteth hymselfe the moste honorable aduaunce mentes, and hath great heart burning and disdayne at others preferment, saue that the ambicion of courtiers is spiced with malice, where as the disciples ambicion was nothyng els but mere ignorance and symplicitie. And why les they straue thus for the preeminence and primacy, they had clene forgotten the wordes that Jesus had spoken of the least, and greatest in the kingdom of heauen, and of the imitacion and folowyng of the lytle one. If any man aske the question why the Lord suffered so great ignorannce so long while to continue in his disciples, by whose ministerye he purposed to haue the doctrine of the gospell preached, & taught throughout all the whole worlde: truely, the chiefe cause was, because he would by litle and lytle cleane weede out of theyr mindes, this and suche other naughty affections, and therfore doeth he suffre them so oft to fall againe into the same affection, that is to say, into ambicion or desyre of dominion & preferimẽt: euen as if a mã be soone delyuered of an ague he soone forgetteth both the his disease and also the benefite of the physician, that cured him: Agayne if he ofte tymes recidiuyng, and fallyng into the same disease agayne, be at the length with muche a doe rid & healed therof, thẽ doth he the more hate his disease, and also the more knowledge the benefite of his healing, and shall better knowe how to cure other that are lykewise diseased. Therfore Jesus perceiuing that the fonde petition of ỹ two, and the disdaynfull wrathe of the other, yssued both out of one well, called them all vnto him, because he would minister physicke vnto them all with one medicine. As oft, sayth he, as ye heare me speake of the kyngdome of heauen (whiche vereby is a spirituall kyngdome & differeth no lesse from this worldly kyngdom, then the yerthe differeth from heauen) do not you by vayne and phantasticall ymagination, fayne such a likenes & an apparaunce of thinges, as you see here in yearthlye kyngdomes. For ye knowe that those whiche seme to be chiefe rulers among the heathen people of his world, play the lordes ouer suche as be vnder their obeysaunce, and subiection. And they whiche are great men among the heathen do exercise their power and authoritie ouer them, that they haue rule and gouernaunce of. Beware there be no suche thyng among you. Here a desyre to helpe the neyghbour, maketh a man greater, and not ỹ desyre of worldly preferimẽt. Therfore as I haue also taught you before tyme, whoso desyreth to bee great in very dede among you, let ỹ same be your minister: let him, I say, not exalte himselfe to beare rule, but humble himselfe to do all men good. And whosoeuer will be chiefe among you, let the same be the seruaunt of all the rest: let him not chalenge any souerayngnitie or preeminence, but serue to thende he may do all men good: not seking hereby his owne honour, but referring all the whole prayse and glory vnto God, whom he serueth in his mẽbres. Let it not greue you to counterfaite the ensample whiche you see plainly expressed in me. For the sonne of man came into the world, not to rule, nor to lay the yoke of bondage vpõ other mens neckes, but to be a minister for euery mans saluacion: and not onely to serue for all mens wealth & cõmoditie, but also to geue and bestowe himselfe for the enfranchisyng of bõdmen, to this ende, that by the death and losse of one, a great many should be saued. Of a truthe this is the very Euangelyke and chrystian soueraignetye, whiche whoso will desyre, let hym desyre it as I doe, and loke for a rewarde, not suche a one as he appoynteth vnto himselfe, but suche as it shall please the father to geue hym: lyke as I without condicion obey my fathers commaundementes euen to the crosse, wholy referryng the rewarde of myne obedience vnto his wyll, and godly arbitrement. It shalbe a great shame for you to desyre dignitie as you see worldly prynces doe, and to seke for a rewarde of the father of heauen. Eyther desyre you the kyngdome of heauen, and loke after an heauenly rewarde: or els if you desyre this worldly kyngdome, then require ye not the rewarde of the kyngdome of heauen.

With suche lessons and monicions they were before hande instructed and taught, who went with Christ to Jerusalem. For the cleuer that euery man is from all affections, the better appointed is he to go to ỹ battayle of the crosse.

The texte. ¶ And they came to Hierico. And as he went out of the citie of Hierico with his disciples, and a great numbre of people, blynd Bartymeus the sonne of Timeus, sat by the hye waie syde beggyng. And when he hearde that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to crie, and saye: Jesus thou sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on me. And many rebuked him that he should hold his peace. But he cryed the more a great deale: thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy on me. And Jesus stode styll, and commaunded hym to be called: And they called the blynd, saying vnto hym: Be of good comforte, ryse, he calleth the. And he threwe awaye his cloke, and rose & came to Jesus. And Jesus answered, and saide vnto him what wilte thou that I doe vnto the? The blynd sayde vnto hym: maister, that I might see. Jesus sayde vnto hym: goe thy waye thy fayth hath saued the, and immediatly he receyued his sight, and followed Jesus in the waye.

Nowe were they cum to the Citie of Hierico whiche is not farre from Jerusalem. Hierico in the Syrian toug signifieth the Mone. By the Mone is figured this present life, whiche is nothyng els but the common confe of the worlde, where some be bryze and some dye: some be sycke and some be whole: some growe towarde mans state, and some drawe in age: sometymes chaunceth glad thynges, and sometymes heauy. For our cause Jesus came downe from that heauenly tranquilitie, yet wyll he not tarry here, but hasteth to Jerusalem, being very desyrous of mannes saluation. And hitherto his disciples, and with them a great multitude of people, folowed him. Marke well howe Jesus is euery where as he is called. Eyther he teacheth, or healeth, or els restoreth to lyfe agayne. What his death shoulde cause through the beliefe of the ghospell that was preached, he shewed nowe plainly by a corporall figure. Bartymeus was blinde through ignorance of the trueth, a poore and beggerly for lacke of all vertues. Vnlesse Jesus had passed by vs, there had bene no hope of lyght.

Blind Bartymeus the sonne of Tymeus.

For a certaine blynde begger well knowen of the people, called Bartymeus, the sonne of one Timeus, sate by the hyghe wayes syde, who when he perceyued hym to cum, began to crye, and saye: Jesu the sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. Fyrst the bruite, or preaching of the Ghospell, sheweth vs that Jesus passeth by: then the great confidence whiche we straight waies conceiue of hym, will not suffre vs to holde our peace when he goeth by. For the synner knowledging and confessyng his wretched lyuing, cryeth vpon the mercyfull sauiour, and desyreth hym to take mercy and compassion vpon hym. He is at the nexte doze to lyght, whoso knowleageth his owne great blyndnes. To saye, Lorde haue mercy vpon me, is not a saying of the Pharisees, who thought themselues to be men of a perfite syght, but an euāgelike and a

chriſtian saying. Neither vſe the Phariſeis to saye: O thou sonne of Dauid. For they say: is not this the carpenters sonne? That blynd man sawe a great deale more in the darke, then the Iewes do at this present day, whiche boast & bragge vpon the knowledge of the lawe, & profesſe themselues to be guydes of the blynde. But the multitude of people is an impediment and hyndraunce to the sely wretche. thus crying and calling for mercy. For what other thyng can they do but disturbe and trouble? His conſcience also cryeth out againſt hym, not with one voyce, but with as many as are the offences that he knoweth hymselfe giltie of, saying: what hast thou to doe with Ieſus, whiche art defyled with so many synnes? The lawe cryeth and barketh againſt hym saying: thou cryest in vaine: God is iuſt: loke after punishement for thyne offences. The rulers of the Synagoge crye out againſte hym, commaundyng that no man preache, no nor be so hardy as once to name this name Ieſu, saying: there is no healthe and saluation in Ieſu, but in Moyses. To be shorte, the same thyng doe the Philoſophers and heathen princes. But that a man may knowe a very euangelike and chriſten faithe in this blynde man, he gaue not ouer when the people thus cried againſt hym, insomuche that being rebuked, and commaunded to holde his peace, he cryed louder then he did before, saying: Thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. The people were offended with his crying: Ieſus alone was nothing offended herewith, but stode ſtyll, and commaunded hym to be called vnto hym. He heard hym crye as he paſſed by: but he made as though he had not heard hym. This came not of any daungerouſnes on Ieſus behalfe: but was the acte of him, who went about to wryng out of the man a notable faythe, for the enſample of other: and his pleaſure was to teache all men by this blinde man, howe & by what meanes light maie be extorted or gotten perforce of Ieſu. The fyrſt hope to obtaine light, is to haue Ieſus to stand ſtill at our crying: The ſecõde, to be called vnto him, eyther by the teachers of the ghoſpell, or els by the ſecrete inſpiracions of the holy ghoſt. For the blynde man could not go vnto hym, vnleſſe he had bene led and guided by holy ſcripture, which we ought in no wiſe to deſpiſe, although it be miniſtred by mã. The Apoſtles, and preachers of the ghoſpell, do happily call a blynde mã, when they call him at the cõmaunde mẽt of Ieſu. But nowe adayes they call without his cõmaundement, not vnto him, but to the aydes of humaine Philoſophie, or Heathen learning, to the obſeruacion of Moſes lawe, & to ỹ cõmodities & pleaſures of this preſẽt lyfe. Aſſuredly these callers make the blinde, more blinde then he was before. But the Apoſtles obeying their maiſters cõmaundement, called this man vnto Ieſus, and so true is it, ỹ they dyd not crie, & brable againſt him, as the people did, that they put him (hauing good hope alreadi) in more hope and comforte, saying: Be of good chere, aryſe, Ieſus calleth thee. The blinde man conceyued so great hope herewith, that he caſt awaye his cloke whiche defended hym againſte the cold weather, and ſkypped out of the place where he ſate, and ranne to Ieſus. Here will I staye the a lytle while, good reader, becauſe thou mayeſt marke the greate readineſſe of mynde, and feruent courage of this blynde begger. How ofte arte thou called vnto Ieſus? & doeſt neither caſte awaye thy cloke or mãtell, nor ſkyp out of thy dẽne of miſery, nor run vnto hym ỹ calleth thee, but tourneſt thy backe, but lingreſt from day to day, but caſteſt doubtes, but findeſt cauillacions and fayned excuſes, but wareſt luſkyche in thy fythe, and

And they called the blynd, saying.

darkenesse, & haddest rather aske an almes of ỳ worlde in a foule beggerly cloke then receiue light of Iesus, wherein is conteyned the summe of all felicitie. What a goodly and faire vesture is the garment of innocencie, and cleane lyfe. What a foule mantell hath he ỳ is clothed with lechery, with couetousnesse, with excesse and ambicion. Howe vile and wretched a begger is he, whoe for a small and corporall commoditie croucheth and kneleth vnto this world. Howe miserablye blynde is he, that neyther knoweth himselfe, nor almightye God his maker. As ofte as thou arte called from this miserable wretchednesse vnto Iesus, either when thou readest the ghospell, or hearest the same preached, or els whan thou art drawen by a certaine secrete inspiracion of the holy ghoste, why doeste thou not then (all thynges layde aparte, that are wonte to let and hinder a man to attaine so great felicitie) leape vp vnto the hope of a better life. Why runnest thou not with moste sure faythe vnto Iesus, whiche onely is able to geue the light, and will geue it to all men. Iesus cometh vnto the: he calleth the: and doest thou again for thy part grutche to mete hym. Thou pynest and wyddrest away euen tyll thy dying day in the darkenesse: but thou shalt not euer haue Iesus passing by the. Certes after death he calleth no manne to saluacion, but to iudgement. When he passeth by here in this worlde, he heareth him that cryeth, haue mercy vpon me: here he standeth still, here he calleth, here he giueth light. This begger hath made the ashamed of thy slouthfulnesse, vnto whom the Lord, when he was comen vntō him sayd. What ayleth the to crye. what wilt thou haue me to do vnto the. what: knewe not Iesus why he cryed. knew not he what he shoulde doe. That is not so: but all this was done for our instruccion. Many beleued that this blynde man loked for an almes of the lorde, because he was a begger. For so nowe a daies many crye vnto Iesus: Lorde haue mercy vpon me. And beyng demaunded what they sue for, what they desyre to haue, one sayth, graunt that I maye be riche: an other, that I maye gette an office: this man, that I maie haue a wyfe with a good dowrie: an other geue me bodilye strength: geue me long lyfe: or graunt that I may be auenged on my enemy. But these thinges Iesus many times taketh awaye from his frendes, because it so behoueth for their saluacion. The euangelike begger desyred none of all these thinges. For he knew right well what ought to be desyred of Iesu. Therfore let vs both heare and folowe hym: Rabboue sayeth he, (that is as muche to saye, as my maister) make me to see. For being careles for all other thynges, he desyred nothing els but light, whereby he might see God and his sonne Iesus, whom to knowe is euerlasting lyfe. For in scripture to knowe God, is nothing els but to see God. O very Euangelike and christiā praier, how fewe wordes hath it: but how great faith. Doubtles this is that short prayer whiche pearceth the heauens. Therfore Iesus answered: Go thy way, thy faith hath purchased the helth. He is not vtterly a man vndoen, and cast awaye, whiche seeth not awhit with bodelye yies: but whoso seeth nothing at all with the yies of his soule, the same cannot be saued. To haue recouered these yies, is life euerlasting. Heare this saying thou pharisaicall felow whosoeuer thou be, that sayest: I ascribe my safety to myne oft fastinges, to my long prayers, to mine almesdedes and my sacrifices: and for that cause thou criest not with the begger, haue mercy on me: but sayest, geue me the reward due vnto my deseruinges. Now Iesus doth contrarily ascribe saluacion vnto faith, and not vnto woorkes.

The blind sayd vnto hym. &c.

The

The blinde man streyght wayes recouered his sighte, not because he deserued it, but for that he beleued. And being commaunded to go his waye, he folowed Jesus. Lighte is geuen the freely: thy blindnes is taken awaye for naught. Afterward thou art left to thyne owne arbitrement whether thou wilt vse the gift of god aright or no. Thou art not compelled to folow: thou hast onely power geuen the to see Jesus: go now whither thou wilt, but at thyne owne auenture. What did that blessed blinde man? He retourned not backe agayne to his beggerly cloke, or mantel: he retourned not to his olde beggerye, but forgote all these thinges, and folowed Jesus in the waye. It auaileth but litle to haue knowen Jesus, vnlesse thou do thy deuoire to folowe him whom thou seest. Jesus goeth straight to the crosse, hither muste thou folow hym, after thou hast once recouered thy syght a gain. As long as thou art blynd, thou maiest crye: Jesu haue mercye vpon me: but thou canst not folow him this way, before thine eye syght be restored. For who would folow him that willingly geueth his soule to death, onlesse he saw by fayth, that worldly reproche were the waye to euerlasting glory: that bodily tourmentes, and afflictions, were the waye to euerlasting ioyes: that death were the way to lyfe eternall. These thinges the quicke syghted of this world, see not perfitely, who do not onely with all theyr eyen loke after rule, riches, honoures, pleasures, and long life: but also endeuoyre themselues to get the same by vnlefull meanes, as by counsayling before with Astronomiers, Soothsayers, Inchaunters, or Necromanciers. These thinges, I saye, they onely see whiche beleue the doctrine of the gospell, and haue sure truste that they shall receyue and enioye the reward promised in the same.

The. xi. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And when they came nie to Jerusalem vnto Bethphage, and Bethany, besides mounte Oliuete, he sendeth forthe two of his disciples, and sayth vnto them: Go your waye into the towne that is ouer against you, and assone as ye be entred into yt, ye shall find a Colte bound, whereon neuer man sate, lowse him, and bring him hither. And yf any man saye vnto you, why doe ye so? say ye, that the lord hath nede of him, and streyght way he will send him hither. And they went their way, and found the Colte tyed by the doore without in a place where two wayes meete. And they lowsed him. And diuers of them that stode there, sayde vnto them, what do ye lowsing the Colte? And they sayde vnto them euen as Jesus had commaunded. And they let them go. And they brought the Colte to Jesus, and cast their garmentes on him. And he sat vpon him. And many spred their garmentes in the waye, other cut downe braunches of the trees and strawed them in the waie. And they that went before, and they that folowed, cryed saying: Osanna. Blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the lorde. Blessed be the kingdome, that cummeth in the name of him, that is Lorde of our father Dauid: Osanna in the highest.

That thing was not yet wrought in the myndes of the disciples, whiche Jesus expressed and set out by a figure, in ỹ blind man. They yet sawe not perfitly with their inward eyes, how happy is the death of those ỹ folow Christes deathe. They yet dreamed vpon this worldly kyngdom. The lord therfore, because he woulde the better taste this in their myndes, how such as will folow him, ought in no wise to desyre the kingdom of this world, shewed them a spectacle, whereby he derided and laughed to scorne all worldly pompe & glorye, as a thing that lasteth but for a season, and soone shall perish: yet by the same he plainely declared, that he could haue commaunded whomsoeuer he woulde, to do what it had pleased hym, saue that his will and pleasure was rather to obey the will of the heauenly father. Finally he woulde haue all menne to know howe he was the selfesame persone, whome the Iewes awayted for to cumme so many hundred yeares before, (according to the prophecies and foresayinges of the Prophetes) for the saluacion of the whole worlde.

When therefore he approched, and was nye vnto Hierusalem (for he was by Bethphage, and Bethany, whiche are two litle townes in the mountaine called mounte Oliuete, from whence a manne might haue sene Ierusalem) he sente oute from thence two of his disciples, geuing them in commaundement to do as followeth: Go ye, saith he, into that towne whiche you see yonder directly against you, and by and by as ye be entred in, you shall finde an Asses foale tied at the gate, the whiche is not yet broken: and whereupon no man hath ridden vnto this day: lowse it, and bring it hither vnto me. And if any man aske you the question why you vntie it, say again: the lord hath nede of this, and straight waies he shall send it hither to me. The disciples went their way as they were bidden, and so came, and found an Asses foale tyed before the gate, in a place wheras two wayes met, and lowsed it. In the meane while some of those that stode by, when they sawe straunge menne vntie the foale, saide vnto them: Syrs what meane you? Why vntie you the foale? The disciples made no other aunswere, then the lorde commaunded them to make, saying: the Lorde hath nede herof. The other notwithstanding it was vnknowen vnto them whom they called their Lorde, did yet let the foale goe without anye further questioning, or reasoning the matter with them. The disciples after they had vntied it, brought it vnto Iesus. Here I woulde haue the earnestly monished, good reader, that not onely the wordes whiche Iesus Christ spake, but also whatsoeuer he did all his lyfelong, was not doen at all auentures, but by the counsayle and wisedome of god, for mannes erudicion. For there is nothing that hath not in it, either an ensample set out to thentent to moue and stirre vs to vertue, and godly liuyng, or a representacion of the olde prophecies, or a fulfilling of the figures, wherwith the lawe dyd as it had bene, with certaine darke misteries or riddles, signifie Christe: or els a signification of thinges that afterwardes shoulde happen and cum to passe. And wheras the mistical sence of euerye thing is diligently to be searched out, yet the more he approched vnto the tyme of his death, when the busynesse of oure saluacion shoulde chiefly be wrought, the more holyer mysteries were all thynges full of. For nowe was that tyme at hand, the whiche he greatly thirstyng, and desyring all mennes saluacion, spake of before, saying: when I shalbe lifted vp from the earth, I will draw all thynges vnto me. For there was not roume ynoughe in Iewry for his charitie: And there the fruite of the ghospell dyd not counteruayle the labour, and diligence of the tiller. For this cause Christe sent for the wilde, and vnbroken asses foale, wherupon no man had sytten before. This foale signifieth the Gentiles, who neyther obeyed the lawe of nature, nor were vnder Moses lawes. For vpon the Asses, that is to saye, the Synagoges backe, both Moses, and the prophetes had ridden. Certaine of the newe disciples are nowe sent out to call the Gentiles, who call them not to Moses, but to Iesus.

Go youre waye into the towne. &c.

And they brought the Coalte to Iesus.

Here

Here woulde therenot lacke some whiche woulde braule and speake against them, and saye: What do you, why vntie you the foale? For this foale had both many, and also vncertaine Maysters, and was tyed, and stode where two wayes met. Whoso is not obedient vnto goddes commaundementes, hath as manye maisters, as he hath vices that he serueth and is subdued vnto: and is so tyed, that he hath no house, but standeth in sight where two wayes mete, readie for euerye manne that wyll take hym. But when Jesu calleth, no man hathe power to resiste. The Jewes cryed, and sayde: This saluacion is ourcs by promyse. Why then are the Heathen Idolatours ioyned with vs? Unto them aunswere was made: he that is the Lorde of all, hath nede of suche foales. He is nowe wery with labouring in vayne among the Jewes, and desyreth to reste hym vpon the vnbroken foale. That this foale is vnbroken, doeth not displease hym, so there lacke not obedience of fayth. A newe ryder hath nede of a newe beaste to ryde vpon.

The disciples, who as yet wot not what the matter meaneth, do neuertheless with their diligent ministerie, helpe forthe & further the matter. They couer the foale with their mantels, because he should not ride vpon his bare backe. O, whosoeuer thou be that art a preacher, and teacher of the gospel, follow this diligence of ỹ disciples. Whersoeuer thou shalt see an vnbroken Asses foale tyed where two wayes mete, ignorannt of the law of the gholpell, and subiect to many vices, but for foly, and simplicitie, rather then of any malice or obstinate euelnesse: and suche a one as will obey yf a man leade it awaye, loke thou vntie it and bryng it vnto Jesu. Caste vpon it the mantell of holsome doctrine: and then Jesus the Lorde of all, will vouchesafe to ryde vpon his backe. Folow thou also the diligence of the other, who against that Christe shoulde ryde forth couered the way with their garmentes, that is, with ensample of thenägelike and Christian godlynesse. Many there were also whiche decked the way with boughes, cut down from trees, especially from the Palme trees whiche beare the figure of virgins, and Martyrs. Jesus the Lorde of all thought it a royall thyng to ryde through suche a waye vpon suche a beaste. And caste their garmẽtes on him.

Nowe staye a lytle whyle, good reader, and compare me with this spectacle, or sight, one of those that were chiefe amonges the Jewish priestes: and fyrst of all regarde what manour of personage is he, and howe great, whiche ryderh vpon the Asses foale. It is the sonne of God, vnto whome the father hath geuen all power in heauē, and in earth. It is the sauiour and gouernour of the whole worlde. It is the authour, Lorde, and kyng, of all thynges that are created and made: a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, who with a becke was able to do whatsoeuer he would: whose maiestie all the orders of Aungels do adore and worship: who sitteth on the right hande of the father almightie. To ỹ this dignitie compare me a bishop of one tẽple, whiche hath bought ỹ prie sthode or prelacie lasting but for one yeare, of a wicked and Heathē kyng, for a filthy summe of money. Compare the bare heade of Jesu, with his tyare or myter, all glysteryng and shining with golde, and precious stones. Compare that sobre, and mylde countenaunce of Jesu, with his face puffed vp with pryde: with his grym forheade, with his frowning browes, with his stately loke, with his contencious or vncharitable mouth. Compare the bare handes of Jesu, with his fyngers laden with ringes, and precious stones. Compare the course, and homly garment of Jesu with his tragi-tall or masking apparayle, who weareth nothing courser thē clothe of golde, or purple sylke. Compare the disciples mantels, with his golden sadles, with his couering clothes of crymasyne sylke, with his syluer stirropes, but ouer gylte. Compare this commune Asses foale that caried Jesu, with so many Mules trapped with sylke, and clothe of golde, with so many royall coursers and great horses, with so many Palfrayes of great price, with so many wagons, with so many chariottes, with so many chaires of estate prepared to carry one man. Compare me the fewe, and poore simple disciples of Jesu, with ỹ solemne pompe, passyng the pompe of any worldly prince, of suche as go before the Bishop, of his henchmen, of Trumpettes of sundrye tune, of suche as ruiron and garde his personage, of the bende of horsemen, and footemenne: amonge whome as euery of them is moste proude, hye mynded and stately, so is the same nexte the byshoppes owne proper persone, and in greatest fauoure and conceipte with hym. Compare the ioyfull cryinges of the children that went before, and followed Jesu, who inspired with the holye ghoste, song this sayinge taken out of the prophecie of Dauid: Hosanna, that is so say, make vs safe. Blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde: Blessed be the kyngdome of our father Dauid that cummeth. Hosanna in the highest. Compare, I saye, these ioyfull cryinges with the vnghostlye acclamacions, wherwith the multitude of flatterers crye vpon an vngracious Jewishe byshop, saying: God sende the moste holy father in God, long lyfe. God graunt hys hyghest priestes the victory. I praye god that the moste blessed and chiefe prelate of religion may raigne in prosperitie. Howe much Jesus dekieth suche byshops, this one thing plainly declareth, because he commaunded all that coloured and stately priesthode, with the temple therof, vtterly to be abolished & destroyed. For these be they by whome euen nowe in our dayes, Jesus (who wyll be the onely head of priesthode) is slayn in his membres. He seketh for those ministers that maye bryng vnto hym the Asse, that maye couer the foale with their mātels, that maie strowe the waye with Palme boughes, and with godly acclamacions and cryinges, knowleage that the kingdome of the ghospell promised of the prophetes is come and presente. Neither greueth he any eare to the Phariseis muttring against him, and not contented with these ioyfull cryinges of the people: but sayth that the very stones shall sooner crye out, then goddes glory be conceled.

The Byshop of Romes pompe is couertly described.

The texte. ¶ And the lorde entred into Hierusalem, and into the temple. And when he had loked round about vpon all thynges, and nowe euentyde was come, he wente out vnto Bethanie with the twelue. And on the morowe when they wer come oute from Bethanie, he hungred And whan he had spied a sygge tree a farre of hauyng leaues, he came to see yf he might synde any thyng theron. And when he came to it, he founde nothyng but leaues, for the time of sygges was not yet. And Jesus answered, and sayde vnto the sigge tree: neuer man eate fruit of thee hereafter whyle ỹ world standeth. And his disciples heard it.

¶ With suche a pompe the kyng Jesus entred into the royall citie of Hierusalem: the heauenlye priest entred into the temple, and there as it was beseming for a kyng, and priest, taught the people, healed the sycke, made strong the weake and feble, as one vsurping violent rule in another mannes kyngdome. In the meane whyle the wycked priestes, Phariseis, and headmen of the people treated at the mattier, but the symple people rasye to be instructed cryed ioyfully vpon hym.

Jesus

Jesus as thoughe he woulde haue restored the decayed religion of the temple, whiche the phariseis thought that tyme chiefely to flourishe, beheldeuery parte therof, diligently beweyng and marking yf anye thyng were done therin, not besemyng the house of god: not because he passed so muche what were done in that temple, whiche he knewe very well shoulde within shorte space after be destroyed: but his pleasure was to declare by a certaine corporall fygure what maner a churche he woulde haue his to be, whiche he buylded of lyuely stones. Among these stones it is mete that the christian bysshop be conuersaunt and walke, hauing alwaye a diligent eye, and seyng that there be nothing among them, whiche maye defyle the temple dedicated vnto god. The thinges that defile it are ambicion, filthie gayne, couetousnesse, and falsehode. These abhominacions the Lord Jesus doth not suffer in his temple.

And nowe the euentyde was cum.

Nowe when the euening drewe nighe, he returned vnto Bethanie, because that in so riche, and royall a citie, he coulde fynde no place to be harboured in. O flower of religion, whiche cannot awaye with the chiefe prelate of all religion. Oh misnamed Hierusalem, whiche blynded with worldely lustes, knoweth not her pacifier. O happye Bethany whiche without the woorkes of the lawe, through the onely obedience of faith, deserued to haue Jesus to be her geast. When on the nexte daye in the morning earlye, he returned from Bethany to Hierusalem, as he trauayled by the waye, he began to waxe hungrye, who in very dede hungred mannes saluacion: and the sweetest bread vnto hym that coulde be was to redeme mankynde, accordyng vnto the fathers wyll and determinacion, albeit he was also, touchyng the nature of manne whiche he had taken vpon hym, verily pangued with bodely hunger, and felte the griefe therof as other menne do, by reason of the drieth of his bodye.

Therfore when he sawe a farre of a figge tree, whiche because it was full of grene leaues, appeared to haue had some fruite: he ranne thereūto to se whether it had any thing to asswage his hunger withall. It is a sore payne when a man is very hungrye, and hath nothing to eate. But it is a muche greater griefe for one to see those miscarye through their vnbeleefe, whome he is very desyrous to saue. And when he came vnto the figge tree, and deceyued with the allurement of the leaues, found no fruite therein, he cursed it, saying: Neuer man eate fruite of the hereafter whyle the worlde endureth.

The disciples secretly mercuailed betweene themselues why he thus cursed the tree, especially sithe the time was not yet cum, whē this kynde of tree is wonte to haue fruite. Corporall honger hath her proper angre: But theuangelyke and spirituall honger, hath a more sharpe & bytyng testinesse. Christ thought euery tarying ouer long where by mannes saluacion was prolonged.

And trees haue due tymes appointed them of nature, when to bryng foorth their fruite, so that he maie appeare vnreasonable to pray that it might bee euermore baraine, because it brought not furthe fruite before due season.

Furthermore, for what purpose ranne Jesus to the figge tree to shake downe the fruite yf there had bene anye, sythe he knewe right well there was none. But this acte whiche in outwarde apparaunce semed fonde, and vnreasonable, occasyoned the disciples not onely to be more attent and take better hede, but also to enserche the mistery therof. The Lorde Jesus moste hungry and desyrous of mannes saluacion, foūde frute in the barrayne trees, where there was no hope of fruite, that is to saie, in common women, in Publicans, in sinners, in heathen folkes, in the womanne of Canaan, and in the Samaritanes. Onely in the priestes, Scribes, and Phariseis, of whome all menne had conceiued greatest hope that in them shoulde be the sweatest fruit of the Ghospell, founde he none at all. They kepte the fortresse of religion: they were continually in the temples: they had knowleage of the lawe, and prophetes: they loked pale with fastinges: they vsed long prayers: they gaue great almes: and besydes this, theyr robes and brode Philacteries made a wonderfull shewe, as thoughe they had ben altogether giuen to the studie of vertuouse and godly lyuing. Truly these were the leaues whiche promised the worlde tymely ripe fruite, euen before due season. But the Lordes entent was to shewe that there is nothing farther paste all grace, and goodnes, then is vngodlynesse couloured with a counterfaite shewe, or visure of holynes.

This fygge tree deserueth to bee cursed of Jesu, leste any manne deceyued with the goodly shew of her leaues, would from hence forth hope to haue of this sorte of people, any sweate fruite of theuangelyke, & Christian charitie.

The texte. ¶ And they came to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the temple, and began to caste out them that solde and bought in the temple, and ouerthrew the tables of the money chaungers, and the stooles of them that solde doues, and would not suffer that any man shoulde carry a vessell thorow the temple. And he taught, saying vnto them. Is it not wryttē: my house shall be called the house of prayer vnto all nacions. But ye haue made it a denne of theues.

And Jesus went into the temple &c. Therefore he departed from the fygge tree whiche deserued no yll, and came to Jerusalem, wherein was the moral figge tree that had bene so long time nourished, and dunged in vaine, and yet brought forth nothing els but leaues. And when he was entred into the tēple, he shewed againe another figure, whereby to declare what puritie besemeth the churche of the ghospell, and also what cleanesse becummeth an hart dedicated vnto the spirite of Christe.

And he taught the saiyng, &c. For with a scourge or whippe of cordes, he draue, and whipped out of the tēple, the rablement of biers, and sellers, and also ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaungers, and the stooles of the doue sellers, and suffred none to carrie any prophane or vncleane vessell thorowe the temple. And lest he shoulde haue semed to haue bene angry with them causeleste, he alleaged the testimonie of the prophete Esaye: Is it not, sayth he, wrytten: My house shall be called a house of praier vnto all nacions, but ye haue made it a denne of theaues, deceitfully doing the same thyng therein vnder couloure and pretence of the honoure, and seruice of god that theaues do to wayfaryng men in their iourneys. The Lord cared not greatly for the puritie of that temple, whiche his will was should be destroyed with the rites and ceremonies therof: but he set forthe vnto vs the notable puritie of the new temple, whereof himselfe would be the chief workman and builder, couertly sygnifying with all, how the priestes, scribes, and phariseis, should be worthely deposed from the principalitie of religion, who had so defiled, euen that auncient, and figuratiue religion, with their couetousnesse, falshod, hipocrisie, and all kyndes of filthynesse. We neuer reade that euer Jesus was so moued: neuer that he vsed like crueltie. What woulde he nowe do if he sawe his sponsesse the churche (whiche he washed with his owne precious bloude, to make her cleane vnto hymselfe, without any spot, or wrynckle) so to be arayed, polluted, and defiled with all manour of fylthynesse, and that by the very bishops the rulers of the same? Who

haue not onely catell, and pigyons to sell, but also all holy thinges, whiche in very dede, can neither be bought, nor sold for money. He seeth it vndoubtedly although he winke therat for a season. Neyther shall suche persones therfore escape vnpunished, because god of his great lenitie and gentlenesse suffreth them, to thend they should repent, and cũ to amendmẽt. The day, the daye shal cum, when that terrible scourge shall be made, to whippe all those into the fyre of hell that be defilers of the holy temple.

¶ And the scribes and hyè priestes heard it, and sought howe to destroy him, for they feared him because all the people mervayled at his doctrine. And when euen was cum, Jesus went out of the citie. And in the morning as they passed by, they sawe the figge tree, dryed vp by the rootes: and Peter remembred, & sayd vnto him: Maister beholde the figge tree whiche thou cursedst is withered awaye. And Jesus answered, and sayd vnto them: Haue confidence in God. The texte.

And that it maye appeare what a great mischiefe the couetousnesse of priestes and phariseis is: when the chief of the priestes and scribes, who had the greatest porciõ of the gaynes, saw these thinges, they sought a meane how they might destroy Jesus. Oh figge tree barayne, and cursed in dede. They boast and aduaunt themselues for the chiefe prelates of pure religion, and yet, in the name of God, be they sore displeased, that the defilers of the temple are driuen out a doores. There lacked not in them a wicked minde ready to commit haynous murdre: but thei sought occasion how they might safely accomplishe their desyre. They alone coulde not fynde in their hartes to loue that louely and amiable Jesus, who hurt no body, but did all men good. They feared him, onely because the people mervayled at his doctrine, and conceiued an high opinion of him for the miracles they had seen him worke before. Oh wrong shapen holinesse in them that were professours of holinesse. After they had purposed to do so wicked a dede, they were not afrayed leste God (vnto whome nothing is vnknowen) would be auenged: and yet stode they in dreade of the people. Why did they not at the leaste wise feare Jesus himselfe? They had both seen, and heard tell of the greate numbre of miracles that he wrought, which were an euident testimony that goddes power was presently with hym, so oft as he would hymselfe. He that is able to chase away diuels and put them to flighte, can muche easlyer put them in. He that with the bare worde of his mouthe, rayseth the dead, and calleth them to life againe, can with muche lesse difficultie, take awaye the lyfe. If they beleue he is so gracious and mercifull, that though he be able, yet wyll he hurt no body: why then go they about to put suche a one to death? If they beleue that he will also do, what he is able to do: why do they not, euen for verye feare of punishment and vengeaunce, refrayne from so wicked a purpose? Doubtelesse this was that vncurable blindenesse of them, who thought in their owne conceytes none had eyes, and could haue sene but they. Now when the nighte eftsones approched, Jesus, who had bene all the daye in the temple fasting and without meate, departed from Jerusalem. For they feared him because all the people, &c.

So ofte forsaketh he the citie, offended with the obstinate vnbeleefe of the inhabitauntes: so oft cummeth he thyther, to find sum fruite, if it would be in so goodly a shew of leaues. But would to god this cursed figtre had bene nothing els but barain, and not brought foorth deadly poyson. Jesus, the time of his death and passion bring now at hand, suffered no time to passe away fruitlesse. He spent all the day in the temple, and bestowed the nighte in praier, and priuatelye animating and encouraging of his disciples. Agayne whan early in the mourning they retourned from Bethany to Hierusalem, and passed by the figge tree, the disciples perceiued how it was withered, euen from the very rootes, to the highest top.

Peter called to remembraunce what Jesus had done the day before, and knewe righte well howe he had cursed the tree, and yet meruayling that it was sodainly withered in all partes from the very rootes, sayd to the lord: Maister: Loe the figge tree that thou cursedst is now withered. Peter meruayled here at, not withstanding he had oft tymes before seen hym do farre greater thinges than this. Surely he had forgotten this lesson, howe there is nothing so harde, that faith is not able to bring to passe. Of fayth springeth all the fruite of the gospell. And because the Synagoge wanted this faith, we see howe she is cleane withered. The churche of the Gentiles blossometh & braunceth out wt many crownes of Martirs, with many precious stones of virgins, with many ensamples of vertue. On the other side, what is further paste all grace and goodnesse, more abiect, vile, and barayne, then the Jewes are. Where is the auctoritie of the law becum. where is the meruelous shewe of religion or holynesse. where is the temple. where are the stately Scribes, & Pharisees. Is not the figge tree all withered. Therfore, sayth he, yf ye will blossome and bring foorth fruite, put confidence, not in your owne strength, but in God.

The texte. ¶ Verely I say vnto you, that whosoeuer shall say vnto this mountaine, remoue and cast thy selfe into the sea, & shall not doubte in his harte but shall beleue that those thynges which he sayeth, shall cum to passe, whatsoeuer he saieth, he shall haue. Therfore I say vnto you, what thinges soeuer ye desyre when ye pray, beleue that ye receyue them, & ye shall haue them. And when ye stand and pray, forgeue yf ye haue oughte against anye manne, that your father also whiche is in heauen, maie forgeue you your trespaces.

I assure you of this one thing, yf a man hauing a sure beleefe in god, commaunde this figge tree to wither (whiche thing you meruayle at, now it is done) not onely that shall foorthwith cum to passe, but also yf he saye vnto this mountayne: Auoyd out of thy place, and cast thy selfe into the sea, albeit it seme a thing very impossible, yet yf he speake the worde nothyng doubting or mistrusting in his hart, but haue conceyued a sure beleefe of mind, that whatsoeuer he say shall in very dede cum to passe, then vndoubtedlye whatsoeuer he commaundeth, shall be done. This beleefe towardes god, shall cause that ye shall desyre nothing of him in vayne. Therfore truste ye on my warrandise, that whatsoeuer ye demaunde of the father not mistrusting but he will graunt you your requeste, you shall obtain it, so that your mindes be fre from desyre of reuengement: and on condicion, ye desyre but what shall be expedient for your soule health. He that distrusteth, obtaineth nothing. For such a one beleueth that the father either cannot accomplish his desyre (whereas in dede he his able to do all thinges with a becke) or at the least wise will not let him haue what he lawfully asketh: that man also obtaineth not his requeste, and if he beleue his faith is a naughty shamlesse fayth, whoso desireth the father to pardon the trespaces that he hath committed againste his maiestie, whereas he will not againe for his parte release vnto his christian brother, suche offences as his sayd brother had committed againste hym. Wherefore when ye settle your selues to prayer, forgeue with all your hertes, if any body haue ought offended you. For vnder this condicion shall your father in heauen release you your trespaces: If you will not forgeue youre neighboure the fault whiche he hath committed againste you, neyther will the father of heauen pardon the offentes, wherby ye haue trespaced his goodnesse.

¶ And they came againe to Jerusalem. And as he walked in the temple, there came to him the hye priestes, and the Scribes, and elders, and sayde vnto hym: by what authoritie doest thou these thinges? And who gaue the this authoritie to do these thinges? Jesus answered and sayd vnto them: I will also aske of you a certaine thing, and answere ye me, and I will tell you by what auctoritie I do these thinges. The baptisme of John, whether was it from heauen, or of man? answere me. And they thought in themselues saying: yf we saye from heauen, he will saye: why then dyd ye not beleue hym? But yf they had sayde of men, they feared the people. For all men counted John that he was a very prophete. And they answered and sayd vnto Jesu: we can not tell. And Jesus answered: neyther tell I you, by what auctoritie I do these thinges. The texte.

These thinges done on the waye, they came againe to Jerusalem, and Jesus, according to his accustomed manoure, went vnto the temple. The presence of Jesus in the temple, is soule healthy in the churche. Neyther beseemeth it suche as are in Christes stede, to be any where oftener, then in the temple. They be in the temple, whiche entermeddle with those thinges that pertayne to god, and not vnto this worlde.

What maketh a bishop in a cāpe amōg wantiets? what hath he to do in theatres, ỹ is to saye, in stages, & places ordayned for the people to behold sightes and enterludes in? what maketh he in princes courtes? The phariseis, Scribes, priestes, and elders were by bodily presence ofte in the temple: but as touching ỹ spirite, they were a great waye of. Therfore when the hye priestes ioyning vnto them the Scribes, and headmen of the people, because the matter shoulde seme to be done by a lawfull counsaile, sawe howe Jesus had all the multitude in the temple, diligently harkening and listening vnto his doctrine, and also howe, by reason of his miracles, he raygned and played the kyng, as it had ben in another princes kyngdom (for he drove out marchantmen, and suche as carried vessels throughe the temple) they went and interrupted hym in his preachyng, renuing their olde manoure of false reprouing, and saying: by what authoritie doest thou these thynges? And who hath gyuen the licence thus to do? They were not able to disprove his doctrine: neyther coulde they denie his miracles, being so many, and so euident with all: nor fynde faute with them, sithe he wrought them all for mannes preseruacion, and that freely. They sought occasion of authoritie, whereby they mighte haue some quarell againste him. For they would not in any wise that this glory should haue been geuen vnto God: but all their whole drift was, to haue their owne authoritie euerywhere highliest estemed. If Jesus (whome they beleued to be nothing els but a man) had taken vpon hym goddes authoritie, then would thei byandby haue made a matier of blasphemy of it. If not, then had there not ben to seke, a forged matter of sedicion to laye againste hym, for that by his owne priuate authoritie, without leaue and licence of the priestes and elders, he presumed to do suche a thing in the temple. What neded them to moue this question of authoritie? sith his very dedes declared that all that was done, was done by the might and power of God? sithe the thyng it selfe plainlye shewed, how this was he whom God by his Prophetes promised long ago to runne: sithe the father after his baptisme, declared with his owne voyce, And as he walked in the teple. &c

that this was his singularlye beloued sonne, whome they should obeye. Nowe the authoritie of the priestes, whiche they misused, was good for nothing els but to lette gods glorye. Howbeit their frowarde wilfulnesse, dyd also make muche for the aduauncyng and setting forth of his power, and goodnesse.

Jesus therfore, because he was not ignorant where about they wente (for what answere soeuer he had made, they would haue found faute therwith: and as yet the time was not cum for him to disclose and confesse who he was) Jesus, I saye, auoyded this deceitfull question with another wise demaunde. On this condicion, sayth he, will I make answer vnto your question, yf you will answer me firste vnto mine. The baptisme of John, whether was it from heauen or of men? Shoyle me this question. Marke howe easlye goddes wysdome snarleth mannes wylinesse, whiche vseth all the crafte and police that maye be, againste it. They hadde hartes replenished with all worldlye subtiltie: they deuised all the gylefull wayes that could be inuented: And yet whyles they made traines to entrap hym, they perceiued that there were snares prepared and layed for themselues.

And they thought in themselues &c.

For they thought thus in their mindes: If we saye, from heauen, then will he replie: Why dyd you not then beleue him, when he bare witnesse of me? If we saye of men, we stande in ieopardie to be assaulted of the people. For John was of very great authoritie among the people, and the memorie of him was reputed blessed and holy, because no man doubted but he was a prophet in dede. And for this cause, albeit they were proud felowes and of an haut courage, yet thought they it better to be a litle ashamed, then openly to be reproued, or stoned to death.

Therfore vnto Jesu, who required an answere, they sayde: We cannot tell. Then Jesus paying them home againe with a lyke answere, sayd vnto them: If you know not to me warde that ye know, neither will I shew you by what authoritie I do these thinges that I do. Compare my dedes with Johns, and then waye and ponder with your selues whether it be mete, if ye doubted not of his authoritie, to doubte of mine.

The. xij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he began to speake vnto them by parables. A certaine man planted a vineyarde & compassed it about with an hedge, & ordeined a wynepresse, and builded a toure, and lefte out to hier vnto husbandmen, and went into a straunge countrey. And when the time was cum, he sent to the husbandmen a seruaunt that he might receyue of the husbandmen of the fruite of the vineyarde. And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him awaye again emptie, and moreouer he sent vnto them another seruaunt, and at him they cast stones, and brake his heade, and sent him awaye againe all to rente: and againe he sent another, and hym they killed, and many other, beatyng some, and killyng some. And so when he hadde yet but one beloued sonne, he sent hym also at the laste vnto them, saying: they will feare my sonne. But the husbandemen sayde among themselues: this is the heyre, cum let vs kyll hym, and the inheritaunce shall be ours. And they toke him, and killed hym and caste hym out of the vineyarde.

After

After the prieſtes, Scribes and head meyne hadde by reaſon they perceiued the traine that was made for them auoyded, as well as it woulde be, the inconuenience of this queſtion, the lorde Jeſus put forth vnto them another queſtion by waye of a riole or darke parable, whereunto whiles they vnaduiſedly anſwered, they bothe condemned theyr owne wickednelle, and alſo graunted that the authoritie (whiche they had hytherto ſomuche bragged and boaſted on) ought worthily to be taken awaye from them, and geuen vnto other. The parable was ſuche. A certaine man planted a vyneyarde, and hedged it rounde about, leſt it ſhould be open for man and beaſt to ruune into: & digged therin a ceſterne to receiue the newe wyne, and builded alſo a tower to defende it with all: when it was in this wyſe ſufficiently furniſhed with all neceſſaries therunto belongyng, he let it out to hier to huſbandmen, and anon as he had ſo done he went into a ſtraunge countrey. And when grape time was cum, he ſent his ſeruaunt to the ſame huſbandmen vnto whome he had let it out, to receiue of them the fruite therof. But they being in a conſpiracie, tooke the ſeruaunt, and all to beat hym, and ſent hym home agayne emptie. This notwithſtanding ỳ gentle landlorde ſent againe another of his ſeruauntes. But they now made worſe throughe his lenitie and gentlenes, caſt ſtones at hym, and braſte his head, and ſent hym like wyſe awaye agayne all to reuiled, without anye fruite, but laden with iniuries. yet for all that the ſame moſte gentle lorde wolde not about in all haſte to be auenged, but nowe the thyrde tyme ſente another ſeruaunt, and him alſo they ſlew. Agayne after he had ſente diuerſe of his ſeruauntes, one after another, the ende and concluſion was, that eyther they bet them all, or els ſlew them. He had then left his onely ſonne whom he loued tenderly. Therfore becauſe that of his wonderfull gentleneſſe, he woulde proue all the wayes and meanes that myght be to retourne them, laſte of all he ſent hym alſo vnto them, thynckyng thus with himſelfe: Although they haue deſpiſed my ſeruauntes, yet at the leaſt wyſe they will reuerence this my ſonne. But the malice of the huſbandmen conquered all the lordes clemency & goodneſſe. When they ſawe howe his ſonne was cum, then fell they in a conſpiracie together, for a more miſchieuous purpoſe. Here now, ſayd they, is the heire: cum let vs kill hym, and by this meanes the whole herytage ſhall be ours. Then layde they handes on him, and caſt him out of the vineyard, & ſlewe him.

And again he ſent an other. &c.

And ſo whe he had yet but one beloued ſonne. &c.

But ỳ huſbandmen ſayd among themſelues &c.

¶ What ſhall therfore the Lorde of the vyneyard do? He ſhall cumme and deſtroie the huſbandmen and let out the vyneyard vnto other. Haue ye not red this ſcripture? The ſtone whiche the builders dyd refuſe, is become the chief ſtone of the corner. This is the lordes doing, and it is maruaylous in our eyes. They went about alſo to take hym, and feared the people, for they knew that he had ſpoken the parable againſt them. And they left hym, and went their waye.

The texte.

When the lorde had made an ende of this parable, he aſked the prieſtes, and ſcribes: What ſhall therfore the lorde of the vineyarde do vnto ſuche huſbandmen? They not markyng whereunto the parable or ſimilitude tended, ſo anſwered the lorde that they gaue ſentence directly againſt themſelfes. He ſhall cum, ſay they, and punyſhe the huſbandmen, and ſet out the vineyard vnto other more faythfull and truſtie perſones.

When

When Iesus had alowed this answer, he added a testimony out of ꝑ psalme, seekyng for an interpretacion of them who professed the knowledge of the lawe. Haue ye not read, saythe he, this scripture folowyng: The same stone whiche the builders refused, is made the head stone of the corner. This was the lordes doing, and it is merualous in our eyes. Here awakened they and perceiued how theyr mischeuous purposes were not vnowē vnto Iesus, and vnderstood also that theyr vncurable malyce was plainly described by this darke parable. God committed vnto them his people, as a vineyarde diligently fournished with all thinges belonging to the discipline of godlynes to be well husbanded. Then he, as though he had ben in a strange countrey suffered them to doe therwith what them liked. But they husbanded it to their owne profit and commoditie, and nothyng for the lordes behoofe, who ought of ryght to haue receiued the fruite therof. When they were slacke and negligent in doing of their duetie, he warned them therof by diuerse prophetes: but for all that they waxed euery day worse and worse, and at the length were redy to expulse Iesus his only sonne out of Ierusalē, and put hym to death perswadyng themselfes that he being once slayne, they should be the onely lordes and proprietaries of the vineyarde. But contrarye wyse it was then to cum to passe, that by the moste iuste vengeaunce and punishment of God (whom thei had so many times and ofte despised) the temple, and soueraignetie of religion shoulde be taken quite from them, and geuen to the apostles. For afterwarde Iesus (who was by thē as a naughty stone, cast out of the building of the Synagoge) was contrary to theyr expectacion chosen by the wyll of God, to be the head corner stone, in the building of the church, that shoulde be builded bothe of the Iewes, and Gentiles: to thentent that he beyng the middle, and vnmoueable stone, should hold together those two peoples, as it were bothe the walles of the same churche, in one euangelike and christen faythe.

They went about also to take hym.

They vnderstoode the Parable, they knewe the Prophecye, and yet blinded with obstynate malyce would not tourne from their wickednesse, but for feare of the people that stode rounde about them, worne they yr waye from Iesu, entendyng by pryuye traynes, and subtyltie, what they could not openly doe. Surely there is none so mischeuous a kynde of manslaughter, as that whiche is cloked with a colour of iustice and holynesse.

The texte. And they sent vnto hym certayne of the Pharisees, and Herodes seruauntes to take hym in his wordes. And assone as they were cumme, they sayde vnto hym: Maister, we knowe that thou art true, and carest for no man, for thou consyderest not the outwarde apparaile of men, but teachest the waye of God truely. Is it lawful to pay tribute to Cesar or not? ought we to geue, or ought we not to geue? But he vnderstode their simulation, and sayd vnto them: why tempte ye me? Bryng me a peny that I maye see it. And they brought it. And he sayth vnto them: whose is this Image, and superscripcion? And they sayd vnto hym: Cesars: And Iesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Geue to Cesar the thynges that belong to Cesar: and to God the thynges whiche pertaine to God. And they maruayled at hym.

Wherfore makyng as though them selfes had ben quiet, and no medlers, they set a worke certayne notable wicked personnes of the Pharisees, and the Herodians whiche dissented in doctrine among themselfes, but in hatyng of Iesus agreed all in one. Oh folysh wysdome of this worlde. They that haue ben so oftymes put to the worse, doe ofte tymes cumme again, and assayle hym, hym, to thentent it may appeare that they are at all sayes banquished, and in conclusion depart their waye as vnequal matches to cope or encounter with Goddes wysdoom. For nowe was it tyme that Satan (who of late assayled the Lorde, but went away with losse of victorie) should by his garde, and mynisters bring forth all his artyllary and engins against him.

Therfore they that are set vp to playe this parte, goe vnto Jesus, and propoune vnto him a capcious question, because to seke some occasion of his wordes, and answeres therevnto, whereby they maye haue hym condemned before themperours deputie. They begin with a very flatering proheme, as thoughe he could be deceiued with faire wordes, who so ofte times declareth howe there is nothyng that he knoweth not. Maister, say they, we knowe right well that thou art a teller of trouthe, and feareste no man, but frankely speakest the truthe without regarde of persone. Neyther art thou any whyt moued with the dignitie, or hygh auctoritie of any manne (as many other be, that flatter and coury fauoure with potentates and great menne) but (menne contemned) thou trewly teachest what god hathe commaunded. Therefore tell vs also we praie the: Is it lawfull for vs to pay tribute vnto themperour, or is it not lawfull? The phariseis helde stifly that the Jewes, beyng a people dedicated vnto god, ought not to be tributories vnto Heathen Emperours, and worshyppers of Idolles.

For thou considerest not ye,

On the other syde, the herodians defended themperous right. This deceitfull proheme tended hereunto, that yf he had geuen sentence for the phariseis, then should he haue been accused of the Herodians for an authour of rebellyon, or insurrection against themperour. Jesus, vnto whom theyr craft and wylines was not vnknowen, beyng not contented with them, for that they came not to learne, but to tempt him, aunswered: Why doe you tempte me? bring me for the a peny that I maye see it. And byandby it was brought him. Theyr seruice was not to seke in making of the traine, whiche came purposely to take him in a trippe. Then loked he on the peny, and sayd: whose is this Image, and superscripcion? They answered: themperours. What is this? knewe not Jesus (vnto whome nothyng is vnknowen) the Image or title of themperoure: and did the Phariseis and Herodians knowe it? Yes verily he knew it well ynoughe, and that before he loked thereon. But he sought an occasion to make a conuenient answere vnto theyr deceitfull question.

But he vnderstoode their simulacion.

Here was an ensample geuen to declare howe they ought to knowe nothyng of princes affaires, whose duetie it is, for asmuche as they profesſe themselfes to be Christes vicars in earthe, to preache, and teache heauenly matters. Now heare an answer worthy to cum out of Christes mouthe. Yelde ye, saith he, those thinges that pertaine to themperour, to themperour: and those thinges that belong to god, vnto god. He disalowethnot, if suche as are dedicated vnto god, giue vnto themperour, be he neuer so vngodly and wicked a prince, that, whiche is due vnto hym for gouerning of the common weale, or what he otherwise violently exacteth (because that losse of money doth not make men vngodlye) but he monisheth vs, occasion seruing him, of a thyng whiche is more to the purpose, that is, howe all ought to be yelden to god, that is due vnto god. A vile piece of coyne had grauen in it a title, and ymage of themperoure. If thou knowest this title, and art content to geue vnto him his duetie, howe muche more then oughtest thou to yelde vnto almighty god (whose

And Jesus answered, and sayde vnto them.

Image euery manne beareth) what he ought of duetie to haue. When thou receyuedst Baptysme, Goddes image was prynted and grauen in thy soule. Why doest thou then geue it vnto the deuell? Thou glorifiest in the name, and tytle of a Chrystian manne: why yeldeste thou not vnto Christe, that thou owest hym by reason of thy profession? All that were there present mazuayled at this discrete and wyse answere. Two sectes of the Iewes were nowe put to sylence with one saying.

The .3. sorte.

¶ There came also vnto hym the Saducees, whiche say that there is no resurrection. And they asked hym, saying: Master, Moyses wrote vnto vs, yf any mannes brother dye, and leaue his wyfe behynde hym, and leaue no chyldren, that his brother shoulde take hys wyfe, and rayse vp seed to his brother. There were seuen brethren, and the fyrst toke a wife and when he dyed, left no seede behynde hym: And the seconde toke her, and dyed, neyther lefte he any seede. And the thirde in likewyse. And seuen had her, and lefte no seede behinde them: Laste of all the wife dyed also. In the resurrection therefore, when they shall ryse againe, whose wife shall she be of them? for seuen had her to wife. And Iesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Doe ye not therfore erre because ye vnderstande not the Scriptures, neyther the power of God? For when they shall ryse agayne from death, they neither marrye, nor are marryed, but are as the aungels whiche are in heauen. As touchyng the deade, that they ryse agayne haue ye not rede in the booke of Moyses, howe in the bushe God spake vnto hym, saying: I am the god of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob, he is no god of the dead, but the god of liuing. Ye are therfore greatly deceyued.

Then came the secte of Saducees, who denied the resurrection of bodyes, auouchyng manne wholy to perysshe after deathe. Neyther beleued they that there was any spirite or Aungell, wherein they dissented in opinion frō the Phariseis. These grosse felowes had also a capcious question wherwith to tempte goddes wisdome. Iesus did then take vpon him the person of an vnlearned and ignorannte person: but that thyng whiche in hym was lowest, was hygher, and of more excellencye then that whiche in menne is hyghest. They assayled hym on this wise: Master, Moises in the booke entitled deuteronomium, hath lefte vs this lawe, that yf any maried manne dye without issue, his next brother in age should marry the wydow, and of her beget chyldren to beare the dead mans name. And yf he deceasse without chyldrē to, then the next vnto hym should succede in his place or roume.

Were seuen brethren.

It chaunced that of seuen brethren the eldest maried a wyfe: he dyed without issue: Then came the nexte brother in age, according to the prescription of the lawe, and maried the widow: and he beyng lykewyse departed without childzen, the thyrde brother succeded: and after hym all the other by course, vnto the seuenthe, and last manne. Eche of them one after another, marryed her, and eche of them deceassed without issue. At the length the woman also dyed herselfe. Therefore when the tyme of resurrection shall cumme, and the seuen brethren, and the woman shall reliue, which of them all shall chalenge her for his wyfe? for in her lyfe tyme she was like wyse maryed vnto them all seuen. The Saducies thought they woulde by thyncōuenience that they inferred of this case, make the resurrection of the dead to apeare a very fonde thyng, and disagreable to reason: specyally yf there shoulde then ryse strife and debate among the brethren for the wyfe, whiche was common vnto them all.

Iesus grutched not to teache those grosse felowes, saying: Doethe not thys question playnly declare that you be in a wrong beleke, and altogether out of the waye, for almuche as ye neyther vnderstand the Scriptures, nor yet perceiue the power of almighty God? The Scripture is spirituall: & God who made made manne of naught, canne rayle hym agayne at his pleasure, from death to lyfe. He wyll not onely make the deade alyue agayne, but also rewarde them with lyfe euerlastyng.

Nowe wedlocke was inuented among menne for this purpose, because the thyng (I meane mankynde) whiche of it selfe, and owne proper nature contyneweth not for euer, myght by procreacion and encreasyng of the worlde, be multiplied, preserued and contynued. But whereas menne neyther dye, nor be borne after the common course of the world, what nedeth there any matrimonye? For after the resurrection of the dead, neyther shall any manne marry, nor any manne geue his daughter in maryage to an other: but as the angels of god in heauen, because there is among them no mortalitie, knowe not the vse of matrimony: so shall they that shall be reiyued in the generall resurrection, be made lyke vnto the aungels, theyr bodies beynge all spyrytuall and immortal. Furthermore why do you thinke it disagreable to reason to beleue that the dead shall aryse agayne? Haue ye not redde in holy scripture (the auctoritie wherof is counted among you holy, and inuiolable) what god sayed when he spake vnto Moyses out of the bushe? I am, saied he, the god of Abraham, the god of Isaac, and the god of Jacob, they were then dead, and yet doth he call himselfe theyr god. Therfore euen the dead do verily lyue because their soules remayne styll alyue.

For when they shall aryse agayne &c.

And if it be so that theyr sowles remayne, what great mayster is it then for God to call them agayne into theyr olde bodyes, wherein they dwelt before? But yf the dead be vtterly perished, so that nether bodye nor soule remayneth alyue, then standeth it not with reason, that he is called the God of the deade. As no man glorieth that he is a king of those that are not, so is God the God of the lyuyng, and not of the deade. Wherefore you Saduceis are farre deceiued, imagynyng that there shall be nothyng in the lyfe to cum, other wise then you see in this present life. Those thinges no doubt haue a more true and blessed beyng whiche are not vnder mans corporall sight, then those whiche are seene with bodelye eyes. There is nothyng that more truly is, then god, and yet he is not seene, but felte or perceyued.

Ye are therefore greately deceiued.

The texte. ¶ And when there came one of the Scrybes, and hearde them disputyng together, and perceyued that he had aunswered them well, he asked hym: whiche is the fyrste of all the commaundementes? Jesus answered hym. The fyrste of all the commaundementes is: Heare O Israell: The Lorde oure God is lorde onely, and thou shalte loue the lorde thy God, with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde, and with all thy strength. This is the fyrste commaundement. And the second is like vnto this: Thou shalte loue thy neyboure as thy self. There is none other commaundement greater then these. And the Scribe sayde vnto hym: well maister, thou hast sayde the trueth. for there is one God, and there is none but he. And to loue hym with all the harte, and with all the mynde, and with all the soule, and with all the strength, and to loue a man annes neyghbour as hym selfe, is a greater thynge then all burnte offrynges, and sacrifice s. And when Jesus sawe that he answered discreetely, he sayde vnto hym: Thou art not farre from the kyngdome of God. And no man after that durst aske hym any question.

Yet for all this these wicked felowes made not an ende to tempte Christ. After the Saduceis came the Pharyseis, and the Scrybes, who were encouraged to take hym in hand, because he hit the Saduceis in the teethe with ignorance of the law. For the Scribes and the Pharyseis auaunt them selfes more then other, for the great knowledge they pretende to haue in the lawe: and differing in opinion from the Saduceis, do beleue there are angels, and spirites: and that mens soules remayne alyue after the bodyes be dead: and finally that the dead shall ryse agayne. These felowes beyng right glad that the Sadduceis were put to a foyle & blancked, and that Jesus had aunswered to their mindes, dyd lyke learned men, propoune and putte forthe vnto hym by one of the scribes, set vp for the nones to playe this parte, a notable question out of the moste inward misteries of the law. They asked hym what was the chief, and greatest commaundement in the whole lawe: Jesus straight wayes answered them out of the boke entyled Deuteronomium, where as it is written on this wyse: Heare O Israell, the lorde thy God is one god, and thou shalt loue the lorde thy God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde, and with all thy strength. This is the chiefe and greatest commaundement: next vnto this, is that that foloweth: Thou shalt loue thy neyboure none otherwise then thyselfe. There is no other commaundement greater then these two, because they compryse the summe and effect of the whole law. Whē the Scribe heard him saye so, he sayde againe: Thou hast wel & truly answered how there is one God, and none other but he, and that to loue him with all the harte, and with all the vnderstandyng, and with all the soule, and with all the strength, is a thing whiche passeth all burnt offrynges, and other sacrifices. Jesus perceyuyng that he had ryght discretly aunswered, sayd vnto him: Thou arte not far from the kyngdom of God. For the euangelyke godlynes standeth not in sacrifices of beastes, but in cleanes of spirite. He is not farre from this meaning, whoso preferreth that commaundement whiche is spirituall simple or plaine, before all other precepts, whiche be rather figures and tokens of true godlines, then the thyng selfe. But the cōmon sorte of the Jewes beleue verely that the chiefest parte of vertue and godly lyuing, standeth in visible thinges, as in washinges, in kepyng of the sabboth daye, in choyce of meates, in offred giftes, in sacrifices, in holy dayes, in fastinges, and in long prayers. Whoso with all his harte loueth god, for gods self (the whiche can neuer be loued enoughe) and his neybour for goddes sake: the same hath made sufficient sacrifice. After that Jesu had thus with his wisdome euery where confounded and ouercum them, than ceassed they to tempt hym, lest they should haue departed with greater shame, if they had been styll reproued in the presence of the people. They counted Jesus for an ignorant person, and auaunted and set out themselues among the simple & vnlearned people, what with their magnifike and hye titles, and what with theyr tragical and maskyng apparell, as thoughe they had been almost god almighties peeres. Howbeit the euangelike and godly wysdom, stādeth not in the multitude of sciences, but in purenesse of spirite. As Jesus was reputed among the scribes, Pharisies, priestes, and head mē of the people, so afterwarde were the apostles taken for rude and ignorant persons among the Philosophers, rulers, and princes.

He asked him whiche is the first. &c.

And no man after that durst aske hym any question.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus answered, and sayde, teachyng in the temple: Howe saye the Scribes that Christ is the sonne of Dauid? For Dauid himselfe inspired with the holy ghost, sayed: The lorde sayde to my lorde, syt on my right hande, tyll I make thyne enemyes thy foote stole. Dauid himselfe calleth hym lorde, and howe is he then his sonne? and muche people heard hym gladly.

But although the Scribes and Pharisies ceased to tempte Jesus, yet ceased not he to teache them. For when he had propouned vnto them being assembled altogether, a question, and asked whose sonne was Messias whome they wayted for, and they had answered againe out of the Prophetes, the sone

Howe saye the Scribes ỹ Christ, &c.

of Dauid: he moued a doubte that none of them all could assoyle, saying: howe standeth it that Messias is the some of Dauid, since Dauid himselfe inspired with the holy ghost, speaketh in the Psalme as foloweth. The lord sayde vnto my lorde, sitte on my right hand, till I make thyne enemyes thy footestole. Sith thauctorite of the progenitoures is greater then is thauctorite of the ofspring and neuewes, by what reason then dothe Dauid call hym, who shal be borne of his seede, his lord. It is a lyke thing, as thoughe the father would call the sonne Lorde. The Scribes, and the Phareseis, who had in them the spirite of the flesche, as yet vnderstode not this misterie. Dauid inspired with ỹ holy ghost, sawe in Christ, whoe was not then borne, a thing farre aboue the nature of manne, where as himselfe was nothing els but a man. Nowe when the Scribes, and Phariseis helde theyr peace, and couldе make no aunswere hereunto, the moste parte of the people fauoured Jesu, and had a great delite to heare him dispute and reason the matter.

The texte.

¶ And he sayed vnto them in his doctrine: beware of the Scribes whiche loue to goe in long clothing, and loue salutacions in the market place, and the chiefe seates in the congregacions, and the vppermoste rowmes at feastes, whiche deuoure wydowes houses, and vnder a pretence, make long prayers. These shall receyue greater damnacion.

And he said vnto them

Wherefore Jesus perceiuing them to be curable, and knowing also howe the priestes, Scribes and Phariseis of a purpensed malyce perseuered in their vngracious purpose, began openly to disclose theyr naughtynes in thaudyence of the people, not because to backbyte and slaunder them: but he toke from thē the visure of counterfaite vertue and holynes, lest they shoulde frō thencefoorth any more deceyue the people. For nowe the tyme required that he should so do. Therfore putting forthe and preaching vnto them his owne doctrine, that is to say, a francke doctrine, and suche a one as flattereth and coureth fauour with no manne, he saied: beware leste the royall shew of the Scribes, & Phariseis deceiue you. They studye not your soule healthe, but theyr owne glorye.

Whiche deuoure wydowes houses. &c.

For they couet to go in long roabes doune to the ancle, to thentent they maye appeare to be men of geat perfection: and they seke after salutacions in ỹ market place, and the preferment of the chiefe seate in assembles: and in all feastes, and bankets the first place or vppermost rounne of the table. They vse also long prayers, because they maye seeme holyer then other. And by reason of souche coloured holynesse, they crepe into the fauoure of blessed and godlye wydowes, but symple withall: whiche for diuers causes are apte to be deceyued, eyther because of the weakenes of theyr sexe and kynde, or for that they be wydowes, and lacke husbandes to defende them, or els because they be ryche and wealthy. To thē cum they of their owne swinge, vnder pretēte to be their patrones, and defendours, and with theyr counterfayte holynesse deuour vp their houses. But so litle shall this their Hipocrisy profite theim, that they shall be more greuouslier damned of god, for so muche as they couered their naughtynes with a coloure of holy and vertuous lyuing. Therfore take ye good hede of those, leste ye be deceyued.

These shall receiue greater dānaciō.

The texte.

And when Jesus sate ouer against the treasury, he behelde howe the people put money into the treasury, and many that were riche, caste in muche. And there came a certaine poore wydowe, and she threwe in two mites, whiche make a farthyng. And he called vnto him his disciples, and saieth vnto them: Verilye I say vnto you, that this poore wydowe hath caste more in, then all they whiche haue caste in to the treasurye: for they all dyd caste in of their superfluitie, but she of her pouertie dyd caste in all that euer she hadde, euen all her lyuyng.

Theſe thinges done, Jeſus went into that parte of ỳ tẽple where the treaſury was, wherin the offered gyftes were kepte, and ſytting directly againſt it, behelde thoſe that made their oblacion, and caſte in giftes. And many riche folkes caſte in great giftes, whom the prieſtes woulde therefore ſhoulde bee counted as it were more holier then other, meaſuring their godlynes, after the rate and meaſure of the gifte that they offered.

And manye that were riche caſt in muche.

In the meane ſeaſon there came alſo a certaine poore wydowe, and threwe in two little pieces of coyne, whiche made a kerthing. There was none among them all that preferred not thoſe ryche folkes before this poore woman. But Jeſus iudgement farre differeth from the iudgemẽt of the Scribes, and Phariſeis, the whiche thyng he woulde not haue his diſciples ignorant of. I tell you, ſayeth he, for a certaintie, this widowe, be ſhe neuer ſo poore, hathe geuen more to the treaſury, then all the other, whiche ſeeme to haue geuen mooſte lauiſhely. For the other gaue of their abundaunt ſuperfluitie. They gaue muche, howbeit they reſerued more to themſelfes. But this woman of her lyttle poore ſubſtance, hath geuen all together, reſeruing nothing vnto her ſelfe. For God doeth not eſteme the gifte after the meaſure and value of the thyng that is geuen, but after thaffection & minde of the geuer. Jeſus is pleaſed with ſuche a wydowe, and dayneth to bee her ſpouſe and conforter. The Synagoge like a proude houſewyfe boaſteth and craketh vpon the riches of hercightouſnes: ſhe boaſteth vpõ her ryche ornamẽtes of good workes. She glorieth in her houſebãde Moyſes, vnto whom ſhe was neuer obedient: She auaunteth herſelfe, becauſe the prophetes were her ſonnes, whome ſhe eyther ſlewe with wicked murther, or at the leaſt wyſe perſecuted. She hath euer in her mouth, the lordes tẽple, the lawe of God, the Patriarches, Abrahã, Iſaac, Jacob, and Iſrael. She goeth with her garde of prieſtes, Scribes, and Phariſeis. But the churche like a poore wydowe hath nothyng to boaſt vpon. She knowledgeth lacke of good workes: and yet that litle that ſhe hath, ſhe wholy dedicateth and offereth vnto God. Nowe what can be poorer then ſuche a wydowe, as leaueth herſelfe nothyng at all? She knowledgeth not Moyſes to be her huſband, becauſe ſhe knowethe not circumciſion: becauſe ſhe abhorrethe the ſacryfices of beaſtes, beeyng contented wholely to haue offered vp her ſelfe vnto almyghtie God. The Lorde her ſpouſe, inaſmuche as he hath forſaken the yearthe, and is returned into heauen, ſemethe to haue forſaken his wydowe: whiche nowe like a woman deſtitute of all ſuccoure, is ſpoyled, baniſhed, impriſoned, afflicted, and oppreſſed bothe of the Jewes and Gentyles. She heareth dayly: where is thy ſpouſe? It ſemethe that ſhe wyll ſtarue for hunger, whiche hauinge ſo ſmall ſubſtaunce, hath cleane forgone that lyttle ſhe had, and lefte herſelfe nothynge. It ſemethe ſhe wyll dye ſhortly wt reproche of barainesse, whiche hath loſt her houſband. But this widow which after the iudgement of the worlde is paſt all healthe, & vtterlye vndone, the prophete Eſaie comforteth on this wyſe: Bee thou glad thou barayne that bryngeſt furth no fruit: breake furth and cry thou ỳ trauaileſt not: for the deſolate hath many mo chyldren then ſhe that hath an huſbande. Doe not we ſe that this propheey is fulfilled? The ſynagoge is hongry, and dyethe. The churche is encreaced and ſpred abrode, triumphing in Martyrs, florifhing in Virgins, and reioyſynge in ſo many thouſandes of Confeſſours. She hath not one farthing of her owne proper riches: but of her spouses riches, she hath tried golde, fine and pure: she hath precious stones inestimable. For throughe sincere and pure fayth towardes her riche spouse, whatsoeuer he hath, she hath thesame. The synagoge, albeit she semed to geue much vnto God, yet dyd she reserue more vnto her selfe then was sufficient. Wylt thou see the Synagoge geuing her giftes: heare the Pharisey praying: I thanke the Lord, saith he, that I am not such a one as other men be. Nowe marke me how much he reserueth vnto himselfe when he saith: I fast twyse in the weke. I geue the tenthe part of all my goodes vnto poore people. On the other syde, marke me the fashion of the wydow. She knocketh her brest, she dareth not once lift vp her eyes to heauen warde, she doth nothing but crye: God be mercifull vnto me a sinner. The Synagoge, whiles she craketh vpon her owne iustice hath neyther any of her owne, nor yet gods iustice. The churche whiles she renounceth and putteth awaye from her all glory of righteousnes and knowledgeth her owne vnrighteousnes, is enriched with the iustice and righteousnes of her spouse.

The. xiij. Chapter.

¶ And as he went out of the temple, one of the disciples sayed vnto him: Maister, see what stones and what buyldinges are here. And Jesus answered, and sayed vnto hym: Seest thou these great buildinges? There shal not be left one stone vpon an other, that shal not be throwen downe. And as he sate on mounte Oliuete ouer against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrewe, asked him secretly: tell vs, when shall these thinges be? And what is the signe when all these thinges shalbe fulfilled? And Jesus answered them, and began to saye: take hede lest any man deceyue you. For many shall cumme in my name, saying: I am Christ, and shall deceyue many. The texte.

Here was nothyng in the temple that pleased Jesus, saue the poore wydowe only, in the whiche temple there was nothyng els, but counterfayte deuocion, and fayned holines. Let vs also, who professe our selues to be the disciples of Jesu, departe out of the Jewish temple. Let vs sette aside all truste of carnall workes, and embrace the ryghteousnes of the euangelike and chrystian fayth.

Therfore our sauiour departed thence to builde an other temple, whiche should be holy and spirituall in dede: and of buyldyng so substanciall, sure, and strong, that the very gates of hell shoulde neuer be able to preuayle agaynste it. When he was gone out, one of his disciples sayed vnto him: Maister, beholde howe greate and houge are the stones of this temple, and what a strong buildinge is here: couert the meaninge that it was a stronger piece of worke, then that it coulde by processe of tyme fall in decaye or ruyne. Oh Jewishe eyes. They outwardly maruayled at stones couched and heaped together by mans hande, as thoughe Jesus had bene delited with suche a buyldyng. Jesus answered againe: Seeste thou this greate and curious edifice? There shall a time cum when there shall not one stone remayne vpon another but throwen downe: muche lesse then shall the same buyldyng continue for euer. Nowe Jesus lotheth, and contemneth all that euer is seene with bodily eyes, for the greate desyre he hath of his ghostly and spyritual temple. As he sate in that part of mount Oliuete (where he chose his lodging for that nyght) from whence the temple of Jerusalem myght bee sene, the disciples called againe to theyr remembraunce his wordes, wherby he had tolde before howe it shoulde cumme to passe, that the sayd temple shoulde bee destroyed bothe stycke and stone, euen from the very foundacion. For they supposed that the kyngdome of god, whereon they ceased not as yet to dreame, shoulde cum immediatlye after the destruccion thereof. Therfore fower of them, that is to wete, Peter, Iames, John, and Andrewe, went priuilye vnto him as he there sate, to the entẽt that lyke as he had shewed vnto a fewe persons apart, the misterie of his transfiguracion, so should he lykewyse disclose vnto the, beeyng but a fewe, all the secretes concerning the time when his kingdome should cumme and begin: whiche thing he woulde not perhappes open vnto all the other. And for this cause they sayed vnto hym: Tell vs when these thinges shall cum to passe, and by what token we maye knowe when the same tyme is already cum and present. The Lord who had already weded out of his disciples all carefulnes for sustenaunce, desyre of reuengement, & prouidence of lyfe or forecastyng howe to lyue, woulde also wede out of theyr myndes all suche curiositie as maketh a man ouer busy and inquisitiue, to knowe suche thynges, as nothyng appertaine vnto his saluacion. Therfore he so tempereth his woordes, that by thesame he signifieth not onelye that the citie of Ierusalem shall one day be destroyed, but also that after his departure, greuous stormes of persecution shal rise against the preachers of the gospell: and finally that the ende of the worlde, or domes day shall cumme. But as it is expedient for all men to knowe howe they shall one day make an ende of this present lyfe, to thentent they may euer make themselues redy against the same, so his will and pleasure was to haue his disciples fullye persuaded, that a tyme shoulde lykewyse cumme, when he would returne into the worlde agayne, a iudge bothe of the quicke and deade: but when that time shoulde come, because it was not expedient, he woulde in no wyse haue it knowen. Therfore he began to speake of these matters, in suche wyse as here ensueth.

One of his disciples sayed vnto him.

And as he sat on mount Oliuete.

Beware, sayeth he, lest any manne deceiue you. For there shall manye come who wyll chalenge and take vpon them my name, and euerye of theim wyll fayne hymselfe to be Christe, and by his craftie delusion, deceiue manye vncircumspect persons.

The texte. When ye shall heare of warres, & tidynges of warres, be ye not troubled. For suche thynges must needes be, but the ende is not yet: For there shall nacion ryse agaynste nacion, and kyngdome agaynst kyngdome. And there shalbe yearthquakes in al quarters, and lamẽtement shall there be and troubles. These are the beginning of sorowes. But take ye hede to your selues, for they shall bryng you vp to the counsayles, & into the Synagoges, & ye shalbe beaten, yea, and shalbe brought before rulers and kynges for my sake, for a testimonial vnto them. And the gospell must first be published amonge all nacions.

The great busynes & rustlyng of the world, will shewe that my cũming approcheth, & the worlde is nighe at an ende. But you muste not strayght wayes when warres are moued, or when there is any terrible bruite or rumoure of warres to be moued, be so dismayed therwith, as though thesame time were already present. For these thinges shall cum, and yet shall not thende of the world furthwith ensue. They shall only be preludes of the ende yt is to come, euen as in an olde mans bodye, diseases ofttymes chaunceing, are foretokens that his body shal shortely decay and perishe. The temperature of the qualities is the thyng whiche preserueth bodely health.

But when by reason thesame qualities, do stryue one agaynste another, the whole bodye is distempered, then is it an argumente that the destruc-on thereof approchethe. There shall nacion ryse agaynste nacion, realme agaynst realme, and one of them go about with great powers, and hostes of men, to destroye an other. Moreouer the yearthe it selfe, as though it were not content to norishe so wicked and vngodlye people, shalbe shaken with yearthequakes, and so shall there be in sondrie places of the worlde greate dearthe and famyne, because it shall deny men theyr naturall foode and sustenaunce. Furthermore the ayre as though it were angrye with thesame vngodly folkes, vnworthy of life and breathe, shalbe noysomme, and deadelye. When ye see manye of these signes and tokens, yet loke ye not byanby for domes daye. For these euils shalbe onelye the begynninge of the calamitie to come. Neyther shall youre selues be free from suche euils & troubles. And therfore loke well aboute ye, leste ye bee clapte in theneckes or ere ye be ware. For men shall accuse you, and bringe you before counceils and synagoges: and yee shalbe presented before kynges and rulers, to aunswere in causes of lyfe, and deathe: not for any offence, or euyl dede done on your behalfe, but onelye for the profession of my name: and this shall they do because all the worlde maye knowe, howe they were worthely caste out of the kyngdome of God, sithens they so persecuted the preachers of thesame. But lette not these thynges muche trouble your myndes. The cruelnes of wycked persons shall bringe nothing to passe agaynst the proceding of the gospell. Neither can anyeman slea you before your tyme. For domes daye shall not come, before the gospell be preached throughout all the worlde.

For there shall nacion aryse agaist nacion.

The texte.

¶ But when they leade you, and present you, take ye no thought, neyther ymagine afore hande what ye shall saye, but whatsoeuer is geuen you in the same houre, that speake. For it is not ye that speake, but the holy goste. The brother shall delyuer vp the brother to deathe, and the father the sonne, and the children shall ryse agaynst their fathers and mothers, and shal put them to death. And ye shalbe hated of al men for my names sake. But whoso endureth vnto the ende, thesame shalbe safe.

you nede not therefore to prepare you any worldly succours agaynste the violence & tirranny of persecutours, or take thought how to escape their iudgementes. When there is any accion commensed agaynst you, loke ye goe, & appeare, leste ye seme to despise the publike authoritie. For this thinge also shall make muche for the enlarging and spreading abrode of the gospell. But when ye are goyng to appeare, be you not carefull, studying with your selfes what answere to make, and how to tell your tale, for that ye are not sene in ỳ lawe, but men ignorannt in ciuill plees: as the common sort of the people are wonte to be carefull in suche case, who make Oratours and Rhetorcians theyr atturneys, and proctours in pleadinge of matters. But whatsoeuer cummethe vnto your myndes, that speake you. For your selues shall not be authours of suche wordes as you shall speake, but instrumentes onely. The holy ghoste shall speake by you, suche thynges as shalbe expedient for the busynes of the gospell. But suche persecucions must ye not onely looke for of aduyauntes, and enemyes, but also of your frendes, and kynnesfolkes. For one brother shall take the lawe of an other, and accuse hym of deathe worthye crymes, all naturall loue and affection cast aside. And the father shall likewise accuse the sonne, contrary to naturall loue and kyndnes. Furthermore the children shall also rise agaynste their parentes, and cause them to suffer death.

For it is not ye that speake.

The brother shall delyuer vp the brother, &c.

And where as ye hurte no body, but bringe the tydinges of saluacion to all men: yet shall ye be hated of all them that loue this world, onelye for the dyf pleasure and malyce they beare to my name, whiche you shall preache. But in all these euils it shalbe nedefull for you to be armed with perseueraunce and constancie of minde. For whoso continueth in his good beginninges to the ende, shall be safe, because no calamitie is able to destroye him, that with constant harte and mynde beleueth the gospell.

The texte. Moreouer, when ye see the abhominacion of desolacion (whereof is spoken by Daniel the prophet) stand where it ought not, let him that readeth, vnderstand. Then let them that be in Jewry, flie to the mountaines, and let him that is on the house top not go down into ỹ house, neither enter therein to fetche any thyng out of his house. And let him that is in the fielde, not turne backe agayne vnto the thynges whiche be lefte behynde hym, for to take his clothes with him. Woe shalbe then to them that are with childe, and to them that geue sucke in those dayes. But praye ye that your flyght be not in the winter. For there shalbe in those dayes suche tribulacion, as was not from the beginninge of creatures, (whiche God created) vnto this time, neither shalbe. And except that the Lorde would shorten those dayes, no flesshe shoulde be saued. But for the electes sake whome he hath chosen, he hathe shortened those dayes.

If ye requyre a sygne to geue you knowledge when this extreme calamitie hangeth ouer your heades: when ye shall see the abhominacion that maketh desolacion standing in ỹ place where it is not beseming it should stande, then let him whiche readethe Daniels prophecy, vnderstande it. For then it shalbe hyghe tyme for euery man, al other thynges omitted and lefte vndone to shifte for hymselfe by flyeng awaye and to saue his lyfe, not by wordelye aydes, but by swyftnesse of flighte. Then lette al that be in Jewrye, the flourishingeste, and moste famous parte of the countreye, flye vnto the deserte and wylde Mountaynes. If this calamitie take any man on the house toppe lette hym not goe downe into the house, nor enter into his parloure, or chambre to fetche out any thynge from thence: but as he is founde, so lette him gette hym awaye and begone. And if at that season anye manne be labouringe in the fieldes naked, and without clothes, let hym not runne home againe to fetche awaye his cloke, or mantel, but flye strayght waye some whither els: so swifte shall the flood of ỹ miserie & calamitie be, whiche shal ouerflow this coũtreye. Therfore in wofull case shall they be whiche are great with chylde, & they also that haue chyldren sucking on their brestes, because nature will not let suche as are w̃ child to cast away their burthen: nor natural kindenesse suffer the other to flye awaye from their children. And the onely way to saue the life shalbe to flye without anye taryinge. Therefore desire you of god, that this calamytie chaunce not in the wynter season, nor vpon the Sabbothe daye. For ye muste not onelye flye awaye as fast as your legges will beare you, but also a greate waye of. But winter season because the daye is than shorte, is an yll tyme to flye far in. And the law forbendeth to trauayle far vpon the Sabboth day.

Let hym that readeth vnderstand.

Wo walbe then to the that are w̃ chylde.

All that the lorde hitherto sayed, is spoken in suche wyse, that it semeth partlye to pertayne to the destruction of the citie of Hierusalem: partelye to the tymes of persecutions, whiche were moste sharpe, and behemente, at what season Stephan was stoned to deathe: and partely to the laste ende of the worlde or domes daye. Yet is there included in the same wordes, a morall sence, whiche teacheth vs, how we that beyng deliuered from all worldlye impedimentes, and encumbraunces, we oughte alwayes to wayte for the cummynge of that daye, when we shalbe presented before almyghtye god to receiue our dome and iudgemente. He cannot neuer be prepared agaynste the same, who eyther for loue of temporall thynges, or els thorowe the forge-

Wo ye that poure flyght.

ment of carnall affections, that is to saye, for his parentes, wyfe, or chyldrens sake, is called backe agayne to the daunger of the losyng of euerlastyng saluacion. He is laden with a vessell, who beeynge ouercharged and letted with worldly ryches, ceaseth to do those thynges which pertayne to eternall healthy. He is burthened with a mantell, who for takinge hede vnto the bodye, regardeth not the soule. He is slowe of foote by carying of an infant, who by reason of naturall affections, refrayneth not from those thynges whiche he knoweth ryght well are by all maner of meanes to be ertherwordme hasteth to thattayning of those, whiche he knoweth ought (all letters and impedimentes set aside) greatly to be desyred. Wynter taketh them flying, who for the lytle lyght that they haue fayth geueth, and because charitie is colde and fayne in them, doe not finishe their iourney, and manfully goe thorowe whither they beganne to goe. Moreouer the superstitious obseruacion of the Sabboth bryngeth those persons into daūger, who by reason of an vnright and auke ward iudgement, tremble and quake for feare, where there is no cause of feare: and where they ought chiefly to feare in dede, are feareles: as when a manne is bolde to transgresse the commaundement of God, for feare lest he breake mannes constitucions. For the Lorde himselfe taught openly that the Iewes Sabbothe was well contemned, and broken, for mans health and preseruacion.

Furthermore the wordes that ensue, seeme rather to pertayne to the last day of the worlde, before the which day, great businesse, and hurly burly shall vniuersally happen for the cummyng of Antichrist. Those dayes, sayethe he, shall be so full of miseries on euerye syde, that there hath not beene lyke tribulacion and affliction from the creacion of the worlde vnto this daye, nor hereafter shalbe. If this affliction shoulde long while continue, as it shall be fell, and cruel for the season, there shoulde not one man be saued. But God of his infinite mercye and goodnes hath prouided, that this storme shall shorte whyle endure, for their sakes, whom he hath chosen to lyke euerlastyng. For of these will he suffer none to perishe, what storme of euils soeuer shall arise. Wherfore there is no cause why any man shoulde feare himselfe, so that he persseuer and abyde still in the euangelike and christian fayth, as nighe vnto the shote anker or surest refuge. No puissaunce shall cast them downe, whiche haue a constant beliefe in me. For there shall be in those dates.

The texte. And then, if any man say to you, lo here is Christe, lo, he is there, beleue not: For false Christes and false prophetes shall ryse, and shall shewe miracles, and wonders to deceiue, if it were possible, euen the electe. But take ye hede, behold, I haue shewed you all thynges before.

Onely take heede that in stede of me, you embrace not another Christe. There shall bee more ieopardy of deceyuers, then of persecutours. For there shall aryse in those dayes false Christes, who shall vntruly chalenge and take vpon them my name, and person. There shall aryse also false Prophetes, whiche vnder a cloke and coloured shewe of holynes, shall fayne themselfes to be Prophetes: and in working of Magical wonders, and miracles cloked by craftie illusions of diuels, folowe the prophetes, and me, so that euen the very electe (if any power coulde preuayle agaynste God) maye be decepued by suche ligierdemayne, and iuglynge castes: Therefore if anye man shall saye vnto you: Loe, here is Christe, beleue him not: or if any call you backe to another place, and saye: loe, here he is: what place, what apperaunce of thinges, Loe. here is Christ. &c.

or what maner of honour or seruing of god soeuer he shewe you, beleue hym not. For after that Christ hath once forsaken the worlde, he cannot be shewed nor pointed to with fyngers, but will lye hidin mens soules, and this shall be the signe and token to knowe where he is: when anye dothe with his lyfe, & conuersacion expresse his doctrine, & put it in execucion. Howbeit he wyll not cumme at domes daye, so as he nowe cummethe, but wyll sodainly and vnloked for shewe himselfe from an hygh after the maner of a flashe of lyghtening, dreadfull to the wicked, who shall be cast into euerlasting fire: and againe amiable and louelye to godly persones, whiche shall be called to the felowship of the heauenly kyngdom. Therfore if you chaunce to liue in these dayes, beware ye embrace not in stede of me, sum counterfayte Christe.

Loe, I haue tolde you all thynges beforehande. There remayneth behynde, that you retayne and kepe my woordes in memory.

The texte. Howsoeuer in those dayes after that tribulacion, the Sunne shal ware darcke, and the Moone shall not geue her lyght, and the starres of heauen shall fall, and the powers whiche are in heauen shall moue. And then shall they see the sonne of manne cumming in the cloudes with great power and glory. And then shall he send his aungels, and shall gather together his elect from the fower windes, from the endes of the yearth, to the vttermost parte of heauen.

Nowe after these forsayed calamities, warres, persecucions, famyne, pestilence, and earthquakes be paste, there shall also ensue manye other wonderfull signes and tokens out of heauen, all the elementes beyng, as it were, yrkefully set to take vengeaunce vpon the wicked people. For the Sunne, the fountaine of light, shall wexe darke, therby as it were embraiding the vngodlye with theyr blyndnes, because they woulde not see the euerlastyng sunne and lanterne of the worlde. Neyther shall the Moone, whiche is wonte to shine in the night, and put awaye ỹ darknesse therof, geue her light ỹ she boroweth of the Sũne. Furthermore men shall see the starres fal doune from the firmament to the earth, which haue bene so many hũdred yeares there fastened for mans behoue & commoditie. And besides this, the powers of the heauens (by vertue whereof those merueylouse bodies haue cõtinued, euen frõ the creation of the worlde, their courses and offices appoynted thẽ of god) shalbe moued: so great shall the feare be of the dreadfull day of dome approching. These thynges done, all that be then aliue, shall sodaynly, and with the twynkelyng of an eye, see the soonne of man (whoe is nowe taken for an vnderlynge, and not regarded) appeare in the hyghest cloudes with greate puyssaunce, & in the glory of the father, and with him innumerable multitudes of Aungels. Then will he sende out his Aungels, who wyll let none of his chosen be awaye, but wyll assemble thẽ altogether frõ euery quarter, whether they be quycke, or els dead, but must sodainly be reliued again: he wyll send them out, I say, to gather all the membres of the mysticall bodie vnto their head, to thentẽt that they which haue bene partakers of afflictions & persecutions for the gospelles sake, maye lykewyse be companions and partakers with hym, of euerlastynge ioye and blysfulnesse. It skylleth not whither that good mens soules haue gone, neyther into what place their karkases haue bene throwen: Aungeles shall fynde them out, and gather them together from the fower quarters of the worlde: and againe from the hyghest pole of heauen, to the lowmoste. Euery soule shalbe ioyned vnto his owne proper bodie, and all the electe and chosen people shall lykewyse be conioyned vnto theyr head.

And then shall they see ỹ sonne of man. &c.

Learne

Learne a ſimilitude of the figtree, when his braunche is yet tendre, and hath brought forth leaues, ye knowe that ſummer is nere. So in lyke maner when ye ſe theſe thynges cum to paſſe, vnderſtand that he is nye, euen at the doores. Verely, I ſaie vnto you, that this generation ſhall not paſſe, tyll theſe thynges be doen. Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe, but my wordes ſhall not paſſe. But of the daye & tyme knoweth no man, no not the Aungels whiche are in heauen: neither the ſonne himſelfe, ſaue the father onely. The texte.

Now leſte this day cum ſodaynly vpon you, when ye are nothyng at all prepared, you maye geſſe by certayne forelygnes and coniectures, when it is nere hande, euen as ye may coniecture and gather by the fygge tree that ſummer wil ſhortly cum. For when the braunches of this tree begin once to waxe ſoft and tender, being about to bring forth their firſt fruite called groſſi, and when the leaues be alreadye budded out, ye knowe that ſūmer is not farre of. But it is muche certayner that that day ſhall cum, then it is certayne, that ſummer foloweth after wynter. This thyng do I auouche vnto you: This age ſhall not paſſe till all theſe thinges ſhall happen. Among corporall thinges there is nothing more ſtable & ſure then heauen: nothing more vnmouable then is the earth: but yet both heauen and earthe ſhall ſooner alter and chaūge their nature, then my wordes be vayne, and of none effect. Be ye not careful to knowe certeynly when thatſame laſte daye ſhall cum, foraſmuche as it is not geuen vnto ỹ Angels to know it: no nor yet to the ſonne himſelfe. For ỹ father hathe reſerued this ſecrete knowledge to himſelf alone, becauſe he perceiued it was expedient for your ſoule helth he ſhould ſo do. Be you moſte certaynly aſſured that it ſhall cum: but aſke ye not when, leſte by this meanes ye becum careles.

Take hede, watch, and praye, for ye knowe not when the time is. As a man which is goen into a ſtraunge countrey, and hath left his houſe, and geuen his ſubſtance to his ſeruaunts & euery man his worke, & cōmaunded the porter to watche. Watche ye therfore, ye know not when the mayſter of the houſe will cum, at euen or at midnight, whether at the cocke crowing, or in the dawnyng: leſt if he cum ſodaynly, he fynde you ſleepyng: and that I ſaye vnto you, I ſaye vnto all, watche. The texte.

Beware alwayes & take good hede: watche & praie continually, ſince you are vncertaine when that dreadfull date ſhall cum vpon you. You ſhal take good hede if you wyll not truſte vnto worldly aides, neither put confidence in any worldly creature: but wholy hang vpon me, & my cōmaundementes. Ye ſhal watche, if by refrayning frō ſuperfluitie, & all bodely pleaſures, you wil wholy bend youre ſelues to holynes of ſpirite, & vertuous liuing. You ſhal praye, if you wil moſt feruently deſire thoſe thinges, which are promiſed vnto thē that ſtil perſeuer & cōtinue in the profeſſion of the goſpell. Sātā hath his craftes to deceiue euen wiſe, & circūſpect perſons. Againſt theſe craftes you muſt vſe the wyſedom, & policy of the ſerpent. The world, & the fleſh haue their entiſinges, wherwith they ſo delite the mindes of recheleſ folkes, that (as I maye cal it) ſlepe, ſecuritie, & forgetfulnes of thinges eternall, creepeth vpon thē ere they be ware. Of theſe thinges ſpryngeth eyther contēpt, or els deſperāce of the kingdom of heauē. God wil not cleane forſake his choſē, but he loueth wakefull & dredefull perſons: yet will he that whē they haue done what may be done by mans endeuoyre & diligence, they neuertheleſ ceaſe not to pray, fully perſuadyng themſelfes how it is God ỹ geueth the beginning, proceding, & conſumation of euerlaſtyng bleſſednes. So watche you, as thoughe God wyll forſake you for a time: ſo praye you, as thoughe whatſoeuer ye go about, ſhall cum to none effecte, without he put to his helping hande. And becauſe the Lord Jeſu would the depelier faſten this doctrine in ỹ mindes of his diſciples, he added a ſimilitude

a similitude very fit for the purpose. Whē I shall forsake you, sayeth he, so demeane your selues, as faithful and wyse seruaūtes woulde do, vnto whom the Lord being about to make a voyage into a straūge coūtrey, hath geuē auctoritie to ordre and guide his house: and hathe assigned to eche of theym his worke, and office. Furthermore he hath commaunded the porter to watche for feare of nyght theues. These seruauntes, because they be vncertaine of their Lordes returnyng home, do still endeuoyre themselues to do their office and dutye, that whensoeuer it shall chaunce him to cum home agayne, he may finde theym watching. It is more certaine that I shall cum againe to you, then that their lord shall eftsones returne vnto them. There maye sum chaunce befall, that he miscary whiles he is from home in the straunge countrey. But as sure as God is in heauē, I will cum againe, albeit the daye when, be to you vncertaine. Therfore do you as good and thriftie seruauntes are wont to do. Euer watche & loke after my retourning. You cannot tell when the Lorde will cum, at euen, or at mydnyght: whether at the Cocke crowyng, or in the dawning of the daye, lest yf he cum sodainlye (as he wyll cum in verye dede) he fynde you sleapyng, and slacke, or negligent in doyng of your duetie. That I speake to you, I speake by you to all that shalbe borne vntill the worlde be at an ende: watche you. Euerye man muste watche that will be saued: Euery man must do the worke that the Lorde hath committed vnto hym, but especially and aboue all other, it behoueth the porter to watche, who watcheth for the safegard of the whole familie. And although the people doe sumtymes take a nappe, yet hath the shepeherde no leasure to slepe. Nowe is all this present lyfe (wherein is no certaine differēce betweene good thinges and bad, and wherin is exceding muche ignorauuce or blyndnesse, and very litle lyght) all this lyfe I saye, is in comparison of the lyfe to cum, nothing els but nyght. And albeit that in thende of the worlde the Lord will cum once for all, to all men generally, yet commeth he also to euery man seuerally at the houre of death. Therfore euery man particularly ought to watche against this his cumming, because it is euen as vncertaine as the other. For he cummeth vnto sum late in the euenyng, as in growyng age: to sum at mydnyghte, as when they are in their flowers, and bene lykyng: to other sum at the Cockecrowyng, that is to wete, in olde age. Ye muste neyther truste to youre strength, nor to your age. The tyme and houre of death is lyke vncertaine to all menne.

As a man whiche is gone into a straunge coūtrey, &c.

And that I saye vnto you, ge,

The xiiij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ After two dayes was Easter, and the dayes of swete bread: and the hie priestes and the Scribes sought howe they might take him by crafte and put him to death. But they sayed not in the feast daye, leaste any busines aryse amongst the people.

NOwe that moste holye, and solemne feaste of Easter drawe nyghe, that is to say, of Phase, whiche worde signifiethe in the Hebrue tongue, a passing ouer, on the whiche daye the holy bloud of the vnspotted lambe should deliuer vs from the vengeaunce of the sleying swerde, and beynge brought out of Egipt through the red sea, and wildernesse of this worlde, bring vs vnto the heauenlye Hierusalem, into a countreye flowing with milke and honye. For the Iewes passeouer, whiche they yearelye lye celebrate and kepe moste highe and holye, was nothing els but a figure and shadowe of this sacrifice, likeas was this ceremony, that they did on these daies forbeare leavened breade, exhorting vs hereby, to suche puritie and cleanesse of lyfe, as becummeth a professour of ỹ gospel. After two dayes expired, the daye that they called the preparyng daye should be. But as the chiefe priestes and Scribes, deuoutly prepared and made themselues readie to celebrate this corporall passeouer: so did they like vnwise felowes, wickedly make haste to offer vp thatsame trewe lambe whiche that solemne sacrifice had so many hundred yeares figured. For nowe were they at a full poynt to slea Jesus: but because they durste not openly do it, for feare of the people, they thought good to laye handes vpon hym, and put hym to death by gyle & treason. And for this their purpose, that daye of all other, was moste conuenient to thentent the thyng of the newe testament, shoulde agree with the fygure of the old. They themselues, dyd not chose this day, but it was forepointed vnto this sacrifice by the eternall decree and ordinaunce of the father. For they counseylyng together how to slea Jesus, saied: Not on the feaste daye, leste there arise any busyneste and hurly burly among the people. Doubtlesse it is a Jewyshe feare to stande in awe of menne, and all this whyle nothynge to dreade god at all. Jesus knowyng the tyme was cum, in the whiche it was the fathers wyll to haue that same euerlasting sacrifice to be made, departed not from Jerusalem, leste he shoulde haue semed to haue fayled at the place forepointed vnto this busineste.

But they lay not in ỹ feast daye. &c.

¶ And when he was at Bethania in the house of Symon the leper, euen as he sat at meate there came a woman hauyng an alabaster bore of oyntment, called Narde, that was pure & costly: and she brake the bore, and powred it on his heade. And there were sum that were not contented within themselues, and sayed: what nede this waste of oyntmente? For it myght haue bene sould for more then three hundred pence, and haue bene geuen vnto the poore, and they grudged againste her.

The texte.

When he therfore feasted at Bethany with his frendes, in the house of Symon, surnamed the leper, one of the geastes that feasted with hym was Lazarus. Thys house presenteth vnto vs, the agreyng, and frendly felowshyp of the churche: the whiche being vncleane, he washed & purified with his precious bloude: and beyng dead through sinne, and vnrighteousnesse, he made alyue againe by his death and passion. With suche persones, Jesus loueth to sit at table, rather then with the priestes, & pharisees, who thought themselues cleane, and alyue, notwithstandyng they were suche in soule, as Symon, and Lazarus were in bodye. As they thus feasted, there came in a certaine womã hauing and alabaster boxe full of pure, good, and precious oyntement, called the oyntment of ryght Narde: whiche brake her boxe: and powred al the ointment vpon the Lordes heade, as he sate there at the table. Jesus who was neuer delited with the pleasures and delicacies of this worlde, loueth to be anoynted with suche manoure of oyntment, after the spirituall meanyng.

The churche is lauishe and prodigall in bestowing this oyntment vpon her dere and welbeloued spouse. What precious thing soeuer she hath, thesame reserueth she not to herselfe, but powreth it vpon Jesus heade, vnto whom all honour and glory is due. The house of ỹ churche is in moste ample wyse enlarged & spred abrode throughout all ỹ whole world: but the swete sauour, and fragraũt smell of this ointment hath filled euery corner and part therof. This swete sauour allureth and causeth many a one to desyre that they maye be admitted mitted into the same house, wherin Jesus sitteth at meate with his frendes. But there be sum which of spite & enuy, speake against the delicacies of Jesu: as the Jewes, who rather seke theyr own profit, glorie, & cõmoditie, then the glory & honour of Jesu Christ. For so did certaine of his disciples ỹ yet sauoured of the flesh, but specialy Judas Iscarioth: who being not contented in his mynde, & muttryng with himself against this womannes facte, sayed on thys wyse: what neded it to wast or cast away this so pure good oyntment? For it myght haue been sold for thre hundred pence, and with that money many a poore body haue been relieued. And the losse of this oyntment greued them so muche, that they made a great murmuring agaynst the godly prodigalitie of the woman. That thyng is well loste, which is employed vpõ Christes glorie: Yea, to saye the trueth, there is nothyng that lesse perisheth. The sinagoge is sparing to Christeward, and wastefull or prodigall to her owne person. Contrarilie, the churche regardeth not the price and valewe of that she hath receiued of Christe, but breaketh the vessell, and rashlye powreth out all that euer she hath vpon her spouses heade. The poore wydowe whiche cast a farthing into the treasurie, pleased Christ highly. So doth this woman content hym also, whiche for his loue and sake, hath lost her precious oyntment. The widowe knowleagyng her pouertie, brought forth all the poore substaunce she had, and caste it into the treasurye: and the other beyng now riche & wealthie through the lordes liberalitie, did not onely geue him all that euer she had, but also sustained the lose of her vessel. The one gaue her goodes and lyuyng: the other gaue euen body and soule, yf that can perishe whiche is geuen vnto Jesu. Where be they now that grudge and murmoure against this prodigalitie, whiche is so pleasaunte and acceptable to the aucthoure of grace? Christ geueth of his owne plentifully, to thentent that the good sauour of his liberalitie, maye the more be spred abrode: He requyreth no rewarde for anye thynge he geuethe: but here onely he is ambicious or desirous of honour. He willeth that we knowleage his well doing and benefites, not because he hath any nede of suche prayse and comunendacion, but it hath pleased hym by thys meane to geue vs his gyftes and riches.

What nede this waste of oyntmẽt &c.

The texte. And Jesus sayed: let her alone, why troble ye her? She hath done a good worke on me. For ye haue poore with you alwaies, and whensoeuer ye will, ye may do them good, but me haue ye not alwayes. She hath done that she could, she came aforehand to anoynt my body to the burying. Verely I say vnto you: wheresoeuer this Gospell shalbe preached throwout the whole world, this also that she hath done shalbe rehearsed, in remembraunce of her.

The Lord (of whome alone it is sufficient to be alowed) defendeth the godly diligence of the woman agaynst his disciples muttryng and murmuryng against her. Why, saith he, make you this busines with this woman? Suffer her to take her pleasure. She hath done me a good turne. For whereas you cloke your couetousnesse with a pretence to socour the poore, knowe ye ỹ whatsoeuer is geuẽ to me, the same is geuẽ to a poore body. These commune poore folkes, and beggers, you shall euer haue with you, whom you maye do good vnto, and helpe as oft as ye will: but ye shal not alwayes haue me present, to wyn my fauour by such comforth all benefytes. I haue been but once in my lyfe tyme thus honoured, and the thing that is done, is not done to thentent that many should take ensãple therby, to vse such manour of bodily refreshinges: but because all men should after the spirituall sence and meaning doe the like. This womã wotteth not what she doth, & yet with a godly endeuour and diligence ligence doeth she as muche as lyeth in her to do. My death is nere hande, then will she desyre to anoint my body that muste bee buried. And because she shall not then haue tyme so to do, she preuenteth the tyme: and yeldeth me that honour whiles I am aliue, which she cānot geue me whē I am dead. But so true is it that her godly endeuoire (whiche you speake and murmour against) shall not lacke it condigne and worthye prayse, that when my death shall by preaching of the gospel, be renoumed and spokē of throughout al the whole world, she shall lykewyse bee remembred and spoken of, because she honoured it wyth suche a gyft and present before I dyed.

¶ And Judas Iscarioth one of the twelue, went awaye vnto the hye priestes to betraie hym vnto them. When they hearde that, they were glad, and promysed that they would geue hym moneye. And he sought howe he might conueniently betraye hym. The texte.

With these wordes the Lorde caused his disciples to cease their muttring. But Judas Iscarioth one of the twelue (who vntruely dispensed the common money geuen for the relieke of the poore) could in no wyse suffer the losse of this oyntment, but went streight wayes vnto the highe priestes, to betraye Jesus vnto thē. For it was not vnknowen vnto hym, how they studyed to take him by deceyte and treason. After the highe priestes hearde this, they were ryghte glad. It pleased them very well that one of householde with Jesu, shoulde bee the chiefe worker of this mischiefe. They agreed of the sum of money that Judas shoulde haue for his labour. And there was mutuall faith founde in that wicked counsell, and conspiracie, whiche is seldome kept in honest and leakfull couenauntes. Judas beleued the bare promise of the priestes, without eyther wrytyng, witnesses, or sureties. He ymagined with himselfe whiche waye he might betraye Jesu vnto the sayed priestes, and Scribes after such a sorte, as they desyred: that is to saye, in tyme, and place conuenient, leste anye busynesse or insurrection should ryse hereof. For this condition was expressed in the couenaunt. In the meane time, whyles Judas, and the hye priestes counsayled together how for to destroye him, Jesu went about the busynesse of mannes saluacion. When they heard that, they were glad.

¶ And the fyrste daye of swete bred (when they offered Passeouer) his disciples saied vnto him: where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou maiest eate the passeouer? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith vnto them: Go ye into the Citie, & there shal mete you a man bearing a pitcher of water, folowe him: and whither soeuer he goeth in, saye ye to the goodman of the house, the maister saith: where is the geste chamber where I shal eate passeouer with my disciples? And he will shewe you a greate parloure paued and prepared. There make ready for vs. And his disciples weute forth and came into the citie, and founde as he had sayed vnto them, and they made ready the passeouer. The texte.

Nowe was the fyrst daye of the feast of swete breade cum, on the which daie the Jewes were wōt to offer vp their easter lambe. Therfore Jesus disciples said vnto him. Whither wilt thou that we go, and prepare thee thy easter souper? Jesus sent out two of them to make prouision therfore saying vnto them: Go ye into the citie, and assone as ye bee entred in, there shall meete you a man carying a pitcher of water: him folowe ye, & into what house soeuer he entreth in, saye these woordes to the good man of the house in my name. The maister saith, where is the souppyng chāber where I maye eate my easter lambe with my disciples? and he shall straightwayes shewe you a large souping chamber, paued, and already prepared for the feast that shalbe made therin. There prepare you for vs our easter souper. Here marke me the simple obedience of the Apostles, suche an obedience as they also shewed before, when they were sente out to fetche the Asses foale. Marke also this, that there is nothyng hyd and

vnknowē vnto the lorde: so that it is manifest and plaine hereby, that he both foreknewe, and willyngly suffered whatsoeuer he suffered for our cause. Further, marke his authoritie. At the naming of this worde (Lorde, or Maister) the asse was byandby let go. Againe at the naming of the same worde, the soupyng chamber was furthwith shewed them, so that it appeareth hereby, that it was in his power to do whatsoeuer he woulde: he could with a becke haue restrained the priestes, & pharisees, who went about cruelly to tourment hym and put him to death. The disciples went their waye, and came into the citie, and founde one carying a water pitcher: whom they followed, and entred into the house where he went in, and declared vnto the goodman of the house, their maisters commaundement. He without any tarying shewed them a soupyng chamber, wherin the disciples prepared their easter lambe, that is to saye, the last and mysticall souper, whiche should both represent the figure of the olde lawe, and also sacramentally present and exhibite vnto them, the sacrifyce of the newe lawe, and gospell.

The texte. And when it was nowe euentyde, he came with the twelue, and as they sate at borde, and dyd eate, Jesus sayed: Verely I saye vnto you, one of you (that eateth with me) shall betraye me. And they began to be sory, and to saye to him one by one, is it I? And another sayd, is it I? He answered and sayde vnto them: it is one of the twelue, euen he that dippeth with me in the platter. The sonne of man truly goeth as it is written of him, but wo to the mā by whō the sonne of mā is betrayed. Good wer it for that mā, if he had neuer been borne.

In the euentyde Jesus followed with his twelue disciples, whom only as chosen felowes, his pleasure was shoulde be witnesses of all that shoulde bee doen in this moste holy feast or maundye. When they were all set at the table, and takyng their repast, Jesus sayed vnto theim: I assure you that one of you that eateth with me, shall betraye me. As he had so sayed, eleuen of them were stryken with great sorowe and pensiuenesse. For there was none of them all that knewe himselfe fautie, saue Judas only. But yet durste they not truste to the weakenesse and frailtie of mans nature. Therfore eche of them desyrous to be delyuered of this pensiue carefulnesse by the lordes discrying of the traytoure, sayed vnto hym: Is it I? Neyther was Judas, who knewe hymselfe culpable, ashamed to saye with the rest: Maister am I he? Jesus to shewe vnto his disciples a perfite ensample of lenitie and meknesse, thoughte it better to suffre them a while to be troubled with heauinesse, then to bewraye the traytoure: vsyng all the wayes and meanes he coulde, to cause hym to returne from his wicked and mischieuous purpose. Therfore he sayd: It shall be one of the twelue, who is so familiare with me, that he dippeth in the same platter that I do. And this is the rewarde whiche he will geue me for my gentle and familiar entertainement. Nowe Judas perceiued that it was not vnknowen vnto the lord where aboutes he wēt: and he sawe also suche meknesse in hym, as the lyke had not been heard of before. Jesus would not discrie him (of whō he should anone after be moste falsly betrayed vnto death) vnto the residewe of his disciples, because they would peraduenture if the treason had been opened, haue cruelly handled hym for their maisters sake. But oh vncurable malice. What stone, what diamōd, would not so great gentlenesse make to relent, specially of hym who could hurt and displease with a becke. But the same gētlenesse more encouraged the wretch to do this wicked and mischieuous dede. Then went Jesus foorth with his tale in this wyse: howbeit as concernyng me, nothing shall be doen otherwise then I will my selfe: but as the prophetes

haue sayed and prophecied of the sonne of man, so shall it be. It is expedient for a great many that he be delyuered and betrayed to death. But yet woe bee to hym throughe whose malice and wickednesse, he shalbe betrayed. He procureth a thing which shal be soule healthy to other, and to himselfe vtter confusiō. It had been better for him that he had neuer been borne. Howbeit this wicked mynde, & purpose of Iudas, was neuer a whit refourmed, neither with so great mekenesse of the lord, nor yet for dread of the great horrible punishments whiche he threatned him withall: so great a michiefe is couetousnesse. But woe to that man.

¶ And as they did eate, Iesus toke bread, and when he had geuen thankes, he brake it, & gaue it to them, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body. And he toke the cup, and whē he had geuen thankes he toke it to them, & they all dranke of it, and he sayde vnto thē. This is my bloude of the new testamēt which is shed for many. Verely I saye vnto you, I will drynke no more of the fruite of the vyne vntill that daye, that I drinke it newe in the kyngdom of God. And when they had sayed grace, they went out to mount Oliuete. And Iesus sayth vnto them. Al ye shall bee offended because of me this night. For it is written, I will smite the shepheard, and the shepe shall be scattered. But after that I am risen againe, I wyll go into Galile before you. Peter sayd vnto hym: And though all men be offended, yet wyll not I. And Iesus sayeth vnto him. Verely I saye vnto the, that this daye, euen in this nighte before the Cocke crowe twise, thou shalt deny me three times. But he spake more vehemētly: no, if I shoulde dye with the, I will not denye the. Likewise also sayde they all. The text.

Furthermore in this souper, Iesus commended vnto his disciples that moste holy sacrement or signe of his death, and of the perpetuall couenaunt made with those that would continue in the euāgelike & christiā faith: for this cause he toke bread, and after thankes geuen to god the father, brake it, and gaue it to eche of them, saying: Take, eate, this is my body. Also he toke the cup, and after thankes geuen, gaue it them, and they all dranke therof. Then he said vnto them. This is my bloud of the newe testamēt which shall be shed for many. Be you well assured of this that I shall tell you: from hencefoorth I wil drinke no more of the fruit of the vine tyll that daie that I drinke it new in the kyngdome of God. When the souper was done, and grace sayde in the laude and praise of god, according to their manoure and custome, the same nighte they departed from Ierusalem vnto mout Oliuete. We must euer thanke, & praise God both in weale and woe. There Iesus knowyng the frailtie and weakenesse of his disciples, prepared and strēgthned theyr myndes, that they myght be able to suffre the storme of persecution which hanged ouer their heades. All ye, saith he, shall be troubled this night for my cause. And this thyng did Esay also prophecie of before. I wyll smyte, saith he, the shepherd, and the shepe shall bee scattered abrode. But dispayre ye not. As my death shall trouble you, and cause you to disperse and scatter abrode, so shal my resurrection recomfort you, and gather you together again. For I wil reliue, as I said, on the thyrde day, and being reliued, will go before you into Galile. After ye haue there sene me, you shall put away all sorowe and heuinesse. When Peter, who as yet knewe not his owne weakenesse, heard him say so, he answered again bely manfully, but yet rashely withal, saying: Although all the residewe be offended with thy death, yet truly will I not be troubled therwith a whit. Iesus desyrous cleane to wede and plucke out of our myndes all truste of our selues, sayth vnto him: O Peter, thou denyest that that thyng shalbe done, whiche both the prophetes, and I my selfe (whom it had bene thy parte to beleue, and in no wise to gainsaye or contrary with wordes) haue tolde before shall cum to passe. O thou rashe promiser: yea, the stronger thou thynkest thy selfe to be, the more nota- All ye shall be offended, &c.

lly shalt thou be troubled aboue all other. This thyng I assure the of: before the cocke crow twise this same very night, thou shalt thrise deny me. Yet is the presumpcion of Peter nothing abated herewith, insomuche that he maketh a more stoute, and greater promise of himselfe, then he dyd before, saying: Yea, if there be no remedy, but I must nedes euen dye with the, yet I wyl neuer deny the. As Peter sayd, so sayd the rest of the disciples, to thentent that they erring together, shoulde bee all reformed together of theyr errour, and knowe howe vnable they were to do any thyng by their owne strength and power, and finally perceyue how it was not possible for any thyng to bee vaine or vntrue, which came out of Christes mouth. A litle before, they al agreed together in cõfessing truly who Christ was, and the cõmune opinion of them al was praised in Peter. Here they agree altogether in a rashe confidence and trust of theselues: and in Peter alone the rashenesse of them all is rebuked. Only Peter denied Iesu, and the rest would haue doen the like, if occasion had been geuen them so to do. For they would haue denied him, yf they had not fled awaye. The bolde stomacke of Peter, the whiche was more constaunt in hym then in the other, brought him into this daunger. None of all these thynges chaunced vnto the disciples of any set malyce, as it happened to Iudas, but onely through mans imbecillitie and weakenesse. And therfore Iesus vsed the obstinate wickednesse of Iudas, to our saluacion: and would haue the weakenes and frailtie of his apostles diuersely declared, because to teache all other by them, how no manne shoulde warrand hymselfe ought of his owne strength, but whensoeuer the storme of yuels and aduersities aryseth, wholely to hang vpon the heauenlye ayde and socoure: whiche so muche the more presently helpeth man, as he distrusteth his owne strengthe and power. The apostles coulde not yet bee reproued by worde: but the time would cum when the experience of the matter should at the lengthe make them to knowe themselues.

Before the rocke crowe twyse. &c.

The texte. And they came into a place whiche was named Gethsemany. And he saieth to his disciples: Sit ye here whyle I go aside, and praie. And he taketh with hym Peter & James, and John, and began to ware abashed, and to be in an agony, and saieth vnto them: My soule is hevy, euen vnto the death. Tary ye here and watche. And he went foorth a lyttle, and fell downe flat on the gound, and prayed that if it were possible, the houre myght passe from him. And he sayd: Abba father, all thinges are possible vnto the, take away this cup from me: Neuertheles not that I wyll, but that thou wylt be done.

Therfore they came into a place called Gethsemany. This Gethsemany is a valey lying at the foote of moũt Oliuete. No man can mounte vp to the crosse of Iesu, vnlesse he first cum downe vnto this valey: vnlesse he hũble and abase himselfe by renouncyng of all the aydes and socours of mans pride & loftinesse. Here commaunded he the other eight to tarrie, and takyng vnto hym three, that is to saye, Peter, James, and John, gate him awaye not farre of, because he woulde geue himselfe to praier and contemplacion. Behold here the engines, and artilerye of the gospell against the violence of persecucions. There were two thinges in Iesu moste contrarye: that is to were, his diuine maiestie, the whiche there was nothyng higher, or of more excellencie: and his humayne weakenesse, then whiche there was nothing more vile, or of lesse reputacion. Because vnto these three disciples he had giuen before some taste of his highnesse and diuine maiestie, it was his wyll and pleasure they shoulde nowe be witnesses of his greatest abasyng of hymselfe, and humilitie: to thentent that in the same Christe, they should learne, both what they ought to counterfayte and ensue, and also what to hope after. Here nowhere appeared his face all

shynyng, and glisterynge lyke the Sunne: no where his apparayle whyter then the snow: no where Moyses and Hely cõmunyng with hym: and to bee shorte, no where was heard the fathers voyce as it was before, but as a man vtterly forsaken and destitute of all helpe and socoure, he beganne to bee sore troubled with feare, and dismayed with great anguish and agony of mynde: for he was a very naturall man, and notably expressed in hymselfe, what is wont to chaunce vnto those persones, who are nothyng els but men, whensoeuer any suche storme hangeth ouer them. Neyther dyd he cloke and dissemble the thing amõg his frendes. I thorowly, sayde he, feele in my minde, sorowe & heuinesse lykest vnto death. He sought for comfort euery where, & found none at all. But yet is it a certaine kynde of solace and comforte, to complayne vnto our frẽdes of our calamitie, though they will not helpe vs. Therfore he commaunded also these three to tarry here, and watche. That done, he went forth a litle, and as one cleane destitute of all worldly comforte, and vtterly forlorne and paste helpe (as touchyng mans helpe) fled vnto the father for socoure: of whom yet he should not byandby be eased of his griefe. Wherfore he fell downe flatte on the grounde: and lying grouelyng, prayed the father, that (if it were possible) the tyme of this battaile might passe awaye. The nature of his body feared the tourment, & death that was nye hand. Abba father (sayd he.) Thou canste do all thinges: take awaye this cup from me, that I drinke not therof. Neuertheles let that be doen that thy will hath decreed, whiche willeth nothing but what is moste expedient and best: and not as the weakenesse of this body desyreth.

My soul is heuy, euẽ vnto the death.

The texte.

And he came and founde them sleping, & saith to Peter: Symon, slepest thou? Couldest not thou watche one houre? watche ye, and praie, lest ye enter into temptacion. The spirite truly is ready. But the flesshe is weake. And agayne he went aside, and prayed, and spake the same wordes. And he returned, and found thẽ aslepe agayn. For their eyes were heuy. Neyther wyst they what to answere hym. And he came the thyrde tyme, & sayde vnto them: slepe hence forth, & take your ease, it is enough. The houre is cum, beholde the sonne of man is betrayed into the handes of sinners, ryse ye vp, let vs go. Loe, he that betrayeth me, is at hand. And immediatly, whyle he yet spake, cũmeth Judas (which was one of the twelue) and with him a greate numbre of people, with swordes and staues, from the hye priestes, & scribes, and elders. And he that betrayed him, had geuen thẽ a generall token saying: Whosoeuer I do kisse that same is he, take him, and leade hym away warely. And as sone as he was cum, he goeth straightway to hym, and saieth vnto hym. Maister, maister, and kissed hym. And they layed theyr handes on him, and toke hym. And one of them that stoode by, drue out a swerde, and smote a seruaunt of the hie priest, and cut of his eare.

When he had thus prayed, he returned vnto his three disciples whome he left behinde him and found them nowe sleping. And then called he Peter, who a litle before had made so stout a promyse, saying: Symõ, slepest thou? Couldest thou not watche as much as one houre with me? This tyme admitteth no sluggishenesse. For he slepeth not that goeth about to destroye vs. Watche, and praye, lest ye entre into temptacion, because ye shall bee in ieopardy to bee ouercomen therwith, if it cum vpon you when ye are nothyng prepared. The perill is like commune vnto vs all. I watche and praye for your health & safetie: doe you like wyse watche, and praye as I do, that you maye ouercome with me. The spirite is ready, and wyllyng, but the flesshe is weake. The spirite must be stayed and stablyshed with watchyng, and prayer, leste, the flesshe haue the vpper hande. When Jesus had thus spoken he went eftsones to the place frõ whẽce he came, & made his prayers vnto the father, with like tenour of wordes as he dyd before: desyring hym, that he might not drinke of the cup which was at hand: and anon he returned to his disciples and founde them a-gayne slepyng. They napped in the beholdyng of his maiestie, insomuch that Peter wiste not what he sayde. In like maner do they here slepe in the behol-dyng of his infirmitie and weakenesse, and know we not well what answere to make hym rebukynge them. Jesus returned the third tyme from prayer vnto his sayed disciples: and the thirde time he founde them a slepe. Bothe they and we had perished, vnles Jesus had watched, and prayed for vs al. Therfore after they were wakened, he rebuked them because he would by them styre vp and awaken all slewthfull persons. Slepe ye, sayde he, from henceforth, and take your reast. You haue slepte ynoughe. The thyng selfe will now waken you whether you will or no. The very point, and momente of the tyme is already cumme. Lo, the sonne of manne shall anon be betrayed, and delyuered into they? handes that are all set on mischiefe. Ryse vp, and let vs go mete them.

And agayne he went aside. &c.

For now the lord Jesus had by prayer made himselfe strong in mynde against the storme of afflictions that was at hand. Neither shewed he any time afterward any token of feare, or werines: but gaue vs an ensaple of moste cōstaunt and stedfast patience vnto the last houre. He had no sooner spoken these wor-des, but Judas Iscarioth one of the numbre of the twelue chosen disciples, & amonges them taken for the chiefe, was cum, and with hym a great bende of souldiers fensed with swordes and staues, against Jesus being without armour, and weaponlesse. Neither lacked there here authoritie. The hie priestes, scribes, and head men of the people, sent this power. Here marke me (good reader) the notable conflicte of the euangelike and christian godlynesse against fayned and counterfayte holynesse. Thus is the truthe of the ghospell daylye assaulted: thus doeth it alwayes ouercum and get the victorie. There is none meter to betraye it then he, who professing hymselfe to be a preacher & teacher of the same, teacheth those thinges that are of the flesche. There is muche more ieopardie of false doctrine, then of the swordes and staues of souldiours, that are notorious and open misdoers. Yet dyd not Judas well trust to his owne strength and policie, when he should betraye the lorde. He ioyned vnto hym a great bende of souldiers wel weaponed, & besydes them, the authoritie of both the states, that is to saye, both of the spiritualtie, and tēporalitie. And all these thynges dyd they in the night, hauing awayted as well opportunitie of place, as of tyme. There muste nedes be moste horrible darkenesse, where Jesus is bound, and taken. This was the power of darkenesse: & Satan was suffered awhyle to seme to haue vanquished and ouercum Christ. What greater blind-nesse could there be then to go about by mannes policie to betraye hym, vnto whom nothyng is vnknowen: then with swordes, and staues to assault him, who with a becke can do what hym luste. Judas dyd not openly shewe hymselfe to be the captaine of this vngracious compaignie, but gaue them firste a token, saying: whomsoeuer I kysse, the same is Jesus: Laye ye handes vpon hym, and leade hym charely, lest he scape frō you. The priestes were well ware of this, that the money should not be disbursed vnlesse Jesus were in their han-des and custodie. Then began Judas to go a prety waye before the souldiers, as though he had goen about sum what els: but yet he went so before thē, that he was euer in their sight. And anon as he was cū vnto Jesus, he saluted and kysled him, according vnto his accustomed manoure. Neyther dyd Jesus here abate any parte of his gentilnesse towardes the traytour. He only nipped him

by the conscience, saying: My frende for what entent art thou cumme? He knew right wel howe he would neuer tourne from his wickednesse, and yet vsed he all the meanes that myght be, to reforme hym: teachyng vs hereby to vse all the gentlenesse, and fayre meanes we can possible towardes synners, because we be vncertaine whether they will ons daye tourne and cum to amendment. If they amend, then haue we won the soule healthy of our euenchristen: yf they amend not, yet shall not our gentle demeanure be vnrewarded. A kysse is a sygne of mutuall loue & charitie. Charitie declareth vs to be the disciples of Jesu. Wherfore there is no greater point of vnmittie, then a fayned kysse. Certes such a kysse do false prophetes, ri ē in these dayes, gyue vnto Jesu, whiche vnder pretence of christian godlynesse, serue their belyes, and seke after the prayse of the world: and in stede of the spirituall fredōe, teache a very Jewishe religion. At the token of this vnnious kysse, the souldiers layed handes on hym, and bound hym. The disciples when they sawe this russhyng and busynesse, waxed vnmyshe and angrye. And nowe Peter cleane forgettyng what ỳ Lorde had tolde hym before, thought the tyme was cum wherin it shoulde be his part to do summe worthy feate, according as he had right courageously and lyke a bolde man promised to do. He drewe out his swearde, and strake the high bishops seruaunt called Malchus, because he more fierse then the rest, first hasted to laye handes on Jesus. Howbeit the Lorde so ordred the stroke of his right hande, that he dyd Malchus no other harme, saue onely cut of his right eare: the whiche the same moste gracious lorde anone as he had rebuked his disciple, restored agayne, and so made hym amendes for the hurt of this small and daungerles wounde. So beneficiall was Jesus to all men, that we ought to be ashamed to haue, so muche as a wyll or an entente to be reuenged vpon any man: I will not saye to hurte suche, as hath not deserued our displeasure.

And he that betrayed hym had geuen them a token.

And one of them that stode by. &c.

¶ And Jesus answered, and sayde vnto them: ye be cum out as vnto a theefe, with swordes and with staues for to take me: I was daylye with you in the temple teachyng, and ye toke me not. But these thinges cum to passe, that the scriptures should be fulfilled: And they all forsoke hym, and faune awaye. And there folowed hym a certaine young man clothed in lynnen vpon the bare, and the yong men caught hym, and he left his lynnen garment, and fled from thence naked. And they led Jesus awaie to the hye priest: and with hym came all the hye priestes, and the elders, and the Scribes. And Peter folowed hym a great waye of (euen tyll he was cumme into the palace of the hye priest) and he sate with the seruauntes, and warmed hymselfe at the fyre.

The texte.

Further, as Jesus will not be defended with any other aydes, then with the swerd of the gospel, the whiche pearceth to the innermost partes of mens hartes, so was it his wil that this armed company of souldiers should know that he could not haue been apprehended by any puissaunce or power of man, vnlesse he had both willingly and wittingly put hymselfe into their handes to be taken. Therfore he turned him vnto them, and sayed: sirs what ayleth you to cum out hyther to me at midnight, with swearde and staues, as vnto a theefe that woulde stand at his defence with lyke weapon? I was daylye at Jerusalem, not priuely, but openlye where euery body might see me: in the place where moste haunt and resort of people is, I meane in the temple: healyng sycke folke, and teachyng the trueth. I was euer weaponlesse, and accōpanied but wt a smaill number of disciples, who wer likewise without armour and weapon. Why dyd ye not there take me? Surely you might haue done it then with lesse businesse, if it had been so decreed.

I was daylye with you in the temple.

But this is your tyme: insomuche that you may by goddes sufferaunce, do nowe to me what ye luste. And that it shoulde so be, the scriptures, whiche ye not, haue foreshewed many yeares sithens. When he had sayd so, there was but who might firste lay handes on hym: and anon the disciples fearyng themselues, forsoke the yonge man, and ranne awaye, sum to one place, and sum to another. It is lawfull for weake persons to flye, who are not as yet mete and able to suffre persecucion. Albeit there chaunceth a tyme, when that to flye, is nothyng els, but to deny Christe. There must we not flye, but euen of our owne accorde hasten to dye. When that by thy death the Gospel taketh more dispro-fite, then commoditie, then flye awaye, and hyde thy selfe. But when that by thesame, the ghospell hath muche profyte, and contrarily greate disproffet and hinderaunce, if thou auoyde the daunger therof, then sticke not to go and mete the hangman. There was among the twelue, a certayne young stryplyng, whom Jesus loued more thē the rest, & folowed hym being led with his armes bounde like a captiue or prysoner: whose bare bodye was clothed with one fine lynnen garment only. Hym they layed holde vpon, and toke. But he caste of his lynnen vesture, and so escaped out of theyr handes, sauing his lyfe by the losse of his garment. He that so flyeth after the spirituall sence, flyeth happely. For what els is the bodye but the vesture and garmente of the soule? As often as Satan layeth hande vpon the soule, passe not vpon the lynnen garmente, and so saue thy selfe, and escape out of his daunger. Nowe beholde howe the euangelike verite is handeled after it is betrayed of a wicked disciple. The cruell garison of soldiers leadeth it bounde to the chiefe menne of both the states, who are in a conspiracie to destroye it. Fyrste it is brought vnto the hygheste priest. There is no more mortall an enemy vnto Jesu, then is a wicked Bysshop. Nowe because the matters should seme to be done with more auctoritie, thither assembled all the priestes, Scribes and elders. This is the authoritie of this world, whiche is in a conspiracie against poore, symple, and playne veritie, but yet inuincible withal. All this while Peters hert fayled him not. Howbeit he folowed Jesus a loofe, and was nowe a cloked disciple: and no meruayle, sithe the tyme drewe nere, when he would deny him. For mans bolde stomache is good for nothyng els of it selfe, but to make the synner more outragiously to offende. Therefore he preased into the palace of the highest priest, & there sate amidmōg the lewde and vngracious compayne of seruauntes, and warmed himselfe by the fire, as one that would be rather a beholder of the Lordes passion, then a folower.

And there folowed hi a certayne young man

The texte. ¶ And the hye priestes, and all the counsel, sought for witnesse agaynst Jesu, to put hym to death: & found none, for many bare false witnesse against hym, but their witnes agreed not together. And there arose certayne & brought false witnesse against hym, saying: We heard hym saye. I wyll destroye this temple that is made with handes, and within fyue dayes I will builde another, made without handes. But yet theyr witnesses agreed not together.

In the meane season suche of the priestes as were chiefe in dignitie (amōg whom as euery one was highest in authoritie, so was the same more wicked then the other) and with them the residue of the counsell, lest they should haue semed to be rather murtherers, then auengers of heresye, and vngodlynesse, sought for sum witnesse agaynst Jesus, whereby they might put him to death. They desired nothyng els, but his death and destruccion, who freely offered all men life euerlastyng. Yet could there no mete witnesse be found. Jesus onely was he, against whom mans craftines coulde fynde no conuenient witnesse.

For

For no we there came in many before the Judges, who deposed against hym, but their witnesse was so simple and sléder, that it appeared not to those moste vniust felowes themselues, sufficient to condemne him, whome they hadde in very dede cõdemned alreadye among themselues, before he was brought vnto his arraignement. At the length there rose vp certain persons who gaue fore euidence against hym, saying: we will denounce vnto you, suche thynges as we knowe certainly to bee true. For we heard hym saye (with these eares) I will destroy this temple made by mannes handes, and after three dayes erected, I will builde another, that shall not be made with the handes of manne. They woulde that this saying shoulde appeare to be a blasphemye spoken against the Lordes temple. Yet did not their witnesse (albeit to aggrauate the haynousnes of the crime, it contemned sum truthe) séme lawfull and sufficient. A man would haue sayed, that the iudges had taken conscience in the matter, and fauboured the defendaunte: Howbeit this diligence of the prieste's was for nothing els, but bicause Jesus should not by any meanes be quit and estape this iudgement.

For many bare false witnesse.

But yet their witnesses.

¶ And the hye priest stode vp amonges them, and asked Jesus, saying: answerest thou nothing? How is it that these beare witnesse against the? But he helde his peace & answered nothing. Agayne the highest priest asked hym, and saied vnto hym: Arte thou Christ, the sonne of the blessed? And Jesus sayd: I am.

yet all this while is there nothyng doen agaynst hym. There nedeth the helpe of the highest priest or bishop of all, to destroye Jesu. Herfore perceyuing that the matter wet but rassly forward, rose vp in the middes of the counsel, and began to speake vnto Jesus, sekyng sum occasion of his wordes, wherby he might condemne him. Hearest thou, sayth he, what crimes are layed vnto thy charge? Haste thou no answere to make hereunto? Jesus held his peace and gaue hym not a word to answere. For, for what purpose shoulde he haue answered to those thynges, which themselues iudged but light matters, and of no wayght? Therfore the highest Bysshoppe styll sought occasion, and questioned with hym, saying: Art thou that selfsame Christe the sonne of God, who is euer to be praysed? Jesus confessed he was. For it was not his parte to denye that thyng, whiche it behoued all men to knowe.

¶ And ye shall see the sonne of man sitting on the right hande of power, and comming in the cloudes of heauen. Then the hye priest rent his clothes, and sayed: what nede we of any further witnesses? ye haue heard a blasphemy, what thinke ye? And they all condemned hym to be worthy of death, & sum began to spyt at him, & to couer his face, and to beate him with fistes, and to saye vnto hym: Areade. And the seruauntes buffetted hym on the face.

The texte.

And because he knewe they woulde not beleue in hym, or at the least wise woulde contemne him, by reason of the weakenesse of his body: he added an other sentence to feare them withall. You shall see (sayd he) the sonne of manne sitting on the right hande of the diuine maiestie, and cummyng on hygh in the cloudes of heauen, with great glory, and many aungels waytyng vpon him. He meant of his seconde cumming: when he will retourne, not lykewyse lowe as he was then, but in diuine maiestie a iudge both of the quicke, and dead. The wicked prieste's were ignorannt in the lawe: yet might they haue learned of the Phariseis, that both the cummynges of Messias, were prophecied of by the prophetes: the one not regarded and passed on, the other royall, and dreadfull. But they had no leysure to compare Jesus dedes, with the prophecies, and forsayinges of the prophetes. All that euer they wente aboute was nothing

nothyng els, but to bryng hym to destruccion. Here the highest priest clokyng his wickednesse with a vysure of Godlynesse, rent and tare his clothes, therby to make the blasphemy to appeare more haynous and detestable.

Then the hye priest rēt his clothes.

What nedeth there, saieth he, any further witnes: yourselues haue heard an open blasphemy. The wicked Bishop desyrous to set forth his owne glorye, coulde not abide to heare Christes glorye aduaunced: supposyng that what glory and prayse soeuer had been geuen to Christ, the same shoulde haue been to the great derogacion and minishyng of his maiestie. Wodnesse caused him a litle before to ryse out of his place: and yet in so doyng, he gaue reuerence vnto the sonne of god. Now doeth he rente his clothes, prophecying herby, how it shall cum to passe, that the true bishop raignyng the carnall and figuratiue bishophode shalde clene abolished and set aside. The glorious synagoge was rent, but Christes coate remaineth still whole. What is farther from blasphemy, then to set forth the glory of the sonne of God: then to testifie that all shall come to passe, whatsoeuer the Prophetes haue prophecied to cum: And yet the vngracious bishop iudgeth this to be suche a blasphemye, as nedeth no witnesses. What, saith he, thinke you here in: All they with one cōsent gaue iudgement that this saying was an offence worthy of death. Forsothe a mete and a worthy councell for suche a priest. Nowe is it to be considered howe the euangelyke veritie is entreated in such councels, where as a wicked priest, who fayne would be taken for a god, cannot abide to haue the glorye of the sonne of god auaunced: where the Scribes do not vtter what they haue learned of the prophetes: where the head men, and elders of the people, be in a conspiracie with the chief prelates of the temple: where suche waged seruauntes, & hyred souldiers beare a stroke, as are of theyr owne naughtie disposicion enclined to all mischiefe. For now some of them began to spitte at Jesus, as thoughe he had been lawfully condemned: and other some couered his face with a vayle, and after they had bufeted hym, sayed: Prophecie, and arede who hath striken the. Thus they reprochefully scorned hym, because he suffred the people to take hym for a prophete. Furthermore the priestes seruauntes dyd lykewyse beat and buffet hym. These thinges were more fell, and cruell then death: but this ensample was ordeined for our enstruccion. In sufferyng of reprochе and vylany none passed Jesus: but in worshyng of myracles there were some, that went beyond hym

What thinke ye?&c.

The texte. ¶ And as Peter was benethe in the palace, there came one of the wenches of the highest priest, and when she sawe Peter warming himself, she loketh on him, and sayeth: wast not thou also with Jesus of Nazareth? And he denied, saying: I know hym not, neyther wot I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porche, & the Cocke crew. And a damosel, (when she sawe hym) began again to saye to them that stoode by: this is one of them. And he denyed it agayne. And anone after they that stode by, sayde agayne to Peter: surely thou arte one of them, for thou arte of Galile, and thy speache agreeth therto. But he began to curse, and to sweare, saying. I know not this man of whome ye speake. And agayne the cocke crewe, and Peter remembred the worde that Jesus sayed vnto him. Before the cocke crow twise thou shalt denye me thrice tymes. And he began to wepe.

While all these thinges were doen vnto Jesu, Peter beyng a fearful beholder, sate in the neyther parte of the palace among the wicked bishop seruauntes. For there was a conuenient place for hym, sithe he woulde denye Jesus. Hither came a certaine wenche of ỹ highest priest, whiche, after she had espyed hym warmyng himselfe with other by the fier, and had eyed hym diligently, began to knowe his shape and phisnamie, and sayed vnto hym: Yea thou too

waſt with Jeſus of Nazareth. Peter frayed with theſe wordes denied it ſaying: I know not the man, nor wote not what thou meaneſt. It was conuenient that this ſtoute promiſer, becauſe he might the better know his own frailtie, ſhould be made afearde of a wenche, to thentent that he afterwarde boldly profeſſyng the name of Jeſu before rulers, and princes, ſhould knowe that his boldneſſe and conſtant courage of mynde, came not of mannes ſtreingth, but of the holy ghoſte. He therfore beyng now afearde, and halfe miſtruſtyng that place, gate hym out of the hall, yet departed he not out of the byſhops palace. Whiles he abode here, the cocke crewe. Peter heard that, and yet remembred not what Jeſus had tolde hym: ſo greatly was he afrayed. Then a certaine damoſell (when ſhe ſawe hym) began to detect hym again to them that ſtode about her, ſaying: This is one of theyr number. Peter eſchewes auoyded her ſaying with a lye, denyng flat that he was any of the apoſtles. And anon after whey the ſeruauntes whiche ſtoode by whyles the damoſell knewe and diſcryed hym, had themſelues well bewed his fauour and apparaile, they lykewiſe began to knowe hym, and ſayed: Verily thou arte one of them, for thou arte of Galile. The firſte that detected hym was a woman. Oh what a perilie is for Chriſtes diſciple to be knowen in biſhops, and princes courtes. Vnleſſe he vtterly denye hymſelfe to bee Chriſtes diſciple, he ſtandeth in ieopardie to loſe his life. Peter is alſo in ieopardie, by reaſon of his mother tongue & countrey language. Suche manour of courtes can abyde no ſyncere and pure beritie. Nowe ſhall Peter at the length, be made a right courtier vp and downe, for he begynneth to ſweare depely, and to curſe withal, that he neuer in al his lyfe tyme knew this Jeſu, whō they ſpake of. And as he had ſpoken the word, the cocke crewe agayne. Peter came not to hymſelfe agayn, before Jeſus loked vpon hym. Therfore at the length callyng to his remembraunce the wordes that Jeſus had ſpoken vnto him, when he ſayed: before the cocke crowe twiſe, thou ſhalt thryſe deny me: he went forthe of Cayphas houſe, and braſte out a wepyng. Yet went he not to hange himſelf, as Judas did, becauſe he fell not of obſtinate iuelneſſe, but by mannes frailtie and weakeneſſe, and that by the ſufferaſice of God, becauſe his fal ſhould be our inſtructiō. But this ſhowre of teares which braſte out of his iyes, quenched the lyghtning of Goddes wrathe and anger. He wept not before he was goen out of Caiphas palace. For there the more naughtie packe that euery one is, the more he eſteemeth and fauoureth himſelfe.

Peter remembred the worde.

The. xv. Chapter.

The texte. And anon in the dawnyng, the hie prieſtes helde a counſaile with the elders and the Scribes and the whole congregacion, and bounde Jeſus, and led him awaye, and deliuered hym to Pylate. And Pylate aſked hym: Arte thou the king of the Jewes? And he anſwered and ſayde vnto hym: thou ſayeſt it. And the hie prieſtes accuſed hym of many thynges. And Pylate aſked hym agayne, ſaying: Anſwereſt thou nothing: Beholde howe manye thinges they laye vnto thy charge. Jeſus yet anſwered nothyng, ſo that Pylate meruayled.

All ỹ nyghte was ſpent in Cayphas houſe, in deſtroying, mocking, and ſkorning of Jeſu. In the morning earlye after they had coūſayled together afreſhe, the hie prieſtes, with the elders Scribes, and all the whole aſſemblie, led him awaye with his armes bound, & deliuered hym vnto Pylate to be iudged: whō they had with theyr foreiudgement already condemned. Now are they of iudges becum accusars. Pylate, their accusacions and complaintes heard, called Jesu, and asked him: Arte thou that same kyng of the Jewes? Jesus answered. Thou sayest: couertlye knowledgyng and confessyng that he was the selfsame. Yet was Pylate not a whit moued with this answere, bycause there appeared nothyng in him whereby he semed desyrous of any worldly kyngdom. Furthermore the hye priestes, lest he should by any meanes haue been quit, gathered together diuerse criminall artycles against him, to thentent that amongest many matters, there should at ỳ least wyse be sum thyng in sum which would moue any iudge, not being to vniust, and partyall, to geue sentence against hym. Pylate perceiuing howe all was doen of priuate displeasure and malice, sought occasion to discharge him of suche matters as he was arrayned for. Therfore whē he came again vnto Jesus & Jesus would geue him neuer a word to answere, thē sayde he vnto him: Makest thou no answer, sith thou art in so great daunger to lose thy lyfe? Se howe many artycles thes felowes laye against the. Jesus from thence forthe made no answere, who desyred not to escape this iudgement, leste the vtterie of his death, shoulde haue been let or hyndered thereby, & also bicause he knewe right well that ỳ malice of the priestes wounde not yet haue ceased, although they had not this waye preuayled against hym. For this cause his will and pleasure was so to dye, that it might appeare that he died willyngly. The Emperours deputie, albeit he were a paynim, yet dyd he abhorre the murthering of a man, whom he iudged to be an innocent and giltlesse person: and therfore vsed he all the wayes and meanes he coulde possible to deliuer him. For he sawe well there was no healpe to be had on his behalfe, whereby he myght so doe.

And Pilate asked hym again.

The texte. ¶ At that feaste Pylate dyd deliuer vnto them a prysoner, whomsoeuer they would desyre. And there was one that was named Barrabas, which laye bounde with them that made insurrection: he had committed murther. And the people called vnto hym, and began to desyre him that he would do, according as he had euer doen vnto them. Pylate answered them, saying: wyll ye that I let lruse vnto you the kyng of the Jewes? For he knewe that the hye priestes had deliuered hym of enuye. But the hye priestes moued the people that he should rather deliuer Barrabas vnto them.

There was a custome among the Jewes that at the feaste of Easter, one of them shoulde be lewsed whiche laye in prison for anye death worthy offence, whomsoeuer the Jewes desyred to be geuen vnto them. At that season there was in duraunce a certaine notable felō, muche spoken of for his vngracious dedes, named Barrabas, who had been a stirrer vp of sedicion in the citie, and in the busynes, and hurly burly that he made, had committed manslaughter. Pylate determined with hymselfe to vse this occasion to saue Jesu. Therfore when the people were cummen together, according to theyr auncient custome to desyre to haue some felon pardoned, in token of theyr safe deliueraunce and scapyng out of Egypte, Pylate answered in this wyse: I haue two prisoners, Barrabas whome ye know, and Jesus whō men cal the kyng of the Jewes. Will ye therfore that I lewse vnto you Jesus? Pylate perceyuing that he coulde haue no ayde and helpe of the priestes, went vnto the people bicause to haue had some ayde & assistence of them, trusting that by theyr fauour, Jesus shoulde haue been deliuered. And so had he been without fayle, if the malicious bysheps (neuer weary to worke mischiefe) had not moued them rather to desyre to haue Barrabas pardoned, then Jesus.

The texte, Pylate answered agayne, and sayed vnto them, what wyll ye then that I do vnto him whom whome ye call the kyng of the Iewes? And they cryed agayne: crucifie hym. Pilate sayde vnto them: what euyl hath he done? and they cryed the more feruently: Crucifie hym. And so Pylate wyllyng to content the people, let lose Barabas vnto them, and deliuered vp Iesus (when he had scourged him) for to be crucified.

When this thyng had so chaunced, contrarye to the deputies expectation (for he heard say that Christ was highly in grace and fauour with the people) yet ceased not he to helpe hym, as muche as in him laye. What then, sayed he, will ye that I do with the kyng of the Iewes? louing to haue heard of them a more fauourable and gentler sentence. But here the wylye Bishops were beyre circumspect, who had before hande infected the myndes of the communaltie with theyr wickednesse. Neyther is the auctoritie of suche bishoppes good for any thyng els, but to moue Princes, and the people agaynste the trueth of the gospel. The people therfore cryed agayn: crucifie hym. The bishops had also beaten into their heades, that the shamefullest kynde of death of al, should be chosen out for hym: bycause his name shoulde hereby be counted detestable and cursed among all the Iewes. And they brought him to a place named Golgotha. &c.

For the lawe pronounced hym cursed, whoso hanged in wood. So studied they not onely to bereaue hym of his life, but also vtterly to extincte & abolyshe his good name, which was a facte muche crueller then death. They couldde not abide that any mans name shoulde be counted holy, saue theyrs. Neyther did Pilate here yelde vnto theyr furie, but spake harde againste them, saying: I am the Emperours deputie. It is not lawful for me to put any man to death, vnlesse he be duely conuicted. What offence hath he dooen wherfore he oughte to be crucified? Here the deputie not thyng preuayled. For they cryed outemore furiously: Crucifie hym. yet for al that Pylate shranke not in Christes cause, yf they layed vnto his charge treason against the Emperour. It was not conuenient that Iesu shoulde be doen to death, excepte the Emperours authoritie had serued the fury of the bishops. Pylate perceyuyng what daunger hanged ouer his head, on the one syde, of the Emperour, on the other, of the clamarous people, albeit he knewe righte well that Iesus was an innocente and harmeles person, yet willinge to yelde and conforme hymselfe to the mortall hatred of the bishops, Scribes, elders, and people, gaue sentence of deathe agaynste hym: but with the same sentence he both cleared the innocent of all crimes, and also condemned the priestes, and the people. For he pronounced hym to be innocent and giltles, whome he let them haue to crucifie. Suche maner of Pylates shal the truth of the gospell euermore haue: & would to God there dyd not aryse among vs some bishops, which are farre beyonde those bishops in all mischeefe & vngraciousnes. When therfore Iesus was condemned to death, he was fyrst beaten with scourges. But whē the Iewes were not here with satisfied, Pylate deliuered hym to the garison of ỹ souldiers to be crucified. So it pleased the high wisedom of God that Iesu the fountaine of al glory, should be put to all kyndes of vilany, by al sortes of people: to the entent we should not be dismaide vp any maner of worldly euils or aduersities. Iudas betrayed him: the bishops, Scribes, & headmen of the people counsailed together: the seruauntes toke hym: Cayphas the highest priest, chiefe worker of all this mischiefe condēned hym: the Counsell, and theyr seruauntes scorned him as a condemned person: the people cryed out agaynst hym like mad fooles: the Emperours name maketh the iudge afraid: Herode despiseth: the Emperours deputie geueth sentence: and in al these is Cayphas, and in hym the deuyl.

And

Ade texte, And the souldiers led him awaye into the cõmon hall, and called together the whole multitude, and they clothed him with purple, and they platted a croune of thornes, and crounded him withall, and began to salute hym: hayle kyng of the Jewes. And they smote him on the head with a rede, and dyd spit vpon hym, and bowed their knees, and worshypped hym.

Nowe remayneth there behynde, that the wicked garison of souldiers do lykewyse playe theyr partes, and amõg the also was Cayphas. All the shame and villany that Jesus was put vnto, all his destruccion (if it maye be sayed ỹ he was destroyed) came of Caiphas, who vnwares wrought a thing moste blessed and holy. For he made this sacrifice, without whiche no manne coulde haue attayned saluacion. When therfore Jesus was caste and iudged to dye, Pylates seruauntes led hym into the hall of the palace. For the Jewes, who were desyrous to seme holy durst not entre into the palace of a Panim; because they would come pure and cleane to celebrate theyr passeouer.

And yet was theyr mindes in the myddes of the palace, and in the verye handes of the souldiers, whom being of their owne enclinacion readye to do all mischicke, they prouoked and incensed therunto. After Pylate had once deliuered his handes of Jesus, he thought it made no great force how he were dorn to death. So did Herode fauour the vertue, and goodnes of John, that at the requeste of a peuishe wenche he caused his head to be striken of. Howbeit the fauour of Pylate was more constant then so, but yet in conclusyon he deliuered hym to be crucified. And this was dorn leste any that professeth the trueth of the ghospell, should trust vpon any worldly ayde and succour. Then the souldiers, because they wouldethe more take theyr pleasure on hym in puttyng hym to shame and villany, called together the whole garison of theyr companions: and in mockage, clothed him with a garment of purple, as it had been with a kynges robe: thẽ put they on his head a croune platted of thornes, in the stede of a diademe, and being thus disguised, they began with one voice to salute hym, saying: Hayle kyng of the Jewes. Furthermore they strake his head with a rede, whiche they gaue him in his handeinỹ stede of a scepter: & dyd also spit vpon hym, and bowyng theyr knees, worshypped him. Jesus all this whyle helde his peace, & patiently yelded to al theyr dispitefull doynges, transporting vnto his owne persone that shame and villanye, whiche was due vnto our offences, because to aduaunce vs vnto his glorye.

The texte. ¶ And when they had mocked hym, they toke the purple of him, and put his owne clothes on hym, and led hym out to crucifie hym. And they compelled one that passed by called Simon of Cyrene (the father of Alexãder and Rufus) which came out of the feide, to beare his crosse. And they brought him to a place named Golgotha, which is (if a man interprete it) the place of dead mens sculles. And they gaue him to drinke wine mingled with myrre, but he receyued it not.

These thynges dorn, they toke of agayne the purple garment, and put on his owne clothes, to thẽtent that carying his crosse amõg misdoers, he might be discerned, and known of euery body. And this the malycious priestes caused to be done, because they would the more alienate and withdraw all mẽnes myndes from hym. As they were goyng to the place of execucion, they met a certayne felow called Simon of Cyrene (the father of Alexãder, and Rufus) cũmyng from his ferme: whome makyng refusall to beare Christes crosse, the souldiers (notwithstandyng he was a ryche man and of theyr acquaintaunce) did of a souldiourly malapertnes compell maugre on his head to beare it: not

becaule to fauour or eale Jeſus, but for the ſpedier finiſhyng of the execution. Some men neceſſitie conſtrayneth to embrace the croſſe of Jeſu: But this is a bleſſed neceſſitie that driueth a man to ſaluacion. The apoſtles enforced no mã to go to Chriſt: but the ſouldiers vſed compulſion. Howbeit the violence of theſe naughtie packes hath bene many a mannes ſaluacion. They broughte hym into a place ſlaunderous and reproothful, by reaſon that ſuche as treſpaced the lawe, there ſuffred execucion: called in the Syrian tong, Golgatha, & in Latine Caluaria, the whiche word implieth in Engliſhe a place of dead mẽs ſculles. There gaue they hym wine mingled with myrre, to drinke. For wyne is cuſtomablie geuen to men, when they be a paſſyng. Howbeit that wyne, for ſo much as it was corrupted with the bitternes of the Jewes, Jeſus receyued not whan it was offered hym. For a lytle before he dranke with his diſciples, and would not drynke agayne of the fruite of the vine, tyll he ſhould drinke it newe in the kyngdome of God. He hated the bitter wyne whiche the wyne of the Jewyſhe ſynagoge brought hym furth, that was becum bitter vnto her lorde, and tiller: and in ſtede of ripe grapes, yelded the fruite of the wilde vine. He hated the vine of wycked perſons, and thirſted for another kynde of wyne. That was the newe wyne of the ſpirite of the Goſpell, the whiche ſpirite after his aſcending vp vnto heauen, he moſte plenteouſly powred vpon his diſciples.

And they brought him to a place named Golgotha. &c.

And when they had crucified hym, they parted his garmentes, caſting lottes vpon them what euery man ſhoulde take, and it was about the thyrde houre. And they crucified hym. And the title of his cauſe was writte: the kyng of the Jewes. And they crucified with hym two theues, the one on the right hãd, and the other on his left. And the ſcripture was fulfilled whiche ſayth: he was counted among the wicked.

The texte.

When Jeſu was lifted vp on the croſſe, thoſe that crucified him, parted his clothes among thẽ: and for his coate (whiche was wrought in ſuche wyſe ỳ it could not be deuided) they caſte lottes, whoſe fortune it ſhoulde be to haue the whole. Nowe conſidre the ponertie of Jeſus, who hadde nothyng left him in yearth. He hangeth in the middes betwene heauẽ and yearth. So muſt he bee naked: ſo muſt he be lyghted of all burthens: ſo muſt he be high, that wyll encountre with the enemy of mãnes ſaluacion. When Dauid ſhould fyght with Goliad, he caſte awaye al the armour and weapõ of Saule, whiche dyd rather burthen hym, then do hym any ſtede. It was the thyrde houre of the daye when they nayled hym on the croſſe. There was ſet vpon the croſſe the tytle of the cauſe wherfore he ſuffered, which was this: The kyng of the Jewes: written in thre languages, that is to ſaye, in Hebrue, Greke, and Latine. And with hym they crucified two theues, in ſuche wiſe that one of them hong on his right ſyde, and the other on his lefte, on eyther ſyde enuironing hym hangyng in the middes. And this was doen by the procurement of the wicked prieſtes, becauſe to make his name ſhamefull. The prophete Eſai prophecied it ſhould ſo be, ſaying: He was reckened among the vniuſt and wicked.

And they that went by, rayled on hym, waggyng their heades, and ſaying: A wretche, thou that deſtroyeſt the temple, and buyldeſt it in three dayes, ſaue thy ſelfe, & come downe from the croſſe. Lykewyſe alſo mocked hym the high prieſtes among themſelues, with the Scribes, and ſayed: He ſaued other men, himſelfe he cannot ſaue. Let Chriſte the kyng of Iſrael deſcende now from the croſſe, that we may ſee and beleue. And they that were crucified with hym checked hym alſo.

The texte.

Neyther could the malicious biſchops, and Scribes yet be ſatiſfied with theſe ſo great euyls and manyfold diſpleaſures. For fyrſt the Jewes paſſing by the croſſe, rayled on hym as he hong theron: and as it were vpbraydyng

hym now ouercum, sayde vnto hym in derision and mockage waggyng their heades withall: A wretche, thou that destroyest Gods temple, and buildest it agayne within three dayes: Nowe shewe what thou canste doe: Put furthe this might and power wherupon thou braggest: saue thyselfe if thou be able and cum down from the crosse. Neyther dyd the hyghe bysshops or priestes vse any gentler language vnto hym, who with the Scribes skorned hym among themselues, saying: He hath saued other, but himselfe he is not able to saue: He hath made his vaunt how he was Christe: he bragged that he was the kyng of Israell. If his promises be true, let vs see hym nowe cum downe from the crosse, & then will we beleue on hym. The priestes entended by these reprochfull wordes, cleane to withdraw all men from the beliefe of Jesu. So are the Martyrs euen at this daye ofte tymes scorned, and with lyke reprocheful wordes rayled on in their martyrdome, and corporall tourmentes, so is the veritie of the gospel berated, & laughed to skorne of the miscreantes, whiche is many tymes so hardly handled, that it semeth to be vtterly oppressed. yet ceased not this outragious raylyng against Jesus. The two theues that wer crucified with hym, rebuked the innocent as they honge on the crosse. But here also dyd Jesus accordyng vnto his name. For he saued one of them.

The texte. And when the sixt houre was cū, darknes arose ouer all the earth, vntill the ninthe houre. And at the ninthe houre, Jesus cried with a loude voice, saying: Eloi: Eloi, Lamazabathany, which is (if one interprete it) my God, my God, why haste thou forsaken me? And sum of them that stode by, when they hearde that, sayd: beholde he calleth for Helias. And one ranne and fylled a sponge full of vineger, and put it on a rede, and gaue him to drincke, saying: let hym alone: Let vs see whether Helias will cumme, and take hym downe.

At the sixte houre there arose a darknes, whiche couered all that lande: and endured tyll the nynth. Then Jesus destitute of all mannes helpe, cryed vnto the father with a loude voyce, reciting out of the psalme the prophecy whiche was spoken of hym before: Heloi, Heloi, Lamazabathany, the whiche wordes interpreted, are as muche to saye in Englishe, as, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? When some of them that stode by heard hym speake these wordes, and vnderstode not well the Hebrue tong, they sayde: he calleth vpon Hely. There be many suche false prophetes, and interpreters of scripture, euen in our tyme, and euer shall be tyll the worldes ende, which expounde the wordes of Jesu, no better then those scorners did. After that when he cried agayn: I am a thyrst: there ranne one vnto him, and raught him a sponge ful of vineger, fastened to a rede, saying: Let hym alone: let vs see whether Hely will cū and take hym down from the crosse. When he had eftsones tasted the vineger, he wouldе not drinke therof. He thyrsted another wyne, whiche they wouldе not geue hym, that refused to beleue the gospell.

The texte. But Jesus cried with a loude voyce, and gaue vp the ghost. And the vayle of the temple did rent in two pieces, from the toppe to the bottome. And whē the Centurion (which stode before hym) sawe that he so cryed, and gaue vp the ghost, he sayde: truly this manne was the sonne of God. There were also women a good waye of beholdyng hym, among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the litle, and of Joses, and Mary Salome (whiche also when he was in Galile, had folowed hym, and ministred vnto hym) and many other women whiche came vp with hym vnto Jerusalem.

Jesus (all thynges fulfylled) gaue a great skryke, and therwith yelded vp the ghost. And byanby the vayle of the temple which disseuered those thynges that the Jewes counted moste holy from the syght of the multitude or cōmon people, was rent from the vppermoste parte to the lowest. Shadowes cease, and vanithe away, allone as veritie cummeth once to light. Neyther should it be any more nedefull for any prieft to entre into the ſanctuary, after that ſacrifice was once offred vp, and made: whithe alone was ſufficient to pourge the ſynnes of the whole world. Nowe whē the capitaine that ſtode right againſt Jeſus, as a miniſter, and witnes of his death, who had ſene manye a one before put to execucion, ſawe howe that contrarye to the manoure of other, he yelded vp the ghoſte and dyed immediatlye as he had geuen this great ſtrike, he ſayd: Truely this man was the ſonne of God.

and

See here the fyrſt fruites of the gentiles, confeſſing the vertue, and power of Chriſte. He that confeſſeth hym to bee a man, and the ſonne of God: confeſſeth him to bee both God and manne. Albeit the captaine as yet vnderſtode by the ſonne of God, a man notably beloued of God. Marke this alſo, howe our ſauiour is euery where a ſauiour. When he was a dying on the croſſe, he ſaued one of the theues. And anon as he was deade, he dreweth the captaine vnto the profeſſion of Chriſten fayth. There were alſo women that ſtode a good waye of and behelde all that was doen: among whome was Mary Magdalene, & Mary the mother of James the leſſe, and of Joſes: and Mary Salome, the whiche all the while that Jeſus continued & taught in Galile, folowed hym, and miniſtred vnto hym of their ſubſtaunce: and beſides theſe, diuerſe other, whiche likewyſe folowed hym in his voyage to Jeruſalem.

And now when the euen was come (becauſe it was the daye of preparyng, that goeth before the Sabboth) Joſeph of the citie of Aramathia, a noble counſailour, which alſo loked for the kyngdom of god, came and went in boldly vnto Pilate, and begged of him the body of Jeſu. And Pilate meruailed if he were alreadi dead, and called vnto him the Centurio, and aſked of him whether he had been anye while deade. And when he knewe the truethe of the Centurion, he gaue the body to Joſeph. And he bought a Lynnen clothe, and take hym downe and wrapped hym in the lynnen clothe, and layed hym in a ſepulchre that was hewen out of the rocke, and roled a ſtone before the dore of the ſepulchre. And Mary Magdalene and Mary Joſes, beheld where he was layed. the texte.

When the euentyde drewe nye, foraſmuche as it was the preparing daye, ſo called, becauſe it was the euē of the great Sabboth: there came one Joſeph of the citie of Aramathia, a noble, and a right worthy ſenatoure, who likewiſe hoped after the kyndome of God. This man becauſe he had a good opinion of Jeſu: was bolde thrughe affiaunce of his nobilitie, to go vnto Pilate and deſyre of hym the body of Jeſu. Pilate meruayled yt Jeſus beyng but a yong man, were already deade: becauſe manye had been wonte to lyue two or three dayes after theyr legges were broken.

Therfore he called vnto hym the Capitayne, who ſtode by the croſſe, and demaūded of him whether he were all ready dead, or no. And when by his information he was well aſcertained that he was dead in very dede, he gaue the body to Joſeph. For Jeſus as long as he lyued, ſuffred hymſelfe to bee beaten and ſpit vpon of wycked perſons. But anon as he was deade, he claymed his dignitie, and would not bee handled but of godly perſons, no not ſomuche as bee ſeen but of his diſciples, who were apointed to lyfe euerlaſting: teachyng therby, that no man ſhoulde chalenge his dignitie in this worlde. Let a manne by honour, and diſhonour, by glory, and reproche, onlye endeuour himſelfe to finiſhe the buſineſſe of the goſpell. For dignitie beginneth neuer to florythe tyll after death. Joſeph beyng right ioyfull that he hadde obteyned ſo precious a gifte, bought a piece of fine linnen clothe, and therin wrapped the bodye, and

layed it in a newe sepulchre hewed out of free stoone: and then rolled a great stone to the doore or entry of the sepulchre, that no man should lightly conuey awaye the body by stealth.

But of the women whiche beheld the lorde when he dyed, two folowed hym vnto the sepulchre: that is to wete, Mary Magdalene, & Mary Joseph, marking where the body was layde, to thentent that they might at time conuenient thither repaire, and honorably perfourme the solemnities, and ceremonies belonging vnto burials, accordyng to the manour and vsage of that nation.

The. xvj. Chapter.

The texte. And when the Sabboth was paste, Mary Magdalene, and Mary Jacob, and Salome, bought swete odoures, that they might cum, and anoint hym. And early in the morning, the first daie of the Sabboth, they came vnto the sepulchre when the Sunne was risen, and they sayde amõg themselues: who shall rolle vs awaye the stone from the doore of the sepulchre? And when they loked, they sawe howe that the stone was rolled awaye. For it was a very great one. And they went into the sepulchre, and sawe a yong man sitting on the right syde, clothed in a long garment, and they were afrayde.

Because that on the preparyng daye (on the which daye the lord was buried a litle before the euentide, immediatly after the Sunne setting) it was not lawful to do any worke for the reuerence, and highe solemnitie of the Sabboth: these women ceased for that time to make further prouision for spices, as they began to do, awaytyng for the ende of the nexte daye folowing. And anon as the Sunne was gone to glade, and the time come agayne when men might lawfully returne to theyr businesse, then came Mary Magdalene, Mary of James, and Salome, with spices readie prepared, to enoint Jesus. And early in the morning vpon the fyrste daye of the sabbothes (the whiche folowed next after the sabboth was ended, and was the thyrd daye from the preparing daie) these well disposed women came to the sepulchre, what tyme the element waxed now faire & bryght about the Sunne rysing, & sayde one of them to another: Who shall rolle vs awaye the stone, frõ the doore of the sepulchre? The stone was great, and houge: & it passed womans strength to remoue it. And they loked aboute yf they could get any body to helpe them, & in ỹ meane while that they thus loked backe, they sawe the stone already remoued to theyr handes. Thẽ anone as they were entred into the doore of the sepulchre, they sawe a yong man sitting on the right syde of it, clothed with a long white garmẽt. With this sight though it were a right ioyfull syght, and a token of good lucke, yet because it appeared sodainly, & at vnwares, they were amased.

The texte. And he sayth vnto them: be not afrayed, ye seke Jesus of Nazareth which was crucified. He is risen, he is not here. Beholde the place where they had put hym. But go your waye, and tell his disciples, and Peter, he goeth before you into Galile, there shall ye see hym, as he sayed vnto you. And they went out quickly, and fled frõ the sepulchre. For they trembled, & were amased, neyther sayed they any thyng to any man, for they were afrayed.

But byanby an Aungell recomforted them with swete and pleasaunt wordes, saying: you haue no nede to be afrayed. you seke Jesus of Nazareth, who was nayled on the crosse. He is risen: he is not here. Beholde the voyde place where they had put his body. Therfore all this that you haue prepared to honour and reuerence hym with all, is superfluous.

Get you hence rather, to shewe vnto his disciples, beyng greatly dismayed with with their Lordes death: but especially e vnto Peter (who because he denied hym thryse, is twyse as sory as the rest.) Get you hence, I saye, to shewe them how Jesus wyll go before them into Galile. Thither let them folowe. There shall you see hym alyue, whome ye now bewayle as dead. But these wemen, what for great ioye and gladnes, and what for the feare they were in by reason of this straunge sight fled out of the Sepulchre, and spake not one worde as long as they were there: so greatly were they afeard.

¶ When Jesus was rysen, early e the fyrste daye after the Sabboth, he appeared fyrste to Mary Magdalene, out of whome he had caste seuen dyuels. And she went and tolde them that were with hym as they mourned, and wept. And they, when they heard that he was alyue, and had appeared vnto her, beleued it not. After that, appeared he vnto two of them in a straunge figure as they walked, and went into the countrey. And they wente, and tolde it to the remnaunt. And they beleued not these also. The texte.

As yet Jesus had not appeared to any bodye: but after he was rysen, he appeared fyrst of all to Mary Magdalene, out of whome he had caste seuen diuels: and this appering was the fyrste daye after the great Sabboth early. She incontinent shewed the disciples (who wept and mourned for their lordes death,) what she had sene. But when they heard her tell howe he was alyue, and that she herselfe had sene him, and heard hym speake, they gaue no credence vnto her wordes. So cleane out of memory was the thyng which he had so ofte tymes promised, that is to saye, howe he would ryse againe on the thyrde daye. The same daye that he appeared vnto Mary Magdalene, he appeared also vnto two disciples in the likenesse of a straunger and wayfaryng man as they went from Hierusalem into the countrey. But they knowyng at the length that it was the Lorde, retourned to Hierusalem, and shewed vnto the residew of the disciples, what they had sene. Neyther was suche thynges as they tolde, beleued of the moste parte.

¶ Afterwarde he appeared vnto the elenen as they sat at meate, and caste in their teeth their vnbeleefe, and hardnesse of hart, because they beleued not them which hadde sene that he was rysen againe from death. And he sayde vnto them: Go ye into all the worlde, and preache the gospell to all creatures, he that beleueth, and is baptised, shalbe saued. But he that beleueth not shalbe damned. The texte.

Laste of all when he was readye to departe hence, and returne into heauen, he appeared vnto the eleuen Apostles as they sate at meate (for Judas was then dead) and hit them in the teeth with their vnbeleefe, and hardenesse of harte, because they wouldenot beleue those persons, who had sene that he was rysen agayne from death. For it was not requisite that all should se his death, and resurreccion, but sufficient for the fayth and certaintie of the gospell, that the thyng was once proued by mete and conuenient witnesses: Els how shall the heathen geue credence to those thinges that were doen, yf they would likewyse discredite the apostles reporte, as Thomas, and some other of them did at the begynning. And Jesus sayed vnto them. After all these thinges are now at the length proued, and right wel knowen of you by sure argumentes and proues: go your waye into all the world, and preache this gospel to all the nacions therof. For I dyed for all men, and lyke wyse for all men haue I risen agayne. It is not nowe nedefull to kepe the ceremonies of the olde lawe. It is not nedefull to vse any mo sacrifices, and burnt offeringes to pourge synnes. Whoso beleueth the gospell (whiche thorowe my death offreth to all that beleue in me, free remission of all synnes) and beyng washed with water, receyueth a signe or token of this grace, the same shalbe saued. He that beleueth and is baptised shalbe saued

Who

Who so beleueth not the gospel (there is not why he should truste to the obseruacion of Moses lawe, or heathen learning and philosophie,) the same shalbe damned. This waye is open for euery manne to go to saluacion by: but it is but one waye onely.

The texte. And these tokens shall folow them that beleue. In my name they shall caste out diuels: they shal speake with newe toungues they shall dryue awaye serpentes, and if they drinke any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them. They shall laye theyr handes vpon the sicke, and they shall recouer.

In my name shall they caste out diuels.

And leste your preaching shoulde not be beleued, there shalbe ioyned therunto a power to worke myracles: so that there lacke not in you an Euangelike faith: and so that the thing selfe do require myracles. The chiefe power and vertue of the Euangelyke grace, lyeth hyd in mennes soules: but yet when for the aduaunsyng of the gospell there shall nede any miracles, the same shall not lacke for the weakes sake. They that will beleue in me, shal cast out diuels, not in their owne name, but in mine: they shall further, speake with newe tongues, and dryue awaye serpentes: and yf they drynke any deadly thyng or poyson, it shall not anoye them. They shall laye theyr handes vpon the sicke, and they shall be whole. When these thinges are wrought and done in mennes soules, then is there a muche greater miracle wrought, but the same is hid and not sene. Couetousnesse, pleasure of the body, ambicion, hatred, wrath and enuy, be very poysons and deadly diseases of the soule. These diseases shall they cure and put awaye in my name, and that continually. But for the weakes sake, & suche as are harde of belief, the other miracles shall also be oft times wrought, to thentent the grosse sorte of people maye perceyue, that in my disciples is a spirite more puissaunte, then all mannes strength and power.

The texte. So then, when the lorde had spoken vnto them, he was receyued into heauen, and is on the right hande of god. And they went forth, and preached euery where, the lorde worcking with them, and confyrmyng the worde with myracles folowyng.

When the Lorde Jesus had spoken these, and other mo wordes to his disciples, he ascended vp into heauen, where he sitteth on the righte hande of god the father. The disciples after they had receyued the holy ghost, preached as they were commaunded, not only in Jewry, but also in all other regions and countreys: and the matier went forwarde, notwithstanding the world resisted, and was bent against them: the Lorde Jesus puttyng furthe his mightye power by his holy spirite, and theyr ministery: and euerywhere confirmyng with ready miracles, whatsoeuer they promysed to do with wordes.

FINIS.

To the moste vertuous Ladie / and moste gracious Quene Katerine, wife vnto the moste victorious and moste noble prince Henry the viii. kyng of Englande, Fraunce and Irelande. &c. Nicolas Udall wisheth prosperous healthe, and long continuaunce, with grace, peace, and all ghostely comforte in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Whē our maister Christ in the ghospell, moste gracious Quene Katerine, whan the woman that had liued wickedly, beyng now by his grace called frō hir sinnefull life to perfite repentaūce and amendmēt, came vnto him sittyng at his repaste in the house of Simon the lepre, and washed his feete with the teares of hir yes wyped the same with ꝑ heare of hir head, poured forth vpon his head a precious sweete ointment, and also anointed his feete therewith, did so well allowe his deuotion, hir earnest zele, and hir tendre cōpassion which she had to comfort him, that he did not onely among all the cumpany declare his perfect remission in forgeuyng hir euen there all hir offences & wickednes afore paste, but also promised that she should not lese the condigne reward of renoume for hir tēdre gentilnes to him shewed, in so muche that afore all the presēce he openly protested, that wheresoeuer throughout al the world the gospel wer afterward preached, there should she in suche wise as also reason wold be had in mind, that the remēbraunce of his good hart & thankefulnes towardes him, should neuer dye nor be forgotten. So Luke the euangelist, & Paule with the other apostles of Christ did in their holy writinges, not onely make mēcion of such men & preachers, as were faithfull workers or ministers in Christes vineyard, but also by whatsoeuer good matrones and deuout women they sawe, and herd either that god was glorified & his honour aduaūced, or ꝑ ghospell preferred, the word of god furthered, the preachers of the same maintened, the younglinges in the faith cherished, the true christiās in their powertie refreshed, the nede of the faithfull relieued, or the vnfeined beleuers in aduersities cōforted & succoured: to suche godly women they did not forget nether passe to geue laude, praise, and cōmendation, as well for the due reward of the parties selues, as also for the good ensaumple and encouragyng of others to doe the lyke. For this cause doeth Luke in his gospel more thē once make mēcion of Marie Magdalene, of Johāna, the wife of Chusa, of Susāna, & Marie the mother of James. And in the actes he neyther forgetteth ne omitteth to cōmend Priscilla, Tabitha, Lydia, Mainaris. For this consideracion Paul cōmēdeth vnto the Romains, Phebe, Marie, Tryphena, Tryphosa, Persis & others. For this respect did Hierome write a whole treatise entytled of noble & famous wemē, whose nobilitie also renoume he esteemeth & measureth by none other thyng, but by their godlines, deuocō, zele, and endeuour to setforth Christes holy ghospell, and by their godly conuersation loyned with moste ardent diligence in readyng the scriptures. Wherfore most gracious ladie, although here nowe to reuewe the memory and prayse of the manifold moste excellent vertues, and ardent zele of your highnesse to-wardes the promouyng of the knowledge of gods holy word and ghospell, bee a thyng more due to your meryte worthy desertes, than easy for my rude penne to expresse them, and more apperteineth to my duetie, then it standeth with myne habilitie and power accordingly to sette them forth: yet so to do at this present I haue thought partely a thyng needefull: because your excellencie doeth so ferre surmounte and passe all prayses whiche my slendre vtte-raunce is hable to geue you, that I shoulde therein seeme to do a much lyke thyng, as if I would bring forth a smouldring smokie fyerbrand in a bright sunne day, of purpose to helpe augment the clerenes of the sunne: and partly superfluous, because that on the one syde all men doe already know your incomparable vertues, and do with one accord magnify the same, and on the other side, for y your highnes doth so muche tender and seke gods glory that ye euidently declare your self nothyng lesse to mynde or desire, then the vaine prayses or commendacion of this worlde. Yet lyke as the shadow doth re-medilesse follow and accompanie the bodye in the sunne lyght, so glory and renoume doeth inestimably follow and associate excellent vertue. And where the deseртes of true vertue are so great and so infinite, it cannot be chosen but that glory and renoume must aryse, and so much the more, because your highnes, (as muche as in you lyeth,) doeth flee it. For glory (sayeth the philosophical poise,) is of the nature of a Crocodile, whiche being a beast in the flood of Nilus in Egipt, hath this propertie, that if one pursue him to suppresse him, he fleeth: & will not assaulte and yet ye flee, than will the Crocodile followe and ouertake you. And for asmuche as glory is by the philosophers deemed to be a constant and perpetuall prayse geuen to any partie by a common consente of good people, for the excellencie of vertue euidently shewyng it selfe in the same partie, (as in deede vertue cannot be hidden but will appere) he wel it be possible that your renoume should dye, whose manifold excellente ver-tues do from day to day more and more encrease. How can your prayse be cast, whose armes, monumentes are consecrated to immortalitie, as thynges not builded vpon the sand of ambicious seruyng for (like bubles in the ayre water) puffed vp with the blast of worldly vanitie, but founded vp-on the sure rocke of gods worde, from whence floweth the lyuelye and the same euerlastyng fruites of true glorye in deede? Neythey may your high-nesse in this case refuse any mannes woordes of prayse and commendacion, for as muche as it is a matter as laudable to allowe large the good thyn-ges, whiche in deede are in vs prayse worthy, as it is vncommendable though dayne arrogancie to take vpon vs that we haue not. And though your grace is so farre fro all ambicion and also affection of this worldes reward, that ye haue no eye to any mortall mannes recompence, yet cannot good folkes but extolle and magnifye the inestimable aboundaunce of diuine gyftes of grace, so plentifully heaped and couched in so noble a pryncelle. Though ye would haue your well doynges, hydden and buryed, yet cannot the gratitude of the people hold the peace, or passe it with silence. Though your gracious benignitie require no thankes, yet cannot the honest hertes of the people for-beare or refrayne by open protestacion to acknowelage by whom they daily

receyue incõparable benefites. Though your modestie nothyng lesse seketh then the fame of your good actes to be blowen abrode, yet cãot our duties but brast out into wordes of testifiyng howe muche we thynke our selues bound vnto your highnes: so that although the great and manifold benefytes whiche I haue priuately receyued at your graces handes, dyd not now moue me, yet could I not in this most iust occasion of the publique gratulacõ hold my peace. For your vertuous liuyng euẽ from your tẽdre yeres enbraced, folowed, and still continued, your pregnaunt wittines ioyned with right wonderful grace of eloquence, your studious diligence in acquiryng knowelage aswell of other humaine disciplines, as also of holy scriptures, not only to your own edifiyng, but also to the most godly ensaũple & instructiõ of others, your incõparable chastitie, which as a moste precious iewell ye haue by auoiding all occasions of idlenes, & by contenyng prouocatyues of all vayne pastimes kept not only frõ al spot, but also from al suspicion of stainyng, your singular modestie coupled with passyng great integritie and innocency of all your behauiour, your other manifold vnestimable giftes of grace, and among them most principally your studious seekyng to promote the glory of God and of his most holy ghospell, haue been the thynges that haue moued the most noble, the most renoumed, and the moste godly Prince of the vniuersall worlde, our most gracious Soueraigne Lord kyng Henry the eight, to iudge and esteme your grace a mete spouse for his maiestie, and among so many women of nobilitie, of honour, and of muche high pryce and worthinesse, you alone to picke out to be his moste deere beloued and moste lawfull wyfe. Neyther do we doubte, moste gracious ladie, but that as the prouidence of god hath fourmed and aptised your grace to be a worthy and mete spouse for suche an housbande, so hath it by a speciall election deputed and preferred the same to sum high and notable benefite of the cõmõ weale, and to be an instrument of his glory. The towardnes and likelyhode wherof, lyke as in mens opinions vndoubted, so doeth it already begin to shewe it selfe in a nombre of thynges whiche otherwise were not to bee loked for to proceede from any woman: muche lesse from a woman of nobilitie brought vp in the courte of a kyng, where Fortune commonly nourceth, cockereth, & pampereth hir derlinges, suche as by hir wil she myndeth and laboureth to corrupt with wealth, idlenesse and baudrie, and leaste of al from a Quene being set in place, where if she would beeun fortunes wanton, she might without controllement swimme in the delices of all such prosperitie as might occasion hir to dote on worldely felicitie, and to forget god. But the Psalmes and contẽplatife meditacions, on which your highnesse in the lieu and place of vayne courtely pastimes and gaming doeth bestow your night and daies studie, and whiche ye haue set forth as well to the incõparable good exaumple of al noble women, as also to the ghostly consolacion and edifiyng of as many as reade them, doe well declare not onely the thyng to be true whiche Socrates affirmed, that is to were, that women, yf they doe so apply theyr myndes, are no lesse apt, no lesse wittie, no lesse hable, no lesse industrious, no lesse actiue, no lesse frutefull and pitthy in the acquiryng or handlyng of all kyndes of disciplines then men are: but also how godly ye bestow your time howe litteli ye set by the worlde, how muche ye thirst righteousnesse, howe carefully ye seke the kingdom of god in the middes of a thousand occasiõs, whiche otherwyse might withdrawe your high estate therefrom.

And because ye so muche tendre the glory of God, that accordyng to the lesson of Christe ye doe first of all other thynges and principally seke ỳ kingdome of heauen: therfore hath he, according to his promesse in the same place conteyned, and doeth, and still will of his owne prouision encrease vnto you all kyndes of necessary coumforte and consolacion, in muche better wise then your grace could deuise, in muche larger maner them your owne self would wisshe, and in ferre other sorte then ye could imagine to looke for. These blessinges hath his eternal truth and vnfallible promise perfourmed vnto your highnes, because ye seke hym more then the worlde, because ye more mynde godly contemplacion then courtly solaces, because ye more tendre his glory than any temporal cõmodities, because ye esteme the knowlage of his word more precious then perle, golde, or any treasoures subiecte to corrupcõ, because ye preferre the aduauncyng of his holy word before and aboue al other thynges, because ye cease not with all your power, with all your diligence, and with all your industrie to sette forth to all mennes knowlage his holy ghospell and testament, the onely foode and coumforte of our soules. And not only doeth your grace with most earnest zele from the first houre of the daye to the twelfth, labour in the vineyarde of Christ, sustenyng the burden of al the whole daye, and the parchyng heate of the smouldring nonetide in your owne person: but also at your exceding great cost and charges do hire other workemen to labour in the same vineyarde of Christes ghospell, to the ende the same may fructifye and so plenteously bryng forth, that al English people maye to their health and ghostly consolacion be aboundauntely replenyshed with the fruite therof. And as a good captayne partly to the encouraging of his forward soldiers, and partly to the shaming of dastardes, or false hearted loyterers, leadeth and guideth his armie and goeth himself before them: so your grace, ferre otherwyse then in the weake vesselles of woman ferre is to be loked for, doe shewe vnto mennes a notable exaumple of forwardenesse in settyng penne to the boke, partely to the great coumforteyng of suche as fayne would doe good yf they durste, and partely to the shame and contumelye of sluggardes, who hauyng good talentes dooe kepe them faste lapped vp in their napkins, and liue idely. And by this meanes doth your highnesse rycht well declare that all your delite, al your studie, and all your endeuours by al possible meanes enploied to the publique commoditie of al good English people, the bynges moste louyng and obedient subiectes, to bee nousled and trayned in the readyng of Gods woorde, and in the meditacion of his moste holy ghospell. For this ghospel is the same treasour hidden vnder ỳ cloddy hard grounde in the feld of the letter, which your grace after ye had found, did forthoye selle all that ye had to bye that same fielde withal. And wel may such persons be sayed to haue solde al that they had, who sette lesse by al the worlde then by the ghospell, and aswel for the obteining of the knowlage to themselfes, as also of desire to helpe make the same comunion to others, doth not spare to spend oute the treasoures of their golde and substance. This is that same precious margarite that Christ speaketh of, which your grace seekyng for with great desire, (whan ye had once founde) solde al that ye had to bye, thought your treasoures wel bestowed if it myghte so fortune that ye myght fynde meanes to make all Englishmen whiche would reade or heare

it, to

it, to bee partakers of the same. This is the grayne of mustardsede whiche whan it was so fine and so tender that the vnlearned sort of English mē could scarce possibly fele or see it, ye of your exceding charitie & zele towards your countrey folkes, did in such wise helpe to sowe in the field of Englande, and did so therishe with the fatte dableng yearth of the paraphrase, that where before it was in the eyes of the vnlettred, the lest of al sedes, it is now shot vp and growē muche larger in bredth, thē any other herbe of ỳ field, so that it now spredeth the braunches in suche a compace, that al Englishe readers may therin fynd many places where to lyght, and to bylde them nestes, in whiche their soules and consciences may to theyr gholdely comfort quietly repose themselfes. This is the spirituall leauen whiche your grace beyng gholdly housewyfe for the behouse of all the whole royalme of England, & other the kynges maiesties dominions, hath in suche wyse hydden in all the whole fower peckes of English meale, East, west, North & South: that by the benefite and meane of this paraphrase, it is now al made sauoury, and of a pleasaunt relice to al English peoples taste, where the texte of the gospel afore was in sum partes (though alwayes spirituall good and holsom foode and very restorative to suche as were able to brooke it,) yet to the cōplexiō of grosse, rude and grene stomaked Englishmē disagreeyng and harde of digestion, yet ye by procuring the whole paraphrase of Erasmus to be diligētly translated into Englishe, haue minced it, and made it euery Englishmans meate, though his stomake beneuer so weake or tender. Where afore in sum partes agayn it seemed to be to light meate, that the grosse stomakes dyd no lesse lothe it, then the children of Israell dyd Manna in deserte, whan they sayed: Our soule is qualmishe ouer this meate beyng to to light, and is readie to cast it vp again, your godly cure in conseruyng it with the paraphrase of Erasmus in Englishe, hath made so founde and substantiall meate for all complexcions of people, that it may be to euery body lyke the aboundaunce of quailes, rayning downe in wildernesse from heauen, suche as best stoode with euery bodyes stomake, appetite, and most desire to be piētreously fedde withall. Where of it self it is a meate most pure and simple, & therfore to sū delicate mouthes vsed to none but fine termes, to the painted colours & eroticacions of Rethorike, it semeth dry & vnpleasaut, it is now by ỳ eagre dulce sauce of the paraphrase made more liquide to rūne pleasauntly in the mouth of any man whiche is not to muche infected with indurate blindnes of herte, with malicious cancardnes, and with to to muche peruerse a iudgemēt. For Erasmus lyke as he doeth in all his workes excell and passe the most parte of al other writers: so in this worke of the paraphrase vpon the new Testamente he passeth hymselfe. Therfore most gracious Ladye although the your demerites are so ferre aboue al praises of man, that how fer soeuer I wade in magnifiyng your vertuous disposicion, your deuout study and endeuour to do good thinges, I shalbe sure not to incurre any suspicion of flatery: yet do I at this present omittyng al other thynges, onely in Englandes behalf make one emong the rest in rendring publique thankes to your highnesse, as well for your other godly trauaile in furtheryng the knowledge of Goddes worde, as also most specially in settyng men in worke to translate the paraphrase of Erasmus vpon all the newe Testament, wherein ye do both to the young and to the olde, as well to the high as to the low, & no lesse to ỳ ryche then to the poore, the wmuche more bountreous liberalitie in deling about in makyng common vnto all good Englishe people the heauenly Jewels of Christes doctrine, thenkt ye shoulde open all kynges cofers of worldly treasures, and deale to euery one suche abundaunce as might make them al welthy and riche for euer in this worlde. And as ye haue herein doen a dede worthy suche thankes and rewardes as lieth in none but only God to repay, and a dede to bs your most louing and obedient subiectes so beneficial as no hert can thinke, (muche lesse any tongue or pen expresse) so doubte I not but that ye haue doen a good thyng to your most regal spouse the kynges maiestie so acceptable, that he will not suffre it to lye buried in silēce, but wyll one daye when his godly wyse dome shall so thynke expediente, cause the same Paraphrase to be published and set abrode in print to the same vse that your high nesse hath ment it, that is to say, to the publique commoditie and benefyte of good English people now a long tyme soore thirstyng and hongrynge for lyuely and playne knowledge of Gods word. For his most excellente Dauidlie beyng a man after the hert of the Lord, being a right Dauid chosen to destroy Goliah the huge and cumbreous enemy of Israell without any armour, and with none other weapon but the stone of Gods word cast out of the slyng of the diuine spirite worthyng in him & his lawes made here in England, & being the elected instrument of god to plucke downe the Idoll of Rome the Antichrist, who folowyng the steppes of his father Lucifer hathe not onely vsurped a kind of supremitie & tyrannie ouer all princes on earthe, al well christen as heathen, but also hath ensourged against heauen, and hath lifte vp and exalted hymself aboue al thyng that is called God, making bold the plain commaundementes for the aduaunceing of his own more then pharisaicall traditions, peruertyng the true sence of the holy scriptures and wrestynge them to the maintenaunce of his abominations beyng both afore God and manne detestable: his highnesse beyng our Ezechias by the prouidence of God deputed and sent to be the destroier not onely of al counterfait religions (whyche swarmed amōg vs like disguised maskers & not mummers, but maundiers, who vnder the cloke of holines seduced ye people, and deuoured the houses of riche widowes, and were mainteners of al superstition, idolatry & rebellio) but also to roote vp al Idolatry doen to dead images of stone and tymber as vnto God, and committed to other creatures in steade of the creatour, directly against the expresse woordes of the precepte: Thou shalt haue no mo gods but me, his most excellent maiestie (I say) from the first daye that he wore the emperiall Crowne of this realme, foresaw that to the executing of the premisses it was necessary, that his people should be reduced to the sincerite of Christes religion by knowyng of Goddes worde: he considered that requisite it was his subiectes were nousled in Christ by reading the scriptures, whose knowlage should easily induce them to the clere espyng of al the sleightes, of the Romishe iugglyng. And therfore as soone as myght be, his highnesse by most holsome and godly lawes, prouided that it myght be lefful for al his most faithful louyng subiectes to reade the word of god, and the rules of Christes discipline, whiche they professed: he prouided that the holy Bible should be setforth in our owne vulgar language, to the ende that Englande myghte the better attayne to the synceritie of Christes doctryne whichethey might draw out of the clere fountain and spryng of the ghospell, tenyng euermore clere without any mote or mud, rather then out of ỹ mud-die lakes, & puddles purposely infected with ỹ filthy dregges of our Philistines the papistes, who had stopped our spriges to driue vs to their poy-soned muddy gutters and forowes. By this his maiesties most godly pro-uision it hath cum to passe, that the people whiche long time had been led in errour and blindnes by blind guides, mõkes, fryers, chanons, and papisti-cal preachers, do now so plainly see the clere light, that they do willigly ab-horre idolatry & superstition: they do now know their dutie towardes God & their prince: they do now enbrace ỹ veritie for veryties sake: they see where and how the leauen of the papistes hath by continuaũce of time & for default of scripture, soured all the whole batche of Christes doctrine: they see how we being led by blynd guydes and pastours in the derkenes of ignorannce, they fel daily in the depe pitte of manifold errours with the same guides, they see that lyke as the olde Phariseis in the time of Christes being vpon earth, had corrupted the sincere doctrine of gods word, and the pure vnderstanding of the lawe, teachyng the people to leaue their poore fathers and mothers de-stitute contrary to the playne commaundement, rather then to let their trea-surie to be not enriched, whiche kynd of offring, themselues of mere couetise had inuented, and dyd apply the same to the maintenaunce of themselfes in glutrony and sensualitie: so now had the wicked papistry deuised a meane to picke the riche folkes purses, & the poore vulgare people clene to deuour vn-der the colour of goyng on pilgremage to this or that Locke of mans handy makyng, & vnder pretence of sekyng healthe of the soule & remission of sinnes, at the handes of Peter, James, John, & Marie, which could not geue it, but when suche thinges were asked them, blushed to heare god thonly autour & geuer of all good thinges to be so blaspheméd. They see now that lyke as ỹ couetous Phariseis passed lesse at the violaciõ or breakyng of gods precep-tes, then of their traditions, and put more iustice in washyng the outeside of their dishe or their cuppe, then in the innocencie of life and puritie of the con-science within, in offryng of myntes and rue for their lucre, then in perfour-myng the office of charitie to the neyghbour, sooner to wynke at their owne blasphemies against god, then to remit a small trespace committed by their weake brother against the fond ceremonies which they and the lawyers had deuised and added besides the lawe: so the beaste of romishe abomination to had clene subuerted the true interpretation of Christes ghospell, and by his mere tirãnie ioyned with most crafty delusion, to had inuected into Christes church and holy congregation, al thinges that were contrary to Christ, that is to were, in stede of pure faith such as Christ requireth, a faith lapped in a patched cloke of beggerly workes and ceremonies of his owne deuising, & stirryng forth in stede of religion, superstition: offrynges in stede of charitie: buildyng of chaunteries in place of releuyng and maintenyng the liuely tem-ple and image of God in the poore: encensyng of images in stede of the pure sacrifice of an innocẽt life: in stede of trustyng in gods mercies trustyng in trẽ-tals & masses of scala celi: in stede of heauẽ, a purgatory consistyng of imateri-al fier, & the same to be redemed w̃ money geuen to him: in stede of declaryng our free redemption in Christe and by Christ sealed with his most precious bloud, the Antichrist of Rome seduced the simple people to putte their affy-aunce for remission of synnes and obteynyng the ioyes of heauen, by his pardones conteined in a piece of parchement or paper with a lumpe of lead hā ging at it, and to be bought of him or of his generacion the monkes and fry ers for money: in stede of the holy bible, legenda sanctorum, the miracles of our ladie, and martiloges, whiche themselfes deuised and neuer durst sette forth vntill the partie of whom they were made, had been an hundred yeres dead, for feare of beyng taken in a lye: in stede of obeiyng our liege lord and soueraigne, to be subiect to forein potentates: with other abuses so innume rable, that no tyme or wordes may suffice to declare or reken them vp. And in this blindnes had England still continued, had not god of his infinite good nes & bottēles mercy reised vp vnto vs a new Ezechias to confoūd al idols, to destroy al hillaiters of superstition, to roote vp al counterfait religions, & to restore (as muche as in so litle time maye be) the true religion & worshi of god, the syncere preachyng of gods word, and the booke of the lawe, that is to say of Christes holy testament to be read of the people in their vulgar toung. That if in so litle time hauing no more helpe but the mere texte of the Bible, the people through the goodnesse of god and the instincte of his holy spirite haue had the iyes of their hart and soule so opened, that they haue not onely espyed the abuses afore mencioned, and thousandes mo in wiche the Romyshe Babilon hath certain hundred of yeres holden all christendōe cap tiue and thrall: but also haue so cōformed themself to the syncere doctrine of Christe, that they do with most glad wyll, with most earnest zele, and with most studious diligence embrace the truthe, abhorre the errours wherin they were afore drowned, detest the superstitions wherwith they were afore de luted, hounger and thirst the kyncere knowlage of Gods word by the good nes of God, and the gracious prouision of our moste noble Ezechias kynge Henry the eyght, nowe daily ministred vnto them: how is it likely that they would profite in godly knowlage if they had sum other godly exposicion or declaracio of sum good syncere writer vpō the new Testament for their fur ther edifiyng? Of whiche sorte truely there cannot one name be picked out more apt and mete then Erasmus, especially in this his Paraphrase, which your highnesse of a moste godlye zele hath thus procured to be tourned into Englyshe: whose doctryne as it is not in any poynte (after my poore iudge mente,) corrupte, so dooeth it without violence or extremitie of wordes de cer the doctryne, edifye the conscyence, declare many abuses, detecting the e nemies of Goddes worde and supplanters of his ghospell, by suche true and liuely markes, that they maye be easilye knowen, so that it cannot be doubted, but it should bee vncredible furtheraunce towardes the rypyng of the knowelage of Goddes worde, yf it myghte or shall so stande with the pleasure of our sayde moste gracious soueraigne Lorde, beeyng nerte and immediately vnder God our supreme heade. Whiche thyng verily I would wishe and praye to God myghte so frame for two considerations, the one, because that the people hauyng the Paraphrase of Erasmus, shall haue the pyth of all the doctours and good writers, that haue any thyng setteforth for the declaracion of the ghospels, the Actes, and the Epistles, so that Era smus may stande one alone in as good stede as a great numbre of other ex positours setfoorth togethet: and the other, because my herte dooeth wyshe that ỹ setting forth of gods glory, the destroiyng of idols, the confoundyng and defacing of all popish trompery, the publishing of the bible, & gospell of

Christe

Christe, so godly by his highnesse entended, so stoutely entred, and so luckily begon, might by the same our most gracious soueraigne be in such wyse prosecuted & brought to effect, that whan heauen no lōger willyng to spare him to the worlde, but that he must geue place to nature, shall call him to receiue a croune of immortalitie, and he for desire therof shal willingly surrender and geue vp this emperiall croune of worldly dignitie, to the moste regal Impe his sonne, our noble prince Edwarde, he may deliuer to the same a people so well framed, and trained to his hande, that the same may with al ease & prosperous successe, and without any let of stumblyng blockes to be layed in his way by papistrie, continue the godly trade nowe at this daye well begonne and (thankes to god) luckily proceding. I would wish (as in dede I hope no nede,) that he might not nede to be put to any further trauayl or cure, but wel to cōserue and kepe thinges in the same stay and order that his most noble father mindeth to leaue all vnto him. Our Dauid Henry the eight hath already to substancially cast the foundacion, and reised the buildyng of the Temple, that I trust it shalbe no burden for our young Salomō to consummate and fynyshe the same whan his tyme shall cum. But nowe I perceiue my selfe, while I entre into opening the desire & praier of my herte, to haue entered into suche a large fielde of talke, which the experience of kyng Henries exaumple concernyng the trade of religion, and the hope of prince Edwarde to be a right folower of so right a leadyng father, doth minister vnto me, that except I here sodainly breake of, I am drawen to wade so fer in their praises, that I were not hable in long tyme to fynde any way out again. Omitting therefore at this present the moste worthye and moste iustely deserued prayses of them bothe, I shall touche my style sumwhat to treate of Luke, whome it pleased your highnes to commit vnto me to be translated. Whiche cōmaundement whan it came first vnto me in your graces name although I knewe how litle it was that I could do in this kinde, yet was I glad that your cōmaundemente dyd so iustlye concurre with the determinacion of myne owne minde and purpose. For I had long time afore with mature deliberacio and also with aduised election apointed with my selfe to trāslate this paraphrase vpon Luke, also one as any such libertie might be, and to make it vnto your grace a testificacion of my ductie and thankefull remembraunce of your manyfolde benefites afore dooen to me of your mere bountie. And two thynges there were that had moued me to take this prouince most specially in hand, first because that as Luke is the longest of all the Euangelistes, so is he of al men noted to haue written his gospel moste exactely, as well by relacion of the Apostles which were present and conuersaunt with Christ while he liued on earth, as also by the instruccions of Paul, who was moste earneste and full in the iustificacion of feith, and most pithy against the institucion of workes (albeit they do al in this poynte of doctrine through hy consēt and agree.) The secōd was, for that Erasmus who did in this paraphrase beston more diligence then in most of the others, had specially dedicated the same vnto our most noble king Henry the eight. And I thought I could not deuise any apter gift to present his most dere beloued wife withal beyng of the like zele, affection, godlines, & deuocion that he is, then the same worke, trāslated into Englishe, whiche I certainly knew his maiestie to had singularly well allowed and moste graciously accepted in latine, and in perusyng therof to be daylye exceedyng muche delighted. And I nothyng doubt, most gracious Lady, but that the readyng therof should cause no lesse delectacion of mind to you, yf any thing were so well doen as sum mā of more learnyng perchaūce could haue doē it. And in this behalf none other refuge I haue but to your most benigne fauour and pardone well to accept mine honest herte, mine earneste zele, and willing labours. For as touchyng the translacion selfe, though I iudge and plainly confesse my self to be by many degrees inferiour in knowledge & facultie to all the others whom I heare that youdhighnes hath appoynted to the translating of the other partes, and though I cannot of my self promette any hablenes to take such a prouince in hand: yet (my hart better seruyng me hereunto then perchaunce my hande hath doen) whan I sawe that your graces resolucion & pleasure did helpe to minister courage to myne owen hertes desire, I conceiued boldenesse to attempt & enterprise the thing, & thought it most expedient to shewe mine obedience & prompt good will to do your commaundement, trusting that though I haue not been hable in all behalfes and poinctes requisite, fully to discharge ỳ office of a good trāslatour, yet I haue expressed ỳ sēse & meaning of the autour. As for the grace of the latine tonge I thinke vnpossible to be lively expressed, as this autour doth it in the latine by reason of sundry allusions, diuerse prouerbes, many figures, and eoratiōs rethoricall, with Metaphores innumerable, whiche cannot with ỳ like grace be rendred in any other lāguage then in the latine, or greke, besydes that an infinite sorte of wordes there be, whose full importyng cannot with one mere Englishe worde equiualently be interpreted. And this imperfeccion I haue to my litle power so laboured to redoub, that I trust there be not any poynte of pithythie signification any where conteyned, whiche I haue not in one or other place of the sentence by sum meanes throughly touched. And for as muche as I consider it to be a paraphrase, that is to say, a playn settyng foorth of the sence of the terte with as many wordes as the circumstaunce therof for the better linkyng of one sentence to an other doth require, I haue not so precisely bound my self to euery woord and syllable of the letter, but that I haue take more respect to ther planacion and declaring of the sēce, then to the noumbre of the latine syllables. In translatyng of the very terte, I thinke it requisite to vse sum scrupulositie (as if the trawlatours were not altogether so precise as they are, but had sum more regard to expressing of the sence. I thinke in my iudgemente they should doe better) but in a paraphrase, which of it selfe is a kynd of exposicio and of cōmentary, I thinke it nothyng nedefull to be so precise in the wordes, so the sence be kepte. And this I dare auouche, that yf any interpretour shoulde in sum places bee as breefe in the English translacion as the autour is in the latine: he should make therof but a darke piece of worke. For that is the onely thyng that maketh the very terte selfe so derke as it appeareth to be. In Luke I haue had sum what the more busynesse, because that the Latine exemplaries (thorough whose defaute & negligence I am intertayne,) do vary and not well agree, sum hauyng more or lesse then others, sum hauyng an other worde then an other copye hath, sum beyng otherwyse poynted then the rest, wherby I haue in sum places been driuen to vse myne owne iudgemente in rendryng the true sense of the boke, to speake nothyng of a great noumbre of sentences, whiche by reason of so many membres, or parentheses, or digressions as haue sum in

are so long, that vnlesse they had been sumwhat deuided, they woulde haue bredde hard for an vnlearned braine to conceiue, much more hard to conteyne and kepe it still. As touching the stile (because the iudgemētes of readers be diuerse, and sum lone length, sum desire breuitie, sum can well awaye with elegaunte speache, sum hate all curiositie, sum commende an eloquente stile, sum thynke nothyng to be plaine enough, sum wyll be bulle iudges, of other mens writinges and do nothyng themselfes:) it may please your moste gracious patience to suffer me to say my poore iudgement, for the satisfiyng of them that are reasonable. First I would not haue euery reader to require in euery writer to be like his owne witte, perceyuyng, or style, or phrase of speakyng: but rather to consider that euery man hath a beine of his owne, either by imitation so confirmed, or by long vse so rooted, or of delyte to be playne and clere, so growen into an habite: that he cannot otherwyse write then he doeth. Sum writers hate breuitie, and sum thynke al long thinges tedious, and yet is neither of these two sortes to be remoued, so y matter be good, the making fine, the termes apte, and the stile nowynge with out curiositie or affectacio. For like as Cicero was so copious that nothyng might be added vnto him, so was Demosthenes so breefe that nothing might be taken away. The same mistine is betwene Cicero and Salluste. But Tully would not leaue till the eye, the eare, and also the mouth of the reader were full euen in euery sentence: Salluste was loth to tyer any of these with a whole nacion. The Lacons could abide no length, the Sophistes of greece coulde thought their copiousnes make an Elephaunt of a flye, and a mountayne of anolde hill. And this I speake rather in commendacion of eloquēce, of copie of eleganrie of stile where it is, then to clayme that there is any suche here. Oulde, Tullie, Erasmus could haue proceded in any their inuention euer infinitely, sum other wittes coulde not so. Sum lone it whanne is style slacke, & sum care for no more but the bare sence. But eloquence of it selfe, and copie (that is to say shift of termes) is a vertue in an oracion, and that thing chiefly geueth to bokes that the latine men call genium, that is life and continuaūce, that euery mā will an hundred yeres after set store by it, and esteme it worthy many times readyng ouer. What other thyng commendeth Chaucer & causeth his woordes to be more set by then thousandes of other treathe hastyly bokes hastily shootyng forth lyke May floures, and not withering but vtterly dying with the first readyng. Neuertheless no man of our tyme and in our Englishe tounge (which none but our selfes for our own vse do muche passe on,) writeth so ornately, but that he hath in sundry woordes & phrases sum smatche of his native countrey phrases, that he was borne in. Yet this notwithstandyng sum there be, whiche haue a mynde to renewe termes that are now almoste worne cleue out of vse, whiche I do not disalowe, so it be doen with iudgement. Sum others would amplifate and enrich their native language with no vocables whiche I also commend, if it be aptely and wittily assayed. So that if any other doe inuoate and bryng vp a woorde to me afore not vsed or not heard, I would not dispraise it: and that I do attempt to bryng to vse, another man should not causayle at. For an easy thyng it is to depraue, and a small glory for one man, in matters of nothing, to laboure to deface an other. But for as muche as both do our beste, we ought rather thus to thinke the one of the other.

This

This man hath seen that I have not: I see no man is so barrain, but he is able with sum wourde or other to helpe garnishe his mother tongue, with other like latynges proceding from humanitie and fauour to encourage suche as are studious. And what if one labour to enrich his countrey language, as Tullie gloseth that he did amplify the latine tonge, is he therfore to be blamed, and not rather to be commended? Thus muche I say for the defence of writers and styles in generall. As touchyng mine owne stile in this present worke, if I should be so straightly examined, I am (as the Greke prouerbe is) in like case as a man that shoulde hold fast a wolfe by both eares. For yf he hold him still, he hath a thing in handelyng, cannot so continue ever: if he let him goe, he is in ieoppardy to be deuoured: so should I in this matter stand in a straite, either to incurre suspicion of arrogancie, if I maintein mine owne, and by standyng in defence therof to be deemed spightfull, or ambitious of singularitie: or els I must be driuen to geue an ouer, where perchaunce more is. Letting passe therfore all suche kynde of tratlelyng, I shall resolute this whole cause (as Tullie doeth of his booke which he entitled Defensus) in the ingenuous part of your highnesse, whome yf my lourdars doe iustifie, I shall the better like my self, and thank of others, others I saye, whose regard humanitie to take and interprete all thynges to the best: in whome to moderacion rather to pardone sum faultes, than to condemne the thyng whiche though they can, they will not amend: in whome to learnyng and knowlege to iudge right: in whom reason to winke at a litle trippe or stombling in a long piece of worke: in whom learnyng and skilfulnesse doeth worke indifferencye of affection: and finally in whom dwelleth reasonable consideracion of mannes infirmitie, that the best learned doeth sumtimes erre, and no man at all tymes doeth all thynges right. For vnto suche an one as will be more seuere and heauy iudge on an other mans labours, then himselfe eyther would bee, or would haue others to bee on his owne, I can saye nothing but this: I for my part can do no better, if I could I would, and in case ye will either for the peece of the publique benefite whiche is ment herein, or els for loue to me, whose me, or els for any other iust consideracion take your pine and amend any fault that ye shall see: I shall not onely not thinke any wrong doen to me, but also I shall with all my hert geue you thankes for that ye so muche tendre eyther my poore honestie, or the thing selfe, that ye would put to your helping hand to make it well. And thus I surceasse with my bayne talke any longer to detayne your highnesse from the frutefull reading of Eusebius, whereof may redounde suche edifiyng and encrease of knowlege to thesame, as the labour of readyng maye be well bestowed, and the boke through your graces commendacion hereafter one day set forth to the publique vtilitie and benefite of all the whole deuout congregacion of this churche of Englande. yeuen at London the last day of Septembre, in the yere of our Lord. M.D.xlv.

Vnto the moost puissaunt and most victorious Prince Henry the eight, king of England, Fraunce, and Ireland, and defendour of the Catholike faith, Erasmus of Roterodame wisheth long health, with all honour and prosperous continuaunce.

MOste regall and princely kyng Henry, I sende vnto youre highnesse Luke the physician, not any other Luke then ye had of him heretofore, but the same Luke speakyng somewhat more plainly and also more at large vnto the eares of suche as are vsed to good latine. Neyther do I suppose it any thyng nedefull for me here nowe in this matter, to spende labour appeasyng and satisfiyng these kynde of people, which commonly allege vnto suche as I am, that it was a sentence by right great learned men, very well taught, that in geuing of giftes or presentes none ought to haue a speciall eye and regarde, that the thynges whiche we geue, bee apte for the parties that they are geuen vnto. I for my parte dyd this thyng not long sence, at what tyme I dedicated the Paraphrase vpon Matthewe vnto Charles the Emperour: yea and before my tyme also it hath of right excellent clerkes, by prescripcion of auncient custome and vsage, been plainly declared, that any kynde of argumente what euer it bee, is rightly and well dedicated vnto princes, whom though we know that they will neuer read it, yet is thus muche vtilitie and benefite gotten therby, that vnder the title of their names, the worke is the better hailed to the fasties of studious persons, according as Plinius finely wrote, certain thynges euen for suche onely respect to be reputed very precious, because they are dedicated for iewels in temples. But certes the waywardnesse of sum persones towardes bokes, when they commenely forth, is so greate, that they wyll bidde away with the bokes out of their sight, ere they take any assay or tast of the same. And by this meanes there perisheth as well to the writer y fruite whiche he hoped to haue thereby, as also to the reader, his due profite & vtilitie. And at suche mens hades, one thing at least wise shal the title of noble princes obtein whan it is set in the first frount of any booke, that they wyll not geue sentence on it to be vtterly naught, that they will not disdain it, that they will not spet on it before they haue red it. Albeit eue otherwise also the godly zele and affection of sum princes doeth make, that whoso sendeth the ghospell to any kyng for a present, shall not seme to do against good reaso. for by men of right good credite, and suche as vse not to lye, it hath been reported vnto me, as well that Charles the Emperour, in case any bacat tyme of leysure maye in so great vnquietnesse and troubleous state of the worlde be gotten, doeth gladly bestowe the same in readyng the ghospell boke: as also the moste renowmed Prince Ferdinando, brother to the same Charles, muche and often to haue in his handes the Paraphrase vpon the ghospell of Saincte Iohn, whiche not very long agon I dedicated vnto hym: yea and

furthermore that ỹ right noble kyng of Denmarke Christierne, which thing maye to your highnes also be well knowen, hath bokes of christian religion often tymes in his handes, and that he with greate delyrefulnesse vseth to reade my paraphrase vpon the ghospel of Matthew. Why than shoulde the ghospel seme to be vnaptly sent vnto those whiche are handlers and louers of the ghospel, whiche ghospell certes is to be had and vsed in the hãdes of all persones as many as remembre and thinke themselfes to be Christyans. Nowe although after the rate of worldely dealyng, suche a thyng is moste chiefely to bee geuen, as the partie hath nede of to whom it is sent, yet after the rule of the ghospell, whoso hath already, to hym muste nedes be geuen, that he may haue plentie. Wherfore me thought I should do but as myght best stande with congruente, to sende this Euangelical physicion vnto your highnesse, for asmuche as the same is so farre from disdaimyng holy scriptures, that (as your owne writtinges doe testifye,) ye haue aboue the meane rate profited in the same, so that yf a man geue vnto your grace any thing to holy scripture appertenyng, he shall not seme so muche to geue a gifte, as to make amendes and recompence for a pleasure receyued. Moreouer if this be a thyng specially aboue others in all haste prouided for, that in the kinges & Emperours courtes there may from tyme to tyme be physicions ready and prest at hande (beyng men exactly learned and of approued fidelitie) to take charge that the princes bodye be preserued and kept in healthy: howe muche more doeth it stande with congruence, that Luke the physicion should there be resauyng, whõ doeth not with seamnony or ellebour preserue the healthful state of the body, but doth with an heauenly pocion deliuer the soule frõ diseases that pestilently hale men to death euerlastyng, that is to wete, ỹ vnknowyng of the truthe, mistrustfulnesse & vnbeleefe towardes God, the loue of this worlde, ambicion, auarice, riottous excesse, hatred, enuye, and suche others. For these diseases is all the life of mortall men subiect vnto, & dayly in daunger of falling into them, as John thapostle sayeth, where he bewayleth that all the whole worlde is set in naughtinesse, neyther any thing els to reigne therin, but cõcupiscence of the flesh, concupiscence of the eyes, & pryde of the lyfe. And in so muche the more peril and hasard of the said diseases do the princes stand, as they are more then others made wantons & derelynges of fortune, and haue lybertie without checke or controllemente to fulfyll their owne sensuall luftes and appetites. But nowe me seemeth I shall not spende my labour in vayne but to good purpose, if I shal in a fewe wordes commend and sette forth vnto your highnesse, first Luke himself being the physicio, and then the pocio or medicine that he bringeth with hym, albeit I put no doubtes but ỹ as well the one as the other is already (as in dede they ought to be) vnto your godly ze'e and deuocion in most best wyse accepted. Forsoth thi same is that excellent man Luke an Antiochian by the coũtrey & nacion that he was borne in. And Antioche is a citie whiche was in old tyme of so great fame and power, that so muche parte of al the countrey of Syria as reacheth vnto Cicilie & buttreth vpõ it, had the name geuen it thereof; And the sayed Antioche was in this behalf more happie and fortunate then verye Rome it self, ỹ Peter ỹ apostle had his first see here in this citie of Antioch and that Paule, and Barnabas dyd in the same citie receiue their dignitie of the charge and functio Apostolical. Now to our present purpose this Luke was of familiar acquaintaunce and conuersacion with all the Apostles, but most specially a folower and disciple of Paule, and also a companion of his all his peregrinacio, neuer repaused ner deuided from his compaiy. By liuyng in coumpany with the Apostles, he wrote his ghospell: and by the tymes whiche Paule wrought and did, Luke beyng a presente wiene se of them, he wrote the booke whiche he entytled, the actes of the apostles. And that hy-storie of the Actes, he continued vntill the second yere of Paul abydyng at Rome, that is to say, vntill the fourth yere of Nero, the Emperour there.

was

Wherof men gather a coniecture that the boke was written in the same citie.
And fully agreed it is amonge the learned men, that this same verye Luke ii. Cor. viii.
is, of whom Paul the Apostle doth so often tymes make mencion: as for example, in his second epistle to the Corinthians, where he thus saith: We haue sent with him our brother, whose laude is in the gospel throughout all the congregacions. Again, where he writeth to the Collossias, he sayth: dere Colloss. iii.
Lukas the physicion greeteth you. And agayne in the secound epistle to Ti- i. Tim. iiii.
mothe: For Demas hath forsaken me, louing this present worlde, & is departed into Thessalonica: Crescens, is gone into Galacia: Titus into Dalmatia: onely Lukas is with me. Yea and this point moreouer is leafte to vs by auncyent writers, that as often as Paul calleth it by name of his gospell, (as he doeth to Timothe, where he saieth: Remembre that Jesus Christ of ii. Tim. ii. the kynde of Dauid arose again from death accordyng to my gospell &c.) he meneth of the ghospel of Luke, because that like as Marke writes the history of the gospell at Peters worde, and by his settyng on, so dyd Luke at the word and bidding of Paule. Hierome is of the opinion and iudgement, that Luke was more expert in the greke tongue then the other were, and by reason therof wrote the discourse and processe of the story after a more ornate & gloriously sorte then the others dyd, that is to wete, takyng his entraunce at the first conception of Johan the Baptist, and makyng relacion of verye muche matter touchyng the natiuitie, and concernyng the babehoode, yea and certayne poyntes furthermore concernyng the childhood of Jesus, makyng also rehersall of many parables and miracles whiche the other euāgeliste for loue of briefnes had let passe he any thing spoken of. And where as not one of all the others went any whit further then the tyme of ꝑ Lorde Jesus beyng assumpted into heauen, this man alone did in an other seconde booke make a further continuacio of the story concernyng the churche, how it first sprong vp, and how it grewe more and more to spreade and shewe it selfe.
This muche moreouer the writers affyrme: that lyke as Matthew wrote his ghospell, and Peter his epistles, chyefely vnto the Jewes: so dyd Luke write his gospell most specially to the Gentiles, as one that was a disciple of Paules, which Paul as he was the teacher of the Gētiles, so did he write all his epistles vnto Gentiles, except the only one epistle to the Hebrues, of whose author wrytes wherof it hath euermore been doubted whether it were Paules or not. He wrote his ghospel after Marke, but yet before that John wrote his, by reason wherof beyng but a disciple, he is set before John who was an Apostle. And to conclude, it is written that a long lyued manne he was, whiche thyng was in a physicion, euen as of congruence it ought to be.
For he folowed ꝑ rowlaile of Paul, which wrote: It is good not to touche a wife: he lyued a single mans lower score and fower yeres.

The bones of him after he was dead, wer remoued and conueied out of Achaia, to Conſtantinople, together with the bones of Andrewe the apoſtle, in the twētieth yere of Cōſtancius. We haue now a phiſicion for the ſoule of a phyſicion for the body, a man by his familiaritie of conuerſacion, with the Apoſtles habled, and by mo teſtimonies then one of Paul the apoſtle, commended and prayſed, and by the whole conſent of all the faythfull congregaciōs allowed. For where the goſpels of many were reiected and refuſed, Luke was by the conſent of al the congregations voices receyued, to make vp that ſame holy and miſtical quaternitie, which Moſes in old tyme limyted out, whan he expoūded vnto vs the fower fludds or riuers welling vp out of one ſpryng in paradiſe, whiche fludds do water al the earth wyngefall: and the whiche quaternitie the Prophet Ezechiell afterward ſaw, whan he playnly ſet out vnto vs (as it had been in a picture) the fower myſticall beaſtes & the fower wheles in one. Now if it be ſo thought good, let vs in fewe wordes, ſum what ſpeake of the potion or medicine that he hath geuen vs. We had been wonte out of Hypocrates to take medicines, wherewith to remedie diſeaſes of the body, but this medicine of the ghoſpel, wherwithe cure and heale our ſoules, he toke of the Apoſtles, whiche had both ſeen and heard Chriſt, yea or rather of the very holy ghoſt himſelf.

There was among the phyſicions of olde time, a certain kynd of medicine of paſſyng great efficacie & vertue, whiche medicine they called in Greke θεῖα δῶρα, that is to ſay, Gods handes, lyke as there is now a confection that is called manus Chriſti. But yet was there neuer any medicine inuented by the Phiſicions, that was able to remedie al diſeaſes of the body, though they make neuer ſo muche bauntes and boaſt of that ſame which they call panacea, a medicine (as they affirme) effectual and of muche vertue, but it was not to no man. Once the ſickenes of olde age geueth place to no phiſicke. But this ſame medicine of the ghoſpel is in very true dede, the manus Chriſti, whiche thorough ſyncere faith doeth once for altogether take away all diſeaſes of the ſoules, & geueth immortalitie: which thyng apperteineth onely vnto god to do. And certes it was a thyng not vnfeatly ne vnſkilfully ſpoken in the prouerbes of the Grekes, that woordes and talke is the phyſicion of a mynde beyng diſeaſed and ſicke: yea and ſum there hath been, which beleued that the diſeaſes of the body alſo myght be driuen away with certayne hartie woordes aduerſedly ſpoken, hauyng a certain magical vertue & efficacie in them. The Lord Jeſu was a phiſicio, who while he liued here on earth, did with his woordes put away diſeaſes of the bodies, were they neuer ſo ſore, or of neuer ſo log continuance rooted in them. yea and with his woordes he rayſed dead folkes to lyfe agayne. For his woord was no woord of magike: but the almightyful word of the omnipotēt father. The ſame Chriſt did alſo with his word driue away diſeaſes of the ſoules, whan he ſayed: Sonne thy ſynnes are forgeuen the: and in an other place: Goe thy waye, thy fayth hath made the whole. And in conſideracion hereof, the prophecy had afore promiſed, y Chriſt ſhould be a phyſicion. For it ſayeth in the booke of Sapience: For neither any herbe ne any ſuppelyng plaiſter hath healed them, but thy word, o Lord, whiche healeth all thynges. This ſame verily is that true gnoſtica, that the phiſicious ſpeake of, as afore ſayd. Alſo the myſtical pſalme hath this ſentence. He ſent his woord, and he healed them from their vtter perysshynges. The lively woorde of the father is Christe. He had sent Moses and the prophetes: and by them was the nacion of the Jewes taken in cure to be loked vnto, but they were not clene healed. Onelye the woorde of the father was of sufficiente vertue and efficacie to heale the diseases of man, and not onelye the lighte dyseases, but also the mortall and deadly sickenesses. For it is a marke whereby to know that it speaketh of deadly sickenesses, whan the prophete addeth, from theyr vtter perilhynges. At suche tyme as the stomacke is so clene fallen awaye that it abhorreth and refuseth all kynde of meate, than groweth the sicke partie towardes his death, and of suche manier a disease was all the whole vniuersall worlde sicke, before the cumming of the heauenly physician. Whiche thing had the psalmiste a litle tofore spoken: Their solle abhorred all kynde of meate, they were drawen nere, euen to the gates of death. There had bene manye soondry dremedies tempered by the philosophiers, as for exaumple, by the secte of Pythagoras, by the Academikes, by the Stoikes, by the Epicureans, and by the Perepatetikes, promisyng perfect healthe of the myndes, yea and heauens blisse too. Moses tempered many potions, prescrybyng and appoyntyng soondry ceremonies of religion and of seruyng god: the prophetes also made muche and many temperynges to the same ende and purpose: but by reason of diseases growyng strong and preuayling, the phisicke and medicines auailed not, ne dyd any other good, sauing that it encreased the diseases, and bewrayed the same that it might appere. The stomacke of the soule beeyng corrupte with naughtie dewres, as it had beene with euell and hurtefull humoures, dyd on the one syde turne theyr face awaye from the moral preceptes and lessons of the philosophiers composed with greate labour and studye: and on the other syde by the ordinaunces and prescripcions of Moses, they were made the more superstitious, but nothyng the better men. As for the bittur chydyng whiche the prophetes ministred, had no good relice ne taste in theyr mouthes, and therfore was there no credyte geuen to theyr promises. Whiche thyng the father of heauen whan he sawe, because he woulde not haue any thyng to perishe of all that he had created: sente foorth his woorde who should with an heauenly medicine delyuer all people from all diseases of theyr soules, onelye requiryng of vs to acknowleage our disease, and put assured trust and confidence in the physician. And lyke as the louyng & frendely physicias, if at any tyme they cannot styll remayne to bee euermore present with theyr patientes, doe commonly vse to leaue some boxe or receypt of physicke with them, whereby the parties that are sicke maye be theyr owne physicians, if the case shoulde so require: so the lorde Jesus when he returned into heauen, leafte vnto vs by his Apostles a medicinable electuarie of the gospell, bothe easye and readie for euery bodye that wyll take it, but of great vertue and effecte, if a man receyue it as it ought to be: and certes to take it to ones profite and benefite, the chiefe thyng that worketh it, is his assured trust and affiaunce in the physician.

Neither is it enough to haue taken a slendre taste or assaye thereof, but it muste be receiued and conueyghed into the verye bowels, that as soone as it is receyued within the stomacke, the vertue therof maye haue full course to renne euery waye throughout all the veynes. At suche tyme and neuer till than it begynneth to roumble and shake all the partie from toppe to toe with the hatred of his former life: but after this great troublyng and confusion, immediately ensueth greate tranquillitie of myndе and quiet of the conscience. The phiſicians of the bodyes, haue practicioners, and potcaries that dooe miniſtre theyr arte vnder them: and theimſelues are the preſcribers and appoyncters what it is that muſt bee geuen to the ſicke: Chriſt alone it is and none elſ, that hath preſcribed the medicine of euerlaſtyng ſaluacion. The Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſours the biſhops, are no more but miniſters, they temper in due proporccion, they kyne and beate to powder, they laye to the places diſeaſed, not receiptes of theyr owne, but of Chriſtes. They baptiſe in water, but Chriſte it is that waſheth the ſoule cleane: they teache the thynges whiche he taught and deliu-red vnto theim, but Chriſtes owne ſelfe it is, whiche maketh that theyr wordes maye take effecte. The corporall phiſicians dooe often tymes varie aſwell in their iudicials of the diſeaſes, as alſo in appoyntyng medicines for theſame:

yea and many tymes in ſtede of medicines they appoynte thynges that are ve-ray poyſon to the ſickenes, accordyng to the ſaying of the greke Poete.

Many of the medicines be good that are wrought,
And many of theim again are ſterke ſtaryng nought.

But of the phiſicke and medicine Euangelicall, there is but onely one receipte, whiche ought of no mortall creature to bee either corrupted or altered. And fy-nally to conclude, it is confect of no mo but one ſimple, ſo that althoughe they, whoſe parte and duetie it were to be miniſters of the ſame, woulde bee ſlacke to dooe theyr office, euery man maye take it and miniſtre vnto hymſelfe, ſo that he haue a mynde feithfully truſtyng, a mynde ſyncere, and deſirous of health. For euen that ſame chiefe and head phiſician of all, who alone and none but he is of power hable to heale all the whole manne, did at ſome ſeaſons geue health by hymſelfe in his owne perſone, and many tymes alſo by the miniſterie of his Apoſtles and diſciples. Now feithermore all the whole faculte and arte of phiſicke, hath two markes that it principally ſhoteth at: the one that it maye de-liuer the bodye from diſeaſes, and from ſuche thynges as doe brede diſeaſes, & this parte is by the phiſicans terme, called therapeutica, that is to ſaye, the arte of curyng or healyng diſeaſes: ſecondelye theyr arte is to preſerue and continue the healthfull ſtate of the bodye, and to encreace the ſtrength: and this parte of phiſicke they place in the ordreing of the diete.

For the phiſicians dooe not euermore ſere with hote yrons, or cutte, they doe not euermore geue potions of ſcammonie to conſume and waſte the fleaſhe as men in manier fleaghyng and martiring the bodye, to kepe it in lyfe: but ſometymes they miniſtre ſuche thynges as maye make the herte lyghte and merie, yea and alſo they geue the bodye ſuſtinaunce at large: So there is firſte of all miniſtred vnto vs the potion of faith, whiche troubleth the ſoule and conſcience with repentaunce, and emptying vs, dooeth diſcharge and vnlade vs of our ſynne. Than immediatly therupon is geuen an electuarie of conſolacion, of exortyng and of more perfeict doctrine. For if a phiſician, as ſoone as he hath made the bodye emptie by purgacion, ſhould ſoodaynely geue vp the ſicke pacient and leat hym alone, it is an hazarde and ieopardie leſte whan it is deſti-tute of all the ſtrength, ſome power and rage of a greater ſickeneſſe maye take it, as for example, the paulſey, the generall taking or diſſoluction of all the limmes and ſenewes, wherupon men lye bedred, or a conſumpcion. So after that repentaunce hath caſt downe our combe, and hath well ſhaken our diſeaſe, whi baptiſme hath ſcoured or pourged vs and made vs emptie and voyde from al ſynnes, there bee ſuche thinges miniſtred, and geuen to vs, as maye holſomlye

repleniſhe

replenisshe the soule agayne beyng now well clensed and made voyde. Wrathfulnes is voyded out, and tentilnesse and mekenesse is in stede thereof infused. Enuie is sucked out, and taking of all thynges to the best, put in for it. Pieling and pollyng is voyded out, and in place therof succedeth liberalitie. The feruent desyre of makyng warre, is consumed awaye, and the earnest zele of peace cometh in for it. The loue of sensuall pleasures of the flesshe is expelled, and in their stede entreth the loue of thynges celestiall. Wyll ye heare what is the scammonie euangelicall? Doo ye penaunce. The axe is nowe alreadie sette at the roote of the tree. And euerie tree that bringeth not foorth good fruicte is cutte vp. And Paule in lyke maner: Mortifie your membres whiche are vpon yearth: whoorehuntyng, vncleannesse, wanton lust, euill concupiscence, and auarice. And within fewe woordes after it foloweth: spoylyng your selues of the olde man with all his actes. He hathe now voyded out the ill humoures, how doeth he fill vp the emptie place agayne? Doo vpon youre selues, (sayth he) as the saintes & the elected of God, the bowels of mercie, bountiousnesse, submission, humilitie, pacience, supportyng one another, and forgeuyng your selues emong you if any persone haue a querele agaynste an other, lyke as the Lorde also hathe giuen to you. And aboue all these thynges haue ye charitie, whiche is the bande of perfeccion, and leat the peace of Christe reioyce in your heartes. Suche manner an house swepte cleane with broomes and replenished on euery syde with suche ornamentes, the euill spirite shall not entsones entre vpon, whan he returneth with seuen worse then himselfe. Thus than the Euangelicall medicine hath wyne of it owne, wherewith to scoure the mattier of oure woundes that they smarte agayne. Auaunt, come behynde me Satan, thou sauoureste not the thynges whiche are of god, but whiche are of men. Now see the supplyeng oyle of the same. Haue ye a perfecte trust and confidence, for I haue ouercommed the worlde. A heare of your heade shall not perishe. Be ye not afearde litle flocke, for yours is the kyngdome of heauen. Paule hathe meate, wherewith he coumforteth and cherisheth suche as are but newlye conuerted to Christe, that they maye not fal agayne into diseases, forasmuche as they are yet weake: he hath also sounde and substantiall meate that maye kepe theim in perfecte strength, growyng forwarde from daye to daye vnto the measure of the fulnesse of Christe. Those persones had gathered perfect strengthe, of whome it is thus wrytten in the actes of the Apostles: They went reioycyng oute of the sight of the comsell, in that they had been reputed worthie to suffre reproche for the name of Jesus.

That man also had gathered perfecte strength whiche layed: I can doo all thynges, in hym that maketh me strong. And for this consideracion the Lorde Jesus in the ghospell exhorteth menne to the eatyng of the breade that was come from heauen, the eatyng whereof geueth immortalitie. He exhorteth men to the eatyng of his flesshe, and to the drinking of his bloude, meanyng vndoubtedlye of his doctrine, whiche beyng as breade to the soule, dooeth make thesame lustie and strong and (as effectuall strong wyne) doeth inebriate men and bryng them in a godly kynde of drounkennesse, euen to the contempte of this worlde, in lyke maner as flealshe hath sound nourishemente for the bodye, and lyke as bloude hath a vertue and effecte vnto lyfe. And though all the scripture of god haue a medicinable vertue and power in it: yet hath it none a more effectuall electuarye or receipt then that pertaineth to the ghospel. One and thesame spirite it is, that is in all the Scriptures of God, but yet in the ghospell especiallye his pleasure was, that the thyng should remaine, wherin he might speciallye shewe foorth his owne power, because there shoulde appere some difference betwene the seruauntes and the maister, betwene the puddels or litle gutters, and the

spryng or fountaine. And truely it is a labour well bestowed, to considre how great a thyng the vertue of this medicine is. Euerie common weale is (as ye woulde saye) a certayne body. The pestilent diseases and sickenesses of a common weale, are euill maniers. Against whiche diseases suche men as haue excelled others in wysedome, haue in soondrye regions ordeyned and set lawes, as it were certayne medicines and remedies for thesame, as for exaumple, emong the Athenians, Solon made lawes: emong the Lacedemonians, Lycurgus: emong the people of Crete, Minos: emong the Romaynes the tenne Commissioners called in theyr toungue, Decemviri. Yet not one of all these men, was hable to bryng to passe, that other nacions also would enbrace and receiue the lawes that he had made. No neither dyd any of them so muche as attempte suche a thyng, leste besides spendyng of labour in vayne, he shoulde also haue wonne an opinion of a shameleſſe acte in his so doyng. Solon was fain to liue tenne yeares a banished man for thrustyng his lawes into the citie of Athens alone to be vsed there. Plato a man so well learned and so eloquent, coulde neuer bryng the people of Athens in mynde to receyue his lawes. And yet is there no doubtes to bee made, but that euerye one of theim perswaded theimselues, that the lawes whiche they hadde made were true, and that they wished (yf it myght possibly haue been brought to passe) that all the world should haue enbraced and receyued thesame. No nor the lawes of Moses neither were spred abrode or receyued any ferther then within onely one nacion, although in dede the Phariseis did with great highe supt hunte to wynne and geat vnto them a fewe proselites, that is to saye, foreyns and aliens wonne to their religion. Fynally, not the violent autorite of the Emperours neither, was hable by violence or compulsion to obteyne, that theyr lawes might haue weight and force with all nacions. And the thyng whiche all the sayed persones by the lawes that they made did endeuour to bryng about, thesame did also the Philosophiers attempt by theyr morall rules and lessons, with great iudgement, and with incomparable diligence and labour wryten and published. Of al which neuertheleſſe, not one hath there been so eloquente or so well learned, that he hath been hable to bryng any one nacion in the mynde that he woulde haue theim in, so werithe and vneffectuall was the vertue of the medicine of philicke which they broughte. Onelye the trueth Euangelicall dyd in procesſe of a fewe yeares possesſe, perswade, and ouercome all nacions of the worlde full and wholle, drawyng vnto it the Grekes, and the barbarous peoples, the learned and the vnlearned, the inferiour common people, and kynges and all. So pithihy and so effectuall was the electuarie of this trueth, that somany thousandes of people forsakyng the lawes of their owne countreyes, renouncyng the religiō that theyr forefathers had vsed, leauyng aswell the sensuall pleasures and vices, whiche from their cradels they had been accustomed vnto: they enbraced a new and a forein doctrine, and out of diuerse toungues, and ordinaunces of contrarie sorte, they did consente to the receyuyng of a certaine lowe and basse philosophie: especiallye at suche a tyme as neuer was there any of the lyke sorte furnished nor armed either with the maintenaunce and supportation of learnyng and eloquence, or with the power and autorite of princes: and at suche a time ferthermore whā al the worlde with al the strengthe that it had, fought against the trueth of the gholspel beeyng vnarmed and naked: yet neuertheleſſe it could not possible bryng to passe, but that the sayed trueth after that it firste entred possession vpon the countrey of Grece, inuaded also the citie of Rome, and the verye courte of Hers, and foorthwith spred it self abrode throughout all and singular the prouincies of the Empire of Rome, euen vntill the Iles called Gades, lying in the fertheste parte beyonde Spaigne, and vnto the Indians, vnto the peoples of Afrike, and the Scithians, and the Isle of Britannia now called Englande, beyng a countrey vtterlye diuided and cutte of from all the rest of the worlde. These nacions and peoples dyd verye muche differ one from another in theyr languages, lawes, rytes, vsages, ordeynaunces, Goddes, religion, and facions: and anon beeyng from suche great discorde brought to a generall vnyformitie, they begonne to syng all one song, extollyng with laudes and prayses Iesus Christe the onely lorde and saluecur of the worlde.

And all this while, the spoylyng of their goodes, their banishementes, emprisonynges, tormentes, deathes, were none other thing but good procedyng and goyng forewarde of the ghospell. What persone hath there euer been founde, that hath been content to suffre death for the lawes of Solon, or the morall preceptes of Zeno? But for the simple and playne doctrine of Christ, how many thousandes of men, both olde & young, how many thousandes of matrones and byrgins, haue willyngly offered and holden out their neckes to bee chopte of? And yet how muche more wondrefull, and more abhorryng from commune reason, are the thinges whiche the ghospell teacheth, then whiche the Paradoxes, that is to saie the straunge opinions of the philosophiers, dooe teache? And the sayd philosophiers doctryne not one of the princes did euer make anye a doode to destroye or suppresse, and yet of it owne accorde it banyshed awaye, lyke as did also theyr lawes, and the arte magicall, and the rites of sacrifices. For what creature dooeth at this daye sacrifyce vnto the Gods of the Heathen, or slaygheth beastes in sacrifice as the Iewes did? What persone dooeth now knowe of Zoroastes? What man setteth an heare by the misticall riddels of Pythagoras? Who readeth the lyke of Apollonius Tyaneus any otherwyse then as a certayne dreame? Yea or rather who vouchesalueth to reade it at all? For where Aristotell is at these dayes of greate name and fame in the scholes, leat hym neuer thanke his owne sacte therefore, but the Christians. For euen he had perished too, yf there had not been made a medley of Christe and hym together in our schooles of diuinitie. Against the philosophie Euangelical, beeyng, yet but tendre and euen but newly spryngyng vp, the worlde arose at the first chop with all his force and power, by meane of the Iewes, vnder the pretexte and coulour of religion fightyng againste the fountaine of all religion, by meane of the philosophiers beeyng hable muche to doe in all kyndes of learnyng, by meane of the Sophisters beyng felowes vnpossible to bee ouercõmed in stiffenesse of holdyng argumentacions, by meane of the rhetoricians beyng meruaylous in the force of eloquence, by the tyrannes beeyng armed with all sortes of shewyng crueltie, by meane of kynges, lieutenauntes, magistrates, by suche as were cunnynng in magike and sorcerie, and perfecte in the sleyghe of castyng mystes ouer mennes eyes and other senses, and by meane of ciuyll spirites beeyng the lordes of this worlde. All suche tumultuous busynesse, as these, (as a sea of etuils swellyng vp and ouerflowyng,) dydde the power of the trueth Euangelicall receiue, endure, breake throughe, and vtterly ouercome. For at the lighte of the ghospell whan it came, it was reason that all counterfaictes of worldly power should clene vanishe away. Vp shot that same ghospell and shewed it selfe beeyng plaine and lowe, whiche all men with great adoe endeuoured to ouertrede and kepe downe. The bokes of suche persones, as with singular high witte, with woondrefull learnyng, and with exquisite eloquence wrote agaynst the ghospel, vanished away of theyr owne accorde as it had been certayne dreames, insomuche that they are not at this day remaynyng to bee had neyther, excepte it any fragmentes or small pieces haue been saued of the Christians, by reason of wrytyng agaynst them in confutyng them. The kynges and princes dooe nowe bough downe, to honoure the thyng whych to fore they wēt about to destroie: the power of magike is vanished away and gone: the euill spirites are cast out that they howle and roze agayn: philosophie hath confessed her ignorraunce: and geuyng ouer the foolishe wisedome of the world, it hath embraced the wysedome of the crosse: the rethoricians with oracions in the prayse of Iesus Christ: the poetes do hisse the olde goddes out of place, and in the lieu and place of Goddes innumerable, all their song and compolyng is nowe of Iesus Christe alone. Thissame so great a chaunge of the world, begoonne within a fewe yeares after Christ was putte to death, to be made generall and common through al the whole worlde, and without any maintenaunce or supportacion of mā, it encreaced from tyme to tyme still more and more, vntyll the piece of leauen beeyng mengled in three peckes of meale did leauen and turne al the whole batche, and vntill the graine of mustard seed beeyng digged into the yearth, did kerre and wyde spreygh his boughes abrode ouer Asia, ouer Afrike, and Europe. And ouer and beslydes all this, those persones who layed theyr battrey agaynst the trueth Euangelical to cast it downe and to destroye it, not onely had diuerse and sondry kyndes of terrours, wherwith euen very manly stomakes also might haue been quayled, that is to wete open cōmaundementes by proclamacion, consistories & places of iudgemente, forfaityng of al theyr goodes to the princes, attaindres and depriuacions, banishementes, prisons, tormentes of burnyng plates, scourgyng with roddes, axes wherwith to choppe of theyr heades, iebettes, fiers to burne them, wylde beastes to cast them to, that thei might be deuoured, deathes: but also they had diuerse and soondrye allurementes, wherewith an herte though it wer right cōtinent might bee corrupted. Ceasar would saye to some one of them: Renegue thou and forsake Christ, and be thou the chiefe emong all my piers, and except thou so do, all thy gooddes shall be forfayte to my behoufe. I wyll shewe all extremitie of rigour towarde thy wyfe and children, and thyselfe for thyne own part shalt bee cast to wylde beastes in a denne. Who did in suche cases as these perswade so many thousandes, and bryng them in mynde with reioycyng to take it whan theyr promocions and dignities were taken from them, whan theyr gooddes were spoyled, that whan they sawe those parties haled with all violence to huge tormentes and execution of death, who nexte after God were moste derely beloued vnto them, they should geue thankes to God: and finally that themselues whan they might easly haue escaped, and whan they might haue enioyed suche high commodities, should of theyr owne voluntary wylles offre themselues to bee cruelly martyred? No power of humayne eloquence could this haue dooen: but the godlye power of the trueth was habile, whiche laye hidden in the graine of mustardsede. Neither did the philosophiers doctrine lacke allurement. The Stoykes promised libertie and fredome, true

rychesse, health, reigne, & other thynges magnificent and royall to be spoken. The Epicureans made highe woordes and promises of pleasure to the eares of men. The Peripatetikes dyd couple the good giftes of the bodye with vertue. But the doctrine of the ghospell as it did not drawe any body vnto it with any worldly terrours: so on the contrary parte, how ferre was it from hauyng any thyng commendable in outwarde shewe to see to, naye rather howe many thynges did it conteine vtterly incredible? It telleth newes of one Jesus nailed on the crosse, who had by his death deliuered mankynde, and this Jesus to be bothe god and man, borne of a virgin, and one that had returned agayne from death to life, and was nowe sitting at the right hande of God the father, and the same Jesus to had been a man that had taught suche persones to bee in blissed case, as for the profession of his name did mourne and waile, did suffre thirst or hungre, were put to affliction, wer euill spoken of, or were putte to death: and that all men shall in time to come arise to life agayn, and that the godly sorte at that daye (the same veray Jesus beeyng their iudge,) shall haue immortalitie to their lotte, & the wicked shall haue the peines of hell for euer without ende to endure. What philosopher durst haue entreprised to propoune suche thynges as these so ferre contrarye to all mennes opinion or thinkyng, and thynges so vntouthsome for menne to bee fond on, or to make anye great countenaunce vnto? Yet all these thynges neuertheless dyd the law talke of, the ghospell dyd in suche wyse persuade, that suche an one is taken for mad and cleane out of his wittes, as dooeth not beleue it: and that so manye thousandes of people will sooner forsake their life, then the profession of the trueth Euāgelical. And by what maner felowes at last dyd so great a chaunge of the worlde firste come vp? by meane of a fewe disciples beeyng menne vnknowen, men of lowe degree, men of pouertie, & vnlearned. To what purpose is it to speake of the rest, whan Peter the chiefe of them was a fisher, and of no further knowlage but his bare mother toungue, Paule a leather sewer, and not one of them all, a man of rychesse, or a man of power, or a gentle man? And either nothyng at all had they of this worldes, or in case thei had aforetymes had, they clene forsooke it. And by what wayes was it possible for suche men to bryng so great a matter to passe? Certes they brought a medicine in a vile boxe but it was through godly vertue, a medicine of great power and efficacie.

The talke euangelicall is of a playne homely sorte, and of no eloquent composyng, whiche in case a manne examine and trye by the storie of Thucydides in greke, or of Titus Liuius in latine, he shall fynde a lacke of many thynges, & with many poyntes shall he be offended. What a noumbre of thynges dooe the Euangelistes leat passe, howe manye thynges dooe they touche with three woordes and no moze, in how many places dooeth the ordre disagree, and in how many places dooe they appere to be one contrarie vnto another? It was possible that suche thinges should haue turned awaye the mynde of the reader from the readyng of it, and should haue caused it neuer to be beleued. Contrariwyse they that haue written stories of worldly affaires, how carefull are they wherof to make the first begynnyng of the matter, what labour & diligence do they bestowe, that thei maye not tell anye thyng otherwyse then is semyng, that they maye not tell any thyng vnlykely, that they maye not tell any thyng not standyng together, or any thynges contrary vnto reason?

mennes eyes, with what swete pleasaunt knackes and conceiptes do they contente and reteine the readers mynde, that no pointe of tediousnesse maye come stealyng vpon hym: But the monumentes of all this sorte of wryters hauyng been composed with great labour and studie, are a great porcion of them lost, and those that remayne are reade neither of all persones, and yet without geuyng any credite vnto them. For what persone is there so light of beleke, that he wyll auouche and warraunt, that in all Titus Liuius there is no poynte conteyned of telling an vntrueth? But so many thousandes of people there haue been found, whiche would with better will tenne times suffre death, then to admitte or graunte any one false clause to bee contcined in the writinges of the gospell. Haue we not than of these premisses an euident marke whereby to know the matter not to be of worldly auctoritee or wisedome, but of the vertue and power of God? There is a secrete vertue and efficacie lying hidden in the medicine, whiche whan it was once poured into the body, spred it selfe abrode ouer all the vniuersall nacions of the worlde, as if it were by resemblaunce, throughout all the membres. We haue nowe the cause, why the veritie euangelicall did within so fewe yeares by men of lowe degree, spreade it selfe abrode all the world ouer, whan thesame worlde rebelled against it with all kyndes of extreme cruelitie. And now maie it come in some mannes mynde greatly to meruaile by what reason it hath come to passe that in those later seasons, whan the worlde had Christian princes, Bishops, men of learnyng, welthie and riche persones, and endued with great authoritie, the diction of Christe is so shrounken together into a narowe roume. For the cause of this matter beeyng well knowen, a remedie might perhappes the sooner be founde. But I hauyng a good while sence forgotte my selfe, do passe the limites & boundes of a preface. I therefore returne now to our physicion Luke, whome lyke as I doubte not to be right acceptable vnto youre grace: so woulde I by my good wyll haue hym by meane of thesame youre grace, to be made the more acceptable vnto all people. The wyse Ecclesiasticus speaketh in this maner: Honour thou the physicion for necessities sake. How muche more than ought condigne honour to be shewed to this physicion, who hath tentilly geuen vs so effectuall a receipt of physicke, whiche is to euery creature necessary, except if any suche persone there bee, whiche is without all faulte and hath no nede to ware a better man than he was? And certes it will also bee effectuall, if we beeyng vttrely wery of our diseases and infirmities, shall oftentymes byte of this medicine, if we shall continually chawe it, if we shall conueye it to passe into our stomake and into the botome of oure herte, if we shall not vomite vp agayne that hath been taken therof, but shall kepe thesame still in the stomake of oure soule, vntill it cast a brode the vertue that it hath, and chaunge vs altogether into it selfe. This poynte by experience haue I founde in myne owneselfe, that litle fruite there commeth of the gospell, if a man reade it but sluggishely, and superficially renne it ouer. But in case a mā do with diligent and exquisite meditacion kepe hymselfe occupied therin, he shal fele a certaine vertue and pith suche as he shall not fele the lyke in any other bookes. Nowe to preuente makyng of myne aunswer vnto the suspicious demynges of menne, for that I haue dedicated euery particular paraphrase of the gholpels seuerally to particular princes, it is veray chaunce and not anye ambicion or sekyng on my behalfe. For thesame thyng hath fortuned vnto me in this matter, that fortuned in the epistles Apostolicall. Whan I wrote the paraphrase vpon Matthewe, I loked for nothyng lesse, then that John should bee earnestly required, and immediatly after hym this Lukas. But nowe to thentente there shall not any glasewyndooze oz gappe bee seen emong the Euãgelistes, I wyll adde Marke also vnto the other three: albeit he that dedicateth sondrie ghospels to sondrie men, maie seme to do neuer a whit more contrarie to reason, then did Sayncte Hierome, who dedicated, yea euen the lesser Prophetes, vnto seuerall persones. I haue elswhere geuen aduertisemente, and do now eftsons geue warning vnto the reader, that he esteme no more auctoritie to be in any paraphrase of myne, then he woulde geue to the commentaries of other wryters. For I do not for any suche purpose wrote paraphrases, because I would shake or strike the gospell out of mennes handes, but to thentente it maye be read the more commodiously to a mannes mynde, and with the more fruite, lyke as meates are sauced to the ende they maye be taken with the better will and the more delectacion. Yea and of one ferther poynte also must I here warne a reader that is somewhat grosse of vnderstanding, whiche is, that it bee not myne owne woordes that I do any where speake in the paraphrase, leste the thyng whiche vnder the persone of the Euangeliste is humbly and truely spoken, maye seme to bee arrogauntlye spoken vnder myne owne persone. The lord Jesus geue his spirite vnto you, moste noble kyng, to the ende that vnder your protection beeyng a true Christian Prince in dede, the veritie of the gospell maye from daye to daye more and more reigne and flourishe.

The life of saynt Luke written by S. Hierome.

Luke a phisicion, and borne in Antioche, was not ignoraunte of the Grecke tounge (as his wrytynges do shewe) he was a folower and disciple of the Apostle Paule, and a companion of all his peregrinacion: He wrote a volume of the ghospell, of whome the same Paule sayeth in this maner. We haue sent with him a brother whose praise is in the ghospell throughout all the congregacions. And agayne to the Colossians: Moste dere Luke the phisicion greeteth you. And to Timothie. Luke is with me alone. He sette foorth also another speciall goodlye booke whiche is entitled the Actes of the Apostles, the storie whereof came euen full to Paules tyme beeyng and tarying two yeares at Rome, that is to saye, vntill the fourth yeare of Nero the Emperour there. Whereby we do well perceyue that the sayde booke was made in the same citie. Therfore as for the circuites of Paule and of Thecla the virgin, and all the tale of Leo by hym baptised, we reken emong the scriptures that are called Apocrypha. For what maner a thyng is it, that a companion whiche neuer went from his elbowe, shoulde emong his other matiers be ignoraunt of this thyng alone? Tertullian whiche was nere vnto that tyme, reporteth that a certayne priest in Asia beeyng an affeccionate fauourer of the Apostle Paule, was conuicte before John for beeyng author of the same booke, and that the priest confessed him selfe to had done the thyng for the loue that he bare to Paule, and the booke by reason therof to had escaped hym. Some wryters deme, that as often as Paule in his Epistles saieth according to my ghospell, he signifyeth of the woorke of Luke, and that Luke learned the ghospell not onely of the Apostle Paule, who had not been conuersaunte with the Lorde in the flesh, but also of the rest of the Apostles, whiche thyng Luke himselfe also declareth in the begynnyng of his owne woorke, saying: As they haue deliuered them vnto vs whiche from the beginning sawe themselues with their eyes and were ministers of the thynges that they declared. The gospell therfore he wrote as he had heard: but the Actes of the Apostles he compiled as he had seen. He lyued. lxxiiii. yeares not hauyng any wife. Buried he was at Constantinople, vnto whiche citie his bones were removed and conueyed out of Achaia, together with the bones of Andrewe the Apostle in the. xx. yere of Constantius the Emperour.

The Paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gholpell of S. Luke.

¶ Forasmuche as many haue taken in hand to sette foorth the declaracion of the actes that are come to passe emong vs, lyke as they deliuered theim vnto vs that first sawe them themselues, and were ministers of the woorde: I thought good also (now that I had gotte the knowlege of all thynges from the begynnyng) to wryte the diligentlye vnto the in order, good Theophilus, to the ende that thou mightest knowe the trueth of those woordes, of the whiche thou art enfourmed.

IN the hiſtories of worldly affaires, vpon conſideracio, that not a lytle, aſwel delectacion as also profite, is take of the knowlege of thynges: there is cuſtomably requi-red an vpright trueth of reporting theſame. But muche more oughte this vpright trueth to be in makyng relacion of the Gholpell: the whiche not onely doeth muche delite the mynde hauyng litle els to do, or is very com-modious and profitable vnto this tranſitory lyfe: but alſo is neceſſary vnto true godlineſſe, without the which no man atchieueth eternal ſaluacion, and the bliſſe that neuer ſhal decaye of the lyfe euerlaſtyng. For it were no matier of daungier, thoughe a manne did not knowe what man Hannibal was, or Alexander: what actes Epaminondas or Scipio hath doen: what matters Solon, Lycurgus, or Draco haue writen: what doctrine Socrates, Plato, or Ariſtotle taughte, albeit the knowleage of theſe thynges alſo, after the rate of mans ſtate and caſe in this worlde, hath their fruite. But whatſoeuer perſon ſhall not knowe the father, the ſonne, and the holy ghoſte: whoſoeuer ſhall not learne what actes the ſoonne of God Jeſus Chriſte hath dooen on yearth for the ſaluacion of mankynde, what he hathe taught, what he hath promiſed vnto ſuche as doe conſtauntely cleue to the doc-trine of the gholpell, what he hath threatned vnto ſuche perſones as doe either litle regarde, or els doe playnely deſpiſe theſame: ſuche an one ſhall not poſſibly bee hable to auoyde, but that beeyng excluded out of the cowmpanye of Gods childzen, and ſhut out from the ioyes of the heauenly lyfe, he ſhalbee adiudged with the wicked, to the tormentes of the diepe pitte of hell, whiche neuer ſhall haue ende.

And in dede at the firſt, by meane of thapoſtles beeyng therunto choſen of our Lorde hymſelfe, and by the reſidue of his diſciples beyng enſpired with the ho-ly ghoſt, the gholpell (in dede by liuely voice and by mouth onely, but yet with mooſt vpright certaintye and aſſured trueth) is begonne to bee ſpred abrode throughout all coaſtes and countreyes of the worlde, and dooeth daylye yet ſtill ferther and ferther renne abrode. Yet forasmuche as the ſyncerite of repor-tyng (the whiche goyng from man to man by mouth onely iſſueth ſucceſſiuelye to a great noumber) is more lightlye corrupted, then ſuche reporte as is ſette out and left from one to another in writyng: therefore Mathew the Apoſtle,

one of the twelue, whom our Lorde Jesus beeyng yet cõuersaunte on yearthe, had specially appointed and chosen to this office: and also Marke the disciple of Peter the Apostle, were by inspiracion of the holy ghoste admonished to put the summe of the whole storye of the ghospell in writyng: not myndyng ne goyng about by preuencion to take awaye from others any libertie to write of the same matiers: but rather, leste any person beyng craftilye deceiued by false Apostles, shoulde folowe the Jewes factions, or fonde fables in stede of the gospell. Notwithstandyng, lyke as not euery manne did at that tyme with eguall synceritie and pureneſſe preache the ghospell, so those that write dooe not euery man with lyke faythfulneſſe and trueth handle the storye of the ghospell. For many an one hath attempted after like sorte to patche and to make a medley of the discourse of repoortyng Christes ghospell, as other writers are woonte of mortall mennes actes: that is, entremedlyng ofttymes false thynges emong the true, and tellyng for matiers of approued certaintie, suche thinges as they had afore taken onely of the vncertaine rumoures and voyces of the common people, yea, and many tymes inuentyng of their owne braynes some thyng to tell, eyther of a delite and lust to lye, or els beeyng corrupted with some other affection. And (as mortall mennes matters are of nature apte and readie to bee corrupted) there shall perchaunce hereafter also some persones sterte vp, whiche through makyng lyes on the actes and doctryne of Christe and of his disciples, shall cause, that true matiers shall not be credited neither. Therfore the spirite of Jesus hath (as it were) nipped my herte also with a litell twynge, that after Mathewe and Marke, (whiche two with all possible trueth and vprightneſſe, wrote as muche as at that tyme they iudged to bee sufficiente, and yet neuertheleſſe of a sette purpose and entente, left vnto others certain thinges to be written, supplying in the meane tyme with the office of liuely voyce, that lacked in theyr writtinges;) and after some others whiche haue not with semblеable vprightneſſe attempted thesame: of whiche persones some haue euerye where entermyngled many poyntes muche contrary to the doctryne of the gospell: and many haue rather had an eye to fyll vp the holes of the storye with fables and tales vnseemyng for the grauitie of the ghospell, then to tell suche thinges as the holy ghost hath iudged to be auailable towardes the blisse euerlastyng: I Luke also should by compolyng a certaine ordre and processe of the storie euangelicall, bothe supplye suche matiers as haue been omitted by the others, and also debarre the authoritie of other persones, whiche eyther heretofore haue written, or hereafter shall wryte for matiers of certaynetie and for matiers of euident trueth, eyther cãtalyes of theit owne imagining, or els thinges none otherwyse knowen but by the rumoure and bruite of the people, who is commonly an authour and bryngeth vp of thynges not all of the tryest. And yet do not we our selues so frame the processe of this storie, that we leatte passe no manier poynte at al of the thynges that haue been sayde or doen: But we make relacion of suche thinges onely, as we know to conterne the godly deuocion of the gospel, and the fruicion of the lyfe euerlastyng. For an infinite and endeleſſe matter it were, throughly to write euery thyng that Jesus hath doen or taught. Some poyntes there bee, whiche without the preiudice of saluacio maye not bee vnknowen, some other thynges agayne there bee, the knowelage wherof bryngeth very muche profite to the zele and desire of perfect godlineſſe: and some poyntes finally there bee, that maye bee vnknowen without anye

perill of saluacion, and without any greuous empechemente or hinderaunce of a christen mannes perfeccion: as in dede (for an exaumple) all that euer we knowe in diuine matiers, is but a litle litle porcion, in respect and comparison of that that we knowe not. Therfore neither wyll we touche and treate of euery matier to the vttermoste, nor yet tell or recite thinges vncertayne: but those thynges onely wyll we declare, of whiche there hath been moost assured and euident certaintie shewed vnto vs by the vndoubted Apostles and disciples of Christ, the whiche had not onely theimselues with their owne iyes seen a great parte of the thynges that they tolde vnto vs, and hadde hearde thesame with their owne eares, and had the handeling and doyng of muche parte therof with theyr owne handes: but also hadde theimselues been a parte of thesame actes that they reported were doen, as men that had doen many thinges at the commaundemēt of the Lord, and had suffered not a fewe thynges for his sake, because they were in all matiers inseparable companions and folowers of Iesus Christ, almoste neuer out of his presence. Neyther ought there the lesse credite to bee giuen vnto me, for that I do wryte suche thynges, not as I haue seen my selfe, but as I haue learned of others. It was requisite to a matier beyng so ferre out of all vse, and so straunge, and so vncredible: that feith should first be acquired and woonne out of all the senses of the body, and than thesame feith to be confirmed with euident wondres and miracles.

Of the actes that are cōe to passe emong vs.

But this kynde of tokens or prouffes cannot euermore continue ne endure. For on the one syde Christe didde not long exhibite himselfe to bee seen in this worlde, and on the other syde miracles are thynges but for a time geuen to mēnes hardnesse of beleefe, and afterwarde once to ceasse and to haue an ende. It is sufficient that the rudimentes and first principles of the feith, proceded from suche beginninges as these. Thomas the Apostle sawe Christ after his resurrection, hearde hym and felte hym with his handes, and than beleued: but oure Lorde and maister Christe pronounceth suche persones to bee blissed, whiche although they haue not bodyly seen the thynges dooen, yet neuertheleſſe dooe geue as muche credite to the woordes of the gospell, as if they had personally been presente at the dooyng of thesame. For otherwyse, if onely the iyes should bee beleued, euen verey they that were bodyly conuersaunt with our lorde, doe reporte many matiers, at the dooyng of whiche themselues were not presente, but learned it of other persones beeyng substanciall, credible, and true of theyr reporte: as (for an exaumple) of the natiuitie and petigrewe of Christe, of the wyse men that were called Magi, (whiche came from the Easte to see Christ beeyng newe borne) of the flying of Ioseph & Marie with Christ into Egipte, of Satan how he tempted Christe. We Euangelistes, though we sawe not the begynnynges of thynges, yet haue we seen the sequeles and endes of them. We haue seen in the Apostles, al that euer oure Lorde had promised of them in the gospell. We haue seene theim beeyng enspired with the holy ghoste, geue thesame holy spirite of God to other persones also beeyng baptised, by layeng their hande ouer them: yea, and in our owne selues haue we found and felt the effectual power and strength of the holy ghoste. We haue seen diuilles dryuen out of mē at the name of Iesus: we haue seen diseases put away: we haue seen poysons voyde of al effecte or force to dooe harme. We haue seen that the maiestie of the gospel, by men of slendre substaunce in worldely rychesse, by men of lowe degree borne, by men priuate, that is to saye, by men hauyng no seculare autoritie at al, is yet neuertheleſſe in a fewe yeres famously notified

That it mighte not bee denyed but that they hadde seen heardе and felte these thynges.

throughout the whole vniuersall yearth, and that the great and mightie princes of the worlde haue in vaine striued and wrastled to suppresse it.

And veraily euen the same thyng also, had our Lorde spoken afore and prophecied: whan I shall be lifted vp from the yearth (sayed he) I shall drawe all thinges to my selfe. Suche autours and auouchers of thinges, and the growyng of the same thynges to suche an ende and proufe as afore is sayd, doth not suffre vs to doubte, neither of tho thynges that haue passed before our tyme, ne yet of suche thynges, as for many hundredes of yeres to come are promyled. Whatsoeuer had of long tyme afore been foresayed by the godly sayinges of the prophetes, Iesus at his cummyng into the worlde did perfourme and fulfyll: and whatsoeuer thyng Christ toward his departure from hēce vp to heauen, sayd afore to thapostles that it should come to passe, hath in dede come to passe: neither is it to be doubted, but that he will with semblable vprightnesse and trueth, accomplishe all other thynges, whiche he hath differred vntyll his second cōming to bee perfourmed, concernyng the resurrection of our bodyes, and concernyng the rewardes of the godly persones, and of the wicked. Therfore as for the ordre and processe of the gospell matters, I haue with earnest studie throughly boulted out of the mouthes of suche, whose woordes are vndoubted and certain to write vpon. And out of these haue I picked suche pointes as semed to be moste effectuall and moste helpyng to the fayth, and to the deuout godlynesse of the gospell: not geuyng it but a litle touche here and there as it were at rouers, and as men gather floures here and there one, at auenture as they come to hand: but folowyng the ordre of the tyme, and the due course or processe of matters, I haue diligently compyled the storye, yea euen somewhat ferre fettyng the matter from the firste grounde, that is to wete from the conception of hym, whiche went before the commyng of our saluecour, lyke as in byrth, so in preachyng also, and in death. And than furthermore I treate of the straunge conception of Christ within the wombe of the virgin, of the byrthe of the childe, of his circumcision, of the purification of Marie, of sōdrie prophecies spoken vpon the childe, & of certayne tokens of godly towardnesse whiche euen very than already did like certaine litle sparkes appere in the chylde: of whiche thynges the other Euangelistes that with vpright trueth and certaintie wrote before, had touched almoste nothing at all. After al this, how Iohn baptised and preached, and than of the baptising of Iesus, of his beyng tēpted, of his doctryne, of wondres that he wrought, of his death, of his beeyng layed in graue, of his arisyng again frō death to lyfe, and of his returnyng vp into heauen. These thynges well set in an ordre eche in his moste conuenient place, I shall in another treatise adde, howe he sente the holye ghoste, and what were the firste rudimentes and principles of the primitiue churche whan it firste came vp, and begonne, and also as it grewe from time to tyme greater and greater, what the chiefe Apostles Peter, James, Paule, and Barnabe didde, what they taughte, by what myracles, and by what afflictions they glorifyed the name of oure Lorde Iesus, not for that I suppose that these thynges wyll bee strange vnto thee, moste honest Theophilus, but partelye to the entente that thou mayest eftesones perusse in an ordre tho thynges whiche thou haste by piecemele learned of others: and partelye to thende that thou mayest of a more perfecte, and assured credence, throughly perceyue by my wrytyng, the same thynges, whiche thou haddest hearde of others afore tymes by theyr liuelye

Theophilus i Greke is in englisshe the louer of god.

The fyrst Chapter.

WHan the tyme by the purpose and appoyntemente of God prefixed, and by soondrye sage sawes of the Prophetes aforetolde and promised, and by the space of so many hundred yeres, greatly wished for of holy and deuout people, was now come, that the sonne of God shoulde take vpon hym the nature of manne, for to redeme mankynde by his death, and aswell by his doctrine as also by his exaumple of doyng, for to enstructe vs towardes the knowledge of the trueth, and the earnest loue and desyre of the godlye trade of the ghospell, and finally by his promyses for to set vp oure hertes towardes the hope of the lyke euerlastyng in heauen: for because all this same that was to bee doen was straunge, nor the lyke heard of, in any age or tyme afore, (the wysedome of god by secrete wayes and meanes ordreyng all thynges) there was leate passe no poynte at all of any tokens or euident signes, whiche mighte to a matter of it selfe incredible, purchase credite, and cause it to bee beleued among men.
For who hath euer heard a man to haue been borne of a woman on earth, which should for euermore reigne God in heauen? The histories euen of the Gentiles also be full of straunge thinges that haue happened against the cõmon course of nature. In the bokes of the olde testament we learne that fyer hath been cast downe from heauen: we learne the sea to haue opened and deuided it selfe into twoo partes: water to haue been gotten foorth of a drie stone by touchyng it with a long rodde, and deade menne to haue been restored agayne to lyfe. But who hath euer hearde a virgin to haue brought foorth a chylde without mans helpe? Yet in dede the chiefe article of our saluacion it was, that this same point were to all persones throughly perswaded, that is to wete, Jesus to be the same Messias, whose cummyng, all foretellynges of the Prophetes had promysed, and whom all the lawes of Moses had by waye of a shadowe expressed, and of whome onely all persons muste hope and truste to haue theyr saluacion.

¶ There was in the dayes of Herode the kyng of Jewry, a certayne priest named Zacharie, of the course of Abia, and his wyfe of the doughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth. The texte.

Wherfore by the high wysedome and prouidence of god, there was one prepared, the whiche beyng for his owne parte also borne into this worlde after a woonderfull straunge sorte, shoulde goe before the heauenly chylde bearing of the virgin Marie: and the which through the nobleneſſe of his linage, through ſuche his holyneſſe of liuing as had not afore that tyme bene hearde of, and by his auctoritie, through his rare gyftes of grace gotten among all the people, might vnto Chriſt beyng not yet borne, procure the fyrſt knoweleage and faith among the Iewes whiche were harde of beliefe, euen as the doctrine of the goſpel (wherof Chriſt was the heade, the firſte founder, and firſte bringer vp) was at the firſte beginnyng made acceptable vnto the worlde, by the teſtimonye of the olde lawe, the figure of the whiche olde lawe, Zacharie and Iohn did repreſent. But in ſhorte proceſſe of tyme, (the courſe of thynges beeyng chaunged a contrarie waie) lyke as Chriſt whan his vertues & giftes of grace were ſhewed forth, did derken the glorye of Iohn: ſo the brightneſſe of the maieſtie of the ghoſpell, as ſoone as it once opened it ſelfe vnto the worlde, dyd (as ye woulde ſaie) clene abrogate the autoritie of Moſes lawe. And ſo it was that where Iacob the Patriarke a litle before he ſhoulde dye, beyng endowed with the ſpirite of prophecie, did foreſaye verye many thynges which ſhould afterwarde come to paſſe, whan it was now come to the mencioning and namyng of Iuda, (out of whoſe tribe our Lorde Ieſus ſhoulde iſſue and procede by lineall diſſent) he ſpake theſe wordes of the prophecie, folowyng. The ſcepter (ſayed he) ſhal not be taken from Iuda, ne the head rewler from the thighe of hym, vntyll he come that muſt be ſent, and verye he ſhalbe the expectacion of all nacions. This prophecie did euidently enough betoken that Meſſias ſhould at ſuche tyme come, whan the people of the Iewes (whiche had afore from tyme to tyme euermore been rewled and gouerned by capitaynes, iudges, kynges, and prieſtes of their owne nacion) ſhould now be ſubiecte to a prince borne in a forreyne countreye. And theſame Prophecie did al vnder one geue a token, that the grace of the goſpell (whiche the Iewes would deſpyſe and ſette at nought) ſhoulde paſſe and go from theim vnto the Gentyles. But firſte of all others, Herode the ſonne of Antipater, whereas he was neyther deſcended of the bloud of the Iewes, and yet was beſides forth an vngodly and a wicked perſon, was not onlye enfraunchiſed and called to the honour to be a denſen of the countrey of Iewrie, but alſo through the fauour of Ceaſar Auguſtus than Emperour of Rome, obtayned the kyngdome and rewle ouer the Iewes. Therfore euen by this token alone (though there had been no mo, nor no other) the Scribes and the Phariſees, (whiche tooke vpon them the exacte and perfite knowleage of the lawe,) might haue geaſſed, that the tyme was now come, whan that ſame man ſhould bee borne, who defacyng and vanquiſhyng all terrene or yearthly kingdomes, ſhould bryng into the worlde an heauenly kyngdome, and whiche in the place and ſtede of tyrannes, ſhould create paſtours, and in ſtede of lordely maiſters, ſhould make tender fathers. Furthermore whereas the dignitie of the Iudaical prieſthoode was in excedyng high honour and in wondreful eſtimacion emong al perſones: the holy ghoſt had by the prophetes declared afore, that this prieſthood alſo of the Iewes ſhould be abrogated and abolyſhed, after that he were once come, the whiche not beeyng enoynted by men with materiall or bodelye oyle, but beeyng enoynted by God in ſpirite with the oyle celeſtiall, ſhoulde through a ſacrifice (beeyng in dede no mo but one ſole ſacrifice, but theſame neuertheleſſe a ſacrifice of moſte abſolute efficacie & vertue) take awaye all the ſynnes of the worlde: and ſhould through the feyth of the goſpell, and the bounteous geuyng of the ſpirite of God, ſanctifie and make holy all thynges.

For

For Daniel had prophecied, that after the wrekes or seuen doubles of yeres, that is to say, after seuen times seuen yeres by God prefixed, it should come to passe, that the holy of all holyes should be enoincted, and than from thence forth should the hostes and sacrifices of the olde lawe ceasse. When thynges eternall shall be once come, thynges transitorye shall haue an ende: when ghostely thynges shall be come, thynges carnall shall cease: when the trueth shall be come, feyned counterfeytes shall geue place: when the lyght shall be come, shadowes & darkenesse shall banishe away: when Christe shall haue begonne to speake, the voice of the grosse lawe shall playe mum, vntill that it too, do openly professe hym, whom vntill nowe, it did rather (as who should saye) with certain tokens of becking, nod at, or poynte vnto, the by expresse wordes pronounce and declare to be he. At suche tyme therfore as Herode, beyng first a forreinour and an aliene borne, and secondarily a wicked person, and with many manslaughters and hainous murders, polluted, held all vnder his rewle and obeisaunce emong the Jewes, not by the authoritie of God, but by the fauour of Ceasar Augustus: & at what time the religion of the Jewishe temple, which consisted in externall figures & ceremonies, did moste chiefly of all flourishe emong men: at what time extreme wickednesse & all vngodly facions did before the face of God reigne emong the Scribes, the Phariseis, the elders, & the bishops, vnder the false pretensed colour & cloke of holinesse: euen than dyd the coming of the Lord Jesus, after this sorte as we shall now tel, begyn first to be knowen to the worlde. There was vnder a wicked king a godly priest, euen (as ye would saye) the last remaines that was left of the olde ordre of priesthood, not beeyng yet corrupted with so many vices: this priestes name was Zachary, whom the ordre of lottes cūming about again by course, did at that present time call to the ministryng of the sacres & holy rites in the temple. For so had Dauid sorted all the whole ordre of priestes into two principall families, that is to wete, of Eleasar, and of Ithamar. The other families being subiect vnto these two, he deuided into fower and twentie lottes, that euerye of them in ordre one after an other, should in theyr courses minister the sacres in the temple, eight daies space a piece: abstening all that while from all thinges, which by the rites of Moyses prescripcion, semed to make a mā vncleane: refrayning also frō cumpanying with their wiues, nor cumming once within their owne house, but abydyng still in the temple, to the ende that they myght with the more chastitie & with the more puritie handle the seruice of God: but to all the residue of the priestes (besides him whose course it was to minister for that weeke) it was lefull in the meane space to attende to their wiues and their childrē & to be occupied about their owne secular affaires, so that it were thynges necessarie and requisite to be done. And so it was, that whyle this ordre was thus in deuiding by lottes, emong the fower and twentie families, the eight place fell by lotte to Abia, of whom Zacharye was lineally descended, and into whose place Zachary had by course succeded. All thissame, though it semed to be doen by mere chaunce at auenture, yet was there no one poynte therof, but it was wrought by the high wysedome and prouidence of God, yea not so muche as the veray numbre of the course, but it was for a purpose and a consideracion. For lyke as the numbre of seuen for many causes hath the figure & signification of the olde lawe, so doeth the numbre of eight well accorde to the grace of the gholpel, for asmuche as the euerlasting blisse of hea-

And Zacharie had also a wife named Elizabeth, not only the better to be estemed for the respecte of her noble birth (for she came of ỹ stocke and bloud of Aaron the first prieste of the people of Israell) but also worthie to be had in reuerence and worship for hir integritie and perfecte goodnesse of behaueour, to the intente that suche an holy man as Zacharie was, should not be without a wyfe accordyng.

And his wife of the daughters of Aaron.

The texte. ¶ They were both righteouse before God, and so walked in all the commaundementes and ordeynaūces of the Lord, that no man could fynde faulte with them. And they had no childe because that Elizabeth was barainē, and they both were now well stricken in age.

For it was in verey dede an holy wedlocke knitte and made vp, not so much by copulacion of their bodies, as by lykenesse of theyr mindes and hertes, and by the felowship of godlines, because they were both of them verey good folkes and iust, not with the iustice of the Phariseis (whiche Phariseis vnder a false couloure and counterfaite shewe of holynesse, did sette foorth theyr peynted cheathe to the iyes of men for lucre and for worldely prayse, defourmyng their faces and makyng them vnsightly for the nons, a troumpette blowyng before them, at all suche times whan they gaue their almes, seekyng to be estemed holy by reason of long prayers made in corners of the stretes, whan their herte was drouned in all fylthinesse of haynous offences and trespaces against God:) but Zachary and Elizabeth with vncorrupt hertes, dyd in suche wyse obserue and kepe all thynges whiche the Lord had commaunded by the lawe: that neyther they gaue vnto men any holde or tytle to fynde faulte with them, and yet (the which is a poynte of no small difficultie) they did also by the puritie and clenesse of their liuyng, shewe themselfes pleasyng in the sight of God. Yea and this verey poynte also was wrought by the high wysedome of God, of a speciall prouision, to the ende that suche a one as should afterwarde geue testimonie vnto Christe at his cumming, might on his owne behalfe be in all maner degrees worthy acceptacion emong the people of the Iewes: first, for the noblenesse of his linage being descended of the ordre of priesthood aswell on the fathers syde as on the mothers syde: secondarily for the liuyng of both his parentes beyng vnreprouable: thirdly for the vertues & giftes of grace in his owne selfe, beyng wonderfull, and suche as were but in fewe persones to be found: and finally for his glorious death, whan he should suffre for the truthes sake. Suche a tryar verely it was mete ỹ he should haue, which came to allure to hymselfe the whole worlde, with the sauor, as it were, of the good fame and opinion that should spryng of hym. Furthermore by the prouidence of God, this poynte also was wrought, that the straunge maner of his natiuitie should stirre vp the myndes of men to haue a speciall regarde of Iohn: and no suche common matiers or factions as were in other folkes to be looked for at his hande, the whiche was borne into this worlde not after the common course of nature, but by the onely benefite of God. For although the holy conuersacion of zacharie and Elizabeth was specially well approued & allowed of all persons: yet in this one poynte their godlynesse semed to haue but hard happe, that both of them were verey ferre growē in age without hauing any issue or childe in all their tyme. For emong the Iewes lyke as the fruitfulnesse of matrimonie was reputed for a certayne thyng of great Royaltie: so was barainnesse in as muche reproche as any thyng, and was rekoned in the numbre of the chiefe misshappes and euils of this lyfe. people did interprete and take those persons to bee reiected and cast out of the fauour of God, whiche had not had the fortune and happe, with some kynde of issue to encrease and multiplie the people of the Iewes, beeyng a people specially chosen & dedicate vnto God. For the Iewes beyng altogether grosse and carnall, had not yet learned, that a spirituall and ghostely people it was, whiche God would haue by an heauenly generacion styll from tyme to tyme more and more to be multiplied with continuall succession of issue. They had not yet heard that blissed were they persons, whiche had gelded themselues for the kingdome of heauen. And this matter dyd not a lytle grieue them bothe in their mindes, respecially Elizabeth, who was now euen already by a muche reprochefull name in euery bodyes mouth called baraine, and was reckoned in the number of women of hard happe, as one of suche barainesse, that she was now past all lykelyhood or hope to haue any chylde, because that beeyng many yeres hauyng passed in the compainie of her wedded housebande, she had yet brought forth no fruite of matrimonie. For the reproche of barainnesse is woont moste specially to light on the wome. And this despaire of hauing any chyld, the old age of them both had encreased. But the bountefous goodnesse of God, did of tender fauour geue vnto the deuoute prayers and desires of their hertes, that thyng which the strength and power of nature dyd not geue to the compainying of their bodyes.

And they bothe were nowe well stricken in age.

And it came to passe, that whan Zacharie executed the priestes office before God, as his course came, according to the custome of the priestes office, his lotte fell to burne incense. And he wente into the temple of the Lorde, and the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer, whyle the incense was in burnyng.

Therfore whan zacharie executed the office of the priestе in the order of his course, whiche (as we haue sayed) was in the course of Abia: and continuing within the temple in the sight of God, attended the ministryng of the sacres, lyke a pure and a chaste man: and now according to the custome and maner, there was one to be chosen to goe into the innermoste and priuiest place of the temple (which is called Sancta sanctorum, that is to say, the holy of holyes, or the principall holy place) the chaunce of the lotte so fell, that he was chosen to entre into the principall holy place, (which it was not lefull for any person to entre except the bishop, or suche an one as were appointed in the bishops stede) and there, on the altare that stood in the secrete inner part of the temple, to lay holy incense made of certayne swete odoures in the olde lawe appointed, that is to wete, of balme, onycha, swete galbanum, and frankyncense of the clerest sorte. For this kinde of sacrifice was estemed emong the Iewes to be the moste holy aboue all others, insomuche that to the seeyng of this sacrifice whan it was in doyng, the lay people were not admitted to come in, no nor yet any of the leuites neither. But al the residue besides the priest that did execute, taried without, beyng separated and deuided from that place with a baile, makyng their deuout prayers all the meane whyle, that God would vouchesalue to ratifie that, that was than in offeryng for the helth & safegarde of the whole people: and so remained they without, vntill the priestе after the sacrifice in the inner place cõpleted, came forth againe to the people, to finish the residue of thinges, which to the ordenarie obsequies and rites of sacrifice did appertеine. And the priest did not only pray for the people, but also for himselfe, according vnto the prescripcion of the lawe, as one beeyng a mortall man himselfe aswell as the others, and in daunger of falling into the errours and vices of this worlde.

The texte. And there appeared vnto hym an Aungell of the Lord, standyng on the ryghtsyde of the altare of incense. And whan Zacharie sawe hym, he was abashed, & feare came vpon hym.

Therfore whereas Zacharie had many yeres afore often tymes with moste earneste desires, cryed vnto God to deliuer aswell his wyfe from the reproche of barrainesse, as also hymselfe from the griefe & pensifnesse of beyng without issue: yet (notwithstanding a certaine despaire of hauyng any children many a day sence conteined in his minde,) he did euen at that present tyme with moste ardent prayers, require of God as though he had than been present before his face, the publike redempcion of the people, which had now many hundred yeres been looked for. And in dede the fume of the incense mounting vp from the altare, was cast abrode in the aier on euery syde, but the desire of this deuoute bishoppe, perced vp euen to God, the Aungels carryng it, whose office it is to conueigh vp to almightie God the prayers of the godly, and agayne to bryng downe to vs his bounteouse largesse. An Aungell therfore that had been sente from heauen, stood at the ryght ende of the altare, on which the swete sauours of incense was burned, as one ready to declare some glad tydinges (bicause thynges that chaunce to be on the ryghtsyde, haue commonly a luckie signification of some good happe to come,) Zacharie, whan he had soodainly espyed this Aungell shynyng with celestiall brightnesse (for he came not in openly in a bodily fourme as men vse to do, but soodainly and vnware shewed himselfe visible) truly he was sore dismayed in his minde, and taken with a great feare; not that the Aungell made a shewe of any maner thyng to be feared, but for that the infirmitie of mannes body is not able to abyde the maiestie of the spirites or Aungels of heauen.

Thyre appered vnto hym an Aungell.

Whan Zacharie sawe him, he was abashed, and feare came vpon hym.

The texte. But the Aungell sayed vnto hym: feare not Zacharie, for thy prayer is heard. And thy wyfe Elizabeth shall beare a sonne, and thou shalt cal his name Iohn. And thou shalt haue ioy and gladnesse, and many shall reioyce at the birth of hym. For he shall be great in the syght of the lorde.

But lyke as it is a poynte of mannes weakenesse to fall in a tremblyng and quakyng at the soodaine sight of an Aungell, so is it the propertie of the great goodnesse of them, with ientle and familiar speakyng vnto vs, to take awaye our feare. The Aungell therfore with a gracious looke, and with ientle faire woordes speaking vnto Zachary, sayed in this wyse: Zachary, there is no cause why thou shouldest be afeard, but there is cause why thou maiest be glad & ioyfull. For I bryng glad tydinges bothe vnto thee, and to all the people for whom thou art nowe makyng intercession. God hath graunted thy deuoute and godly petition. The same Messias the deliuerer and sauer of hys people, whiche long and many dayes gonne hath been promysed, and many hundred yeres already looked for, is nowe at hande to come in dede. And not only that thyng whiche thou haste made petition for is obteyned: but an other thyng also doeth the goodnesse of God adde to the heape of thy desyres, which thyng thou durst not bee so bolde to aske, because thou were nowe cleane out of all hope that it myght by any possibilitie come to passe. Thou madest petition for the redemer of the worlde: thou shalt receyue also, one that shall declare and publyshe the redemer vnto the worlde.

And the Aungell sayed.

Feare not. Thy prayer is heard.

Thy wife Elizabeth shall beare a sonne.

The fruitefulnesse of thy wyfe Elizabeth that hathe been hitherto by the wysedome and prouidence of God delaied and put of, shall bryng vnto the no smal increase of ioyes: and a generall gladnesse of al the people, shal be coupled with

with the particular reioycing of thyne owne priuate householde, yir fruitefulnesse that all folke despaired of, shall haue a commoditie, and do good for this purpose, that all persons maye vnderstande thissame chyldebearyng not to be of the common rate, but the chylde which shalbe borne, so be borne God beyng the worker and doer of it. In dede thy wyfe shall bryng forth to thee a child, but she shall not bryng forth child to thee alone: she shall bryng forth to the whole people in generall: she shal bryng forth to God, by whose prouidēce all this matter euery whyt of it is tempered and wrought. So muche the more to the wondre of the worlde shall she bryng forth, that it is so ferre past tyme of her age ere she bryng forth: so muche the more to the pleasyng and reioycyng of all parties, that she had no suche hope: so muche the more to her good happe and fortune, that she shall bryng forth a sonne, and not a sonne at all aduentures, but the great publisher, and foregoer, and (as who should say) the vsher and maker of way, and the purseuaunt of the moste great Messias that is to come. To the office of suche an high preeminence, is he by the free and franke fauour of God, picked out and deputed, a for that cause shalt thou call his name Iohn, that the people may euen therby at leste wise be aduertised, that he shalbe veray well accepted of God, and plenteously heaped with many heauenly gyftes of grace. Therfore the sorowe whiche the barainnesse of thy wyfe hath hitherto brought vnto thee, shall be redubbed with plentifull ioy, and with muche reioycing. Neither shal this ioy be kept or inclosed within the walles or precincte of thyne owne house. There shall at thy ioy a great many of thy frendes reioyce, whiche were sorowefull afore for thy sorowe. There shall leape for ioy at the byrth of thy sonne, all suche as do thirst the cummyng of Messias. This Messias beyng as it were the sunne in the skye, thy sonne shall go before as it were a certayne day sterre, to geue knowlage afore by his woonderfull brightnesse, that the arisyng of him is euen at hande, which shall on euery syde, put awaye the derkenesse of all the whole vniuersall worlde. In dede the other shall be out of all comparison moste greatest, but yet thy sonne too lyke as he shalbe muche inferiour to the other: so shall he in dignitie excell and passe all the reste of the other Prophetes that hitherto haue been. For he shall in veray dede be great, not only in the opinion of men, but also in the eyes of the Lorde, vnto whom no man is great, but by the vertues and gyftes of grace whiche himselfe doeth frankly geue. For he shall be great, not in worldly richesse and ruffleyng porte of this lyke, or in worldely dominion, but rather by the contempte and despisyng of those thinges, which make certayne persones great in the eyes of men. And the lesse that he shall desyre the commodities or welth of this worlde, so muche the more plenteously shall he be couched full of goodes heauenly.

And thou shalt calle his name Iohn.

And thou shalt haue ioy. &c.

¶ Wyne also and strong drynke shall he not drynke, and he shall bee replenished with the holy Ghost euen from his mothers wombe: and many of the chyldren of Israel shall he turne to their lorde God. And he shall goe before hym in the spirite and power of Helias, to turne the hertes of the fathers vnto the chyldren, and the vnbelieuers to the wysedome of the iust men, to make ready a perfecte people vnto the lorde.

For these filthy delites of sensualitie haue no place in such an one, in whose breste the holy ghost hathe taken possession afore to dwell in: which holy ghost shall replenishe the mynde and soule of thy sonne euen whyle he lyeth secrete within the enclosure of his mothers wombe, that he may play the parte of a Prophete in gesture, before he be able to haue any vtteraunce of woordes by speakyng. And in short processe of yeres, whan the gyftes of the spirite of God shall haue growen as his yeres and age shall do, he shall worke wondres: on the one syde, by the exaumple of his moste holy life, and on the other syde, through suche his preachyng as men shall marueyle at. For (accordyng to the prophecie of Malachias,) many of the children of Israel beeyng fallen from the fauour of God, (by reason that whyle they bearyng themselfes bolde on the carnall lawe, tooke no regarde to do those thynges, whiche the figures of the lawe do signifie) he shall conuerte to theyr Lord God, preachyng with great frankenesse and plainnesse, the kyngdome of God to be at hande: exhortyng them to the repentaunce & mendyng of theyr former lyfe: makyng without warde baptisyng in water, a foreproofer to the abolishyng of synne, whiche abolishing of synne was to come through Messias: and finally vnto all persons openly shewyng that same manne, whom God for this purpose would shortly after send into the worlde, that by hym alone and onely, euerlastyng saluacion should come vnto all men. This same Messias shall first come as a poore humble mã of lowe degree, to the ende that he may conferre & geue euerlastyng saluacion vnto all persons putting their trust & affiaunce in hym. Then afterwardes shall he eftsones come in maiestie to geue rewardes vnto euery one accordyng to their dedes, that is to weete, to the good and the godly euerlastyng lyfe, and to the vnbeleuyng and wiked persons euerlasting death. And lyke as by Malachias prophecie, Helias shall be the foremessagier of his second cummyng, to prepare the heartes of mẽ by his preaching, agaynst that same great and terrible daye of the Lorde, ryght so shall thy sonne be the foremessagier of the former cummyng, in whiche God by his sonne Messias, shall descend downe into the yearth, to lure & prouoke all persons in generall without exception, by Johns preaching, vnto the knowledge and loue of himselfe. And for this poynte he shall of a great many, be thought to be Helias. Neyther shall he without good cause be sayd to be Helias, in that he shall in the spirite and power of Helias come before the cummyng of the Lorde, to the ende that (as the Prophete Malachias hath written) he maye turne the hartes of the fathers to the children: wherby the Jewes, who haue so farre growẽ out of kynde and fallen from the holy trade of their forefathers, may amende, and come agayne to better grace: and that the same Jewes beleuyng in the woordes of Messias (by whom God shall speake vnto them) may truely deserue to bee called the children of Abraham, in that they folowe the prompte readynesse of beleuyng, whiche was in Abraham: and also that suche persons, as whyle they cleaue fast to the outwarde rynde or barke of the lawe, do not vnderstand the minde and effectuall pith of the lawe, he may conuerte and bryng vnto the wysedome of the iust, whiche haue learned, that vnder the litterall playster or pergetyng of the lawe, there lyeth hydden some higher poynte, and some holyer matter, the whiche shall ere long, be vttered abrode by the preachyng of Messias, who shall perfeitely accomplyche and fulfyll the lawe in the right kynde as it ought to be, but thy sonne beeyng as a waye leader vnto the heauenly many of ỹ children of Israel shal be turne to their Lord.

And he shal goe before hym. &c.

Mala. iiii.

To turne ỹ hearttes of the fathers vnto the children.

wenly preaching of thilſame Meſſias, ſhall prepare the heartes of menne, that he may deliuer vp vnto Meſſias at his cumming, a people not vtterlye vntraded or vnentred in his diſcipline, but ſomewhat prepared already, and inſtructed therunto with the agniſyng and knowledgyng of theyr owne ſynfulneſſe, with the expectacion of the kyngdom of heauen, and with feling a great miſſe and lacke of the Meſſias to come. For ſo was it thought beſt vnto almyghtye God, by caſtyng fyrſt of all, certeine entreinges and principles, to bryng man, whiche had been fallen to vtter ignorannce and wickednesſe, a lytle and a lytle by degrees, vp to the higheſt poyntes of godly perfeccion.

Do make redy a perfect people vnto the Lorde.

The texte.

And Zacharie ſayed vnto the Aungell: by what token ſhall I knowe this? For I am olde, and my wyfe is well ſtricken in age. And the Aungell aunſwered, and ſayed vnto hym: I am Gabriell that do ſtand in the preſence of God, and am ſent to ſpeake vnto the, and to ſhewe the theſe glad tydinges. And beholde, thou ſhalt be dumme, and not hable to ſpeake vntyll the daye that theſe thynges come to paſſe, becauſe thou diddeſt not beleue my woordes whiche ſhalbe fulfilled in theyr tyme.

The Aungell bſyng all thilſame frendely talke, Zacharie hath nowe putte awaye the feare that he was in. But forbecauſe it were great high poyntes that the Aungell promyſed, and by courſe of nature, not credible: Zacharye bothe after the maner and vſe of the Iewes, and alſo repreſentyng a figure of theyr Synagoge, requireth to haue ſome matter of weight to be annexed to the promiſes, by ſome euidente token, to the ende that one miracle ſhoulde obtayne aſſured credite vnto an other. Wherfore he aunſwered, and ſpake vnto the Aungell in this ſorte. By what preſente token nowe out of hande maye I knowe, that thilſame whiche thou doeſt promyſe to come, is a matter of perfrite certayntie? For otherwyſe the very feleyng of nature ſayeth the contrarye. For I for my parte am already a verye aged man: and my wyfe alſo is alreadye ouer ferre ſtricken in yeres, to haue any chyldbearing hoped for of her bodye. Howe ſhall that thyng nowe chaunce vnto me and her, beyng both of vs olde and paſt hauyng any fruite, the whiche dyd not chaunce vnto vs whan we were young, and in perfeite luſtineſſe of our bodyes? Then ſayed the Aungell agayne: If a mortall man beeyng ſent from another mortall man ſhould promiſe vnto the ſuche thynges as theſe, thou mighteſt well, and not without good cauſe, doubt of the promyſe. For I graunt that thilſame thyng, whiche I promyſe, is aboue mans power, and aboue the common ordre and courſe of nature. But neyther is it poſſible for an Aungell to bryng a meſſage of vanitie, nor any thyng there is ſo vncredible among menne, but that God can eaſily perfourme it vnto them, that beleue in his promiſſes.

For I am old and my wyfe is wel ſtricken in age. &c.

For I am theſame Aungell Gabriell, many yeres gone, ſente to the Prophete Daniell, the whiche from tyme to tyme do ſtande in the ſight of God, among the ſeuen pryncipall ſeruitours of heauen, in a readyneſſe to do all maner obedient ſeruice at the wyll and pleaſure of God: and at this preſent tyme eſpecially deputed and appoynted by God vnto this office, to bee the meſſagier betwene God and man in this preſent matter, then the whiche, neuer was there at any tyme any other acte done, more greatter, or more to be meruayled at. Therfore that thou maieſt not be in any maner diſtruſte, it is God that is the maker of this promiſe: and I the meſſagier ſent from theſame, to make relacion of the matter vnto thee, and to bryng thee glad tydynges.

I am Gabriell that ſtande i the preſence of God.

And ſence thou dooeſt ſo muche require, thou ſhalt haue geuen vnto

thee, that shall both bee a true token of the promyse in tyme cummyng to bee perfourmed, and also a punishemente for thy mystrustfulnes at this presente declared. Behold, thou shalt soodainly, euē from this instant become dumme, nor shalt not haue power to bryng a woorde out of thy mouthe, vntyll thy sonne beyng borne into this worlde, shall haue discharged my credite and promise, of the which there ought not any doubt to haue been made on thy behalf. For the tyme is nowe at hande, that the Synagoge whiche is so harde to be brought to beleue, shall kepe silence, and no persons shall haue tong to speake with at libertie, sauyng onely suche as with ready towardnes to beleue, shall obey and folowe the preachyng of the ghospell.

The texte. And the people were awating for Zacharie, and merueiled that he taried in the temple. And when he came furth, he could not speake vnto them. And they perceyued that he had seen a vision in the temple. And he beckened vnto them, and remained dumme.

Whyle these thynges were in doyng betwene Zacharie and the Aungell, within the innermoste tabernacle of the temple, all the whole body of the people stode awayting and lokyng, that the priest should come forth accordyng as the maner was, to execute and ministre the rest of the rites that were yet to bee done abrode in the presence of the multitude. And truely they were stricken in a great wonder, that he made suche tarying in the tabernacle a longer space, then the wonte vse was. At length furth cummeth zacharie, with a countenaunce in dede, shewyng an vnwoonte gladnes, but the vse of his speache cleane taken from him. By the whiche thinges the people right well vnderstood, that some vision had appered vnto him while he was within. For the presence and beyng together with any parte of the maiestie of God, or with any Aungell of heauen, is wonte to make a great alteracion in the state and moode of a mortall mans face and countenaunce, as in olde tyme it chaunced also vnto Moyses. And whan he had no power to speake with his tongue, he wrought by signes and tokens of poyntyng and noddyng with his head, whiche was, that the sacrifice had been done to the contentacion of God, and that God was highly pleased therwith, and that they should therfore rendre thankes vnto hym, in that he had graciously heard the deuout prayers of his seruauntes.

And then dyd zacharie (euen dumme as he was) remayne still within the temple executyng his office in ministryng the sacres, vntyll the numbre of his eight daies were completed & ended. The people of the Iewes, all that meane while duryng, had a prieste that could not speake, as an incling and a token of the lawe in shorte procesle of tyme afterward to ceasse, and to geue place vnto him, whiche bryngyng the trueth abrode to lyght, should putte awaye all shadowes of thynges, and make them to vanishe.

The texte. And so it was, that whan the dayes of his ministryng were expired, he departed into his owne house. And after those dayes, his wyfe Elizabeth conceyued, and hidde her selfe fiue monethes, saying: Thus hath the Lord delt with me in the dayes wherin he hath loked vpon me, to take awaye my reproche emong men.

And after those dayes his wyfe.

But the ordinarie tyme of his ministeryng in the temple beeyng expired, zacharie returned home to his owne house: and there, vpon confidence and trust of the Aungels promise, he enbraced his baraine & aged wyfe Elizabeth. For here in this case, there was no geuyng of themselues to the wanton desire of the flesshe, but great lacke & desire there was of ỹ child which should bryng the glory

glozy of God to light & knowledge by his lyfe, and his preachyng: and whiche ſhould be the foregoer of him, who hauing been a long ſeaſō loked for, ſhould at laſte bryng perfeite ſaluacion vnto all creatures. Chaſte enbracinges of the housebande and wyfe it is, whiche the promyſe of God doeth couple, and not wanton luſt of the bodye. An holy compaynying together of man and wyfe it is, that ſeketh nothyng els, but the fruite of iſſue: and godly is the loue and deſyre of ſuche iſſue, as is borne, not to our owne pleaſures and appetites, but to the publique benefite and welth of all creatures. Nowe whan Elizabeth had accordyng to the Aungels promyſe, conceyued: ſhe hidde her ſelfe out of companie, kepyng the matter cloſe from the ſyght of the people, by the ſpace of fiue monethes, in dede no leſſe than a glad woman, that ſhe was conceyued with childe, but yet (as vertuous diſpoſicion and chamefaſtnes commonly go together) more then halfe aſhamed, for becauſe that to ſuche perſons, as dyd not yet knowe all thiſſame matter to bee done, God being the worker and doer of it, ſhe being nowe already an aged woman, might ſeme to had wholly geuen herſelfe yet ſtill vnto the ſatiſfying of the wanton luſt of her body. For ſhe was not ignorannte, howe muche inclined the moſte parte of folkes are, aſwell to miſdeme the wurſt, as alſo to ſpeake naughtily. And the prudent minde of the woman, had alſo a further iye, and regarde vnto this poynte too, that there was no vauntes ne braggues to be made among the people, of the gyfte of God, vntill it were aſſuredly paſt all doubtes: leſte, if the thing had afterward quailled, or gone awaye in any behalfe, the reproche of her barainnes ſhould be double, for that beyng ſo fer ſtrieken in yeres ſhe had conceyued ſuche a vayne hope to haue a childe. Neuertheleſſe, whan by ſundry aſſured tokens, ſhe perfeitely knewe herſelfe to be with childe, ſhe did in ſuche wiſe at all times thewe herſelfe glad of her happie chaunce, that all this matter euery whit of it, what ſoeuer it were, ſhe referred vnto the onely goodneſſe of God. I haue hitherto (ſayeth ſhe) been diffamed with the reprochefull name of a barainne woman, and one that neuer ſhould haue childe, among the people of Iſrael, in whoſe opinion the barainnes of the body, is a thing of more diſhoneſtie & ſhame, then naughty diſpoſicio of the mynde. But the Lord (I ſee well) hath for this purpoſe made a delay of my fruitfulneſſe, that a childe borne nowe whan no man looked for it, not onely might deliuer me from the reproche of barainnes, but alſo ſhould cauſe vnto me the more aumple ioy. For plainly the free gyfte of God it is, who at ſuche time as beſt pleaſed him ſelfe, hath vouchedſafe to caſt a fauourable iye on me his ſimple handmaide, in ſuche ſorte, that by reaſon of my chyld (though beyng but one alone, & borne whan it was almoſt paſt ſea-ſon, yet neuertheles a childe ſpecially to be marked & regarded) whom I haue borne in Gods behalfe, I ſhall from henceforth in folkes communication bee reported to bee a mother muche happier then a great many of others, the whiche do with a great ſorte of childzen a piece, enriche their housebandes.

And ſhe hid her ſelfe fiue monethes.

Saying: thus hath the Lorde delte with me.

In ſ dales wherein he hath loked vpon me. &c

And in the ſixth moneth was the Aungell Gabriel ſent from God into a citie of Galile, the name wherof is Nazareth, to a virgin eſpouſed to a man, whoſe name was Joſeph, of the houſe of Dauid, and the name of the virgin was Mary. And the Aungell came in vnto her, & ſayd: haile thou full of grace, the lorde is with the. Bleſſed art thou among women. The texte.

Theſe thinges thus done, it remained, that the holier & greater piece of this miſterie, ſhoulde bee procured by the Aungell, that is to wete, that the ſonne of God beeyng God immortall, ſhould of a virgin, beeyng a creature ſubiecte vnto death, bee borne a man mortall: the like wherof neuer had afore ſence the creacion of the world been heard, ne to the laſt ende of the world again ſhould bee heard. Therfore whan the tyme from without begynnyng by God prefixed, drewe nere, that God the father would by his ſonne deliuer the whole vniuerſall worlde from the tyranny of death and of ſynne: he ſent the ſelfſame Aungell Gabriell, as a broker or procurer and a maker vp of this godly copulacion and ioynyng with the ſayed virgin. And this was done in the ſixth moneth after that Elizabeth was conceyued with John. Vnto this heauenly matter there was ſpecially deputed a tendre yong virgyn, not ſet furth to the worlde with aboundaūce of riches or poſſeſſions, not by famouſnes of name, not with portlyneſſe of lyfe, ne with the other thynges whiche this worlde vſeth to haue in high regarde: but endued with excellente vertues of the minde, the whiche do make a manne acceptable in the ſight of God: that is to ſaye, with puritie of lyfe vndefiled, with maidenly demurenes, and with godly deuocion. Her habitacion was in an homely baſſe litle toune of Galile called Nazareth, a people nothyng regarded ne ſet by emong the Jewes. And the virgin was eſpouſed vnto a man of no fame ne porte in any behalfe to the worldes eſtimacion: but for his vertues of the mynde, a man to be accepted afore God, a carpenter by occupacion, and his name Joſeph, beyng lineally deſcended of the ſtocke of Dauid, from the which ſtocke of Dauid, the eſpouſed virgin alſo had her progenie, to the ende that the caſe might not diſagree with the prophecie, whiche had promiſed that Meſſias ſhould be borne of the ſtocke of Dauid kyng of Iſrael. And the name of the virgin was Mary. God had for the nons picked out two perſons of lowe degree and of ſmall porte, to thentent that the worlde myght not in this heauenly matter, clayme or chalenge to it ſelfe any poynte or part therof. He had alſo picked out perſons of moſte faultleſſe and moſte pure behauiour, to the ende that no poynte of cryme myght be layed to theyr charge. He had picked out perſons coupled together in chaſte and leefull matrimonie, to thentent partely that the priuetie of a childe to bee borne by a pure virgin myght be ſecrete vntyll the due tyme therof: and partly that the caſe beyng otherwyſe vnbeleuable, (whiche was, that a virgin had without coumpaynying with any manne brought furth a chylde,) myght not lacke a witneſſe conueniēt. At a tyme whan this virgin was in her contemplacion within her priuy cloſet (as virginitie loueth to be ſecrete) the Aungell Gabriell apperyng viſible with muche bryghtnes came in vnto her, and hayled her with a ſtraunge ſorte of ſalutacion. Reſt thou well (ſayth he) and reioyce, o virgin beeyng full of grace, and highly in fauour. Thou haſt the Lorde tyght fauourable vnto thee, and muche thy frende. And therfore ſhalt thou be ſingularly renowmed, and of a laudable name among all women.

And in the ſixth moneth was the Aūgell Gabriell ſente from God.

Into a citee of Galile. &c.

And the name of the virgin was Marie.

Haile thou full of grace.

The texte. ¶ When ſhe ſawe him, ſhe was abaſhed at his ſaying: and caſt in her mynde, what maner of ſalutacion this might be. And the Aungel ſayd vnto her: Feare not mary. For thou haſt found grace afore God. Beholde, thou ſhalt conceyue in thy wombe, and beare a ſōne, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus. He ſhalbe great, and ſhalbe called the ſonne of the higheſt. And the Lord God ſhall geue vnto him the ſeate of his father Dauid, and he ſhall reigne ouer the houſe of Jacob for euer, and of his kyngdome there ſhalbe none ende.

But the virgin, at the ſodayne ſight of the Aungell, and agayne alſo at the fourme and tenour of his ſalutacion beeyng ſtraunge and ſuche as neuer had been heard of afore, forasmuche as she on her owne behalfe conceyued no great opinion of her selfe, was right muche dismayed in her minde. For that she was sore adrad at the entreyng of one in the likenesse of a young man not loked for, was a poynte of a certaine veray true maidenly & tendre shamefastnesse: that she made not answere out of hande, but cast with herselfe in her mynde, what thyng so straunge and so high a salutacio might meane, was partely a poynte of wysedome, and partely of demure softenesse. But forasmuche as the Aungell right well knewe what she was casting in her mynde, he would not suffre her any longer to stande in doubt or perplexitie: but both toke away her feare with speakyng iently vnto her, and also declared at large the cause of that his vnquod and straunge gretyng. Mary (sayeth he) there is no cause why thou shouldest be afeard. The iewell of thy virginitie and maydenhood, which thou art sigularly in loue withall, is safe vnto the without any daunger of lesyng it. Neyther am I come to please the, or to set the agog with a vaine salutacion: but I am come vnto the as a messagier of a matter both passyng ioyfull, and also veray great. Wonder not thine owne desertes. Of the mere fauour of god it is that is offered vnto the, & not of thine owne merite. And euen in this veray poynte thou doest please God, that thou standest in no conceipte of thy selfe. And let this suffice the, that thou haste atteyned grace & fauour at Gods hand. And nowe herken a thing neuer heard afore, but yet a true thyng. Thou shalt conceyue a babe in thy woombe, and shalt bryng furth a sonne, and shalt call his name Jesus, because he shall bryng saluacion vnto his people. And although he shalbe borne in an homely place, and of a mayden estemed to be of lowe degree: yet by reason of his heauenly gyftes of grace, he shal euery waye be moste greatest: insomuche, that after he shall once be knowen to the worlde, he shalbe called, not by the name of a Prophete, but the sonne of the hyghest. The surname shall be greater then any other manne maye haue, for because the chylde that must be borne, shall ferre surmounte the common rate and degree of mortall mannes state. In this chylde certes wyll the Lord God perfourme and accomplishe the thyng, which the prophecie, being to thee not vnknowen, hath promised. A man borne of the stocke of Dauid shall sit in the throne of his father. He shall not through the ayde and mayntenaunce of the worlde, vsurpe or take vpon hym a transitorie dominion and reigne of this worlde: but his heauenly father will geue him the heauenly reigne of Dauid: and he shal reigne ouer the people of Israel for euer without end. Neither shal there euer come any ende of his reigne, as the Prophete Esay hath prophecied.

And the Aungel sayd vnto her: Feare not Mary. 30.

Beholde, thou shalt conceyue in thy wõbe.

And of his kyngdome there shall be no ende. Esay. vii.

Than sayd Mary vnto the Aungell: howe shall this come to passe, seyng that I knowe not any man. And the Aungell answered, and sayd vnto her: The holy ghoste shall come vpon thee, and the power of the highest shall ouershadowe thee. And therfore the holy that shalbe borne, shalbe called the sonne of God.

The texte.

The hearte of this virgin dyd not through these so high promises of the Aungell, weaxe any whit the more haulte to take vpon her: neither dyd she of the highnes of the matters conceiue any distrust. She conceyued not in her mynde any lust the presumpcion, that when her sonne should be a kyng she on her parte also should be made a quene: neyther was she vnknowyng, that nothyng there was of suche high difficultie to bee done, whiche God was not hable with a mere becke to bryng to passe. All her care and thought was onely onely for the iewell of her virginitie, on whiche she had so muche set her loue. And therfore she doeth not requyre a token of the Aungell, as Zacharie had done: but doeth with maidenly shamefastnes, and also according to wisedom no more but enquire, to knowe of the Aungell the maner how the thing should be wrought and doen: and maketh answer vnto him in this maner: By what meane or waye shall it come to passe (sayeth she) that I shall bryng furthe a sonne, forasmuche as I am in suche sorte espoused to my good man whom I do nowe lyue withall, that yet neuertheles I haue no conuersation of his bodye, suche as wedlocke requireth. For continencie lyketh vs bothe, and this poynte of blyssfulnesse, yf it myght be, we would full fayne haue perpetually to endure betwene vs.

Than sayd Mary to the Aungell. &c.

The Aungell therfore teacheth howe it should be doen, and taketh awaye from the virgin all doubtfulnesse concernyng her virginitie. O virgin (sayeth the Aungell) nothyng shall in this matter be doen or wrought after the common course of nature. An heauenly chylde bearyng shall it be, and by an heauenly worker shall it from the firste ende to the laste be executed. Thou shalt continue in chaste loue towardes thy chaste spouse. Fruitefulnesse of issue the happiest that euer maye be, shall come to thy lotte without any detrimente or violacion of thy virginitie. For thou hast not an housband geuen vnto thee for any suche purpose, either that he should make thee a mother, or els thou make him a father: but the prouidence of God hath thought good by this meanes to make a sure waye for thy safegarde and preseruacion, for thy good name and fame, for thy virginitie and maidenhood, and for thy conuenient quietnesse. It was goddes pleasure that an vndoubted witnesse of this straunge chyldebearyng should be both present and assistente to the thyng: he would in no wyse, but that thou shouldest haue one, who with chaste and continente lyuyng in thy company, and with all poynctes of feithfull seruiceablenesse, should geue diligent attendaunce aswell on thee, as on the chylde that is to bee borne: and finally, it was his pleasure, that by this deuise & pretence, this misterie should bee kept secrete from the vnbeleuing sorte, and also kept secrete from the wicked spirites. And this holy copulacion of the diuine nature with the nature of man, shall not violate thy chastitie, but shall make it altogether holy. The father of heauen hath determined, after a straunge sorte, eftsones to begette his sonne on thee. Neither shall there any sede of a manne mortall bee requisite or nedefull to this diuine concepcion, but the holy ghost shall from heauen come downe into thee: and in thy wombe, (as it were in an heauenly workehouse) shall accomplishe the worcking of this holy babe: and in stede of the bodelye or carnall embracing of an housband, the highest shall ouershadowe thee, in such wyse tempering and qualifying his infinite power and vertue to the measure and capacitie of mannes nature: that it maye he hable to abyde the metyng together and the conioyning therof. Where filthy lust is in the carnall copulacion of man and wife, there whatsoeuer is borne, is borne vncleane, and thrall to synne. But this that shall be borne of thee, (because it shall be conceyued of the moste holy embracing of the highest: because it shalbe conceiued by the worcking of the holy ghost, who maketh all thynges holy: because it shall be conceiued of a virgin moste pure, whom of all women God hath purposely heretofore picked out, being clere from all spotte of sinfulnesse) shall immedatly be holy as soone as it shalbe conceyued. And at the first, by reason of the humaine body taken of the ſubſtaunce of thy body, it ſhall rightly be called the ſõne of a virgin, and the ſonne of man: but after the miſtery of this byrth once perceiued and vnderſtanded, he ſhall not be called the ſonne of Joſeph, but the ſonne of God: and that truly, not after the common guyſe, as iuſt perſons beyng purged from ſinnes, & iuſtified by the free fauour of God, are by adoption called the ſonnes of God: but he ſhall by a ſyngular reaſon and maner, be called the ſonne of God, of whom he is in deray true dede double begotte: once without beginning of time, & eternall, of his eternall father: and now in time, mortall, of a mortall mother, and a deray naturall man of a deray woman. And lyke as in this ioyny̆ng together, the diuine nature ſhall be vnited and knitte with the nature humayne: ſo ſhall the chylde reſemble the nature bothe of the one parent, whiche is God, and alſo of the other, whiche is man. This miſterie of goddes deuiſe and conueyaunce is of an higher ſorte, then that it may be perceyued euen of the deray Aungels. It is for thee ſufficient, to ſhewe a mynde beliefull and ready to obey. All the reſidue ſhall he accompliſh and bryng to effecte, who is of power to do whatſoeuer his will is.

¶ And beholde, Elizabeth thy couſyn, ſhe alſo hath conceyued a ſonne in her olde age. And this is the ſixt moneth with her that is called barain. For nothyng ſhalbe vnpoſſible with God. And Mary ſayed: beholde, I am the handmayden of the lorde, be it vnto me according to thy woorde. And the Aungell departed from her. The texte.

And nowe to the ende that both thy ioye may bee more aboundaunte, and thyne aſſiaunce of the more certaintie: take a freſh exaumple euen deray nere at hande. Beholde, thy couſyn Elizabeth, that aged woman, beyng nowe a long tyme of barainneſſe vncurable, hath (euen I my ſelfe beeyng the meſſagier) otherwiſe then euer ſhe hoped for, and aboue the power of nature, conceiued a ſonne, whiche ſhall be as a troumpette and an opener of thy chyldebearyng, her beyng conceyued with chylde is now a good while ſence of vndoubted certaintie: her bealy is vp, and the chylde is quickened & ſtirreth within her. For this ſame is the ſixt moneth, ſence ſhe hath conceiued which was cõmonly called by the name of barain, euen before that ſhe was ferre ſtrieken in yeres, yea and nowe ferther growen in age, then that ſhe myght hope to haue any iſſue, although ſhe had not to fore been barain. This to almighty God hath ſo been thought good, to thentent that all creatures maye vnderſtande, nothyng to be ſo vnbeliuable emong menne, whiche the power of God is not able to bryng to effecte, yf it bee his pleaſure. As eaſile ſhall he geue conception to thee a virgin, as he hath geuen to her beeyng barain, ſauyng that it hathe pleaſed hym, that thy exaumple ſhould be ſingulare and piereleſſe, becauſe thy chylde muſt be alone without piere. Certayne barain women haue heretofore by the ſpecial gyft of God, brought forth childe, but thei haue brought forth nothyng but mere men. Neuer hath any virgin yet vnto this daye brought forth childe, nor neuer ſhall any do after thee, becauſe that he which beyng but one perſon, ſhall in himſelfe comprehende both the nature of God, and the nature of man, is no more but once to bee borne. After that Gabriell had all this ſayed, the maiden made aunſwer in fewe woordes, but woordes of ſuch ſorte, as might bee a witneſſe of exceedyng great demureneſſe coupled with paſſyng great aſſiaunce and zele towardes God. I know it (ſaieth ſhe) to haue been promyſed by the mouth of Eſay, that a maiden ſhould conceiue and bryng forth a ſonne: and

For nothyng ſhalbe vnpoſſible with God.

And Mary ſaid, beholde I am the handmaide of ỹ Lorde.

and I haue no doubte, but that God is able to do all thynges that his wyll is, and that he will not be false in his promises. That if it hath so pleased him, to the executyng of this misterie, to choose and depute me, beyng a mayden of the lowest sorte and degree of all others, there is nothyng that I can hereby chalenge or claime vnto my selfe, either of merite, or els of grace. It shall euery whit come of the goodnesse of God: it shall euery whit come of the myghtie power of God. I do nothyng but willyngly offre my selfe as an handemayden to the lorde, (vnto whom I am for altogether dedicated) ready to be at all his commaundementes. I do beleue, that thou doest promyse: and I wyshe that with all spede it may fortune vnto me, as thou doest promyse. And euen with the woorde speakyng, the same heauenly conceyuyng of chylde, was without any her feleyng or perceyuing accomplished: she had in her wombe the sonne of God: she was replenished of the holy ghost. And anon the Aungell leafte her. Of this holy communicacion of a virgin with an Aungell, it was the wyll of God to begynne all the matter of restorying mankinde, because that same first pestiferous talking of a virgin with the serpent, had brought into the worlde the grounde and matter of mannes confusion and mischiefe.

Be it vnto me according to thy woorde.

The texte. ¶ And Mary arose vp in those dayes, and went into the mountaynes with hast, into the citie of Juda: and she entred into the house of Zacharie, and saluted Elizabeth. And so it was, that whan Elizabeth heard the salutacion of Mary, the babe lepte in her wombe. And Elizabeth was filled with the holy ghoste, and cryed with a loude voyce, and sayed: blessed art thou emong women, and blessed is the fruite of thy wombe. And whereof happeneth this vnto me, that the mother of my lorde should come to me? For lo, as sone as the voyce of thy salutacion sounded in myne eares, the babe leapeth in my wombe for ioy. And blessed art thou, that thou haste beleued: for thyng shalbe performed in thee, whiche haue been bolde thee from the lorde.

Mary beyng by reason of this gyfte of God, become the more sad and womanlye, and also the more tender and readie to do any thyng that she ought to do, because she had of the Aungels woordes, learned Elizabeth to bee with chylde, and this nowe to bee the fyrre moneth therof: she lefte her owne house, and toke her waye vppe into the high countrey, and with great spede came into the citie of Juda where Zacharie dyd enhabite: and entryng into his house, she offred and gaue vnto her cousin Elizabeth, woordes of greting, and how that she did in the ioyce and was verye glad that Elizabeth was with chylde. For true godlynesse doeth rather reioyce at the happie fortune of an other bodye, then set the mynde to make bauntes or braggs of it owne. Charitie loueth secretie: it cummeth not forth of the inmoste partes of the house for any callyng, vnlesse duetie moue it thereunto: and beyng abrode it maketh haste, in doyng any poynte of duetie it taketh more laysure. Mary in all her iourney vttered no salutacion vnto one bodye by the waye, vntyll she was come to Elizabeth. Neither was that same a salutacion or greting of the common sorte. All good happe and blessednesse dyd of this gretyng eyther other, encrease vnto them both, and the efficacie of the spirite of God, dyd in them bothe the more plentyously abounde. Mary carryed with her in her wombe the fountayne of all ghostely gyftes of grace, and through the inspiracion of the babe in her bealy, she was nowe altogether in case that nothyng came out of her harte or her mouth, but onely of God. Therfore it came so to passe, that as soone as the salutacion of the virgin Mary had once sounded in the eares of Elizabeth, the babe, whiche she beyng an aged woman had than in her bealy,

And saluted Elizabeth.

dyd leape and spryng, (as ye would say) skyppyng for ioy and gladnesse, John not yet beyng borne, felte the diuine power of his Lorde but euen lyke afore conceiued: and within the enclosure & tabernacle of his mothers wombe both with gesture magnifie him, whom he should afterwarde set forth & magnifie with his voice. Neither did Elizabeth without fruit perceiue and felte the holy leaping of her litle babe within her. Through her babe enspired from heauen, the mother also is inspired, and altogether is full and whole sodaynly taken with an happy and blissed kinde of infection. Through the voyce of Mary, the heauely power of God perceth into the babe within the wombe of Elizabeth: and through the babe with this sodayne blastyng so taken, the mother too is adblasted, in suche sorte, that she on her partie also beeyng replenished with the holy ghoste, did not nowe kepe in the ioyes of her herte: (although she had afore kept her selfe within doores, and had no talke with her, as one that would not for shame be acknowen to be conceyued with chylde:) but with a mighty great voyce (which voyce her mighty great affection and zele did worke in her) she cryed out, and vttered suche thynges through the motion of the spirite, as she neither could deme of the swellyng of her bealie, ne yet had learned of any mortall manne. And euen as though she had heard the Aungell talkyng with Mary, thus doeth she begynne her gratulacion. O happy and blissed mayden (sayeth she) thou shalt haue and enioy the chiefe prayse emong all women worthy commendacion. And holy is the fruite also of thy virginly wombe, out of whiche shall come forth that same wondrefull floure, who by the voyce of all nacions, shall be preached throughout all the whole vniuersall worlde: of whom long and many a day gone, the Prophetes haue prophecied: and he shal haue the chiefe laude and prayse emong all thynges, bothe that are in heauen, and that are in yearth. I acknowlage it to bee a greater thyng, and of more excelleneie, then a mortall man, that thou beareste enclosed within the chambre and tabernacle of thy wombe. If age or yeres only beestemed in vs twaine, it is not vnmete for a young damisell or mayden to come to an aged woman: but if the dignitie or worthynesse of both our babes that we go withall, be compared: it had been my duetie in all haste to rome and visite thee. I truly on my parte was happie and fortunate enough with this benefite of God, that I go with a chylde, the whiche shall in tyme to come, be a person of no small dignite and estimacion: but of what my deserte is so great happinesse chaunced vnto me, that she whiche muste bee the mother of my Lorde, shoulde thus of her owne accorde take paines to come to me. For by an vndoubted token haue I felt the cumming hither of my Lorde. For loe, immediately whan the voyce of thy salutacion sowned in mine eares, I felt my young chylde stiere and leape by in my wombe, as one shewyng an earnest desire, and gladnesse to go mete his Lorde, and to do vnto him his bounden duetie of reuerence and homage. And thou too forsouth beeyng a mother, doest not vnlyke to the chylde in thy bealie, for he beyng the Lorde and maister, doeth vouchesafe to come see hys kinswaunte, of purpose to sanctifie hym, and to replenyshe hym with the holye ghoste: and thou beeyng so farre the superiour in dignitie, doest not thynke it peinfull to come to me that am thyne inferiour: so muche the more lowely behauyng thy selfe, as thou doest surmounte and excelle in heauenly gyftes of grace, whiche gyftes, thou doest veray well, in that thou doest not impute them to thyne owne merites, forasmuche as they are thynges geuen thee of

And so it was, that whyle Elizabeth, heard the salutacion of Mary. &c.

Blissed art thou emong women. &c.

For loe as soone as the voice of thy saluration sowned. &c.

the free bounteousnesse of God. And certes in this behalfe art thou much happie, that thou diddest not mistrust the promisses of the Aungell, though they seme to vs so muche vnlykely to be beleued. Thou haste conceyued without helpe of man, and doubt is there none, but that the residue of thynges whiche the Aungell hath promised vnto thee in the lordes name, shal with semblable trueth and surertie be performed vnto thee.

The texte.

¶ And Marie sayed: My soule magnifieth the Lorde: and my spirite hath reioyced in God my sauiour.

Whan Elizabeth had by the spirite of prophecie spoken these woordes, Mary also, (who through maydenly chamefastenesse had hitherto cõceled the ioyes of her harte,) being now sodainly rauished with the holy spirite of God, of whom she was full and had been a good whyle erst, could no longer temper herselfe nor forbeare, but that with an himne of reioycing and thankes geuing, she must haste out into the laude and prayse of God, to whose goodnesse it is to be attributed, whatsoeuer high or especiall good thyng doeth chaunce to manne or woman of this worlde. O Elizabeth (sayeth she) not without good cause deest thou reioyce in my behalfe: but yet this cummeth euerywhit of the gyfte of God, yea and of his free gyfte, and not one iote of it there is, that I can presumpteously impute to myne owne desertes. And therfore not my tongue onely, but also my soule, acknowledging it owne weaknesse, doth euen from the botome of my harte rootes, magnifie & exalte the lorde with prayses: and how we muche the lesse of merite it acknowlageth in it selfe, so mouche more behemently doeth it maruayle at the greatnesse of Goddes benefites. I haue cause wherfore to geue hym thankes, I haue cause why to talke largely of his beneficiall goodnesse, but cause haue I none wherfore to reioyce to my selfe warde. Yet neuertheles my spirite beeyng enflamed with the spirite of God, doeth for ioy not possible to be vttred in woordes, skyp and leape within my body, not in it selfe, but in God, who is both to me and to all persons the onely cause and worker of all saluacion.

My soule magnifieth the Lorde.

And my spirite hath reioyced in God my sauioure.

The texte.

For he hath loked vpon the lowe degree of his handmayden: for behold, from henceforthe shall all generations call me blessed: because he that is myghtye hathe done great thynges for me, and holy is his name.

For wheras I was the moste abiecte of all women, yet he of his owne mere goodnesse, hath cast a mercifull iye on his poore handemayde beyng of lowe degree, and hath vouchesaued to geue me suche a great and high gyfte, that from this time forthwarde accordyng to the woordes of the aud of the Aungell, I shall in folkes talke, be called a woman moste happie & fortunate, not onely of the Iewes that are nowe at this present daye alyue, but also in all yeres and ages to come, and of all nacions of the whole worlde, to whom a sauiour shall happen to be borne of my bodye. For we maye truly be called happie & blessed in anysuche thyng as is bestowed vpon vs, not by meanes of our owne industrye, not for our owne merites, but of the free fauour of God. All the laude and prayse therfore of this happie fortune, shall redounde to hys laude and commendacion, that hath frely conferred & geuen the same. I shalbe reputed happie and blessed, but yet happie through his mere bountie & goodnesse. And what shall the nacions of the whole worlde in all the processe of yeres to come talke of me, verayly that he whiche by his exceedyng great power is hable to doe all thynges, hath in me beeyng the meanest of all maydens, wrought wrought and perfourmed a thyng wonderous, and such as neuer tofore hath been heard of. And therfore shall my name be numbred emong the wemen of good happe: but his name shall euerie where bee holye, and to be adoured and worshypped: at the which name euery knee of thinges heauenly, yearthly, and also infernall, shal humble it selfe and bough downe: and through which name onely, saluacion shall come to the vniuersall worlde. For the profession of thys name, shall perfectlye geue saluacion and holynesse vnto all creatures. At the callyng on of thys name, shall diseases be driuen awaye, venomes shall leese theyr strength, deuils shal flee, and dead bodyes shall reuiue agayne.

From hencefor the shall all generacions call me blessed.

Because he that is myghtie &c.

The texte. And hys mercy endureth from generacion to generacion vpon them that feare hym.

And this also shalbe a thyng of free gifte and mere gratuitie, and not of dette or duetie: it shall bee of mercie, and not of merite: whiche he shall moste largely poure forth, not onely to the nacion of the Iewes, which hath looked for hys cummyng to themselues and no mo, ne to one age alone, but his mercy shall spreade abrode euery waye, and issue from nacion to nacion, vnto the fertheste endes of the worlde, and from age to age vntyll the laste daye of thys world. In dede the Israelites only were once they that loked for this saluacio whiche was promysed by the prophetes: but whatsoeuer person (in what nacion soeuer it be) hath forsaken vices, and beginneth to haue in him the feare of god, thesame shall be reconed in the felowshyp and brotherhod of ỹ Israelites. This saluacion shall extende vnto all suche, as myslyking themselues, shall submitte them through feyth vnto the lord, whether thei be Grekes, or Frenchemenne, or Englishemen, or Scithians. And contrary wyse, suche persones as puttyng theyr affiaunce and trust in their owne dedes shall proudely sette vp themselues agaynst the greatnesse of god: shallbe repelled and put away from the felowshyp and partakyng of this benefite, yea though they shal be descended euen of Abrahames owne selfe, or els of Dauid. For this benefite of god is not bestowed or geuen, eyther for the valuacion of substaunce and rychesse, or for the estimacion of kynred, or for the woorkes of the lawe, or for anye other desertes or ablyng of mannes power, but by the commendacion of an humble herte, & an herte that is sory in it selfe, that it is so corrupt, & suche an herte, as through syncere and perfect feyth, dependeth on goddes mere mercye.

The texte He hath shewed strength in hys arme, he hath scatered the proude in the imagination of theyr owne harte.

For god beyng in mynde and wyll to caste downe the arrogant presumcion of worldly wysedome and power, hath stretched foorth the strength and puissaunce of hys arme through his sonne beeyng nowe brought in state and fourme of humilitee: and the wisedome of this worlde he hathe made folysshe, and banquished: declaryng hymselfe euen whan he doothe humble hymselfe moste lowly of all, yet neuertheleese to be of more myght and puissaunce, then the hyghest state emperiall of all worldlye power: and that same whiche in hym semeth folysshe, to bee more wyse then anye wysedome of this worlde be it neuer so wonderfull greate. Yea and those persones, who bearyng themselues bolde on theyr owne wisedome, and trustyng in theyr owne power haue hurdely lyfted vp theyr nekes agaynst god, he hath wonderfully disperpled & scattered with theyr veray owne deuises and appoyntmentes, accordyng as he had long afore promised by the prophet, saiyng: I wyl take and ensnare the wyse in their owne wisedome. For whyle they do with their subtyle wyly-nesse strive agaynst the purpose & worckyng of God, they have both bewrayed theyr owne foolishenesse, and also vnawares renoumed the sapience of God. And whyle they do by the mayntenaunce and suppostacion of thys world, attempt and labour to oppresse the ordinaunce of God, thei have declared, howe much vnhable this worlde is, any thyng at all to doe against the puissaunce of god, whiche by their rebellion they have established and made strong for ever.

The texte. He hath put downe the myghty from their seate, and exalted them of lowe degree,

So, (the course of thynges beeyng chaunged the contrary way,) suche persones, as a foretymes sate lyke men of hyghe estate in theyr thrones puffed in pryde of theyr worldly wisedome, and to be feared as touchyng the power and authoritie of man, he hath plucked downe out of theyr high seate: & suche as to the worldward were of low degree, those hath the bounteous goodnesse of God exalted vp and sette aloft. They that appered to bee in the top of the castell of godlinesse, are manifestly found to be wicked, and they that semed to bee suche as had nothyng to dooe with God, nor God with them, are now sodainlye made the children and sonnes of God.

The texte. He hath fylled the hongry with good thynges, and the ryche he hath leat goe emptie. His seruaunte Israell he hath taken to hym in remembraunce of hys mercye. Euen as he spake vnto our fathers, Abraham, and to the seede of hym for euer.

Suche persones as acknowelageyng theyr owne vnryghteousnesse did honger the iustice of God, those hath god plenteously filled with hys heauenly treasoures of all goodnesse: and on the other syde, suche as in their owne conceiptes thought themselues to be great ryche men, and hyghly to abounde in good weorkes, (and therfore dydde nothyng hungre the grace of the gospell:) those hath he cast of from him, houngresterued. For circumcision is turned into vncircumcision and vncircumcision hath succeded into the glory and honoure of circumcision. The Israelite borne trustyng to hymselfe, is shut a parte and debarred from the kyngdome of god: and the gentiles are elected and taken to the honour of the children of Abraham. The proude Pharisee is refus'd & cast of, the harlotes & the lowely publicane is receyued and taken in. The stif standers, and the sturdy holders vp of theyr snoute he hath cast downe: those that laye as outcastes nothyng regarded, and such as were in peryll of miscarrying, those he puttyng foorth hys mercifull hand hath reised vp and holpen. Suche as had theyr syght, he hath made blynde: and to such as lamented their blindnesse, he hath opened their iyes. To those that acknowelage their infirmytye and sickenesse, he hath geuen health: and suche as in theyr own cõceiptes semed to bee perfectly whole, he hath euen leaft to theyr disease. Those that vaunted themselfes to be the children of Abraham, he hath plainly declared to bee the children of the deuill: and suche as had no poynte of kynred with Abraham as touchyng the fleasche, those hath he throughe the fayth of the gospell, made the veray true chyldren of Abraham in dede. Those that vaunted theimselues by the glorious name of Israell, those hath he reneagued and put away from the inheritaunce of the promisses made vnto Israell: but whatsoeuer persone of whatsoeuer nacion, whether beeyng bond or beyng free, dyd willyngly offre hymselfe to the ghostely seruyng of God, hym hathe God taken vnto hym, and in euery suche hath he perfectly shewed hys long delayed mercy, which mercy he had a fore prompysed by his woorde (beeyng vttered by the mouthes of the prophetes) to the people of Israel, whom as a people more derely beloued and fauored

Hys seruaunte Israel he hath taken to hym.

In remembraunce of hys mercie. Euen as he spake vnto our fathers Abraham &c fanſyed euen for hys owne tooth, he doeth in the holy ſcriptures call hys ſeruaunt. He had neuer been forgetfull of his promyſſe, but by reaſon of the long delaye, as though he had forgotten it, deſpayre had creped vpon men, but now hathe he euidently declared hymſelfe to be in no poynte vnmyndefull of hys people. For this is that ſame veray true ſucceſſion of Abraham. This is that ſame true Iſraell, whom not the nereneſſe of bloud doeth make acceptable to God, but the ſincerities and pureneſſe of feith, by which feith onely is God ſeen. And theſe thynges are not wrought ne dooen by chaunce or by caſualtye, but the thyng is now ſhewed in facte, which long and many yeres paſt, God hath promyſed vnto our fathers, Abraham, and hys ſucceſſion. For to Abraham it was ſayed: In thy ſede ſhal all nacions be bleſſed. And to Dauid it was ſated: of the fruicte of thy body wyll I ſette vpon thy ſeate. Theſe thinges, long time afore promyſed, of good men looked for, and of manye an one deſpatred, it hath pleaſed God nowe in theſe dayes to perfourme vnto the true poſteritye of Abraham, the ſtocke and kynred of whiche poſteritie, ſhall neuer decaye ne fayle vnto the ende of the worlde.

And to the ſede of hym.

For euer.

And Marie abode with her aboute three monethes ſpace, and returned again to her owne houſe.

The texte.

All theſe thynges which wer yet to come, Marye dydde in the ſpirite of prophecye, ſpeake foorth in playn wordes, euen as though it had been come to paſſe and effect already. And than muche lyke aboute the ſpace of three monethes dyd ſhe make her abode with her couſin Elizabeth, coumforting the olde woman bothe with holye and vertuous communication, and alſo withall louyng and frendly attendaunce. And euen but a litle before the tyme of her ſayd couſins deliueraunce, Marie returned home to her own dwelling place again. For on the one ſyde to helpe playe the midwifes parte at a womans laboure, was no fitte nor decent office for a maiden that had neuer borne childe: and on the other ſyde, ſhe gote her awaye from the great reſorte of weomen that were to come ſhortely after, to be at Elizabethes childe bearyng.

And retourned agayne to her owne houſe.

Elizabethes tyme came that ſhe ſhould bee deliuered, and ſhe brought foorth a ſonne. And her neighbours and kynſfolke heard how that the Lorde had ſhewed great mercie vpon her, and they reioyced with her.

The texte

And now was the full tyme come, that Elizabeth ſhoulde bee deliuered of childe. And a ſonne in dede borne, did aſſuredly verifie the promiſſes of God. The matter was by a common bruite or noyſe ſpred abrode by meane of her neighboures and kynſfolke, whome, euen lyke as the barainneſſe of Elizabeth had grieued afore, ſo dyd it now reioyce the ſame, that of the greate mercye of God, by reaſon of a manchylde now borne, the name of a mother hadde happened vnto an olde woman of barainneſſe deſperate, and ſeemyng to bee paſt all recouerye, to whom it had been an happye chaunce to haue brought forth a wenche, but a muche more luckie happe it was, to haue brought forth a ſonne. And euen in thys poynte alſo appered the promyſe of the Aungell, who hadde ſated, that it ſhould come to paſſe, that manye an one ſhoulde bee gladde in the birth of that childe. For thither came renning many an one, and declared themſelfes to reioyce that ſhe had well ſped, and hadde brought forth a ſonne. And good reaſon it was that many ſhoulde reioyce in the byrth of hym, who hadde been borne to the hygh benefite of a verraye great maygnie.

And they reioyſed with her.

The texte

And it fortuned that on the eight daie they came to circumciſe the child, and they called hym Zacharye after the name of hys father. And hys mother makyng answere, sayd: not so, but he shall bee called John. And they sayd vnto her: there is no man in thy kynred that is called by that name. And they made signes to hys father how he would haue hym named. And he called for writing tables: and wrote saiyng: John is his name. And they did all meruail. And immediately was hys mouth opened and hys tounge also, and he spake and praised God. And feare came vpon al them that dwelt nyghe vnto them. And al these saiynges were noysed abrode throughout all the whole countrey of Iewrye. And al they that heard the same, layed them vp in theyr hearties, saiyng: what maner a chylde, trowe ye shall this childe bee? And the hand of the Lorde was wyth hym.

And nowe was come the eyght day after Elizabeths deliueraunce, in the whyche day by the prescription, and appoyntemente of the lawe, the chylde must bee circumcised, and haue hys name geuen hym. Her kynsfolkes therefore resorted thyther, whiche by the order and course of kynred, thought it their partes to see that the childe wer duely circumcised as it ought to bee. And because the chyldes father had hys speche taken from hym, (who commonlye vseth at hys pleasure to appoynte howe the chyld shall be named,) the kynsfolkes supposyng and demyng the father to be of the mynde and wyll, to haue that that commonly is woont to bee moste to mennes cõtentacions: called him zacharie after the name of hys father. But hys mother contrary wyse beeyng taughte that thynge by the inspiracion of the holye ghoste, whyche of her house bande beeyng than dumme, she could not learne, contended that he should not be called zacharye, but John: wherin the holy ghost did signifie, that he which was borne should be a publisher of a newe lawe, whiche newe lawe shoulde abrogate the traditions of men of old time, and should turne the carnal vsage thereof, into grace of the spirite. For Zacharias souneth in Hebrue myndefull of the Lorde, and IOHN hath hys name of grace. The ryghteousnesse of the law did consiste in woorkes prescribed and appoynted: and the ryghteousnesse of the ghospell consisteth in grace thrzough feythe. The kinsfolkes did not geue place to the authoritye of the mother, but on the contrarye parte contended that he ought rather to be called zachary, because that in al the stocke of zacharie there was not one that was called John. And in any childe it is a common vse, that the remembraunce eyther of the father or of the graunde father, or of the vncle by the fathers syde, or of some other nere kinsman, bee renewed. Yea and yet at thys present daye, some suche there bee, whom the name of zacharie dooeth more delite, then the name of John: that is to wete suche persones as cannot yet well abyde, that circumcision, newe chaunges of the moone, washynges, holy dayes, fastes, chose or difference of meates, and sacrifices, should be abolished, euen as it were men in dede and facte crieng with open mouthes: The name of John, we will none of it: our olde zacharye will we haue. Forasmuche therefore as the woman that late in childbed, and her kynsfolkes could not agree, it was requisite to haue the autoritye of the father to ende this contencion. The father had not yet the vse of hys tounge, although it was nowe muche necessarye for hym to saye hys mynde. In such sorte therefore as it myght be, he hadde beckes and sygnes made vnto hym to declare by some meanes what name it pleased hym to haue geuen to his sonne. Zachary as soone as he vnderstoode the matter, made sygnes to haue writing tables, to thentente he myght by dumme letters, in writyng signifie vnto them the thyng, whiche he had as yet no power with liuely voice to expresse.

And they cal led hym zachary after the name of his father.

And they sayde vnto her: there is no man in al thy kynred, that is called by that name

And they made signes to his father howe he would haue him named.

John is his name.

Whan the tables were brought him he wrote in this wyse. John is his name, signifiyng and meaning that same name to had been geuen vnto him by the Aungell before he was conceyued. And they dyd euery one of them muche woondre, aswell that a straunge newe found name dyd lyke hym, as also that the mother whiche had her toungue at liberty, and the father who couldc not speake did so agree vpon the childes name. And nowe did the tyme draw nere, that the lawe of Moses should begyn to speake, whiche hytherto onely, by figures and dum paternes, had after a sorte poynted and marked out the grace of the ghospell. The tyme was now come, that beliefe should open the mouth of zacharie, whiche the hardnes of beliefe hadde accordyng to the promysse of Gabriell, shutte vp. As soone therefore as he had writen in the tables, by and by also was the tyng of his toungue looced. And the first power that he had to speake, he dyd of none other thyng begyn, but of praisyng Godde, by whose free bounteousnesse so great an heape of loyes had chaunced vnto him. Vnles the Iewishe toungue kepe silence, beyng bothe the doctrice and auaunter of carnall obseruaunces, and also an auoucher of mannes righteousnes, the euangelicall toungue hath no power to speake, which is a preacher, and a setter forth of grace, of feyth, of charitee, and preacheth not the workes of the law, whiche lawe doeth not recouer or geue vnto any man the prayse of reighteousnesse by hys owne factes, but preacheth the ryghteousnes of God by innocēte freely conferred, and geuen through feith. But al these thinges, first, of an aged woman bearing a childe, of the straungenesse of the same childes name, of a soonne borne by the promyse of an Aungell, of the father of the childe lyke made sodaynly dumme where as he couldc afore speake wel inough, and than agayn of a dumme man soodaynely made eloquent to the praisyng of God: al thissame was by a bruite and a common rumour spred abrode, not now emōg their kynsfolkes and neyghboures onelye, but also throughoute all that same coaste of Iewry, that is called the hylle countrey, insomuche that not onelye a greate woondreyng, but also a certayne kynd of beyng amased, and of being in a tremblyng feare, (which was conceyued by reason of so many & so vnwont miracles) did possesse the hertes of al folkes in those partyes. For of these preaumbles they gathered in theyr myndes, that thys childe whiche was nowe borne, was lyke in processe of tyme to doe greate thynges, and thynges that had afore not been hearde of, forasmuche as his conception and birth too, was so soone made notable by woonders and miracles. They saw hys father to be so ferre stryken in age, that he was verey vnlyke to haue been a geatter of children: and as for hys mother, beside that she was an olde woman, they saw her barreinnesse to be such, that euery body thoughte it paste all hope that euer she shoulde haue brought forth any childe: they considered the myracle of zacharias speche, whiche had been sodaynly taken from him, and sodainly restored again, they had heard that the Aungel Gabriel was a worker & a doer in the matter: they wel perceyued the inspiracion of the holy ghost to be both in the father and in the mother of the childe: they perceiued euery whit of the matter to be aboue the common rate and sorte of the birthe of other children, and euery parte therof to haue great tokens of the vertue and power of God. And these poyntes euery bodye in theyr owne herte, earnestly considerynge and weighyng, sated secretlye within themselfes: what manyer one is thys childe lyke to bee an other daye? Not one of the Prophetes was borne after suche a woonderfull straunge sorte. For the verave myracles of thynges that haue been wrought about his birthe, doe euidentely declare all thissame geate to Openly to be shewed and spoken (sayeth he) is the goodnes of God, and with all kyndes of praisynges to bee magnifyed: who whereas he is the God of all peoples, yet his pleasure was to be of a speciall purpose called the God of Israell, not, as though he wer not the Lord of al other nacions also, but because it hath pleased hym that the people of Israel shal be a figure of that heauenly people, whiche by renouncyng and despising the yearthlye thynges of this worlde, dooe laboure to atteyne and to come vnto that eternal citie of Hierusalem, where God is worshipped with thinges inuisible. Of al such, what countrey soeuer they lyue in, and out of what nacion soeuer they bee borne, is God to be praysed, who after so long processe of time, hath at laste vouchsalued in suche sorte as hath not been sene afore, to visite hys people being now in great agonye, and almoste clene tyred with the tedyousnes of most careful and long continued bondage, and beyng euen now at the verye poynt of bitter despaire. Agaynst the whiche people, Sathan, synne and the worlde, had so mightilye preuailed, that no manner hope did now remaine, neyther in the phariseis, nor in the philosophiets, nor yet in the ceremonies of Moses lawe. He hathe nowe caste hys eye lyke a mercifull lord vpon hys sayd people, and hath freelye redemed them from al these euils.

And such enemyes be also the corrupt affections, and naughty desyres of the mynde: prouokyng and bustlye stieryng men to suche thynges as are odious and hatefull afore god. Suche enemies also are those persones (whatsoeuer they be) which haue more loue and desyre to the thynges of this worlde, then to such thynges as are godlye: by whyche persones, as by his instrumentes and tooles, the deuill putteth hys strength in vre.

Neyther doue these thinges by chaunce or at al auentures come thus to passe: but the thyng that god doeth nowe perfourme, the same had he many a longe yere sens promysed by the mouthes of al the prophetes, whom he had endewed with his spirit, as many as haue prophecied sens the first creatiō of the world, For he had made promise, that by a captain of might & puissaūce, which should one day be sent, we should be saued from our enemyes, and should be deliuered oute of the handes of them all, whiche did beare vs suche extreme malice, that they did continually wrastle and laboure to drawe vs vnto deathe euerlasting. The texte.

And yet was not thys of the meryte or deseruyng of vs, that are nowe at these presēt daies liuig, to whō god hath performed this same so hygh a benefite: nor yet of the deseruing of oure fathers, to whō he had afore promised the same thing which he hath now doen vnto vs. But thus hath it pleased his gracious goodnesse, bounteously to geue this so greate a thyng vnto vs not deseruyng the same. Thus hath it also semed good vnto his ryghteousnesse: at suche time as best pleased hymself, to perfourme the thyng that he had promised, to thentent he might thereby of all creatures bee perceyued to bee not onely mercifull and beneficiall, but also true and iuste in kepyng hys promisse. For besides his earnest promisse, he did also make a plain bargain and couenaunt with our fathers. For beeyng delited with the woonderfull affiaunce and truste of oure chyefe father Abraham towarde hym, (whiche was soe greate, that beatyng hymselfe bolde vpon goddes promysse, he made no manner bones ne stickyng, but wente in hande to offer vp his onely sonne Isaac in sacrifyce,) he swore by hys owne selfe, to the same Abraham, saiyng in this wise: I make an othe, and do sweare by my veray own self, because thou hast dooen thys same thyng, and for the respecte of me and my commaundement hast not spared thine onely begotten sonne, I shall blisse thee, and I shall multiplye thy posteritie and issue, as the sterres of the skye, and as the sandes that are liyng on the sea shores. Thy sede shall possesse the gates of theyr enemies, & through the name of thee, shall all nations on the yearth be blisfed, because thou hast bene obedient vnto my voice. For in verai dede, this is ỹ true posteritie and the right sede of Abraham, whiche is obedient vnto God, not by the ceremonies of the lawe, but by the obedience of beleuing in God, who, by the meane of the ghospell, dooethe speake vnto the world. Therefore we muste now truly serue our said captayne, not as oure forefathers dyd with idle solemnisyng of holye daies, not with superstition of honouryng the fyrst daye of euery newe moone, not with abstenyng from one meate more thē from an other, not with killing of beastes in sacrifice, which thinges haue nothing but an outward semblaūce and shewe of holinesse in the syghte of men: but with pureneſſe of conscience, and with perfect clennesse of lyfe, whiche is the seruice most acceptable in the syght of God, who hath no regard vnto carnal oblacions, but vnto the godly deuocion of the herte, as one that louethe to haue sacrifyce dooen vnto hym, of his own gyftes. Neither must this seruyng of God be shewed or doen, at these or that daies by our owne ordeinaunce therunto prefixed or appointed (as hitherto customably hath been vsed:) but continually all our lyfe throughe out. Happy therefore by the free goodnesse of God, and blessed are we, to whome, accordyng to the saiynges of the Prophetes, is nowe thus geuen a mighty redemer, and a saluegoure, whome no power maye banquisshe or withstand.

Of the almyghty were we created, and by the moste merciful are we restored. We had vtterly bene loste onlesse he accordyng to the goodnesse that of his propre nature is rooted in him, had extended his mercie vnto vs: onles he in manier of the bright sunne arysyng to vs from heauen, had on euery syde dryuen awaye the darkenesse of our ignorauce, onlesse he had put away the dimme miste of synne, and had enkiendled our colde hertes with the feruente burnyng fyre of his dere loue and charitie. We wer lyng in darkenes, and hadde no power to lift vp our iyes towardes him: he hūbled himselfe doune to vs, and by sending doune his bright shining beames vpon our hertes, he gaue clere and healthful light vnto vs, where as we afore sate in the derkenesse of sinne and in despaire of any recouery, as in the blacke shadowe of death, we were vtterlye blynded with manyfold idolatries, & al derkened ouer and ouer with worldly desires, we ranne from wickednes to wickednes, groping in most foggie mistines, enbracing earthly thinges in stede of heauenly, the shadowes of thinges in stede of the thynges selfes, thynges carnall in stede of ghostely thinges, pestiferous and full of poyson, in stede of holsome. And loe in the botomelesse nyght of dispayre is nowe arisen vp vnto vs that same euerlasting sunne: to direct and to set the fete of oure hertes into the waye of the ghospell, whiche is the waye of peace, that throughe faythe and charitye maketh a perfecte agreemente and vnitye betwene god and man: breakyng the stryfe and enmitie that was afore betwene them: knittyng all nations of the world together in the profession of one name, and of one fayth: and finally in such wise qualifiyng and appeasing all the troubleous affections of the mynde, that euery man may be at a perfect staigh of quietnes, and of attonemente within hymselfe.

These thynges did this godly olde man pronounce out of his prophetical breste: and folowing the exaumple of the olde auncient propheters, dyd in such a playn sort declare and sette forth ỹ same thinges before thei came, as though all together had been euen at that verey presente houre alreadye doon. And with these so woonderfull begynnynges of the matter, the procedinges of the same dyd in moste beste wyse agree. For the chylde John whiche had bene after a woonderful straunge manier borne, like as he grew in body according to the rate of his yeres, euen so did he through the inspiracion of God, from time to time, prosper stil better and better in stedfastnes, and strength of the spirit. Neither did he any lōg time kepe himself at home with his father and mother in theyr house, but euen byanby frō his childhood withdrewe hymself away from the common haunte of people, to the entente that he myghte not take soe much as the least spotte of fylthinesse that maye bee, by coumpaignyng with the multitude, forasmuch as he had bene sanctified in his mothers wombe. He neuer dronke wyne nor any other strong drynke, wherby to be distempered: he neuer tasted of any worldly pleasure: he neuer tasted of any worldly honour. All worldly desyres and carnal appetites he passed not vpon, but vtterly reuseled them, and liued emong the saluage beastes with locustes and wild honey: his wede and clothyng was of Camelles hydes, & not of silkes or veluettes:

¶ And it chaunced in thoſe dayes, that there went out a commaundement from Auguſtus the Emperoure, that all the worlde ſhoulde bee tared. And this taxyng was the fyrſte, and executed whan Syrenius was lieutenaunte in Syria. And euery man went vnto hys owne citie to bee tared. And Joſeph alſo aſcended from Galile, out of a citye called Nazareth, into Jewrye, vnto the citye of Dauid whiche is called Bethleem, (becauſe he was of the houſe and linage of Dauid,) to be tared, with Marye hys ſpouſed wyfe, whiche was with childe.

THus haſte thou hearde the woonderfull birthe of John, whiche was as a foregoer to Chriſte, and as a meſſagier afore hys cummyng: nowe ſhalte thou heare the muche more woonderfull birthe of Jeſus Chriſte hymſelfe, who ſhoulde afterwarde bee the onely Prynce of all the whole worlde, and ſhoulde moue all nacions on the yearth to the profeſſion of his name, not by meane of threatening or putting thē in feare, but with benefites and with holſome doctryne. By the worckyng therefore and prouiſion of God it was ſo conueighed, that vnder the Emperoure Auguſtus, (who at that tyme was Lorde of manye countreyes and realmes in all parties of the worlde, and all thynges beeyng euery where in perfect peace and tranquilitie, held and gouerned the Empire of the Romaines,) al the prouinces and coūtreyes, as many as helde of the Empire of Rome, ſhoulde be ſurueighed and noūbred by the polles, to thentente they myght acknowleage Auguſtus for their Lord & king, and that (as we cal it here in Englande) they myght be ſworne to be true liege people to themperoure Auguſtus, & to his ſucceſſours Emperours of Rome. Whyche thyng god wrought euen of purpoſe, that it myghte appere howe much wyder in circuite and larger the dominion of Chriſt did reache, then the dominion of Ceſar: and howe muche more quiete and gentle Chriſtes maner of reignyng ouer men is, (who taketh nothyng awaye from vs, & yet geueth vs heauenly thynges too) then ẏ reignyng of Ceſar, who although it lye not in hys power to geue heauenly thynges, yet neuertheleſſe catcheth awaye our worldly commodities, & by extort power enforceth men to take hym for theyr kyng, whereas the heauenly Emperour Chriſte, doth gentilly allure men vnto hym by hys beneficiall goodnes towardes them. That they are regyſtred or booked booked emong the subiectes of Ceasar, what other thyng dooe they, but acknowlage a verai state of seruitude and bondage, and daily find their worldly substaunce pared away and diminished. But they that registre themselues as seruauntes to this newe prince, do receiue perfecte freedome, with a sure waraunte of euerlastyng saluacion. And, fewe woordes to make, the Emperoure Octauius Augustus, although he was emong all the Emperours of Rome, a manne of moste good policie and conueighaunce in passing all his affayres, yet many nacions there wer, which he could not subdue for al his great armies, and for all hys valiaunt men of warre: where as oure capitayne Christe hathe without any force of armes, & without anye garrisons of worldlye puissaunce, gathered together into one churche, as into one kyngdome, all the whole vniuersall worlde, so many sundry languages, so many sundry rites, so many sundry sectes of seruyng this god and that god, of mens owne deuisyng, and soe manye barbarous nacions liuyng in sundrye priuie corners. But nowe (to goe forth in our matter,) for the executyng of this general surueighe and taxe that thoulde be taken in the countrey of Syria, there was sent aswell by thautoritie of Ceasar Augustus, as also by a decree of ỹ whole Senate of Rome, one Quirinus, the rewler and lieutenaũte of that prouince. And this was euen the verai fyrst taxe that euer this rewler toke in Syria, for diuerse and sundry others were taken afterwarde in thesame prouince within the tyme of thesame mãnes being lieutenaunt there. At the cõmaundement thã of Ceasar, whiche this Quirinus had caused to be euerye where proclamed, all persõs take theyr iourney, and goe euery one to theyr owne tribe and kynred that they came of, and to the citie that proprelye belonged to thesame tribe. And thither resorted they euerye one to acknowlage Augustus the Emperoure of Rome, for theyr Lord and head gouernour on earth, as the custome was to do. And so it was, that Joseph the spouse of the virgin Marye, whereas he was of the tribe of Juda, and hys wyfe Marye of thesame tryde also, yet neuertheleſſe dwelled in Nazareth: whiche was a poore litle citye in Galile. Joseph therfore shuttyng vp hys doores & leauyng his house, resorted towarde his owne tribe, that is to wete, into Jewrye, towardes a litle preaty citie called Bethleem, of kyng Dauids buildyng, because ỹ bothe Joseph & also the virgin Marye, did not onely belong to the tribe of Juda, but also were by lineall descente come of the progeny and stocke of Dauid, of whose seede it was promised that Christ should be. But of al these thynges was there no one poynt that chaunced by mere casualtye, but euerywhit of it was procured and purposely dooen by the prouidence and determynacion of god, to thentente that thende and conclusion of altogether shoulde in euery behalfe agree with the holye saiynges of the Prophetes, whiche diuided the glory of so great, and so high a matter betwene two cities, that is to were, the kyng of the worlde to be conceiued and bred vp in Nazareth, and thesame king to be borne in Bethleem according to the prophecie. To the same place than dyd the virgyn Marye also beeyng great with childe, and nowe euen verai nere her time, accompaignie her spoused housebande Joseph. This virgyn thoughe she had a greate bealye, yet refused not to trauaill suche a great iourney with her housebande: she forbore not to be or to come in ỹ sight of men knowyng herselfe in her owne conscience to bee clere from all spotte of synne: she thought not scorne to be obedient and seruiceable to her housebande, though ỹ tyme was at hande, whan she should be a mother, and bryng forth

¶ And it fortuned, that whyle they wer there, her time was come that ſhe ſhould be delyuered. And ſhe brought forth her firſt begotten ſonne, and wrapped him in ſwadlyng clothes and laied him in a maungier, becauſe there was no roume for them in the ynne.

And ſo, whyle they by occaſion hereof made their abode there for certaine dates, and remained in the citie of Bethleem: it fortuned that the full monethes of her goiyng with chylde expired, and the time of her deliueraunce was now come, whiche thyng God wrought to thentent it myght the more euidently bee knowen and ſeen to all perſones, that he which was then borne there, was naturally veraye man in dede. The Lord of heauen and yerth picked out for himſelfe to bee borne in a ſlender and baſſe litle toune, in whiche neuertheleſſe he had no houſe at all: he choſe out parentes of the pooreſte and loweſte ſorte. It was alſo his pleaſure to be borne in a ſtraunge place frō his own home, to the entente that we ſhould be aſhamed both of our pryde, and alſo of oure auarice, and that we might at leſte wyſe by his exaumple learne, that mans felicitie is not to bee meaſured or eſtemed by theſe common gooddes of thys tranſitorye worlde, whiche if they bee not taken awaye from vs, yet we fyrſt or laſt are taken awaye from them: but the bliſſe of man to bee eſtemed by ſuche good thynges and treaſures, as endure for euer: yea and that it myght ferther be a leſſon for vs to gather and laye vp treaſures to that ſame countreyward, to the ende that we maye there continually without ende, haue the fruicion of them. For yf we wyll vpryghtely make compariſon of the matter with true iudgemētes, there was more dignity and high eſtate, more power, & more mateſtie, in this ſame moſte humble and poore birth of Chriſt, then in all the pompes, triumphes, and ſolemne ſhewes of royaltie, of all the Emperours that euer were.

And ſhe brought forth her firſt begottē ſonne,

Thus than in Bethleem (which is called the houſe of bread) did this holy pōg virgin bring forth vnto vs, that ſame heauenly breade, of whiche whoſo eateth, doth neuer dye. And this was that ſame onely chylde bearyng of a virgin, the like preſidēt or enſaūple wherof, was neuer afore, nor neuer after folowed. And the chyld was to his mother her onely ſonne, and in reſpect to vs her firſt begotten, in reſpecte of vs (I ſaye) whom he hath in ſpirite ioyned to himſelf, and made vs bothe hys brethren and alſo partakers with hym of hys euerlaſtyng inheritaunce, becauſe he would not come alone to his father, but he, as the fyrſt begotten ſonne on his owne partie, would bring with him many mo brethren beſydes hymſelf to the felowſhyp and partakynge of euerlaſting ſaluacion. Now whan this litle babe was borne, the mother did not put it forth to the nourcing of other women, (for on the one ſyde, for tender motherly loue that ſhe bare to it, ſhe would none other nources but herſelfe, and on the other ſyde, by reaſon of her pouertye ſhe had none,) but her veray owne ſelf with her owne handes, lapped it vp in ſwadling bādes and cloutes ſuche as ſhe hadde. And becauſe that in the common ynne, where hoſtery and lodgyng was kept, there was by reaſon of the great reſort of welthier geaſtes, none other roume ne place void for her, beyng but new deliuered of child, ſhe layd doune her yōg babe in a maunger that was there by, in ſtede of a cradle. Geue eare thou proud ryche man what euer thou be, that heapeſte together poſſeſſions and landes vpon landes: and that art in euery corner a builder of houſes, of fermeholdes, of mainours, and of palacies. And loe, the aungel of the Lorde stoode hard by them, and the bryghtnesse of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afrayed. And the aungel sayd vnto them, be not afrayed: for beholde, I bryng you tydinges of great ioye, that shall come to all people. For vnto you is borne thys daye in the citie of Dauid, a sauiour, which is Christ the Lorde. And take this for a sygne: ye shall fynde the chylde wrapped in swadlyng clothes, and layed in a maungier. And streyght way there was with the angell a multitude of heauenly souldiers praisyng god and saiyng: glorye to god on hygh, and peace on the yearth, and vnto men a good wylle.

Her ken nowe in what sorte this humble poorenes of birthe is altogether full of all princely royaltye. There was a tour not ferre from Bethleem, called in the Hebrue toungue the toure of Ader, (as ye shoulde saye in Englishe, the toure of the flocke) and it was soe named, because that by reason of the good pasture grounde that late in those parties, there was verey great store of shepe and other cattall pastured there. And in dede of thys toure Ader doeth the Prophete Micheas also make mencyon, lyke as he doeth of Bethleem. There were therfore in those quarters diuerse shepeherdes that watched abrode in ỹ night seasons for sake garde of theyr flockes. Verily euen by the thyng selfe geuyng a good lesson, what thyng byshops ought of theyr bounden duetye to doe for the helth of the people committed to theyr spirytuall charge, yf they wyll folow ỹ ensaumple or steppes of Christ the Prince and head of all shepeherdes. And in the night time was thatsame most bright sunne of righteousnesse borne, which should on euery syde, put awaye the darkenes of the worlde. And his pleasure was fyrst of al to haue his byrth knowen, rather to men of low degree, because he was borne after a poore sort, and to shepeherdes, because hymselfe was a ghostly pastoure, then to Emperours, to kynges, to rulers or deputies of cõtreyes, to Phartseis, to Scribes, to byshops. And loe, sodainly the Aungel Gabriel stoode on high derectely ouer theyr heades; and besides him also a certain straung light sodainly flushed and shone round about the shepeherdes, which was neyther the lyght of the sunne, nor of the moone, ne of any candle. But although thissame were a thyng that semed no lesse then to betoken some good luckye thyng to be toward, yet the shepeherdes, by reason of the vnwonte and soodain miracle, wer all at ons throughly taken with a verey great feare. But the Aungel anon taketh away this feare with speakyng amiablie vnto them. Doe awaye all feare (sayeth he) there is no cause why ye should drede. For I am come to be vnto you a messagier of a moste gladdesome matter, and such ioye as neuer yet hath bene heard of, do I bryng, not to you onely, but also to all the people of Israel. The godly mouthes of the Prophetes long and many yeres gon had prompted you a sauiour. Many a long yere hath Messias bene looked for. And this night is thatsame Messias borne, and borne he is vnto you all. And this is the verraye true Messias, the Prynce and Lorde of all, a king & Priest anoynted of God frõ aboue. And in dede borne he is in the citie of Dauid nid called Bethleem, accordyng to the holy sayinges of the Prophetes, euen thissame verey nyghte. Go ye, and enquire of hym. I wyll geue you a token whereby he maye be knowen. Go ye to the common Inne, and there shal ye find the litle suckyng babe lapped in swathyng cloutes, and layed doun to rest in a maungier. Assone as Gabriell had thus muche sayed, immediatly was heard a great multitude of heauenly souldiers, that is to say, of Aungels, who are the minysters and seruauntes of the Lorde beeyng myghtye and puissaunt in battaill, and the which also do warre and fyght for vs agaynst the Princes of this worlde. These Aungels with suche an heauenly armonie and with such a melodious swete noyse as no tongue can expresse, dyd syng songes of prayse vnto God, magnifiyng and settyng furthe hys vnspeakable loue towardes mankynde, and declaring the great ioye and gladnes that they had conceiued on the behalfe of the same mankinde, to whom so great blissfulnes had through Godes mere fauour and mercie so happened. And the hymne forsouth which that same heauenly quier of Aungelles with such swete tunes syng all together in one charme, was thys: Glorye on high to god, on yearth peace, and in men good wille.

Prayse syng God, &c.

Glorye to god on high

Whiche song of the Aungels dothe muche in effecte signifye vnto vs verailye that in thys matter no poynte at al of glory is due neyther to the Aungelles ne yet to man, but al the whole glory and laude therof is due vnto the onely goodnes of God, who of hys mercye and loue towardes vs whom he hath created, doeth by wondrefull wayes and conueighaunce prouide for vs from heauen, to the entent that we should wel perceiue, that whatsoeuer thing either for our honoure and auauncement, or els for our helth and saluacion dooeth happyly chaunce vnto vs it cummeth vpon vs from heauen: and that we ought here on yearthe to wishe or desire none other thyng but peace, whiche maye abolyshe synne, and bryng vs into the fauour of God, and the whiche maye knit vs together with mutual loue and charitie of one towardes another. For thissame is truely the peace, (not of the worlde, but of God) whyche dooeth excede and passe al the compace and reache of mās vnderstanding, and ferre out weigheth all poyntes and degrees of any blissfull state that may be in this present world. And this peace is freely offred vnto vs through this reconciler and maker of atonemente betwene God and man, not by anye meane or helpe of oure owne merites and desertes, but of the ready and willing goodnes of God towardes vs, whome it hathe pleased after thys wondrefull maner, to prouide for the recouerye and sauyng of mankynd.

And peace on ỹ yearth and to men good wyll.

The texte. ¶ And it fortuned, assone as the Aungels wer gone awaye from them into heauen, the shepeherdes sayde one to another, Let vs goe nowe euen vnto Bethleem, and see this thing that we heare say is happened, which the Lord hath shewed vnto vs. And they came with hast and founde Marye, and Joseph, and the babe layed in a maunger. And whan they had seen it, they published abrode the saiyng whyche was told them of that chylde. And al they that hearde it wondred at those thynges whiche were tolde them of the shepeherdes. But Marye kept all those saiynges, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepeherdes returned, praisyng and laudyng God for al the thynges that they had heard and seen, euen as it was tolde vnto them.

The shepeherdes said one to another.

The Aungels assone as thei had with their moste ioyfull and gladsome noyse begonne vnto the shepeherdes with synging this song in honour of the childes birth, returned agayne into heauen. This done, the shepeherdes being a sort of good homely plain folkes, came and laied their heades together in counsail, not doubtyng of the wordes that the Aungels had spoken, but coueting more fully

to

to knowe the thing that they had heard. Thus therfore spake they emong thē-selues, and sayde one to another: Leat vs doue as the Aungel hath aduertised vs, leat vs goe hence euen streight to Bethleem, that the thing which we haue with oure eares heard to be happened, we maye euen there presently see & be-holde with our iyes, to the entent, that we may with the more readie and perfect truth and credite, speake and declare vnto others, the thyng that the Lord hath vouchesalued to geue vs knowelage of, by his Aungels. This godly de-uise lyked them all.

Let vs goe now cuē vn-to Bethleem and see thys thyng &c.

And so furth on theyr way go the shepherdes with all haste: deuocion, and godly zeale was a spurre to theyr heartes to pricke them forward: anon were they come to Bethleem, & come they were into the vnne appoynted. And there (euen as the Angel had promised) they finde Marie newly deliuered of childe, and Joseph a witnes of the birgins deliueraunce, and the babe also bound vp in swathyng clothes, and layed therby in a maungier. These deuout and godly shepeherdes are nothyng at all offended, neyther with the bare pouerty of the tender young birgin, nor with her housband beyng to the syght and estimaciō of the world a man of the meanest and basest sorte, ne yet with the poore, litle babe, whom for defaulte of a more commodious place, the parentes wer faine to laye doune in a maungier, (which thynges would haue made ỳ proud Pha-risels and Scribes to take vtter scorne & disdayne at the matter,) but ỳ shepeherdes are by all these thynges the better confirmed to beleue the matter more stedfastly, whan they by witnesse of theyr owne iyes perfectly knew & founde that it wer no fables ne lyes that the Aungel had tolde them tydynges of. And here maye we note, that tender loue and zele towardes God, hath in all persones (be they neuer so slender or lowe of degree) a certain wisdome and worldly cast of it owne in thynges. For these shepeherdes dyd not euen byanby publish abrode the thyng that they had heard: but assoone as they perfectely knewe the thyng to be certayn and out of doubt: than did they not feare to talke the thing that they had heard, abrod also emōg other coumpanies. Christ loued to haue the talke of his birthe, and cummyng, fyrste to aryse and begynne of suche reporters, and publishers, as wer men of suche simplicitie and plainnes, that no man would suspect or mystruste any of them eyther of fablyng and lying, orels of clokyng and counterfeyting. They hadde no suche wit as to inuent a lye of theyr owne brayne, they could no skylle to deuise or to put any thyng more thē trueth to that that they had seen, but the thyng that they had heard and seen, euen as they had heard and seen it euen so and none otherwyse dyd they shewe tidinges of it vnto mē of good heartes and disposicions. And among no smal number of menne, did the wordes of the shepeherdes fynd credence, insomuche that it made a great maynie verraye desirouse and fayne to haue a syght of the chylde. And here in thys behalf marke thou and consider the wise sobernes and demurenes of the holy tender birgin Mary. She learneth of the shepeherdes what newes the Aungels tolde them, and what song the quier of the heauenly souldiers did syng, and she alone on her owne partie, holdeth her peace, keping close in her brest, and with diligente consideracion weighing and conferring in her owne hearte, all these thynges that had fortuned aswell now at this present, as also afore whan the Aungell appered vnto her selfe. She kepeth secret (vntyl the due tyme should come to open it,) all the misterye of her beeyng conceyued with chylde, she was yet a pure birgine, she maketh no bauntes ne

braggeth in coumpanye emong other folkes, of her happy fortune. She hadde afore vnto the Aungell Gabriel, promysed herselfe a readye handemayden for God to worke hys wyl vpon, and euen lyke an humble handmayden she vseth herselfe. She maketh no woordes at all, but depelye considereth in her mind, the straunge course of Goddes weorkyng and dyrt in thys matter. She considereth all thynges to bee full of straunge miracles, she seeth in euery parte of it two extreme contraries myngled together, that is to wete, on the worldes behalfe exceadyng lownes, powerty, and abiection, and on Goddes behalf vnestimable highnes and maiestie. For a young babe is conceiued in the wombe, but an Aungell was the messagier that so it should be, and the holy ghost the worker of it: A chylde is borne, but the mother of it, is a mayde: it is laied in a maungier, but the Aungels beeyng full of all godly reioysyng doe syng from heauen in honor of it. It lyeth vnknowen in a blynde corner of no regarde, but all heauen bougheth downe to wurchyp the maiestye of it, alloone as it is borne. Nowe these thynges thus beyng done, the sheperdes returne backe agayne to their flockes, glorifyng and prayesyng God as concernyng all the thynges that they had heard of the Aungels, and for that they had truely found euery thing euen as they had heard afore of the same Aungels.

The texte. ¶ And whan the eyght daye was come, that the chylde should be circumcised, hys name was called Iesus, which was named of the Aungel, before he was conceiued in the wombe.

But alloone as the eyght daye after her deliueraunce was come, at the whiche eyght daye, the lawe of Moyses commaundeth euery man childe to be circumcised, that is to say, to haue the foreskynne of hys flesh pared away rounde about (for thys thyng from Abraham furthwarde it pleased God, that it should be ỳ sygne and the marke of all suche as shoulde bee reputed or taken to bee of hys Gene. xvi. b sede and generacion) the lawe was satisfyed in thys poynte also, in consideracion that he was not come to breake or to fordoo the lawe, but to fulfyll it. Neyther dyd he disdeigne to take the accustomed remedye appoynted by the lawe euen as though he had been subiect to sinne as his parentes wer, whereas he alone and none but he was free and clere from all corrupcion of sinne, and he alone that should take awaye al the synnes of the world, and should chose vnto hym a newe people, whiche should haue an hearte well clensed from all the desires of the flesche: and that not wyth knyues of blounte stone, but with the sharpe sweorde of the woorde euangelical, whyche purgethe and clenseth all thynges through fayth. Yea, and a name was geuen hym too, as the custome and ỳ manier was to do to others. For he was called in Hebrue Iesus, which
His name was called Iesus, &c. souneth in Englishe, sauiour. And thys name was not by a casual chaūce at al auentures, orels by mannes wylle geuen vnto thys childe, but by the authoritie and commaundement of God it had bene appointed and geuen him afore of the Aungel Gabriell, ere he was conceyued in the virgins wombe: whiche was done to the ende that men myght euen at the firste, by the verye woorde of his name, be aduertised and doen to wete, that thilkame was verye he which

The texte.

¶ And whan the tyme of theyr purification (after the lawe of Moyses) was come, they brought hym to Hierusalem, to presente hym to the Lorde (as it is written in the lawe of the Lorde: Euery manchilde that firste openeth the matrice, shall bee called holy to the Lorde) & for to offer (as it is sayd in the law of the Lord) a payre of turtle doues. or. ii. young pigions.

Hitherto (that is to say vntyll the circumcision of Jesus, the eyght daye after hys birthe,) all that was done, was nothing but as it were making of signes and profers vnto the gholpell vnder certayne fygures, the which golpell was of necessytie to bee preached fyrste vnto the people of the Jewes. On the fifth day after the circūcisyon, there came three Magians (that is to say, Philosophiers of hygh learnyng in the pryvyties of Astronomie, and the other sciences mathematical) and these Magians had by the shewing & poyncting of a certayne new sterre, bene halfe enforced to come from a farre place out of the East countreys, purposely to see thys childe. They kneled downe and wurshipped the newe borne soueraigne of the worlde, and honoured thesame with mistticall presentes or gyftes, signifying by a certayne shewe and semblaunce of thynges, (suche as myghte bee made,) that the Gentiles shoulde in tyme to come, embrace the grace of the gholpell, whan the Jewes being manquillers and murderers of Jesus, had wilfully caste of and forsaken the same. Agayne whan the. xl. day from Maries deliueraunce was come, at whiche. xl. daye, the law of Moses willeth and biddeth any manchylde, being the first borne childe of a woman, to bee presented vnto the Lorde, and ferther appoynteth a gyfte or a presente to be offered for the purifying aswell of the chylde newe borne, as of the woman that lay in (because the common childbearing and deliueraunce that women haue, is not without muche vncleneslle of the bodye) thys tender young virgyn beyng one of moste syngular demurenes and myldeneslle, refuseth not in thys behalfe, neyther to seme lyke vnto other women, whiche after the common course of nature doe bryng furth chyldren, ne auoydeth to doe as they doe: whereas in this her childebearyng there was nothyng at al defiled with any spot of vncleanesse, but euery parte of it replenyshed with heauenly puritie and with holineslle. For what poyncte of vnpureneslle coulde such a woman haue in bearyng chylde, as without so muche as once touchyng of any man had conceiued by the only power & vertue of god embracing her through the worcking of the holy ghoste? And as touching the childe, I pray you, was it possyble for any spotte of fylthyneslle to bee in suche a chylde, as beyng borne from heauen, was come into thys worlde euen for thys onely purpose, that he alone and onely might pourge all mankinde from all filthynes of sinne? But partely it was the will and pleasure of God, by suche notable exaumples of lowlynes and humilitie as these bee, to breake the pryde of manne: and partely it was conuenyente that he whiche was come to pergette and close vp bothe the broken walles, that is to saye, was come to ioyne and knytte the people of the Jewes and the people of the Gentiles bothe together into one professyon of the gholpell, shoulde in all behalfes and in all poyncles satysfie the lawe of Moyses, from whiche the firste fayth and authoritie should afterward procede and come vnto the gholpell.

And whan the tyme of theyr purification. &c

They brought him to Hierusalem, to present hym to ỹ Lorde.

The mother therfore and Joseph, (who by the determinate and aduised worcking of God was yet stil thought and supposed of euery manne to be the father of Jesus,) brought theyr young babe vnto Hierusalem, to the ende he might in the temple there bee presented in the sighte of the Lord, to whome he was dedycated and halowed: not as thoughe God were not Lorde and true owner of all thynges, but by a mystycall fygure to teache vs, that suche hertes and none others, bee thoroughlye accepted afore God, as after the subduing and vanquyshyng of all the inordynate desires of the fleashe, (in whiche reigneth naught but the corrupcyon of nyce tenderenesse) dooe with mannelye strengthe of the spirite, stoutely sette furth towardes those thinges which are heauenly and euerlasting. The law of Moyses meaning this same thing, had prescribed and appointed, that euery male kinde, as sone as it had once opened the mattice of the dame, & were come into the worlde, should be reputed & taken for halowed and consecrated to the Lorde, whether it were brought furth by a woman or by any brute beastes, to the entente that euen of these also the firste fruites shoulde be allotted vnto the priestes, and yet vnder suche condycyon, that the fyrste borne of mankynde myghte bee redemed with a small offreyng and boughte out of the priestes handes, excepte it were a chylde of the trybe of Leui. But the lawe selfe doeth openly discharge and deliuer this holy childewife from the bande of the lawe, whan it sayeth in the thyrde boke of Moyses entitcled Leuiticus: If a woman haue conceiued, and borne a manchilde, &c.

Exod. xxxiiii. a, g. xxii. d.

Leuit. xii. a.

For thys mother was neyther properly to be called a woman, forasmuche as she knew no parte of any mannes body, nor had broughte furth chylde by receiuing seede from any other partie. And agayne whan it sayeth: Euery one of the male kinde that first openeth the matrice. &c. It doeth sufficientely declare it selfe to meane of the common mannier of delyueraunce that mothers haue of theyr childzen, whiche mothers, by reason that the seale of theyr virgynytie is broken vp afore by the manne, doe bryng furth chylde neyther without muche vncleneſse, nor yet without a certayne kinde of being put to shame. And as for this heauenly childe, neyther whan it entred, nor whan it came furthe, dyd by anye meanes pollute the enclosure and tabernacle of the maydenlye wombe of his mother, but rather did consecrate thesame and seale it vp that from hencefurthe neyther her bodye beyng a temple once for euer dedycated vnto God, nepet her soule being (as ye woulde say) a closet for the holy ghoste, replenished with all odorferous swete sauours, mighte bee open to receyue any staynyng or corruption of worldely fylthinesse. Herfore whiche was the Lorde of all thinges that are bothe in heauen and in yearthe, was presented and offered in the temple, as one subiecte and bounde vnto the lawe.

And he was agreed for and redemed out of the priestes handes agayne for a small price, whiche shoulde afterwarde redeme all the whole vniuersall world with the price of his bloude. For the lawe had prescribed, that the parentes mighte bye out the first borne manchilde with a lambe of one yere olde, which was geuen to bee a burnte offeryng: and than besides the lambe there shoulde bee broughte a male Pygyon or a turtle doue for the pourgyng and dooyng away of sinne if any spotte thereof had bene gotten, eyther in the carnall copulacion at the begetting of the chylde or elles afterwarde. For it ought on euery side to bee pure, whatsoeuer thing is to bee offered vnto the lorde. That if the penurie and lacke of substance on the parentes behalfe, coulde not wel suffer a lambe to bee geuen, than in stede of the lambe there was geuen a turtle doue, or a young pigion for the redeming and bying out of the chylde, and the other byrde was offered for the pourgeyng of sinne. They offred therefore the gyfte of poore folkes. And there is no doubte but that they woulde haue geuen a more bountifull offreyng, had not theyr pouertie beene a lette thereof.

They hadde hertes ryche with good loue and zeale towarde godde, but for an

enſaumple to be prepared for vs to folowe, they? profeſſion and open knowlagyng of they? pouertie was more erpedyente and ſerued better. And all theſe thinges were by the diſpenſacion of gods ordinañce thus executed and doen, partely for many other cauſes and conſideracions, and moſt ſpecially for this cauſe and purpoſe, that the verape true the of oure humapne nature myghte by ſo manye eupdente proufes and tokens, bee declared to bee in the chylde. Marie was ſeene with her greate bellye in the ynne: within a lytle ſpace, as ſoone as ſhe had brought furthe chylde, her greate bealy was gone agayne: the childe being but euen new borne, was knowen and found out by the ſhepheardes: he was ſoughte oute and wurſhypped of the Magians: he was circumcyſed after the ſolemne cuſtome vſed in that nacion, and eftſons brought he was into the temple, and there openly preſented vnto the prieſtes: by theſe thinges it came to paſſe, that neither any body might doubte of his birth, and yet he by litle and litle came to the notice & knowlage of mo and mo, but moſte chiefly of meane folkes, yea and of none but godly & deuoute perſons onely. For meete it was, that ſuche a thyng ſhoulde neyther with a fewe proufes bee enforced, nor yet with onely common poynctes of eupdence bee confirmed, the which being credited and beleued, ſhoulde vnto al ages and times as wel paſt as to come, and to all perſons, bring euerlaſting health and ſaluacion, & being not beleued ſhoulde contrary wiſe bring euerlaſtyng death. An Aungell therfore cummeth in meſſage from God, and bringeth woorde of the thyng afore vnto Marie: her ſpouſe Joſeph is ioyned vnto her afore, to the ende he maye be a true witneſſe of the matter: Elizabeth whiche had liued barayne tyll ſhe was an aged woman, bringeth furth childe: zacharie, whan he had a long time contynued dumme, is reſtored to the vſe of hys tongue, and hathe hys ſpeche agayne: bothe of them as well zacharie as Elizabeth are ſodaynelye rauyſhed with the ſpirpte of prophecie: John leapeth in hys mothers woumbe for ioye: a virgin without mannes helpe concepueth chylde: Magians beyng ſtraungiers of a farre countrey, come renning to haue a ſighte of the childe, and doe wurſhip him on they? knees: Shepheardes talke of him abrode, and declare openlye that he is come. By ſuche a greate noumber of euidente tokens, and by ſo many ſtraunge wonders and miracles is the newe birth of this child approued and auctho?ſed.

¶ And beholde there was a man in Hieruſalem whoſe name was Symeon. And the ſame man was iuſt and godly, and loked for the conſolacion of Iſraell. And the holye ghoſte was in him. And an aunſwere had he receyued of the holye ghoſte, that he ſhoulde not ſee deathe, ercepte he firſte ſawe the lordes Chriſte. And he came by inſpiracyon into the temple. And whan the father and the mother broughte in the childe Jeſus, to dooe for hym after the cuſtome of the lawe: then toke he him vp in his armes, and ſayde. Lorde nowe leattest thou thy ſeruaunt departe in peace, according to thy promiſe. For myne iyes haue ſeen the ſaluacion, whiche thou haſte prepared before the face of all people. A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Iſraell. The texte.

Nowe to the entente that there ſhoulde bee no ſexe, no age, no ſtate or degree of menne, nor no profeſſion, but that Chriſt ſhould haue teſtimonie and witneſſe of euetie one of them, neyther any one bodye lefte behinde, but that he might aſſuredly promyſe vnto hymſelfe healthe and ſaluacyon at the handes of the ſame Chriſte: there was at the ſame time in Hieruſalem a certayne man named Symeon, a manne by reaſon of olde age colde in hys bodye, but in ſpirite feruente hote: of bodye feble and impotente, but of ſoule quiuer and luſtie; And the ſame man was iuſte & godly. &c.

of yeres dyde and withered, but in all perfecteneſſe of good lyuyng as freſhe as floures: that is to wete a verave iuſte and vprighte man, and in verye dede a deuoute manne, and full of Godlyneſſe, not huntyng aboute for glorye and lucre at the handes of menne after the exaumple of the Phariſeis, but ryghte deſirouſe and muche hungryng for the health and ſaluacyon of al mankinde in generall: whome no delite or pleaſure dyd make willing to continue in thys life, ſauyng onely that he myghte with hys owne yes once ſee the verave ſelfe Meſſias, whome the wholy ſayinges of the Prophetes had promyſed to come for the verave entente and purpoſe, to recomforte the people of Iſraell, whiche people hadde bene long tyme afore many wayes in muche diſtreſſe, and dyd euen verave than lyue in greuous afflyccyon. Thys Symeon (as in dede good manne he was) had aſſured knowleage afore by inſpiracyon of the holy ghoſte, that the ſame day and tyme was nowe alreadye come. And whereas he had with moſte ardente prayers beſoughte the lorde to geue hym the gift, that he mighte but euen once with hys bodelye yes beholde the Meſſias nowe ſo manye hundred yeres loked for: he had in the ſecrete cloſet of hys godlye breſte, receiued an aunſwere of the holye ghoſte, that he ſhoulde be ſure not to depart out of this preſente lyfe, but that he ſhoulde firſte ſee with his bodely yes that ſame bleſſed babe, whome he had ſeene manye a daye afore with the yes of his feyth, to the ende he myghte wytneſſe hym to bee come in dede, whome he dyd nothyng doubte but that come he ſhoulde: that ſame bleſſed chylde (I ſaye,) whome for a very ſouth god hath ſingularely aboue al other menne enoynted that he mighte haue and enioye bothe a kyngdome forever to endure, and alſo a prieſtehood neuer to bee abrogated or abolyſhed. Therefore whan the tyme ſhoulde come that the chylde Jeſus ſhoulde bee brought into the temple (as we haue ſayde,) the blyſſed olde manne afore named, being ſecretly warned by the mocyon of the ſpirite, came euen a litle before into the temple. And whan Marie the mother of the chylde, and Joſeph, who was yet ſtyll beleued to bee his father, brought the babe into the temple, there to execute and to doe ſuche thinges as vnto the accuſtomed rites of purifycacion dyd appertayne: as ſoone as the chylde was offered vp, and the prieſte had receyued it as the maner was, and had bleſſed it: the godlye zeale of the olde man coulde no longer forbeare, but that he alſo woulde nedes take in hys armes, the litle young babe, whome he had ſo greately longed for, and euen furthwithall, hys voyce (being in caſe not long after to continue, but to fayle by reaſon of age) ſodaynly braſt out into the prayſing of God, ſingyng out a moſt ſwete and melodious ſong muche after the ſorte (if ye will ſo lyken it) as in the poetes and Philoſophiers it is written, that the ſwannes vſe to do a litle before they ſhall dye: and thus he ſayde: All my deſyres, o Lord, are nowe fully ſatiſfied. Nowe will I be willing and glad to dye: For nowe thou geueſt thy ſeruaunte leaue to departe with a reſtfull and a quiete mynde, not feryng ne hauing any ferther wante at al or lacke in this life, but euen deſirouſe I fayn nowe to paſſe out of this feble olde carkas, vnto the bliſſed company and felowſhippe of the godly perſones, whiche haue long afore nowe loked for thys day, and yet neuer had the happe to ſee it, but with the ſpirytuall yes of theyr faythe. acceptable hoste. For her bodye she offered with often fastyng, and her soule with deuoute meditacyons and prayers. And euen whyle the aforesayde rytes and ceremonies of purificacion were in doing within the temple, in the verey houre whyle Symeon is in hys prophetycall talke, in the verayе momente whyle all thinges are full of holye and godlye wordes, both of retoylyng and of thankes geuyng for thys heauenlye young babe: thys Anna too, (euen as god wouldе haue it) commeth emong them, that she also might be a witnesse of the same childe, that borne he was, and that she myghte ioyne the affeccyons of her hearte with the ioyfulnesse of the others, extollyng and hyghelye prayesyng the bounteouse goodnesse of god for that he had caste so mercifull an eye vpon his people. Neyther did she, whan she was in coumpaignye and presence of others, kepe secret the thing that she had seene with her eyes, and the whiche she hadde learned by Goddes inspiracyon: but she wouldе euermore bee speaking and talking of thys chylde, vnto all suche as were in Hierusalem, and loked for the redemption of the people of Israell. And thys was enough for a womanne being a wedowe, onelye in the temple to talke and to auouche that Christe was come, and the same to entimate and disclose vnto a fewe persones abrode beeyng desyrouse and hungrie of it. For that same tyme was not yet come, which was reserued for the Apostles whan they shouldе bee repleniſhed with the holy goste, of the whiche Apostles it is sayde in the Psalme of Dauid:

¶ And whan they had performed all thynges accordyng to the lawe of the Lorde, they returned into Galile, to theyr owne citie Nazareth. And the childe grewe, and waxed strong in spirite, and was filled with wisedome, and the grace of God was vpon hym.

All thinges being at the last fully and orderly executed, as muche as the lawe of Moyses had prescribed for the purificacyon of women late delyuered of childe: they returned into Bethleem, where the chylde was borne. But whan king Herode beeyng doone to wete by the Magians, that there was a newe king of the people of Israell borne, had commaunded all the infantes to bee slayne, as many as within two yeres daye, next afore passed, had bene borne in Bethleem, and in all the circuite of the same lordeship or countie: Joseph beeing aduertised and warned in his slepe so to doe, conueighed awaye priuelye bothe the childe and the mother that bore it, into Egipte, and there made their abode vntill the death of the wicked kyng. That thyng done, they eftesons returned at the warnyng of an aungell, not into Bethleem, leste some occasyon of shewing ferther crueltie mighte perchaunce thereby haue bene geuen to the sonne of Herode (who had at that tyme succeded his father in a porcion of his kyngdome) but they returned into the countreye of Galyle, vnto the cytye of Nazareth, where the babe was firste conceyued in hys mothers woumbe. For his minde was to liue in a corner out of the way for a time: and in dede keping himselfe in the poore citie of Nazareth, it was an easy thing for him to beguile the crueltie of them that dredde the arising of a newe king. And thus hitherto that same oure heauenly soueraigne lorde and prince, who had for oure sakes abassed and humbled hymselfe downe euen to swadlyng cloutes, to the cradle, to crying in his swathing bandes as other children doe, & to the strengthlesse babehoode of the bodye, was preached and declared to the worlde by the onelye testymonie of other folkes talkyng. strength of his body: in whiche body as in a tabernacle, there clearely appered a certayn wonderful towardnesse and natural inclinacion to vertue, euidently declaring that somewhat there was in him, more then a man. The strength also of the spirite continuallye encreased in hym, daylye more and more shewing it selfe foorthe in hys countenaunce, in hys passe, in hys talke, and in hys doinges: in all whiche, there was not so muche as any one poincte, but it was euen full of the spirytes of myldenesse and humylytie, of chastytie, of amyablenesse, and of godlye zeale. For he was nothyng subiecte to those vices, whiche the peres of childehood is commonly woonte to bee encoumbred with: that is to wete, fondenesse of speaking, and doyng thinges, wantonnesse, inconstauncie, and folye: but the heauenlye wysedome wherwith he was replenyshed, not tarying for the peres and age that discrecion oughte to bee in, dyd euen than already in such wise shewe it selfe, that wheras he was afore commended, and set furthe by the testimony of others, nowe by his owne vertues and giftes of grace (being suche as fewe other men had,) he was made bothe wonderful to all persones, and also worthy to be loued. Wysedome, holynesse, perfeccyon of liuing, ripenesse of discression, being in hym suche and so greate as cannot in any other man of right aunciente peres be founde, made him wonderfull vnto all men: and the delectable swetenesse of his conuersacyon, his ientle familiare facyon towardes all folkes, and hys humble softenesse, made hym vnto all men amiable. Neyther was the fauoure that men dyd beare hym, fauoure of the common sorte, or for a lytle season, suche as that same age of chyldehoode doeth ofte tymes gather through humayne qualities, (as in exaumple, for the respect of beautie and welfauourednesse, or otherwise for aptitude and quicknesse of taking that is taught them, whiche is in some chyldren beefore theyr tume) but in hym there shined a certayne godlye and wonderfull grace, mightily drawing all men to the loue of hys vertuousenesse.

And was filled with wisedome.

¶ And his father and mother wente to Hierusalem euery yere at the feaste of Estur. And whan he was twelue yere olde, they wente vp to Hierusalem after the custome of the feaste daye. And whan they had fulfilled the dayes, as they returned home, the childe Iesus abode still in Hierusalem, and hys father and mother knewe not of it: but they supposyng him to haue bene in the compaygnye, came a dayes iourney, and soughte hym emong theyr kinsfolke and acquaintaunce. And whan they founde him not, they went backe agayn to Ierusalem and sought hym. And it fortuned that after three dayes, they founde him in the temple sitting in the middes of the doctoures, hearyng them, and opposing them. And all that hearde him, were astouned at his vnderstandyng and aunswers.

The texte.

And although Nazareth was somewhat ferre in dystaunce from Hierusalem, yet neuertheles the parentes of Iesus beeyng folkes of muche deuocion, wente thither euery yere once, and that was at the festiuall daye of Estur, whiche feaste was emong the Iewes kepte highe and holy with al possible deuocion and solemnitie. And this was the daye, at whiche that same lambe not knowing any manier spotte of synne, was marked and appoynted to be offred vp in sacrifice at his due tyme. The chylde also beeyng vnder the guydyng of his mother, and his fosterfather, euen than as younge as he was, accustomed himselfe to deuout seruing of god, for our ensaumple: putting all fathers and mothers in remembraūce of theyr dueties, who are bounde to restreigne theyr children that are come of them, from all wantonnesse euen at the first daye, yea euen in theyr verye cradles, and the same to enure to holye conuersacion and to earneste applying of true godlyneſſe, whyle theyr age is yet tender, and theyr naturall diſpoſicion yet ientle, ſofte, and plyaunte vnto all manier traynyng in vertue. The childe Jeſus neded not the ſcoolyng or ordreyng of anye other perſone: but it was an exaumple ordeyned for other parentes, howe to bryng vp theyr chyldren chaſtelye and vertuouſlye: and alſo a fourme or trade ſhewed vnto all young chyldren, how they oughte to vſe themſelues obedient to theyr parentes, whan they are by the ſame exhorted and aduertyſed to thynges that are holye and godlye. But whan hys chyldehood by reaſon of a more nounber of yeres, was nowe growen to a litle more ſtrength, and begoon to drawe wel towardes the ſtature of a younge ſtrieplyng, he beeyng of the full age of twelue yeres olde, and hys parentes, accordyng to the auncyente cuſtome had gone to Hieruſalem at the day of Eſtur, and the chylde awaytyng on them in theyr compaygny: as ſoone as al thinges were finyſhed that to the ſolemne obſerupng of that feaſte dyd appertayne, and the dayes thoughlye expired, in whiche due attendaunce muſte bee geuen to the dyupne ſeruice in the temple: whereas his mother and Joſeph were returned homewarde towarde Nazareth, the childe Jeſus remayned ſtyll at Hieruſalem: euen than beefore his full age, ſhewing hymſelfe glad and ready to accomplyſhe the commaundemētes and meſſage of his father, for the doyng wherof he had bene ſent into the worlde. But hys parentes knewe nothyng of hys tarying behynde. But whan they ſawe that he came not home agayne to Nazareth, they accordyng to the common rate of care that other parentes take for theyr children, greatly muſed and wondred, what had befallen. And in dede at the firſte, they demed that he had hanged on the compaignye of ſome of his felowes and kinſfolkes, and by reaſon therof had bene the ſlacker in cumming. They geat them therefore backe agayn euen the ſame way that they had come, to the mountenaūce in manyer of one whole dayes iourneye, makyng ſearche for hym emonge theyr acquayntaunce and kinſfolkes, in coumpany of whome ſuche litle chyldren are often times woonte to make tarryaunce and lyngeryng, becauſe the affeccionate deſire of theyr kinſfolke, or alliaunce, doth commonlye kepe them backe and maketh them to tary. But emongſt al theſe, was Jeſus not found, who taughte men euen than alreadye as young as he was, that ſuche an one as is willing to take vpon hym the profeſſion and teachyng of heauenlye doctrine, muſte renounce and cleatelye forſake all worldlye or carnall affeccyons bothe of father and mother and alſo of kinſfolkes. Theyr hope therfore beyng begupled in ſekyng Jeſus here emong hys kynſfolkes, nowe that careful-neſſe for theyr childe did ſomewhat more earneſtely pricke & vexe theyr ſtomackes (as in tender parentes it wil doe) backe they wente agayn to Hieruſalem, deming and ſuppoſing it to bee poſſyble enoughe, that he had there remayned ſtyll in the houſe of ſome frende or acquayntaunce of theyrs. But whan the chylde was in vayne ſought here alſo emong theyr acquayntaunce and kynſfolkes: after three dayes ſpace, it chaunced, that hys parentes whan they had no ſuche hope at all, founde hym in the temple, not ydle, nor playing thys or that childiſhe toye: but ſitting ſtill in the middes emong the doctours, whome he being but a childe, did by courſe bothe heare teachyng, and alſo did appoſe, and being by courſe oppoſed of them agayne, did make aunſwere: not for that it was nedefull for hym to demaunde of any mortall creature what to learne: but to the ende that by wiſely miniſtring his oppoſicions, he might rightely enſtructe and teache them, that profeſſed the perfecte knowelage of the lawe, wheras

And whan he was twelue yeres olde, they wente vp to Hieruſalem.

The childe Jeſus abode ſtill in Hieruſalē.

And whan they found him not they wente &c.

And it fortuned that after three dayes they founde him in the temple. &c.

wheras in dede they knew not the strength, the pith, and the effecte of the lawe and all vnder one, enflamyng vs vnto an earneste zeale to take good instytucyons: and also geuyng a good lesson, that no age is ouer younge or ouer soone putte to the learnyng of suche thynges, as maye auayle or serue towardes godlye perfeccion. For some artes and occupacyons there bee whiche euerye age is not apte, but ouer young, to learne: onely deuocyon and godlynesse is to bee learned by and by from the cradle, and the earneste dilygence in applying the same, not to bee slacked or releassed at any tyme vntyll the verye laste daye of a mannes lyfe. For there is in it higher degrees and hygher to growe vnto, as long as a mannes life dooeth endure. And as for Iesus, although he were vnknowen bothe to the doctoures and also to the people that stode about, yet did he make them all to merueyle at hym, that beyng a chylde of a smal age, and stature, he coulde in his sayinges & aunswers shewe furth a certayne woonderfull wysedome: yea and ferre excedyng the wysdome of sage olde menne. They sawe the age of his bodye to bee tender, and ferre vnrype to haue any great wisedome, and they hearde a young chylde with singular humilitie and sobrenesse, vttering furth and speakyng such thinges, as the great doctoures of auncyente yeres, and they that semed now to be as high in wisedome as any menne myghte bee, thoughte not tedyouse to learne. And yet all the while there was in hym no pryde ne haultenesse, there was in hym no malapertenesse of cockyng or geuyng tauntes, there was in hym no mannier bosting or vaūting of himselfe, which vices are not wont to lacke in boyes whose wittes are rype beefore theyr tyme. But he woulde question with them, as one desyrouse and fayne to learne; and beyng demaunded anye questyon, he woulde aunswere with all possible sobrenesse, yea and also with most excellent wisedome. And on thys mannier taughte he them without anye spyce or semblaunce of arrogancie, that is to saye, of presumpteouse takyng of autoritie vpon hym. And by these thynges it came to passe, that as well the doctoures with whome he disputed, as also the partyes that stode rounde about & were witnesses of the same disputacion, were verye muche astouned, not onely for respect of the chyldes wisedome, (being suche as had not afore bene hearde of,) whiche he in demaundyng any questyon, and in shappyng any aunswere, dyd playnely declare: but also for the rare and syngulare sobrenesse of his countenaunce, of hys gesture, and of hys tongue, whiche thynges gaue a more ferther grace of acceptacyon vnto hys vnderstandyng. And yet is not thys poynete neyther without a fructfull mysterye; that Iesus, who coulde not with any seking be founde emong his familiare acquaintaunce & kynsfolkes after the flesshe, was sodayhelye founde by chaunce at Hierusalem within the temple. For the sayde citie of Hierusalem, being of greate name and fame, (by reason that the worlde had conceyued an opinyon, that god was serued there beste of all places,) did represent aswell the churche militaunte on yearthe, as also triumphaunte in heauen. For this same Hierusalem is our countrey that we make all our sighyng to bee at, forasmuche as we dooe well vnderstande that here in thys transytorye worlde, we lyue but as it were in a place of exile or banyshemente, not hauing a citie wherin to dwell for euer. Wherfoeuer therefore all goeth by carnall affeccyons of manne, whereseoeuer the earneste studie of the minde is applyed vnto such thynges as perish and dye with this worlde, in suche a place neyther is Hierusalem (whiche Hebrue woorde is to say in Englishe, the sighte of peace,) neither a temple dedicated to the Lorde.

And al that hearde him were astouned at his vnderstanding and aunswers.

And

And therefore is not Jesus in any suche place to bee soughte, who is altogether heauenlye. But whereſoeuer is a brest and an herte, whiche despyseth the thinges that pertaine to the carnalytie of fleashe and bloude, and panteth for haste that he maketh towarde that same blessed tranquilitie and quietnesse of mynde, whiche the bounteouse goodnesse of god dooeth through the faythe of the ghospell allure and warraunte euen here in this presente life, and maketh perfecte in the heauenlye Hierusalem aboue, in suche a place is Hierusalem: in suche a place is the temple that Jesus is delited with: in suche a place there is bothe propounyng of questyons and aunswerynge enterchaungeablye, not concerning howe a roumde circle maye be made iuste fower square, not of that whiche in Aristotles philosophie is called Materia prima, (as if ye shoulde say in Englishe the first originall stuffe wherof and out of whiche all thinges in the worlde are produced and made) nor of that that the same Aristotle and other doe call primum mobile (whereby they meane hym that gouerneth the worlde, and rolleth the skye aboute without begynning or ending, not naming it god but estemyng it to bee some other naturall thyng of it selfe) of all whiche thynges a manne maye be ignoraunt, and yet come to heauen well enough: but in suche place as we speake of, the oppositions and aunsweres are concernyng the knowlage of holy scripture, by the which god sheweth vnto vs, the way whereby we maye attayne euerlasting saluacion. In suche a place are slayne hostes and sacrifices moste acceptable vnto god, that is to wete, carnall luste, enuie, wrathe, desire of worldely auauncemente, and auarice. In suche a place there is with all godlye petycions and with pure prayers, contynuall burnyng of swete sauoures and incence to the moste hyghe contemplacyon and pleasyng of god. It is therfore the parte of euery body to see and prouyde, that he haue Hierusalem within hys owne breste, and that he there make readye a temple mete for the holy ghoste, to the ende that he may bee worthy to haue Jesus to his geaste,

The texte. And when they sawe him, they meruciled. And his mother sayde vnto hym: Sonne why hast thou thus delte with vs? Beholde, thy father and I haue soughte thee sorowyng. And he sayd vnto them: howe is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must goe aboute my fathers busynesse? And they vnderstoode not that saying whiche he spake vnto them. And he went downe with them, and came to Nazareth, and was obediente vnto them. But hys mother kepte all theſe sayinges together in her herte. And Jesus prospered in wisedome, age, and in fauoure, with god and men.

And beholde, euen in the meane tyme whyle the sayd meruciouse chylde Jesus dooeth with this foundacion and entreing make a preparatiue to the executing of the heauenlye businesse of restoring mankinde to saluacion, whiche to doe he was come downe from heauen: hys father and mother commeth sodaynely in place, to whome the mystery of gods intente and purpose was not yet fully knowen. There was yet still remaynyng in them, some litle spyece of humayne affeccion, although they had with a naturall louing carefulnesse, soughte aboute for the chylde. And Joseph for hys parte holdeth hys peace, who knew verye wel in his conscience, that he had no right ne title to the childe that hys spoused wyfe had borne: but the mother, as she thoughte she might well doe by auoritie, maketh halfe a querele to hym: Sonne, sayeth she, why dooe ye handle vs after suche sorte as thys? why dyd ye priuely steale away from vs? loe, your father and I beyng nowe by the space of two or three dates in greate care and heauynesse, haue bene seeking all about for you, fearing on wozdes of Marie, whiche had pzoceded of an affectyon in dede right tendze & naturall, but yet ſomewhat humayne and wozldelye (foz reſpecte whereof it was not conueniente to interrupte oz breake the godlye talke, that was than indignacion with hys parentes, but to ſhewe, that in the affayzes of the gholpell, (which to doe he was ſente of hys heauenly father,) no mannier autozitie of any man (what euer he be) ought to haue place. The auctozytie of parentes ouer their childzen hathe certayn due lymytes and boundes howe ferre it maye extende, whiche autozitye it is lawefull and alſo neceſſarye to renounce and vtterly forſake, as often as any matier of eternal ſaluacion commeth in plate.

Foz mete it is, that thynges wozldelye geue place vnto godlye thynges, and that the reſpecte and regarde of God (to whome we are bounden debtoures tyme moze ſnappyſhelye make aunſwere vnto them, that from pzeachyng the goſpell, called him furth of the thzong & pzeſſe of the people, in the name of his mother & of his kynſfolkes. But the aunſwere that he made at thys tyme, was not fully and thzoughly vnderſtande the highe excellencye and maieſtie of the power of god, they diddē not yet perfectely knowe by what woonderfull dzyfte and conueyghaunce, god the father had determyned to redeme mankynde by

But they, thoughe they were the parentes, are all huſhte, and ſpeake not a of obedyence, but of hys owne goodnesse he submytted hymselfe for a season to theyr weakenesse, to bee ruled and ordred by them: and therewithall he also gaue vnto all chyldren a fourme and an exaumple, with what earnestee endeuoure and with what greate reuerence, they oughte to bee at theyr parentes commaundemente: forasmuche as the chylde Jesus, who ought no seruice ne obedience to any bodye, saueng onely to hys heauenlye father, dyd in suche wise obeye a father that was but counterfeycte and hys mother that bore hym withoute any harme or dyspleasure of empayrynge her chastytie and maydenhood thereby. Thus did the Lorde Jesus thinke it good, in suche wise to temper all hys sayinges and doynges: that nowe he woulde shewe furthe, (as ye woulde saye,) certayne lytle sparkes of hys godlye power: and an other tyme agayne would he humble hymselfe to the lowe degree of a man, poorely borne into this worlde. Verayly his so doyng was expediente for vs, to the ende that it myght by all mannyer wayes be perswaded vnto mankinde, the veritie and true substaunce bothe of the dyuyne nature and of the nature of manne, to bee coupled together in hys one persone. The felowshyppe of a nature beeyng common both to him and vs, did greatly make for the purchasing of loue. We doe more earnestly and also more fruictfully loue thinges that be nere to oure owne nature and familyare to deale with: euen by the olde prouerbe, whiche sayeth: that lyke will euermore vnto lyke. But as for puttyng oure affiaunce and truste, we dooe more safely put it in god, who, (forasmuche as lye he cannot, and is of power all thinges to dooe,) may in no manner wise bee doubted of, but that he wyll perfourme whatsoeuer he dooeth promyse. And in dede oure loue towardes Christe doeth firste springe vp of the coulynage and lykenesse of oure nature: but from these begunninges it groweth better and better to the loue of thynges beyng hygher aboue vs. For lyke as the common sorte of menne, is at the firste begynnyng by the onely seeyng of the beautie of ones bodye, enflamed and sette on fyer, to beare hys good wyll to the partye, and shortely after, whan by keepyng of coumpanye and by talkyng wyth the same partye, the good qualytyes of a more beautyfull mynde and soule lying hydden in hys beautifull bodye, are once throughelye perceyued, they begynne more truelye and also more ardentelye to bee in loue with the thyng that they see not, then with the thyng that they see: euen so the felowshyppe and equalitye of oure humayne nature in hym, was vnto vs, as ye woulde saye, a lure to the conceyuyng of loue towardes the Lorde Jesus, but from thys loue we growe vp more hygher to the loue of hys diuyne power, and of hys godhede. Therfore whether he humble himselfe down to oure weakenesse, or els mounteth vp to his owne hyghnesse aboue, he busilye attendeth the labouryng and worcking of oure health and saluacion. So than Jesus wente from the temple and from Hierusalem: and obeying the gouernaunce of his parētes, returned home agayne to Nazareth. Let chyldren & yong strieplinges whan they heare this, be ashamed, as many as make lyghte at the good lessons and counsayles of theyr parentes exhortyng them to honest wayes, seeyng that Jesus dyd for a space leaue of from dooyng hys fathers busynesse, because he woulde not shewe any exaumple of a disobedyent sonne. Let the priuate commoners and partisheners blushe, that vse to rebell agaynste theyr godlye pastoures, beyng theyr spirituall fathers: seeing that Jesus being the greater in dygnytie, was contente to bee ordred by his inferiours, and beyng God, submytted hymselfe to the gouernaunce of creatures mortal. But the mother agayne on her parte,

foꝛalmuche as ſhe perceyued and founde a certayne power of the goddeheade to glittre and ſhewe furthe in hym, was well contente to folowe the minde and oꝛdering of her ſoune: and being myndefull of her owne wiſe and diſcrete ſobꝛeneſſe, dyd as yet make no blabbyng out abꝛode of any thing (as other weomen vſe to bee full of clatteryng and bablyng) ne take vpon her to geue anye ſentence oꝛ iudgement vpon theſe matiers, whiche ſhe did rather meruepleat, then vnderſtande the miſterie of it, what it mente: but all that euer had chaunced from the begynnyng aboute oꝛ concernyng the chylde, and all that euer was by him ſayde oꝛ dooen, ſhe gathered and conferred altogether, and layde it vp ſafe in her bꝛeſte: coniecturyng and caſtyng of theſe wonderfull begynninges, what ende of all mattyers was lyke to enſue. Neyther dyd ſhe leaue any one poyncte vnmarked, to the ende that ſhe myghte afterwarde with the moꝛe perfecte truethe and aſſuraunce, make repoꝛte of all thynges vnto the dyſcypples, that ſhoulde in tyme cummyng pꝛeache the lyfe of Jeſus all the woꝛlde thꝛoughoute. In the meane whyle Jeſus beeyng yet hitherto knowen but vnto fewe folkes, continued dwelling in ỹ pooꝛe citie of Nazareth, liuing (as ye myghte ſaye) vnder the gouernaunce of hys parentes, vntyll the tyme ſhoulde come, that was ſette of hys father, in whiche he ſhoulde with myꝛacles and with pꝛeaching, ſhewe furth himſelfe abꝛode vnto the woꝛlde: geuing to vs in the meane while a leſſon by his owne exaumple, that no man ſhoulde vnaduiſedly and vndyſcretely, oꝛ els out of tyme and wythoute due occaſyon come ruſhing in, oꝛ make pꝛeſſe to take in hande thoffice of pꝛeaching the goſpell, befoꝛe that he doe thꝛough ſufficyente groweth of yeres, thꝛoughe vnculpable behauyoure, thꝛoughe due learnyng and knowleage in holy ſcriptures, and thꝛough Goddes vocacyon, gather vnto hymſelfe a good autoꝛitie to become a teacher. Foꝛ Jeſus vntyll he was in mannier full thirtie yeres of age, neuer did anye very notable acte, ſauyng that aboue the rate of other moꝛtall men, like as he grewe and pꝛoſpered in ſtature of bodye, in ſtrengthe, and groweth of yeres: ſo did that ſame heauenly wiſedome ſtyll moꝛe and moꝛe pleniteouſlye ſhewe furthe it ſelfe in hym, and ſo dyd his other manyfolde gyftes of grace alſo, thꝛoughe whiche, lyke as he was moſte highlye accepted with god, ſo did he dayly moꝛe and moꝛe growe in fauoure and eſtimacion with menne: an vnlyke manne veraylye and of a muche contrarie ſoꝛte vnto the Scribes and Phariſeis, who by a counterfeite pꝛetence of holyneſſe and of wyſedome, vſed to ſette out themſelues to the eyes of menne, whereas in the ſyghte of god they were as full as they myghte ſwarme of all filthe and vncleaneſſe of vyce. Neyther was it onely auayleable to the ſaluacyon of mankynde, (who was to be redemed by a ſtraunge conueyghaunce, and ſuche as the lyke hadde not beene hearde of afoꝛe,) but alſo to the good inſtruccyon and traynyng of oure lyfe, that Jeſus did by litle and litle, and by certayne degrees, ſhewe furth to the knowledge of men, hys heauenly giftes of grace that he was moſt aboundauntly repleniſhed withall. Foꝛ that thing veraylye he dyd to geue vs a leſſon that from thoſe firſt pꝛeceptes and rules of righteouſeneſſe, (which we ought, euen ſtreight way while we be young cradle childꝛen, to dꝛinke in,) we ſhould with continuall going foꝛwarde ſucceſſauntly, doe al oure poſſible endeuoure to attaygne vnto thinges of moꝛe and moꝛe perfectyon. Foꝛ lyke as the bodye hath his degrees of growing bigger and bigger to the full rate of his ſtature, and to hys full ſtrengthe, that is to wete, ſhootyng vp firſte from infancie oꝛ babehood to the ſtature of a young ſtrieplyng: from the ſtature of a ſtriepling

For Chryste groweth bygger and bygger in vs, and shooteth vp more and more to mannes state, whan we from the fyrste enstruccyons and articles of the fayth doe encroche forwarde to a more depe hydden wisedom of the scripture of God: whan we forsake the milke of the fleashe, and begin to haue a stomake or appetyte to the sounde and stronge meate of the spirytc: when we leaue the vnsauerye letter, and thirste the mystycall sence and meaning: whan we nothyng esteme ne regarde thynges yearthly, but mounte vp and take our flight to thinges celestiall. For it is euen playne settyng the cart before the horses, yf the body shall by the course of nature growe from tyme to tyme forewarde to better and beter, and the soule shall by oure sluggyshenesse continually renne headlong backewarde to wurse and wurse. For thus do we see it commonly come to passe. Big laddes and strieplynges grow quite awaye from the purenes of babehood to boyishe wantonnesse, the youth than againe groweth forewarde a pace to brabling in the lawe, and to making of affrayes, manstate emendeth to ambicion and couetise. And so cummeth it to passe, that euery manne the nerer that he draweth to the state of age, so muche the ferther goeth he backewarde from innocence liuyng. But such persons as haue once put on Christe on theyr backes, oughte according to the exaumple of the same Christe, with all theyr strengthe to heaue forewarde vnto better and better: to the ende that they maye bothe with the pure clenesse of the soule make themselues acceptable in the syghte of God: and also by the vncorruptnesse of theyr liuing, geat themselues an honest fame and reporte emong men.

¶ The.iii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ In the fiftenth yere of the reigne of Tyberius the Emperour, whan Poncius Pilate was lieutenaunte in Jewry, and Herode the Tetrarche of Galile: and hys brother Philip the Tetrarche of Iturya, and of the regyon of the Trachonytes: and Lisanyas the Tetrarche of Abilene, whan Anna and Caiphas were the hygh pryestes: the woorde of the lorde came vnto John the sonne of zacharie, in the wyldernesse. And he came into all the coastes aboute Iordane, preachyng the baptysme of repentaunce for the remyssyon of synnes, as it is wrytten in the booke of the woordes of Esaye the prophete, saying: The voyce of a crier in wildernesse, prepare ye the waye of the lorde, and make hys pathes streyght, euery valley shal be filled, and euery mountayne and hill shal be broughte lowe, and thynges crabbe croked, shall be made streight, and the rough wayes, shal be made playne, and all fleashe shall see the saluacion of God.

You haste hearde, good Theophilus, with what begynnynges bothe John the forerenner, and also the lorde Iesus made a way, and a preparatike vnto the office of preaching the gospel. Nowe heare by what meanes, and with what successe they enterprised, and entred the matter, to the ende that thou mayest well vnderstande, that nothing was doen by happe or casualtie, ne through mannes wisdome, but euery whit by the prouidence of god, temprying and ordreyng hys owne matter after a newe maner of facion of hys owne. For nowe was the tyme already come, that the heauenly kyngkingdom beyng reuealed and published, the worldly kingdom shoulde abate and decaye: the spirituall priesthood beyng disclosed, the shadowie priesthood, (wherin the Jewes had vntill that time made many glorious bautes and braggues of themselues) shoulde vanishe cleane away. Cesar the emperour of Rome surnamed Augustus, had now ended his life, by whose proclamacio the whole world had afore been surueied, and the names of euerye bodye within the empire registred in bokes, and in the tyme of his reygne Jesus Christ was borne. Wicked Herode also was now deceassed, who had sought Jesu being an infant for to haue slain him. And Archelaus Herodes sonne for his behauiour ouermuche resēblyng his fathers wicked prankes, was exiled frō his kingdom into an other cōtrey. Tiberius Cesar had succeded Augustus in ỹ empire. And in the fiftenth yere of his reigne, Poncius Pilate a Romain was president of Jewry. And Herode ỹ brother of Archelaus by the eleccion and apointment of the said Tiberius the emperour, had Galilee allotted vnto him. Philip had the rule & gouernaunce of that part of Syria, whiche is called Iturea: and it was called also Trachonitis, of the roughnesse of the mountains, because ỹ countrey is full of vphilles & downhilles, and almost no part of it euen or plain chaumpian grounde. For it goeth al alongst in hilles & dales frō Libanus, & frō ỹ moūtains of Idumea, vnto ỹ west coaste of Syria. Thā moreouer ỹ part ỹ is called Abilena, (of Abila the principall citie of the same region,) was by assignement cum to thahādes of Lisanias for his porciō, who afterward chaunged the name therof, & called it Lysaniō. For Augustus in his time, because he would sōwhat breake & enfeble the puissaunt force of that kingdō, had made a diuisiō of it, & distributed it amōg foure brethren, Herode, Philip, Antipater, & Lysanias, which therfore were called Tetrarches, that is to say in English, the foure princes or the foure head rulers. For the name of a kyng was long afore abolished by a lawe of the Romaines, who woulde haue no kynges. And this was a token or rather a figure that the kingdom of the Jewes should shortly after vanishe awaye accordyng to the prophecie. But the holyest parte of Jewrye (wherin Hierusalem and the temple stoode, and in whiche the lord of al was borne,) one Ponce Pilate a Romain, had the administracion & gouernaunce of: beeyng as it were a figure plainly betokenyng euen by the verye case and thing as it stode, that the Gentiles should breake into the kingdom of heauē, which the Jewes would reiect and vtterly despise. Likewise the priesthode as a thyng that should soone after ceasse and haue an ende, wente wandrynge & shifting from one to an other out of due ordre, and was bought, and solde, and made euē a market mater, wherin at that time two notable vngodly mē, Annas, and Caiphas had the highest and the chefest roumes. Emiddes these matters of diuiding & mangleyng the countrey into sundry rewlers handes, and in the middes of this very troublesome state of thinges emonge the Jewes, the kingdome of heauen, and a new priesthode sprang vp, wherof John the sonne of Zacharie was chosen and specially appoynted to bee an open preacher and proclaymer. This John before laye hydden emong ỹ wylde beastes, and passed a life of wonderfull streightnesse, cladde with a Camels skine, girt with a belt of a rough leather thong, feeding vpō wild honey and grashoppers of that countrey, not so muche as tasting any wyne or stronge drinke, to the entent he might be a mete preacher of repētaūce: & might teache

the people by his life, before he should teache them by his wordes: & might be clere without al crimes himself, who should so frely reproue the faultes & transgressions of other mē: but now beyng inspired with the holy ghost, & admonished by ỹ same, he came out of the dennes of wildernes, & gat him not into the tēple, which place was reserued vnto Christ, but into al those quarters & coastes, which lye about the riuer Iordane, to the end that he might haue the more plēty of water for such as should be baptised. And he preached that the kingdom of heauē was at hād, exhorting that the people should prepare thēselfes to the saluacio, (which approched) thorough repentaunce of their former liues, & that with the baptisme of water (which he in his persō gaue, being but as a foregoer & a messēger of Christ) they should make themselfes mete for the baptisme of ỹ spirit, whiche spirit he should geue, whose cūming approched. These thinges were thā doen by inspiracion of the holy ghost, who lōg before had prophecied the same by the mouth of Esai ỹ prophet. For in this maner speaketh he of Johns preaching. The voice of a crier in ỹ wildernes, the lord approcheth, prepare his waies, make his pathes streight, leste being offēded w the vntoward crokednes of your condicios & behauiour, he spedily stert backe away frō you. He cūmeth to al, al must goe forth to mete him. All thinges must be made plain and euē. Euery baley shal be filled vp, & euery mountain and hill shalbe brought doun and made flatte. They which wer high emong mē, because they were in a great opinion and estimacion of righteousnes, or wisedom, shal abate their stately and proude coūtenaunce that they may be hable & apte to receiue the righteousnesse, and wisedom of God: & they which as idiotes or mē of no knowlage ne regard, & as sinners, wer out of al reputacio, vtterly despised as abiectes amōg mē, shall so dainly through their obedience to the ghospell, be reysed vp vnto the felowshyp and communion of the kyngdome of heauen: Suche thinges also as to fore wer warped & writhed sundry waies, & stoode all croked, shal in a moment be made euen & streight again w the squiere of the ghospel: & where places wer rough by reason of the thornes of manifold vices, and naughtie desires and lustes, they shall now be made verye smooth, and plain wayes. For by and in suche mindes dooeth the lorde Ioue to walke. And to suche extreme contraries shal the courses of all thynges at the cummyng of hym bee chaunged. They that were in despaire shall be set vp in coumforte and hope again. Suche as trusted in themselfes, not carying for any other healper or saueour, shalbe cast away and perish, vnpossible to be recouered again. They that were before tymes esteemed and reputed for wyse, shal become fooles: and suche as were accoumpted for fooles, shall bee endued with the gyft of heauenly wysedome. They whiche to fore were idolatres, shall becum true seruers and wurshippers of the lyuyng God: and they whiche in outwarde semblaunce appered to be true wurshippers of God, shalbe found idolatres. Those that before were wrathefull, shall bee quiete of mynde and beneficiall to others: and suche as serued the lustes of concupiscence and lecherie before, shal now loue and enbrace all chastitie. They whiche before were pollers and catchers away of mens gooddes, shal now frely without sparyuge geue awaye of their owne. To this manne therfore that shall make suche an alteracion and chaunge of thynges, prepare your selues. The lorde wyll euen within a litell whyle be here present in this world: & not only ỹ Iewes shall see hym, but all the nacions of the whole worlde shal with the yes of faith beholde him that is the autour and geuer of saluacion: by and through whom, God maketh a free offer of the blisse of heauen, vnto all such persons as through godly promptnesse and readinesse to beleue, and through correction and amēdment of their former lyues, shal receiue hym whan he cūmeth.

Then said he to the people that were cum forth to be baptised of hym: O ye generacion of vipers, who hath taught you to flee from the wrathe to cum: bring ye forth therfore the dire fruites of repentaunce, and begin not to say with your selues: we haue Abraham to our father. For I say vnto you: God is hable of these stones, to rayse vp children vnto Abraham. Now also is the axe layed vnto the roote of the trees: euery tree therfore whiche bringeth not forth good fruite, is hewen downe, and cast into the fyer. The texte.

All this had Esai so many hundred yeres before prophecied of Iohn: & nothing there was, but in the end it came to passe, and proued agreable vnto the prophecie in euery behalf, and in euery pointe. For at Iohns preachynge, a great multitude of people leauing their houses (and declaryng by the same their doing as plainly as if they had spoken it in wordes, that whoso ernestly mindeth or desireth to attain to saluacion, must doe away and forsake the carnall affections that he hath at home in the house of his herte,) did by heapes resort vnto the shore of fluime Iordane, that they mighte be diepped in water by him: not that Iohn was a forgeuer of sinnes, or could so doe: but because that he with this beginyng and preamble, did prepare folkes hertes and mindes vnto the redēpcion and saluacion that was cūming. For a good great part and towardnes of health it is, to acknowlage ones self to be sick: and a great auauntage and foredele towardes recouerie hath that persone, whiche is apte and willyng to take that maye bee a remedye for his disease. And forasmuche as the first steppe and degree to amendment springeth oute of the feare of god, (so that we first feare the iuste punishment at the handes of the righteous auenger, & thau loue the liberalitie of so boūteous a lord,) Iohn cryed out with a great boldnes and plainnesse against ỹ proude Pharisеis, and Scribes, who tofore had euer sticked fast & contynued in the steppes of their wicked fathers, and through the false persuasion of righteousenes wer puffed vp in pride, though they wer strōg enemies vnto true religion, setting other mē at naught, and standing highly in their owne conceytes, for none other cause so muche, as for the respect that they wer descended of Abraham, by the lynage and discent of the flesche, as thoughe God esteemed men after their kinred or linage, and not rather accordyng to the vertues and godly qualities of their mindes. O ye generacion of vipers (saith he) moste vicious and corrupte children, descended of moste vicious and corrupt auncestrie: whereby haue ye perceiued and foūd out that the vengeaunce of god hangeth ouer you, vnlesse ye in season amend your liues? What person hathe geuen you any bywarnynge or watche woorde to flee from the moste sharpe punishement and scourge of god, whiche shal spare no age, whiche shall pardone no nacion, nor shall shewe fauour to no degree, or estate of men highe or lowe? Lyke as remedie is offered vnto all suche as will yelde themselfes to be cured and healed: so dooeth punishement abide all persones indifferently without excepcion, as many as refuse to amend from their olde naughty behauiour and conuersacion. Why dyd not entier loue towardes god allure you hither before, as well as the feare and dread of punyshemente doeth violently hale you hither nowe at this present? your mindes and hartes are as And he said to the people.

yet nothyng chaunged at all. Wherefore yf ye without any feynyng or dissimulacion bee penitent and sory for your wicked life past, chaunge your condicions, & be ye of an other sort of conuersacio, the heretofore ye haue been, & declare plainly by your very dooinges, that ye are reformed and emended. Ye haue vnto this day hitherto lyke wylde trees, brought forthe the soure & pestilent fruites of euyll workes, that is to wete, pride, wrathfulnesse, auarice, enuie, hypocrisie, & contencio. Now if ye be in very dede tourned from euil trees into good trees: bryng ye forth good fruites, suche as maye testyfy your hertes to be truly altered into a better frame. It is not here now requisite nor any thing material that ye chaūge your garmētes, or to leaue & take this or that kind of meat, but ye must chaūge the euill lustes of your hertes. This is in very dede the roote of the tree, which roote if it haue a bitter and a venemous sape, thā spring there none but euill fruites out of ꝑ braūches: but contrariwyse if the roote minister & sende vp a pleasaūt & holsome sape to the boughes, than do there grow forth vpon the braunches those fruites of the spirite, that are semely for god, & worthy acceptacion, that is to wete, entier loue in stede of hatred: for bitter frouning, godly ioye and lightnes of hert: for discord, peace: for fiercenes, sufferaunce: for snatchyng and polling liberalitie: for lecherousnes, chastitie: for deceitful craftines, simplicitie and plain dealyng: for presūpteous taking vpon him, humble sobrenes: for superstition, true godlynesse. These are the thynges whiche declare who be the true and vncounterfayted Iewes: these be the thynges that declare who be circumcysed as they ought to be, and who are the verye true chyldren of Abraham in dede, these sacrifices they are, that god is delyted withal.

And begyn not to saye with youre selues: wee haue Abraham to ourr father.

Now is the lyght at hande, let shadowes passe awaye: the truthe is in place, away with al counterfait hipocrisie: doe away your vayne confydence whiche the fygures of ghostely thynges haue nourysshed in you, and not the thinges selfes: as forexaumple, whan ye say in the way of gloryng: Hierusalem that holy citie of ours: the lordes tēple, the lordes temple, the lordes tēple: also such figures of thinges as here followeth, that is to wete, slaughter of bruite beastes in sacrifice: ordeining and solemne halowing of sabboth dayes: obseruyng of newe moones: choice and difference betwene one meate & an other, brode borders vpō vestures (wh.ch ye call your phylacteries) fastyng and abstinence, with heuinesse & lourīg of countenaunce: & the residue of obseruaunces a great manye, whiche eyther the lawe did for a tyme prescribe and apoint as figures of thinges, to be referred to the mynde: or els ꝑ Phariseis haue inuēted for a vain pretense of holines: al these thynges euery one, with circumcision it self, and altogether, shal ceasse and be abolysshed. And suche an one shall from henceforth bee esteemed for a Iewe of the right sorte, whatsoeuer he be, that shall confesse and acknowelage him, whose comyng shall nowe ere long be seen to the world. And suche an one shall bee taken for a man rightly circumcised as he shoulde bee, whosoeuer shall haue an herte pourged through fayth, from all inordinate lustes and desires. Let it therfore no more enter into your hertes to thynke with your selues vainglorioully: It is we that are the heritage, the succession and chyldren of Abrahā, it is we and none els, to whom the inheritaunce of saluacion hathe been promised, the Lorde wyll not forsake vs that are his people. Maye I say vnto you, that like as the wickednesse of your forefathers shalbe nothing preiudiciall ciall noȝ hurtful to you, in case ye amend and take better waies: euen so shall the holinesse of your progenitour Abraham nothyng auayle you, yf ye wyll still continue in your olde vngodlinesse. Ye will be caste away, ye will surely bee disherited, ye will vtterly perishe to eternall damnation, onlesse beeyng conuerted and turned to better life, ye bryng foorthe suche fruites, as maye semely and worthily stand with the ghospell. Neither shall Abraham be destitute of posteritie oȝ succession, noȝ god want a people of his own, of who to bee condignely worshipped and serued, and to whom to performe the inheritaunce by him promised, though ye should shrinke and fall awaye from him. Foȝ this dare I be bolde to auouche and assure vnto you, God is not vnhable, but hath power enough, euen of these stones here, to reise vp children vnto his frende Abraham, to whom he promised issue and succession, like in noumbre to the sandes of the sea, & to the sterres in the skye. In time herafter to cum, the children of Abraham shalbe estemed & accepted, not after the kinred of bloud, but as euery one shall folowe, and resemble Abraham in faith, Abraham shal acknowelage and accepte foȝ his children, euen the Sogdiãs, the Gotthyans, and the wylde Scythians, if they embrace Messias: & shall coumpte and repute you foȝ aliens and straunge borne bastardes, onlesse ye turne to the faith & beleue. God hath hitherto shewed pacience & sufferaũce towardes you, though ye haue but euẽ so so brought foorth ỹ outward fruites of the lawe, such as they wer: that is to say, sacrifices, bowes, fastiges, washinges, difference of meates: and paryng away of the foreskin in circũcision. But these thinges had no more but superficially an outward apparaunce of religion. And these are but leaues of the tree, detestable afore God, except ỹ fruites of the spirite bee ioyned therewith. But nowe from henceforth shal euery body be estemed according to the true treasures of the hert & the soule euen as they shalbe founde good oȝ euill.

God is able of these stones to reise vp children vnto Abraham.

Nowe is there cum a more streight and precise iudgemente of God: and cum he is, that seeth the botome of the depest secretes of the herte. Foȝ now is the axe euen ready set hard by ỹ roote of the tree, that hath so long time been sulfered. Abrahãs people shalbe hewed away frõ the stem therof, & the heathen (so many as in prompte readynes of beleuing shall resemble Abraham) shall be grafted in their places. Moses had no eare geuen vnto him: the prophetes were not harkened vnto, of whome a great many ye slew and put to death: at the voyce of the lawe, ye haue hitherto been of dull and deaf eares: nowe is he cum, whose greater there can none be sẽt, and after whom there is none to bee loked foȝ. Utter perysching foȝ euer haungeth ouer the whole nation of the Israelites, except ye repente betime and growe to more goodnesse: Foȝ euery tree whiche shall not now bryng foorth the good frute of faith, shalbe felled downe, and cast into the fyer. Meane is there none, noȝ respect is there none: but either through true godlynes, to make haste vnto euerlastyng saluacion: oȝ not so doyng, remediles and vtterly to be damned foȝ euer.

Nowe also is the axe layed to the rotes of the trees.

Euery tree that bryngeth not forth good frute, shall be hewed downe and cast into the fyer.

And the people asked him, saiyng: what shal we do then? He answereth & saith vnto them: he that hath two coates, let him part with him that hath none: and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

The texte

The commonmultitude of the Iewes beeyng sore adrade with these terrible, and manacing woordes of John, saied vnto him: If it be so as ye saie, what thynke ye than good foȝ vs to dooe, wherby to auoyde and escape the wrathe of God, and to atteyn saluacion? Now beganne they to waxe sum-what curable & toward to be healed, whē they acknowleaged their diseases, and earnestly desyred remedie. John therefore sheweth them a remedye of perfecte strength and efficacie at all assayes. For he calleth them not ne exhorteth them to the sacrifices of beastes, and suche other iudaicall meanes of pourging their sinnes: but vnto the workes of charitie. God is with no sacrifice in the world more sooner pacified, then with beneficiall doyng to our neighbour. God hath no nede of any benefites of oures, but he suffereth it to be reckened as doen to himself, whatsoeuer we bestow vpon our neighbour beyng in necessitie and nede. He that hath two coates (sayeth John) let hym couer his naked brother with the one of thē. And he that hath asmuch meate as may suffise for twayne, let him geue halfe therof to an other that is hungrie. With these two exaumples John taught the people of the grosse and blockishe ignorant multitude, that the most strongest and effectuall meane to appeace God beyng offended with vs, is, if we by all meanes be frāke and bountiful in doyng good to our neighbour, whatsoeuer thyng he hath nede of: whether it bee apparell, or meate, or drinke, or harbourgh, or ayde & succour against violence, or counfortable wordes in time of sorow, or doctrine for his instruccion, or good exhortation and counsayll. And bounden we bee to helpe the present necessitie of our brother, not only with part of those thinges wherof our selfes haue superfluitie or more then we neede, but also we ought to cut of a litle share of suche thynges, as myghte otherwyse stand vs in good stede for our own vses and occupiyng, as often as our neyghbours necessitie requireth present helpe out of hand. This remedy than it was that was geuen by John to the common multitude, whiche remedie neuertheles serueth for all men indifferently.

He that hathe twoo coates, &c.

The texte. Than came the Publicans also to be baptised, and said vnto him: master, what shal we do? And he said vnto them: require no more then that whiche is appointed vnto you.

Than came also the Publicans, that is to saye, the customers and takers vp of tolles, beeyng semblably stryken with great feare of Johns preachyng, whereas otherwise they were a kynde of people geuen to pollyng, & rauine, and getting all that they might for their owne singuler aduauntage, and lucre, with all others mennes losse and dammage, and hinderaunce, mē nothig passyng on religion or on the feare of God, but more ready to obey the commaundementes of worldly princes, then the preceptes of God: whiche sorte of men, where as they haue an euyll name among all nacions, and bee commonly ill spoken of, yet among the Jewes they wer specially aboue al other sortes of men abhorred and reputed abominable. And yet ỹ sore sharpe preachyng of John had stryken suche an horrible great feare into theym all, that euen they too, as euill as they were, came to John, requiryng baptisme, and desiryng to learne how and what way thei might appeace the wrath of god. And John ỹ true foregoer & messenger of him, who would driue back or put away no man (were he neuer so muche spotted or defiled with sinne) made a soft and a gentle aunswer euen to Publicans also: yf ye cannot yet (saith he) fynde in your hertes to geue out to the poore & nedye sum parte of that that is your propre own: yet at lest wise make ye this one steppe towardes a better life, that frō henceforth ye holde your handes from pollyng and catchynge awaye the goodes of other men. Ye haue an annuall stipende and an ordynary fee of Cesar: and it is rated out vnto you by a playne rule, howe muche or

litle ye ought to require of the people for any duetie.

¶ The souldiers lykewyse demaunded of him, saying: And what shall we do? And he sayd vnto them: hurt ye no man, neither trouble any man wrongfully. And bee content with your wages. The texte

After the Publicans, came souldiers also, an vnruelye and an vngodlye kynde of people, hauyng no regarde ne care of any lawes, heady and hastye to do wrong, and folowes that vsed to sell their life and solle for money, setting al their delite & felicitie in catching and robbing fro other mē, fierce and presumptuous through ouermuche libertie and sufferaunce. Neuertheles the feare of Gods vengeance fell vpon these mē too, and therfore they also came to John. They ackno wlaged their wicked state of soldiership (as they vsed it,) they desire baptisme, and require moreouer to be enstructed, what possible meanes they might make, to haue god appeased towardes thē. It was surely in this kynde of mena great point of furtheraunce towardes healthe, that they would acknowelage their dysease, and were pricked with desire of a better life. Therfore John would not at the first day aduenture to require in suche as they were, that they should shew beneficiall liberalitie towardes their neyghbour, because he thought it to bee a steppe sufficient and great enough for the first stirryng forwarde towardes God, yf suche as they wer would honestly refrain and kepe themselues from doing mischief about in places where thei cāe. And to speake more of this sort of mē, in dede thei are woont to be noysom and hurtfull in thie pōynts especially, that is to wete, in violent oppression, in layyng to mens charges, and burdenyng them with false crimes: and in pillage or robberye. For oftentymes the weapōs which the princes haue delyuered vnto them for defense and mayntenaunce of the publique tranquillitie, they tourne to the hurte of their very own countreye men being true subiectes, and do auenge their owne priuate malice with the same weapon, wherewith the saftie of the wholle people in general ought to haue been defended. So that oftentimes they goe on theuing for booties, and spoyle the countrey, they ryfle, they driue away mennes cattell, thei rauishe weomen, they breake vp mennes houses, they turne the good man of the houle where they haue been lodged or intertained, thei turne him cleane out of his owne doores, and pumble him about the pate. And he said vnto them, hurte ye no man.

And because they doe oftentymes play these partes, and haue nothynge sayd nor dooen to them for it, they thynke they may doe it lawfully. Agayn, sum of them promote false playntes against honest simple men before their princes or captains, for none other purpose, sauyng that a portion of ỳ parties goodes beeyng seased as a forfayte, maye cum to their shapshare in reward of their false accusation maliciously and slaunderously prepēsed. And at suche vngracious prankes the princes do oftentymes wynke, whyle they ernestly tendre the gratifyng of their seruauntes. Furthermore sum of this sorte of people, whan they prodigally cōsume and waste out vpon harlots, vpon dice, or in banketting, and reuellyng at the wyne, all that euer their Prynce doeth in the name of a fee or stypende allowe theym, they make vp their losse agayne with pillyng and pickyng: and doe not onelye leaue suche duties as they owe styll vnpayed, but also doe by playne extorcion pull frō poore houlehandmen that that is no duetie at all: and so vnder the name and colour of warre, they thynke nothyng what euer it bee vnlawfull for thē to do, wheras in very dede there is a due lawe of armes seruing for battail and warre, which in dede is not vtterly to be disallowed, in case it be attēpted for a iust and a rightful cause, that is to saye, if it be made for ꝑ defence & mayntenaunce of the publique trāquillitie of a realme and countrey: yf the case so stand, that it cannot be auoyded: yf it bee enterprysed by godly Princes: yf with the consent of them, for whose behalfe it is expedient or necessary that ꝑ warre should be made: yf it haue been denounced or proclaymed with all rytes and circumstaunces accordyng to the lawe of armes: yf iustice and moderacion be vsed in it, that is to say, if warre be so kept, with as muche sparyng of bloudshed as possibly may be, as fewe be loste, as may be, especially of them that neuer gaue any cause to the warre; if the madnesse and hastines of the souldiers be brideled by the captains: if there be no buckling together of the two armies, saiyng only by such souldyers and mē of armes as haue geuen their othe afore to do as they ought to do and neue other wise nor without a signe to bee geuen by commaundement of the capytayne whan they shall buckle together in fight: if euery body immediately vpon thē̄des from fightyng assone as euer the trūpettes haue once blowen retraicte: if also as soone as it possibly maie, the warre be ended and so breake vp. Vnto this sorte of men therfore dooeth Iohn nothyng but shewe, what their accustomed vse is to do, and what thing from henceforth they ought to eschew, if they mynde to escape the vengeaunce of God. Stryke ne beate ye no maune (saieth he) accuse no maune falsely for lucres sake: but bee ye contented with your ordinarie wages that is allowed you.

The texte. As the people were in a doubte, and all men mused in their hartes of Iohn, whether he were very Christ, Iohn answered and said vnto them all: I baptise you with water, but one stroger then I shall cum after me, whose shoe latchet I am not worthy to vnlooce: he shall baptise you with the holy ghost, and with fier. Whiche hath his fanne in his hand, and he will pourge his flooze, and gather the corne into his barne: but the chaffe wil he burne with fier that neuer shal be quenched: and many other thinges in his exhortation preached he vnto the people.

And with suche great authoritie were the premisses handled and doen by Iohn, that the people begoonne halfe to bee in opinion, that himself was the very Messias, of whose cummyng he preached vnto thē. And this did a great many of theym with secrete thynkynge caste in theyr hertes, though Iohn on his own behalfe, by reason of his singular humilitie of hert, did as much as he could to hide his owne greatnesse. For this is the lyght and cockebrained fashion of the common multitude, that suche persones as they haue a speciall mynde and regarde vnto, they sette more pryce by, then there is cause or reason why: and suche as they beare hatred agaynst, suche do they moost slaunderously report, finding fault with all thinges in thē. But this earnest good fauour and opinion of the people, did well declare verye perfite humilitie in this most holy man, who was so ferre from taking vnto him the aduauntage of an other mās praise, that he stoutely refused the same, beeyng geuen vnto him of the peoples own voluntary offre. And the wrong opinio that the people wer in, did muche good for this one pointe, that the dignitie and worthynes of Christ being as yet knowē but to a fewe, was there alowed with a substanciall and an open testimonie in the face of the worlde. For Iohn assone as he by inspiracio of the holy ghost, wel perceiued the secrete thoughtes of the people, he ſpake in this maner: Sirs (ſayth he) ye do eſteme me by outward thinges that may be ſeen, as for exãple, by the meat that ye ſe me eate, by my wede, & by this that I do miniſter baptiſme vnto you: but the thynges that be not ſeen, are a great deale more effectuall, euen after the ſame rate as in a man the vertue of the minde whiche is not ſeene, is of muche more dignitie and worthineſſe, then the power of the body whiche is ſeen with mens iyes.

I baptyſe you with water.

I on my behalfe, thoughe I do baptiſe you with water, yet am I no remitter of ſinnes, I am no more but a preparer of you to a baptiſme of more efficacie and vertue, which ye ſhall receiue at the handes of him, whoſe cumming I preache vnto you, being as in dede I am ſumwhat his elder in time, and ſumwhat afore him in order and courſe of preaching: but in power a great way inferiour vnto him. For he that cummeth after me, is ſo ferre better thẽ I, that I (whom ye all beleue to be ſum great hygh manne of prire) am vnworthy to vnbuccle the latchet of his ſhooes. And I am his ſeruaũt, not his felow: I am a foregoer vnto him, but euen of muche like rate, as ỹ day ſterre goeth before the ſunne, and ſhal anon after be darkened and drouned with ỹ greater light of the ſunne when it cũmeth. And euẽ very this that I haue, I haue of his bounteous goodneſſe. My doctrine is but very wathe, yf it bee compared vnto his doctrine: my baptiſme is of no vertue, yf it be ſet by his baptiſme.

But one ſtronger thẽ I ſhall cum after me. ye
